

ALLEN COUNTY PUBLIC LIBRARY

3 1833 01742 7763

GENERAL
SERIALS
SERIALS
SERIALS
SERIALS

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 91.

FIFTH-DAY, SEVENTH MONTH 5, 1917.

No. 1.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price $2.00 a year in Advance.

Publisher, DAVIS H. FORSYTHE.

Editors { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
DAVIS H. FORSYTHE,
MARY WARD.

Make remittances payable to

THE FRIEND,
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

LACKS 49.

COOPER

"A FAMINE fell upon nearly one-half of a great nation. The whole world hastened to contribute money and food. But a few courageous men left their homes in Middlesex and Surrey, and penetrated to the remotest glens and bogs of the west coast of the stricken island, to administer relief with their own hands. To say that they found themselves in the valley of the shadow of death would be but an imperfect image; they were in the charnel house of a nation. Never since the fourteenth century did pestilence, the gaunt handmaid of famine, glean so rich a harvest. In the midst of a scene, which no field of battle ever equalled in danger, in the number of its slain, or the sufferings of the surviving, these brave men moved as calm and undismayed as though they had been in their own homes. The population sank so fast that the living could not bury the dead; half-interred bodies protruded from the gaping graves; often the wife died in the midst of her starving children, whilst the husband lay a festering corpse by her side. Into the midst of these horrors did our heroes penetrate, dragging the dead from the living with their own hands, raising the head of famishing infancy, and pouring nourishment into parched lips, from which shot fever-flames more deadly than a volley of musketry. Here was courage! No music strung the nerves, no smoke obscured the imminent danger; no thunder of artillery deadened the senses. It was cool self-possession and resolute will; calculating risk and heroic resignation. And who were these brave men? To what gallant corps did they belong? Were they of the horse, foot or artillery? They were Quakers from Clapham and Kingston! If you would know what heroic actions they performed you must enquire from those who witnessed them. You will not find them recorded in the volumes of reports published by themselves, for Quakers write no bulletins of their victories."—RICHARD COBDEN, 1847.

FROM THE ADDRESS TO THE GRADUATING CLASS OF 1917 AT WESTTOWN SCHOOL, SIXTH MO. 22, 1917.

J. HARVEY BORTON.

These are unique and terrible days. History recalls nothing approaching them. Two-thirds of the world's population is in deadly conflict. Literally millions of the flower of the manhood of Europe, Asia, and America have been wounded or killed. Other millions are fighting the dread spectre of disease, famine, and insanity in the prison and concentration camps, while over the whole world are countless homes where lonely ones are suffering for those who will never return; and there are innumerable other homes where the dear ones have returned wrecked in body and mind forever, to whom death itself would be a welcome visitor. And this is not all; for unless it stops and stops soon, millions more are to be wounded and slain; and to all this unspeakable anguish and misery is yet to be added for countless millions the scourge of famine. Our proud twentieth century civilization has failed; yes, it seems that it has proved itself utterly inadequate in this, its testing time. And is it any wonder, for it has been depending almost entirely upon material things and physical forces, and they have failed, failed utterly.

On a prayer calendar at home, on the morning of the 5th, I read this quotation from Granger Fleming: "It is not that the invisible has to be created. It is here already. What has to be created is the power to see."

My friends, in this generation, have we not lost the power to see the "invisible" things? And after all, it is the "invisible" things which are the most powerful, and it is the "invisible" things that are eternal. Are we not somewhat like the fish in the Mammoth Cave of Kentucky? In the blackness of that cavern, they had no need of eyes, and gradually they lost the power of sight.

In the past generation, our vision and appreciation of material things have been very keen. During that period, the first-class nations of the world have been developing in a wonderful manner their material resources. Germany has been building up her army and navy, and her industrial and transportation organizations. England has been enlarging her navy so as to keep it equal or superior to any other two European navies, and she has been pressing her commercial prestige throughout the great expanse of her empire. We have been following her example in greatly increasing our navy, but for the most part as a people, we have been bending our energies to the creation of wealth, and we have been successful far beyond our wildest dreams, for in these recent years, it has not been increased by a few millions a year, but by thousands of millions. Think of it, one corporation alone made $113,000,000 the first three months of this year, or at the rate of $1,250,000 a day, or over $50,000 for every hour of the twenty-four. While only one in every fifteen of the earth's inhabitants lives in our country, we have one out of every three of the gold dollars of the world.

We have, as a people, accepted in a large measure the material standards by which we measure life. Too often, it is a question with us of "How much?" or "How many?" Even our schools and colleges are known better in the popular mind, at least, by their physical equipment and their sports than by their scholarship and the class of students they graduate. Take Princeton University, for instance, with its Graduate School, a building which I believe is not surpassed by any other single college or university in the world. It represents an investment in the one building alone of $20,000, for each student which it can accommodate; or take their new foot-ball stadium which will seat approximately 60,000 people and built at a cost of something like a half million; and their wonderful new dormitories and dining halls, and their palatial and princely dining clubs.

In Yale, Harvard and some other universities, you will find the same lavishness of expenditure. Far be it from me to belittle such handsome additions to our great educational institutions, but what I plead for is that we should not place too much emphasis on these physical things, but that we should place the right emphasis on the moral and spiritual ideals which should accompany such great equipment, but which, because they are invisible, are frequently almost lost sight of. You will find even in church organizations that material equipment and membership together with the size of the church budget are the standards by which much of our Christian work is judged. More than one earnest, conscientious Christian worker has admitted to me that he was not placing the emphasis on his work where it should be because he had to make a showing in figures for his Board of Directors; and my friends, let's be frank with ourselves. How many of us in judging men and women use material standards alone? Isn't it too often a question of what he or she has of this world's goods that counts with us, rather than what he or she is? What a tremendous appeal ease and comfort and luxury and extravagance are making to each one of us as individuals!

Some months ago, two business men were talking with each other on a dining-car in New England. One was a neck-tie manufacturer, the other, a Philadelphia Friend. The Friend said to him, "How is it that when I was a lad, I could get a good neck-tie for twenty-five cents, and now when I want to buy one that pleases me, I seem to need to pay a dollar or a dollar and a half for it?" He replied, "The trouble is with you, not with the neck-tie. You can get a better neck-tie to-day for twenty-five cents than you did twenty years ago, but your tasted have changed."

It is stated in the current number of the Westonian that a boy at Westtown to-day needs several times as much pocket money as he did ten years ago. If that be true, it must be because the tastes of the boys at Westtown have increased in the same ratio as the Friend's taste for neck-ties.

Do you remember Rufus Jones's appeal on Old Scholars' Day for $125,000, to conduct the reconstruction work in France, and how Walter Buzby, the President of the Old Scholars' Association, spoke of raising a fund of $125,000 for the School? Both of these sums seemed pretty large, and almost impossible to raise under present conditions. Well, may I tell you that if the prices which were paid for the automobiles that were in attendance at Old Scholars' Day were added together, they would amount to over $125,000? Now, I am not necessarily finding fault with the Friend for buying a handsome neck-tie, nor with the boys and girls at Westtown for spending more money, nor with the people for having automobiles, but I am pleading to-day that these things should not have foremost place in our lives, and that all our personal expenditures should now be made not in the light of pleasing our desires for ease, luxury and comfort, but in the light of the needs of the suffering, and destitute and hungry and homeless millions of this old earth. After all, the greatest things in the world are not those that minister to our outward needs, but the greatest forces and powers of the universe are the unseen, the invisible ones.

What living creature has ever seen God, the Creator of heaven and earth, the Invisible One? Who has ever been able to perceive with his natural senses the inconceivable forces and powers which keep our earth in its orbit continually revolving around the sun? And what keeps the unnumbered stars and planets, infinitely larger than our earth, suspended in space, each one in its exact place through all the countless centuries? What one of us has ever seen the force of gravitation which even now makes it possible for us to be in this building; even makes it possible for this building to exist? What one of us has ever seen electricity going through slender wires to turn the motors which enable railroad trains to rush over the tracks or turn the wheels of a great manufacturing plant, or which changes the blackness of night into day? If these physical forces are invisible and are so great, how inconceivably greater must be the moral and spiritual resources of the world. Was Granger Fleming not correct when he said, "It is not that the invisible has to be created. It is here already. What has to be created is the power to see." If this power to see has to be created, I know of no better time to do it than in one's youth.

It is because in my own life since leaving Westtown that I have felt the tremendous pressure of material things and because experience is teaching me more and more that these things should have less place rather than more in life that I am bringing you this simple message to help you, if possible, to keep from making some of the mistakes that have hindered me. One of the best illustrations of what I mean is to be found in the story of Solomon's dream which he had as a young man shortly after he ascended the throne of his father, King David. In this dream, God said, "Ask what I shall give thee." Solomon answered, "Give, therefore, thy servant an understanding heart to judge thy people that I may discern between good and bad." And the speech pleased the Lord that Solomon had asked this thing, and God said unto him, "Because thou hast asked this thing and hast not asked for thyself long life, neither hast thou asked riches for thyself, nor hast asked the life of thy enemies, but hast asked for thyself understanding to discern judgments, behold, I have done according to thy words. Lo, I have given thee a wise and understanding heart so that there was none like thee before thee, neither after thee, shall any arise like unto thee. And I have also given thee that which thou hast not asked, both riches and honor, so that there shall not be any among the kings like unto thee all thy days." And as God in those long centuries ago was pleased when a man asked for the hidden and unseen things instead of for material enrichment, so I believe He is pleased to-day when we ask and strive after these unseen things.

Elijah, the prophet, fled for many weary days to Mt. Horeb from those who sought his life, and when he was hiding in a mountain cave, "Behold, the Lord passed by, and a great and strong wind rent the mountains and break in pieces the rocks before the Lord, but the Lord was not in the wind; and after the wind, an earthquake, but the Lord was not in the earthquake, and after the earthquake, a fire, but the Lord was not in the fire, and after the fire, a still, small voice." "Not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord." You will remember, moreover, that the work of the Prophet Elijah was to be carried on by Elisha, and before they were to separate, Elijah said unto Elisha, "Ask what I shall do for thee before I be taken from thee," and Elisha said, "I pray thee that a double portion of thy spirit be upon me."

My friends, with the wonderful increase in physical comforts and material wealth which is coming to all of us, and which perhaps we may in a way rightfully seek for, we have the same need as Solomon for wisdom, and the same need as Elijah for the "still, small voice," and the same need as Elisha for a double portion of the Spirit of God, all of which are intangible and invisible, but none the less, real and powerful, and absolutely necessary for us if we lead full, rich, and fruitful lives.

The lesson I have wanted to leave with you to-day is not that we should disregard all material things. No, not that, but that we should hold them in their right relationship to life, and also, that the unseen things are more powerful and just as real as those that are seen.

These unseen forces of which I have been speaking must have human channels through which to work. . . . Will you make the complete surrender to God . . . and permit your life to be used for your generation. . . . The world is calling in this tragic hour of its great need for young men and women who believe in God and His invisible force to work and pray with a zeal and a courage and a determination that shall know no slackening.

Will the 1917 Class at Westtown answer this call?

THE WESTTOWN COMMENCEMENT.

Westtown is never more beautiful than at Commencement. The condition, of course, is that of being "dressed up," but everything in the way of adornment is nature's work. The trees have the freshness and majesty of early summer, the flowers are in full bloom, and the grass is trimmed to an inviting degree of orderliness. Nor is the element of happy voices absent—the human voices may not be trained or restrained to melody, but the birds do their best, and leave competition in this line quite out of question. The throngs of visitors,—happy grandparents and parents—take their note from the surroundings. Everything is in tune and the tune is that of the higher satisfactions, the attainments most worth while.

The evening preceding the Commencement was devoted to the Literary Union. Usually one hears then the essays of graduates who do not appear on the Commencement program. This year a different program was rendered. They were mostly graduates who took part. The exercises all had a bearing on one subject, the Irish situation, and some of the complexities of that problem were made more clear. It was, however, a real disappointment to many that the time-honored plan had been abandoned. It is quite natural for youth to desire "some new thing," but a visiting audience at Westtown is in the mood to regard the conventional things as new in the hands of their children.

The Commencement itself was not without its aspect of "pomp and seriousness." It would fail were it not in degree serious. This year the note of impressiveness was present, but was not overdone. The essays were creditable and well delivered. We are happy to print the valedictory and Robert Wood's essay on "The Futility of War." A portion of J. Harvey Borton's admirable address to the class is also included in this number of our paper.—[Eps.]

THE FUTILITY OF WAR.

ROBERT N. WOOD.

The United States has now taken the fatal step, and entered the howling melée of the powers at war. Let us consider this morning the step we have taken, and try to find out why we have wars, what they mean, and of what value they are to the world.

Let us first consider the causes of wars at the present time. Among these are the classes of men who are naturally benefited by a war, and who have no scruples against benefiting themselves at the expense of others. Munition makers, armor plate manufacturers, army officers, and rulers are in this class.

The munition makers and armor plate manufacturers have a great increase of business whenever there is a rumor of war, and therefore, are nothing loath to stir up false rumors of the danger of war at frequent intervals.

The officers in the army and navy spend their time so much in studying the methods of killing, and field tactics, in an environment where the iron hand rules supreme, that they grow to believe that the iron hand method is the only method which will produce results. Thus they grow more and more to want to use the iron hand method when anything happens which they do not think is just right. This sincere motive is very frequently backed by a desire to show their ability in the acid test of battle, and so gain fame and promotion, which is slow in coming in times of peace. This is another class of men, who are partly responsible for wars.

Kings and emperors have in the past often had recourse to wars to further their own desires and ambitions, but I hope that that is all in the past, and that in the future more peaceful and more economical means will be employed to gain these ends. For a king can no longer just go ahead and make war whenever he feels so inclined, but must have some pretext for it. If he cannot find any other way of getting his desires, he may create in the ignorant classes a false feeling of national pride, which is easily insulted. Then when any little thing comes along he can stir this feeling and get the people willing to go into the war, and endure the hardships resulting from it. When the people are more educated it is harder to fool them in this way, so we should try to get them educated as soon as possible, and remove this cause of war.

"Preparedness," as used by the militarists is another very appreciable cause of war, despite the fact that many people maintain that it is the only way to be safe from invasion by a hostile power. If a man carries a gun on his hip, he is more likely to take offence at slurring remarks than if he did not have the gun with him. Nations act very much like individuals in this respect, always wanting to try out their equipment, and see if it really is all that it has been supposed to be. This desire to try out new equipment frequently causes little things to be magnified greatly, and the resulting war costs hundreds of millions of dollars, which are thrown away for munitions and guns.

These are some of the greater causes of wars at the present time. Let us now turn to the consideration of what wars really mean, not what they are said to bring about, but what they really do bring about.

War is the licensing of any kind of detestable crime, which, in times of peace, would not be tolerated under any circumstances or from anybody. For example, no one would, in times of peace, dare to even think of cutting the muscles of the doctors and nurses engaged in ministering to the lame and wounded men who are helpless, yet in war this very thing is done in cold blood, and not only once but many times, and apparently with official sanction, for the men committing these atrocities are not punished in any way for their actions. In times of peace no one would think of sinking a vessel, with more than a thousand innocent passengers aboard, just because he wanted to get back at the owner of that vessel for some grudge he had against him, yet in war this thing is made a regular practice, and that of governments which had been thought of as Christian.

War means the production by the leading scientists, whose efforts would otherwise be turned to helping humanity in its struggle for advancement, of all the conceivable kinds of slaughter, irrespective of the amount of suffering they cause when put into operation, irrespective of everything, except killing power. Take the poisonous gases, for example. These gases are very deadly in their operation, but very dreadful while taking effect. They only kill their victim after several days of intense suffering, his lungs gradually filling and drowning him in his own excretions. Yet it is all fine, as it kills the enemy, and that is the only thing that counts in the long run!

War means the killing off of the great majority of the young men on whom the countries would naturally lean for support and advancement. These men are the very ones that are sent to the front first, and the welfare of the nation, for the future, is put aside in the mad rush for the victory in the present. Thus we see every nation which engages in war thrown back several decades in its development because the young men with the advanced ideas have all, or nearly all, been killed trying to help their country.

War means the burdening of future generations with an enormous debt, to be paid through heavy taxes, which are sure to cause much suffering. This enormous debt is inevitable because the nations at war in Europe today are spending more in one week for instruments of destruction than the whole United States spends in one year for the education of its youth. Is it worth more to destroy our brothers than to educate them?

Of what value are wars to the world? Sometimes they decide the question at stake, but very often they don't. Sometimes one nation is so overwhelmingly victorious that it can dictate terms of peace to its enemies. But more often it can not do this, and the whole matter has to be referred to a board of arbitration to be settled. This is done after the enormous debts have been incurred, after most of the young men have been killed, and after thousands of little children have been maimed for life. Why shouldn't the matter be sent to the court of arbitration in the first place, and save all the needless waste of lives, and property, and prevent all the suffering that goes with any war?

In view of the facts that many wars are caused by individuals who profit personally by them, that war tolerates all outrages, involves such an enormous expense in money, lives, and property which could be used to so much better advantage for other purposes, that the desired results can be obtained more cheaply in other ways, and that, after nations have fought till they can fight no more, the matter is not settled, but must be referred to a court of arbitration to be decided on its merits: in view of these facts it seems to me that we should do all we can to prevent the world ever getting mixed up in a thing of this sort again. The best way to do this is to educate the people, not only in history and mathematics, but also in real Christian principles which they have not had in the past.

THE VALEDICTORY OF THE CLASS OF 1917 OF WESTTOWN SCHOOL.

The day we have been working for all the years we have been here—the day we have looked forward to with keener anticipation than ever before this last Senior year—that day is here at last! In our turn we now receive our diplomas, in our turn we leave the old school, we enter the world, to bear our burdens, to pass through our crises, to fulfil our destinies.

But as we start out we feel the touch of the old school upon our shoulder and then all the memories of this last Senior year loom up before us and cloud the future with the memories of the past. Once more we grasp the hand of the old school that has given the best of itself to be the best in each one of us.

As we look back, slowly, we realize that we, in ourselves, are not ourselves! We think of our close friends and what they have meant to us. How they have given us their helping hand in the midst of trouble. How they have put joy into our lives—joy, like the lightning, darting with its electric flashes—joy, like the sunshine, with its soft radiance, illuminating everything! Young as we are, even now as we face the threshold and look out into the misty future, we catch a glimpse of the parting of the ways. Even now we feel the need of true friends—we know what it is to have those with whom we have shared our joys and sorrows, with whom we have fought and loved.

Dim recollections of tired minds after long, hard hours of study loom up before us—clearer visions of icy days when we fought our hardest for Westtown on the campus—softer remembrances of the warm Spring afternoons when the glowing sun casting giant shadows on the lawns called us from our play—dreamy memories of walks with our closest friends, aimless drifting about in the evening shades when we planned great conquests and dreamed of high honors. Shall we—can we—ever forget these memories?

We can not put into lifeless words what the hours in that old meeting-room have meant to us! This only we know—that there we have caught a glimpse of a great, noble, worldwide work which we await eagerly; there we have seen a vision of the broad Brotherhood of Man: there we have surrendered even our lives cheerfully.

To you, our Faculty, from our hearts we are deeply, sincerely grateful. You have helped us grasp the high and noble things in life and, greater than that, you have exemplified in your lives that fibre of character that our mothers have prayed we might have. We can only follow you, and if our lives shall show themselves to be strong for the right then, perhaps, we too may be able to give of our lives to others.

In this backward glance we have found the old school. Surely our true friendships and the noble, pure influences that have been brought to bear upon us, surely, these are the soul of Westtown! Yes, here we have found the very soul of Westtown. If we can but grasp and cling to the finer qualities that are here then we shall not have come to Westtown in vain. If we have made our own its high and noble ideals, then and then only has Westtown given us the best it has to offer, the things worth while in life.

Here we stand with that heritage. Now we are entering the world to hold high or to mar that heritage. When the hours of testing shall come, and we want them to come hard and bitter, we shall but reach up to these ideals and if our grip is sure they will see us through to the very end!

We are called Quakers. Let us be fighting Quakers! And let us always fight as our Quaker fathers did, for what we know to be the right! Let us not shame the causes for which they gave their very lives. Let us rather so strengthen our backbones with clear grit that we shall stamp everything we do with our manhood and with our womanhood. Let us rather so order our lives that when we shall reach the end we may be able to say, "I have fought a good fight; I have kept the faith."

The Class of 1917 leaves with this highest of ambitions: to hold high the fair name of Westtown and to maintain the precepts of our forefathers.

LEVIN PAUL DONCHIAN.

EVERY day you may add to your prayers a short petition for your friend whose soul is in danger; and who knows but that petition may be answered even before you have got up from your knees?—J. KEBLE.

The ceaseless song that Nature sings,
The curious speech of voiceless things,
The lesson and the joy each brings,
We hear not, till we listen.

—JULIA S. JOHNSTON.

RESURRECTION.

The day spring and the year spring of all time
Is now as it was when the living Christ
Arose with rapture in the East and spread
His fire throughout the darkness as the sun,
And purged the darkness with the fire—the Christ
Whose life was as the living field lilies,
Our Christ who did rejoice for us and wept,
And drank of life the richer deeper drink.
And with the light day is perpetual,
Perpetual Spring with the dear cries of birds
And of the trees the quickened passioning.
And youth is young and very beautiful.
Yet life to us in this strange place is as Prophetic dreaming through the night, and death
The dear awakening from the sleep of life.
Then we rejoice, for His word is not vain,
"Who saves his life will lose it," and He lives.

—A. X.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS OF AN AUXILIARY, AT
THE AMERICAN AMBULANCE HOSPITAL, NEULLY
SUR-SEINE.

PARIS, Fourth Month 14, 1917.

At the hospital the work is getting most interesting. The ambulance drivers never slept in their quarters, but when they could in their machines, from Third-day to Sixth-day, as trains of wounded were coming into Paris every two or three hours.

Our ward looks like a forest with all the over-head wooden extensions for fractured arms and legs. Two men are pretty well smashed up with two legs, an arm and a face injured.

There were a great number of wounded coming in yesterday and last night. There are an especial number of fearful jaw cases—the worst that have ever come to the hospital. Most of the men had been for five days on a stretcher, beside the time lying on the field before being picked up and their dressings have not been done, some for three, and some for five days. But it is a surprising thing to see how well they all look when they have been rested at the hospital for a day.

Most of them are fat and have rosy cheeks. They must be fed well, and the out-door life agrees with them.

Fourth Month 28th.—Work at present is more and more interesting. Our fourteen beds are now full. (The number allotted to one nurse and auxiliary to care for.)

Last Fifth-day four men came in almost at the same time, and you can just imagine what running around there was to get them installed. When a stretcher enters the ward everyone looks up to see what bed the newly arrived is coming to. Then there is the inquiry as to his wounds and the best way of getting him onto the bed, and then there is the unrolling of bandages, the taking off of splints to see what kind of a wound there is.

One who came is only seventeen. He would not have had to go to war until 1910, but volunteered. He was so brave during the dressing of his shot-off knee, but the tears just squeezed out of the corners of his tightly shut eyes. Poor boy, he was very upset and cried most of the day. The men around him take such interest in him, and each has established his relation to the boy, as father, grandfather, uncle, etc.

Another man that just came in is so sorrow and dark, that we do not know whether he is Arab or just plain Jew. He has his ear off, and abdominal wounds from carrying a wounded German prisoner. He carelessly did not unarm the German, who naturally lit out and killed three French, and wounded this one.

Such a scrubbing up of new arrivals as we had! And I don't know how much peroxide I used up trying to get long-standing blood from arms and legs. Then there were the great wooden overhead extensions to put up for the usual complicated fractures.

I had a wonderful time trying my shaving abilities, too.

The extension straps were glued onto the leg or arm in question, so I got this particular arm fixed up. Fortunately, the man was too green himself to know that I was not experienced, so I put up a grand bluff and got off without cutting him.

Yesterday was our day off. The glorious warm Spring weather drew us again into the country. This time to Malmaison. Of course, we were greeted at the gate with the usual sign—"Fermé pendant la durée de la guerre," but we did not really care much, but wandered off with our picnic lunch, our steamer rug, and book, to a lovely hillside where we had lunch. And then lay down listening to the birds, watching the aeroplanes, and feeling the wind blow through our hair. Such days as that just fit us anew for work.

Fifth Month 5th.—The other day so many men came to our hospital that some had to wait for hours on their stretchers before cars could be had to evacuate the men from the beds the newcomers were to occupy. Oh! what a lot of suffering there is, and it frightens me sometimes to realize how one can get used to seeing it, and yet of course we have to.

The little boy of seventeen still stays very sick, and his knee is extremely painful. But I don't want to dwell on things. Suffice it to say that our work is well cut out for us for the summer, and I would not be anywhere else for worlds.

You ask whether helpers are short here. Yes, they are. Nurses are lacking. A great many English nurses were coming over this month, but the British Red Cross will not let them come, as they need them for their wounded. Then, of course, not so many are coming over from America. For this reason we are short-handed in our ward, and they have to keep on some unbearably inefficient nurses.

Fifth Month 12th.—Our latest arrival yesterday was a shining example of what some of those French hospitals at the front do. He has been wounded two months—a fractured leg, wound on the other and a hand gone. All around the wounds is filthy. The hand was not amputated rightly, and will have to be done again. The foot of the fractured leg has been allowed to get into an awful position, and he has bedsores. Marcet, the little boy of seventeen, is getting along pretty well. He is out on the porch now, because of his cough. Really he is such a funny boy, and will get me out there twenty times a day to change the position of his leg, and then will yell to wake the echoes when I touch it. Afterwards, though, he laughs at himself, and says I've fixed him finely.

You would so love to see the dear old fathers and mothers from the country, coming to see their wounded sons. One dear old pair from Brittany are especially in my mind. He came in, in his peasant's smock and little round hat, and carried a quaint little basket, while she had the dearest face in the world under her white cap. All one afternoon they were outside the ward, while we were working over the poor son. The son seemed to get better the next day, and so they went home. But the day after they left, he died. To-day was the funeral, and I shall never forget the sight of those old people, as they sat on a bench in the garden early this morning, bowed down and dumb with their grief. Somehow the vision of all the humble hearth-fires in France seemed to come before me and I realized how grief-stricken parents are the rule and not the exception here.

Fifth Month 10th.—It is now a hot First-day afternoon, and on all sides there is the buzz of conversation of the usual number of First-day visitors. I have just gotten a man back to bed, as his wheel-chair was needed by another, as usual.

Our favorite boarder now in the ward is a kitten. The other day he just appeared and of course, being fed and petted, he stays. Really it is a dear little black fellow, who loves to curl up beside and comfort the men in turn.

When I go to make a bed in the morning, the kitten falls out of the blanket and trots into the garden, perhaps, to chase his tail in the sun. Of course, we suppose he isn't "sanitary," but he gives more pleasure than germs we are sure and so here he stays as the ward mascot.

Have I told you about the Serbian orderly? He cannot talk English, and understands less French. When one of the men asked him for a drink of water, he gave him a flower to smell. In his broken English yesterday he was telling me how his family had all been carried off into Austria to work—his old mother and father. He himself had been in America at the beginning of the war, and worked his way back to Europe on a freighter. One certainly meets a variegated lot of people here!

Fifth Month 27th.—Three new men came in last night to fill the rest of our fourteen beds, and as usual such arrivals occasioned much scrubbing of "trenchy" feet, X-rays and operations. But the men coming in now are not newly wounded, they are from the big offensive in Champagne about a month ago, when we got our last convoy here of a great many. They are all pretty serious, but, of course, the worst is over now, after a month. The capture of Craonne and Chemin des Dames was murderous for the French, more so than they can really stand.

Paris life offers its petty inconveniences, which threaten to become greater. The coal question is really very serious, for there must be enough for munition factories. I do not believe any houses will be heated next winter. Laundry after laundry is shutting down because of the lack of it, and the laundry bills grow higher and higher. Because of lack of coal to make gas, the gas is very low. In fact, to-day at the hospital, there was none at all, which meant there was no hot water, which meant that the sterilizing of instruments, compresses, etc., required the most painstaking ingenuity.

The food controller of Paris has a wonderful time changing his mind. New regulations about sugar, patisserie and meat are being passed all the time, and changed in two weeks' time again. At the present moment we have two meatless days—Second and Third-days. But the article about the new regulations in the newspaper carefully stated that exception was to be made in favor of hospitals, allowing them to have horse-meat on meatless days. They say the horses wounded at the front are sent on for meat to Paris. As we have been having nothing else at the hospital for three months but onion stews, there is no doubt at all as to what we are eating. As for cakes now, no wheat flour can be used, so pastry cooks have taken to making respectable tasting, as well as looking, cakes with rice and potato flour. But, of course, rice and potatoes are nourishing foods, and I suppose the controller will soon stop turning potatoes and rice into tarts.

Fifth Month 20th.—Well, as for my usual occupation, things remain much the same. After two days of continual rush getting new patients installed, things have quieted down again. This afternoon about my only occupation was playing Halma and checkers with different men.

People who were here last year say that we are less rushed now than then, at this time. That one drive of the French, undertaken before they were prepared, was so costly that it is doubtful whether any further action can be carried forward for sometime. Then these Paris strikes are really very serious in crippling the efficiency of the transport service to the front.

A. N.

WORTH REMEMBERING.

Do not carry your patriotism to an exaltation of war as an institution. Never was it truer than to-day that we ought to find some other way of settling the disputes of nations, that the way on which we still depend is spelling something little short of the suicide of our western civilization. The spread of tuberculosis, now disqualifying a large percentage of the young men of France, and allicting to an unbelievable degree the children of Germany—deprived as they are of animal fats—is only one of the horrible manifestations of war. There are others. Patriotism estops our saying much about them, when the authorities are hustling for enlistments, but we should remember in all our appeals for service and sacrifice that war in itself is not a good thing, not a manifestation of the Divine love of the world, but the one persisting example of man's own horrible shortcomings. Let us keep our rudder true.—Boston Herald.

"QUAKERS SHOW A WAY."

Exempted from soldiering by the military law of the United States, the American Quakers do not intend to keep out of the war zone. They plan a new kind of expeditionary force and now are organizing a group of 500 Friends to go to France for the purpose of assisting in the restoration of devastated territory. After training at one of their colleges the Quakers are to work just behind the lines in France, rebuilding as Belgian, French, British and American guns and soldiers drive the Germans back.

As with other religious sects, their refusals have given them their name with the public. They know that Quakers won't take oaths, refuse to make war and scorn social graduations, but that is only the outside view of the members of the Society of Friends. No war, no swearing and no hats off to royalty are merely Quaker denials.

It is affirmations which give their true character. For the Quakers have a positive mission. When William Penn decreed that slaves should earn their freedom by serving for fourteen years instead of never having it at all, he began the struggle of the Quakers against slavery in America. The abolition cause found in the Quakers important leadership. In England the Quakers were pioneer prison reformers, and among the first to make any attempt to educate the poor. That they now raise a company to rebuild homes in France is quite as true to their history as their refusal to take part in war.

Such action furnishes a shining example for others who are opposed to war. Those who find it against their consciences to fight should not stop here. They should seek some service in which they can take part.—Editorial in the Boston Globe.

HADDONFIELD AND SALEM QUARTERLY MEETING.

The round of the Quarterly Meetings constituting Philadelphia Yearly Meeting was again completed when, on the 14th inst., that of Haddonfield and Salem was held at Moorestown. This meeting is composed of thirteen subordinate meetings located in the five New Jersey counties of Burlington, Camden, Gloucester, Salem, Cumberland and Atlantic. When, as formerly, the Quarterly Meeting circulated to four different places during the year, the summer session was held at Evesham (Mount Laurel). Here, in a sequestered spot on the side of the mount, in the season of bloom of the shrub that gave it name, and near to its great century-gnarled oak, in the cool depths of the old stone house, the meeting was held. In those days the membership were mostly country folk who generation by generation tilled their pleasant farms in quietude, hardly thinking of the great changes to be wrought in time, when Quarterly Meeting day would no longer find them journeying towards Evesham. Many regretted the transfer of place of holding the meeting, wise as it seemed, in order to bring it nearer to railroad facilities. The words of a beloved visiting minister upon that occasion are well remembered—"Mount Laurel has been a Bethel to many hearts."

So much for history. Regarding the present, we enter the large modern house at Moorestown and note the assembly fast arriving by train, trolley and automobile. "Plain" coat and bonnet are now chiefly conspicuous through their absence. The whole of the "women's side" is flushed with color almost to the front seats, as this and that article of feminine apparel betrays the whim of the wearer artfully seeking to avoid conventionality, and yet, for the most part, retaining a character that savors of genuine simplicity.

The great partition hangs high aloft, for the session is conjoint throughout. Even the almost sacred line of demarcation, as between the men's and women's side, vanishes in the rear of the house, where many of the gentler sex, in the overflow of their own precinct, are seated in the midst of their brethren. Scattered here and there are many children; their faces, like those of their elders, betraying that quiet expectancy which as the meeting settles gradually assumes the reverential attitude the occasion demands from the sincere in purpose. The heat of the day is oppressive, the weather being unusually warm. The noiseless motion of many fans seems to be keeping time to worshipful thoughts deepening but as yet unvoiced. At length the opening words of the majestic ninetieth Psalm interrupt the silence in a call to united prayer:—

"Lord, thou has been our dwelling place
In all generations.
Before the mountains were brought forth,
Or ever thou hadst formed the earth and the world,
Even from everlasting to everlasting, thou art God."

The same voice directly follows in testimony, bringing a stranger's greeting from a distant State; it is the reiterated plea of the centuries for lives consecrated to the Divine will. "Holiness becometh thy house, O Lord, forever." The next speaker alluded to that memorable home in Bethany, with its sisters twain; each in her way seeking to administer to the comfort of the Beloved Guest. Martha, the practical house-keeper, dealing with things of time and sense, in a moment of forgetfulness obtruding upon the sacred presence with her querulous request only to receive that gentle rebuke which has sounded through the ages forever putting the things that are but temporal behind the "one thing needful." And yet "Jesus loved Martha and her sister, and Lazarus."

In this day of world commotion, when the unending call is for action, action, help in this service and in that, is it not true there may be a call for some to simply sit at the Master's feet, listening for the gracious words which He may have to speak to such as regards His real purpose concerning this age?

In the business session of the Quarterly Meeting several matters of interest claimed attention. First in order came the Extracts from the minutes of the Yearly Meeting. In respect to these it may be said that the rendering of the excellent Minute of Exercises of the Women's Yearly Meeting by the Reader of that body, strengthened the impression that rarely, if ever, has it given expression so forcibly and clearly as to its aims and the power for good that rests upon its corporate capacity.

A report was read from the Committee having charge of the ancient meeting-house at Greenwich, in which it was stated that the annual public meeting for worship was held there on the twenty-seventh of Fifth Month, and that, as usual, it was well attended and appreciated by the people of the vicinity. The Quarterly Meeting's Religious Service Committee also presented a report setting forth their work during the past three months; this embraced the holding of a largely attended meeting at Arney's Mount, a fine old property which ranks among closed houses. At Woodstown, where the house has been closed for several years, fresh interest has been awakened and maintained by the holding of a meeting once a month during the winter season in a private dwelling. This meeting occurs on the last First-day in each month, at 3 o'clock; during the summer season it will be held in the meeting-house. Other work of the Committee included the holding of a religious meeting upon six successive First-day afternoons in South Medford, where there are a large number of factory operatives with but meager religious opportunities.

Perhaps some thoughtful persons left the meeting at its close with the feeling it was not all it might have been, or should have been; some message being withheld, some work overwrought, perhaps, either of which may tend to lessen the life and the extension of the Spirit's power. Be this as it may, the day has passed, carrying with it the lost opportunity, yet leaving behind some fresh sense of blessing leading to further fruitfulness in the field of offering and joyfulness in the house of prayer.

W. L. M.

THE secret of life is, not to do what one likes, but to try to like that which one has to do; and one does like it—in time.—DINAH MULLOCK CRAIK.

MEETING AT STONY BROOK.

The appointed meeting recently held at the historic meeting-house at Stony Brook near Princeton, was largely attended by the people of the neighborhood and a number of Friends from a distance.

After the meeting gathered, the silence was broken by prayer in which the desire was expressed that the words spoken might be blessed.

The language of Samuel, when he heard the voice of the Lord calling him was revived in our ears with the desire that we might all be willing humbly to listen and willingly to answer, "Here am I, Lord; speak, for thy servant heareth." Another Friend brought forth many passages from the Scriptures, showing they were given by inspiration of God, but are only revealed through the spirit of Christ.

The residents of the neighborhood, many of whom are descendants of Friends, manifest a deep interest in the appointed meetings at Stony Brook and express their appreciation of the opportunity of attending a Friends' meeting. This feeling prevails in many places where meeting-houses have been closed, and there seems to be an opening for those who feel concerned to spread our testimonies, on account of which they should be encouraged to labor in the Master's service and win souls to Christ.

TRENTON, N. J.

E. H. K.

MEETING ON PRESENT PROBLEMS.

The floor of the meeting-house on Twelfth Street was well filled on First-day afternoon, the seventeenth of Sixth Month, with Friends who responded to the call of the Peace Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting "for prayerful consideration of our present problems, with special relation to those of our members of conscription age."

John B. Garrett presided, and in opening the meeting read the "Message of the Society of Friends," published by the Friends' National Peace Committee just before the declaration of war by the United States. Anna Rhoads Ladd spoke of our "peculiar temptations" to feel our weakness and inability to do anything in the face of the great need that faces us, and to isolate ourselves from other Christians in an apparent self-righteousness because of the difficulty of doing anything now without more or less remotely sharing in the world-war. She counselled us to turn to God, who alone can give us wisdom and power to overcome.

Anna Cope Evans spoke of the attitude of Friends to war, especially the respect for personality, and the belief in the law of love as the efficient and Christian law of personal relations, which are actuating conscientious objectors in England, and enabling them to suffer joyfully.

The following speakers were young men and represented those who are facing the present crisis in the most vital way. George H. Hallett, Jr., told of his attitude to the Exemption Clause. He emphasized the need of our standing with all others whose conscientious objections to war are the same as ours, and identifying ourselves with the great army of these who do not come under the exemption clause. He had come to feel that he could be of most service to those outside of our Society by himself retaining his membership, but in registering he had claimed exemption because as a Christian he believes all war criminal, without mentioning the fact he is a Quaker. He desires thus to stand with those who have to suffer for such an attitude.

Francis R. Taylor, who is beyond the age for the present draft, spoke of alternative service, for which there may be conscription for all, and advocated a courageous facing of the problems this may raise. Each one must decide personally, but reserve first loyalty for the highest Authority, and obedience to the Divine call to service rather than the human, if they should definitely seem to conflict.

Harold Evans followed with a statement of the opportunities for emergency service that are being opened for Friends, and the financial responsibility thereby involved for our Yearly Meeting, closing with a very earnest appeal that we all should be willing and glad to make great personal sacrifices for the sake of the unprecedented world-suffering and need.

The meeting closed in much solemn feeling, and all must have united most heartily in the prayer voiced by the Chairman that if it is God's will this war and all wars may soon be made to cease.

E. CADBURY, JR.

YOUNGER FRIENDS.

EXTRACTS FROM THE GOLDEN CLEW (CHAPTER VIII)—KENNETH WOULD BE A MISSIONARY.—One still autumn afternoon, when the copses were flooded with lazy sunlight, the children begged mother to let Ralph row them all down the river to make their tea on a bank by the water. Kenneth was very anxious that he should get the sticks and prepare the fire. He found some good stones and arranged the sticks, which he had picked up under the trees. By-and-by, it was all ready to be lighted. Then he came to his mother for the matches.

"Robinson Crusoe rubbed some pieces of wood together to get a fire," said mother, laughing, "try and light it that way, but we had better not wait, for it will take some time, I'm afraid."

"Missionaries now would be sure to have matches. I'm going to be a missionary some day. Ever since Dorothy read me 'Lion-hearted,' I want to go to Africa like Bishop Hannington," said Kenneth.

"I was not aware that he went to any desert islands," said Ralph.

"Well, he shot a lion; it's all the same," answered Kenneth. They had a merry tea, and sat some time afterwards, watching the reapers at work in the distant cornfields, then it was time to repack their things and go home. The row back—when Marion and Dorothy each took an oar, and even Kenneth himself tried for a short time—was delightful. He said, when mother tucked him up in bed the last thing, that it had been a lovely time, too nice a day to finish just yet.

"Do sit down, mother, just a minute, and let us talk." Mother sat down on the bed and answered, "Well, I did want to hear about the missionary plan."

"I thought thou would like it, mother," he said. His mother kissed him warmly. "Yes, darling, I am glad it has come into thy mind. And if, when the time comes, thou really wants to go, I will do all I can to help thee."

"Thank thee, mother," he said, pressing her hand lovingly in both of his. "How long shall I have to wait?"

"To go to Africa? O, a good long while; fifteen years, perhaps. But thou need not wait all that while to begin. Thou can, in some ways, begin at once."

"By being good, I suppose," he said, with a sigh.

"Yes, of course, and by learning to do all sorts of things, besides making fires; and by taking pains with thy lessons, so that thou may get on quickly to other things. There are plenty of people that want to be helped, without going to Africa to find them, and if thou learns to help people in England, thou will find thou will be able to help people anywhere."

"How can I help people?" he asked.

"Why, thou helps me, when thou brings me a foot-stool, and rings the bell for me, and carries my umbrella. All little kind, polite ways are helpful, too. And thou helps nurse very much, when thou amuses the little ones, if she and Esther are busy, instead of teasing them, or making them excited and noisy."

"Yes," said Kenneth, unconvinced; "but those things seem so small. Not a bit like a real missionary."

"A real missionary has to begin at the very beginning, to be quick and ready, and to feel for people and to forget himself. If thou learns that, it is a great part of the lesson. But, perhaps, thou would call thy work at the Missionary Helpers' Union more like helping? That is very good. But it is pleasant, too. I was trying to think of the things which are not so pleasant, though I know thou likes doing many of them, because they really train thee better."

"Making balls and scrap-books isn't much like a missionary, either," said Kenneth.

"But most missionaries have to learn how to use their fingers, then they can teach others. Thou must not think that they walk about all day with a gun on their shoulder, shooting lions," she said.

"Of course not," said Kenneth, laughing, "they have to preach, and print Bibles."

"They preach when they can get anyone to listen to them. But often there is a great deal to do first. Sick people to doctor and nurse; dinners to cook, houses and schools to build, unruly boys and girls to keep in order. A missionary must learn how to win people's hearts, and he can best do that by being kind and useful to them."

"Well," said Kenneth, "I want to do some kind, useful thing now for somebody, and so I can begin."

"Nurse has a little nephew in the village," answered mother, "who has a bad knee. It is often very painful, but she was telling me this morning that he fretted a good deal more at getting behind in his class at school than with the pain in his knee. He is only seven. Would thou like to go around and help him with his books?"

"I must think a little," said Kenneth. "Perhaps I should like it."

"And then a little missionary must keep his temper, even when he does think that nurse has made a mistake."

"But," said mother, more cheerfully, "in some ways I think thou would make a good missionary. Thou art really a brave boy for eight years old, and not afraid of trying to do difficult things. And thou art not afraid of some pain. When thou came down the tree, yesterday so much quicker than thou intended, and hurt thy knees so badly on the bark, I am sure they must have smarted very much, but thou did not say a word about it, and ran about just the same after I had bandaged them up. That is just what thou wants to be. And a boy must save up his money, and not spend too much on chocolate-drops and air-balls, and such things. And when he has a hard sum, he must not say: 'O dear! I can't do the tiresome thing,' and throw his slate on the floor; that will never do."

"I don't think, mother," said Kenneth, "I should mind doing great hard things, so much as these little disagreeable things."

"I expect thou will get some of each," said mother, "but perhaps these come first. Everyone has to take trouble to do some disagreeable things, if he wants to get on in anything. Ask cook how she learned to be a cook, or Russell how he learned to look after a garden, or the blacksmith in the village, or the gas-fitter, or anyone else; we will find they had to learn not what they liked, but what they did not like. And it is even more important for a boy, who wants to train himself for the highest work of all."

Kenneth was getting sleepy, but he said, "I'll try."

Mother kissed him and then watched his eyes droop and his breathing grow soft and slow; she carefully drew her hand away from his, without waking him, and left the room, asking the Lord to keep her little son, and make him always faithful and true even to the end.—G. CROSFIELD.

Rest! for the day is passing,
And you lie dreaming on;
The others have buckled their armor,
And forth to the fight have gone.
A place in the ranks awaits you,
Each man has some part to play;
The past and the future are nothing,
In the face of the stern to-day.

—A. A. PROCTER.

"We can only understand God in the measure that we are like Him."

FIFTEENTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE ASSOCIATION FOR PROMOTING COLLEGE EDUCATION OF WOMEN, 1917.

For the college year, 1916-17, this Association granted scholarships to eight young women.

Four of these being now over twenty-one years of age fall within the provisions of the T. Wistar Brown Teachers' Fund, the Trustees of which have granted them scholarships for the coming year. Two will graduate in Sixth Month.

This leaves two renewals and three new applications to receive the consideration of this Association.

A summary of the Treasurer's report for 1916-17 is as follows:—

Receipts (including the Eliza Earle Memorial Scholarship of $200 and interest on deposits).....	$1,300.13
Disbursements (five scholarships of $200, each, and two of $150).....	1,300.00

Balance Fifth Month 1, 1917.....$ 1.13

As the contributions last year lacked $75 of the required amount, our President, Thomas K. Brown, advanced this sum to the eighth applicant, who because of ill health remained in college only half the year. Against his protest the Board voted at its recent meeting to refund this amount to Thomas K. Brown.

Counting out the Eliza Earle Memorial Scholarship as taking care of one applicant, the sum of $875 should be raised for the year 1917-18.

The assistance rendered by these grants is not great when we consider that a $200 scholarship covers only about one-third of a very conservative estimate of expense. But it means in nearly every case the tipping of the scales of possibility to the side of a college course.

This report is sent out earlier than usual in order that the young women may know at this time what they may count on.

We look for a renewal of thy valued subscription, a reminder of which will be sent to thee near the usual time of payment.

Thomas K. Brown, President, Dr. Anna P. Sharpless, Treasurer, 3926 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

John B. Garrett, Asa S. Wing, Edward M. Wistar, Samuel L. Allen, Davis H. Forsythe, Eliza Stokes Nicholson, Anna Walton, Jane W. Bartlett, Rachel Haines Bacon, Agnes L. Tierney, Secretary, 118 W. Coulter Street, Germantown.

NEWS ITEMS.

GILBERT and MINNIE PUCKETT BOWLES are expected to land in Seattle on the 7th inst.

DR. THOMAS NEWLIN retired from the presidency of Guilford College at the end of this year. He has served the college seven years, five as dean and two as president.

THE WOMEN of Minneapolis Meeting are planning to have the meeting-house open one day each week during the summer that all who will may come and help make garments for war victims, who, though non-combatant themselves, have been left entirely destitute. Designs of garments according to the fashions of the war-stricken countries, together with the colors preferred by the people, have been furnished by English Friends.

PENN COLLEGE graduated a class of 35 this year. Ex-President Taft spoke at the Commencement on "Our World Relations." President Edwards announced the successful outcome of the campaign for $400,000. Also gifts of $125,000 on the annuity basis. A fine telescope, gift of Willard Swift and wife, of Worcester, has been added to the equipment. Despite the fire in the Spring of 1916, the attendance has been maintained.

"THE first Indian," writes Dr. Henry T. Hodgkin in 'Friends Beyond Seas,' "received into membership by Friends was a Brahmin, Bal Mukana, who, in 1875, openly confessed his faith in Christ. He came over to Sohagpur, to which place Charles Gayford had temporarily moved, as his house at Hoshangabad had been destroyed by fire, and there in public the sacred thread and the chutiya (the tuft of hair that is left to grow on the crown of the head) were removed. . . . Within a short time his school friend had followed his example, and thus, in the midst of prejudice and opposition, was laid the foundation of the Church in India under the care of the Society of Friends."—The Friend (London).

TO ALL YEARLY MEETINGS IN AMERICA:—

Our Dear Friends:—This letter brings you our cordial greetings in Christian fellowship. It is a great blessing to realize that to God's eye the East and West are one and in His unlimited love you and we all can come together into His fold as one flock.

We most thankfully notify you that we have been led to organize Japan Yearly Meeting by the grace and guidance of our Heavenly Father and Lord Jesus Christ, at the annual meeting held in Tokio, Fifth Month 10th to 14th, 1917.

May His grace always be with your meetings and ours, and His name be praised and glorified above all things.

On behalf of Japan Yearly Meeting.

TASUKA NOMURA, Presiding Clerk.

TOKI IWASAWA, Corresponding Clerk.

TOKIO, Japan.

CENTRAL OFFICES OF THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.—Isaac Sharp, See retary, Devonshire House, 136, Bishopsgate, London, E. C. 2 (Telegraphic Address: Oversight—Ave., London; Telephone: 1148 City).

After the 30th inst., all communications for the Society of Friends such as have been sent to me since my appointment as Secretary in 1890, should be sent to my successor—William F. Nicholson, 136, Bishopsgate, E. C. 2.

All payments such as have hitherto been made to me should be made to him.

This notice is sent on behalf of The Society of Friends, London and Middlesex Quarterly Meeting, The Six Weeks' Meeting, Devonshire House Monthly Meeting.

The following Trusts—Friends' Loan Fund, Devonshire House Education Trusts, Ackworth Benefit Funds, William Howard's Charity.

ISAAC SHARP,

Secretary of the Society of Friends

LONDON, Sixth Month 5, 1917.

INTERESTING comparisons between the cost of living before the war and to-day appear in the Ackworth School Report. Between Eighth Month, 1914, and Twelfth Month, 1916, the following increases in the price of food are shown: meat from 8s. 6d. to 13s. 6d. per stone, flour 28s. to 58s. per 20 stones, oatmeal 18s. to 37s. 6d. per 10 stones, sugar 15s. 6d. to 43s. 6d. per cwt., and potatoes 5s. 3d. to 12s. per cwt. Yet the cost of the food for the institution increased in the two years—1914 to 1916—from £3,167 to no more than £3,641, or about 15 per cent., and the difference between 1915 and 1916 was less than £100. As the Committee point out, such a result is evidence of the great care that has been taken in the housekeeping department; and they add: "Our satisfaction in this result is the greater as it has been accomplished without in any way impairing the health of the School."—The Friend (London).

EXTRACT from a letter dated Fifth Month 1, 1917, addressed to George Vaux, Jr., by R. Huntley Davidson, Treasurer of West China Union University at Chengtu, West China:—

"For over a week or ten days we have been under martial law. On the night of the 19th there was a regular battle at the top of our street for the Imperial City. We had shells and bullets flying all around us, and many fires not far off were started. So altogether we have had an anxious time of it. Things are better again now. Both 'armies' have withdrawn outside the city, so if there is any more fighting—which I doubt, for the Chinese do not keep at anything for very long—it will be better than having a violent battle in the heart of this populous city. The civilians, as usual, have come off worst. Many have lost their houses and all they possess. It is impossible to ascertain the death roll, but it must be well over 1000, I should say. For a few days I took my wife and child outside to the University, but when firing was on the bullets there were worse than in here, as here we were really too near for many shots to damage us. But outside one felt freer and was away from the many sounds which got on one's nerves. The night of the battle we could hear the men yelling as they charged, "sha, sha, sha," (kill, kill, kill), the most blood-curdling thing that I have ever listened to. Then added that was the cry of the people in the burning houses and the men as they were shot. Altogether one is glad that it is over and one has not to live through another such night."

At Warwickshire North Monthly Meeting (now the largest in London Yearly Meeting, having a membership of 1,430), held at Coventry on the eighth of Fifth Month, Joseph and S. Katharine Taylor's concern for service in Calcutta was considered. They desire to go out to reside there for a few years, and help to form a nucleus round which a self-supporting circle of Friends might gather. Invitations which they have received from Calcutta, and visits paid there at intervals during the past twenty-five years, seem to show that there is a distinct opening for such work. The proposal was sympathetically received by the Monthly Meeting, and a minute was adopted stating that J. and S. K. Taylor's residence in the Birmingham district had been greatly valued, and expressing the greatest sympathy with their concern for Calcutta, which is accordingly to go forward to the Yearly Meeting. It is understood that it is likely to receive consideration on the first day of London Yearly Meeting.—The Friend (London).

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

The thirteenth annual session of the Summer School of the University of Pennsylvania will be held during the six weeks beginning on the 9th inst. and ending on the 18th prox. The school will not be much affected by the war as the courses are designed primarily for professors and teachers in colleges and schools, superintendents and supervisors in special branches of instruction, candidates for the degree of master of arts and students in the college courses for teachers, and other special students.

J. C. Morgenthau, brother of Henry Morgenthau, ex-Ambassador to Turkey, announced that the postage stamp collection of George H. Worthington, of Cleveland—reported to be one of the largest in existence—had been sold to a New York collector, whose name was withheld. The collection is said to be worth $1,000,000.

Suggestions for purchasing and preparing food and keeping a family budget are contained in a summary entitled, "Forty Ways of Reducing Expenses," prepared by Winifred S. Gibbs, President of the Home Economics Association, and issued by the food committee of the Mayor's Committee of Women on National Defence, 4 East Thirty-ninth Street, New York City.

Following the official recognition extended by President Wilson to the Y. M. C. A. as "a valuable adjunct and asset" to the army, although it will continue as a civilian organization, plans have been completed and contracts let by the National War Council of the Association for six new buildings as follows: one at Fort Ethan Allen, Vermont, one at Fort Stanish in Boston Harbor, two at Newport, Rhode Island, one at Mineola, Long Island, and one at Fort Snocum, in New York Harbor.

Lutherans report tremendous interest and activity in the Reformation celebration, in spite of German association and the distractions of war plans. Arrangements are well in hand for an exhibit of Reformation achievements, and invitations have gone to all religious bodies in America to take part. The plan is to make the exhibits, if at all, in the principal cities East, West and South, and especially in strong Protestant centres.

The building of an American road in one of the most hazy provinces of the Philippines was said to have had a wonderful civilizing influence.

The trading with the enemy bill, which Congress soon will take up, is noteworthy, not only with respect to its concrete provisions, but as the most illustrious example of national altruism that may have come within the knowledge of historians. Indeed, in the course of his testimony before the committee, Secretary of Commerce Redfield, speaking of the provision which requires the United States Government to impound enemy funds and to return them to their owners after the war, possibly with interest, remarked: "I do not know who was the originator of the idea, but whoever it was has created something as fine in its way as the return of the Boxer indemnity, because the enemy property is all in our hands to bear its share of our expense in fighting the enemy, and yet it is safeguarded so that if it be the will of Congress, under proper conditions, it may be returned to him intact and safeguarded by us ourselves during the whole period of the war."

The national park in Alaska, which Congress created last Spring, is one of the monster spectacles of the world. It includes Mount McKinley. To say that it rises 20,300 feet above sea level and that it is the loftiest peak in America is to convey no idea whatever of its grandeur. There are several mountains in the Himalayas which materially exceed its height, one which rises more than 25,000 feet above sea level; and yet Mount McKinley, to the observer, is loftier than any of these.

Travelers from southwestern Alaska report that Mount Douglas and Mount Iliamna, volcanoes on the west shore of Cook Inlet, are discharging fire, ashes, and smoke, and that the activity of these peaks is increasing. The entire Aleutian Range, from Cold Bay, Shelikoff Strait, to Mount Iliamna, appears to be ablaze. Mount Douglas had been silent fifteen years.

C. T. Wang, the Yale Alumnus who resigned as General Secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association of China, to become Vice-president of the Senate, conducts in Peking a weekly Bible Class made up of Government officials.

RECEIPTS.

Unless otherwise specified, two dollars have been received from each person, paying for Vol. 91.

Esther K. Alsop, Pa.; Esther A. Harris, Conn.; Emalie C. Bradbury, Pa.; Paul D. L. Maier, Pa.; Wm. T. Oliver, Mass.; Sarah S. Carter, N. J.; Sarah W. Bryan, Kan.; Elizabeth W. Gage, Kan.; J. Wistar Worthington, Kan.; H. Russell Worthington, N. Y.; Sarah E. Galloway, Ohio; Helen S. Matteson, Cal. (Vol. 90); Susanna S. Kite, Pa.; Henry Hall, Pa.; Susanna Kite, Pa.; James Kite, Pa.; Laura J. Parker, Pa.; Mary D. Hershey, Pa.; Rachel W. Haines, Pa.; John E. Carter, Pa.; Barclay Penrose, Ohio; Clara F. Smedley, Pa.; Wm. B. Stanley, Iowa; Sarah M. Barnard, Mass.; Phoebe E. Heston, Ohio; T. F. Weaver, Ark.; W. Atherton Haines, Pa.; Albert B. Hayes, Eng.; John Weltz, Ohio; Malinda A. Thompson, Iowa; Serena A. Heren, Iowa; Ole H. Bryngelson, Iowa; M. and S. J. Troth, Pa.; Geo. B. Allen, Pa.; Alfred F. Satterthwait, Mo.

Remittances received after Second-day evening will not appear in receipts until the following week

NOTICES.

DURING Seventh and Eighth Months Friends' Library will be closed, except on Fifth-day of each week, from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M.

LINDA A. MOORE,
Librarian.

The Social Service Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting is calling the attention of Monthly Meetings to the following list of books with the suggestion that a general reading of them by the membership will advance the interests for which the Committee is under appointment. Friends' Library, 142 N. Sixteenth Street, will have duplicate sets of these books. The Library is open in Summer only on Fifth-days, from 9 to 1, but Friends who wish the books can borrow them for one week by parcel post if they will forward 10 cents to the Librarian to cover the expense of mailing.

LINDA MOORE,
Librarian.

LIST.

- The Church and the Hour—Vida D. Seudder, E. P. Dutton, $1.00.
The Social Problem—C. A. Ellwood, Macmillan, $1.25.
"Whence Come Wars?"—(First Report of the Committee on War and the Social Order of London Yearly Meeting), 15c.
"Facing the Facts"—(Report of Conference on "The Society of Friends and the Social Order," held in London, 1916), 20c.
"Christianity and Business"—Edward Grubb, $1.25.
Christianizing the Social Order—Walter Rauschenbusch, Macmillan, $1.50.
Word of Remembrance to the Rich—John Woolman.
The Practice of Christianity—By the author of "Pro Christo et Ecclesia," Macmillan.
The Abolition of Poverty—J. H. Hollander, Houghton Mifflin, 75c.
"The books started can be obtained from Friends' Book and Tract Committee, 111 E. Twentieth Street, New York City."

WILLIAM H. PILE'S SONS, PRINTERS,
422 Walnut Street, Phila., Pa.

Friends Arch St. Centre

304 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Provides comfortable accommodations for guests by the day or week. Meals at moderate prices.

AMELIA D. FEATHERSTONE, Matron.

PHONE—MARKET 1571.

WISSAHICKON INN

REDLANDS,
CALIFORNIA.

THE WISSAHICKON INN is situated in an Orange Grove in Redlands, the most beautiful place in the San Bernardino Valley.

At the Wissahickon Inn, a family hotel of fifty rooms, you will find a homelike place, good food, and careful attention to your wants.

Steam heat, rooms with private bath and plenty of public baths. One or two cottages on the grounds. Near parks and golf course. Tennis court. Magnificent roads for motoring.

For reservations and prices, address

A. B. JOHNSON.

POCONO MANOR INN

The busy summer season is near at hand—also the beautiful mountain laurel and rhododendron, which will be found in abundance over the Manor Estate. The Golf Course is in better condition than ever before: the Fairways and Greens are all very beautiful and add greatly to the general picturesqueness of these Links in the Poconos.

In arranging to come to the Pocono Manor during the summer if reservations have not already been made we should suggest that we be communicated with at once.

J. W. HURLEY, Mgr., Pocono Manor, Pa.
(Pocono Summit Station, D., L. & W. K. R.)

FRUIT TREES,
SMALL FRUITS,
SHADE TREES,
EVERGREENS,
SHRUBBERY,
HEDGE PLANTS.

EVERYTHING FOR THE ORCHARD,
THE GARDEN AND THE LAWN.

THE RAKESTRAW-PYLE COMPANY

KENNETT SQUARE, PA.

RESIDENCE: 254 S. 44th St. BELL 'PHONE: Baring 3914X
WILLIAM OAKES
Plumbing and Heating Contractor
ALSO LEAD BURNING
260 SOUTH TENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA
BELL 'PHONE: Filbert 2066.

ASSOC. M. AM. Soc. C. E. Bell 'Phone—Lombard 3412
EDWIN M. EVANS
CONTRACTOR & BUILDER
My jobbing department is well equipped,
prompt and efficient
321 S. LAWRENCE ST. :: PHILA.

WILLIAM S. YARNALL
MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN
118 SOUTH FIFTEENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA

GLASLYN-CHATHAM
PARK PLACE
ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

A Family House of Established Reputation.
Open Throughout the Year.

NATHAN L. JONES.

THE HOLMES PRESS
Printers
J. L. Engle, Pres.
1336-40 CHERRY ST. PHILA.

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE MATERIAL THAT WE SELL

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

THE LAKESIDE

EAGLES MERE, PA.

Unobstructed lake view; capacity 250.
Elevator, steam heat, golf, tennis, boating and bathing. Attractive motoring through the surrounding country.

GARAGE

J. S. KIRK & SON

H. G. CHALKLEY & SONS, LTD.

LONDON, ENGLAND LAKE CHARLES, LA.
LAWRENCE, KANSAS

OFFER:—

First Lien Farm Mortgages, paying from 6% to 6½% net to the investor.

Not to exceed 40% of our own valuation
loaned to the farmer.

Full particulars of mortgages on hand ranging from $500.00 to $5,000.00, given on application to:—

T. H. CHALKLEY, LAWRENCE, KANSAS.

Letchworth Cottage

Spring Lake Beach, N. J.
Open for the Season 1917

A. C. & S. H. Letchworth

WALL PAPERS—All Grades
WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER
Custom of Friends Specially Solicited

FRANK C. BUEHL
Successor to S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON

902 SPRING GARDEN ST. PHILADELPHIA
Opposite Spring Garden Station, Phila. & Reading R. R.
PUBLISHED 1948 BELL 'PHONE

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

322 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE
PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

ALFRED C. HAINES
Building Glass and Paints
66 N. Front St., Philadelphia.

GIRARD TRUST CO.

BROAD and CHESTNUT STS.

CAPITAL
AND
SURPLUS } $10,000,000

Acts as Executor, Trustee, Guardian,
Administrator, Assignee and Receiver.
Safe to Rent in Burglar-proof Vaults.
Interest Allowed on Deposits. :: ::

E. B. MORRIS
PRESIDENT

Light - Convenient - Lasting

Smooth and light, it is easy to use. Strong and flexible, it does not soon break and leak. It justifies its name, Nonkink. It lasts and means long-run economy.

18 cts. per foot, coupled.

With it let us send you needed reels, nozzles, sprinklers, etc.

J. E. RHODS & SONS

PHILADELPHIA: 12 N. THIRD ST.
NEW YORK: 102 BEKMAN ST.
CHICAGO: 322 W. RANDOLPH ST.
FACTORY AND TANNERY: WILMINGTON, DEL.

Philadelphia's
Representative Store

W. B. WEAVER
UNDERTAKER and EMBALMER

550-552 N. 5TH ST., PHILA., PA.

Special Attention Given to Funerals
In and Out of the City. Also Chapel
Accommodations for Funerals. ☐

BELL 'PHONE 1 ESTABLISHED 1866

ELKINS, MORRIS & CO.

BANKERS

REPRESENTATIVES

WM. E. CADBURY
PAUL W. BROWN
JAMES P. MAGILL

LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

JOSEPH G. FOGG
FUNERAL DIRECTOR and EMBALMER

S. W. COR. 16TH AND RACE STREETS
Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals
BELL 'PHONE SPRUCE 1648

R. C. Ballinger Ernest R. Yarnall John A. Stratton
TELEPHONES

Bell-Filbert 26-15 - Keystone-Race 637

R. C. BALLINGER & CO.
CONTRACTORS and BUILDERS

218 N. Thirteenth St. Philadelphia.

HARRY S. LEE

313 WALNUT STREET

PAINTER and GRAINER

ANTIQUE and OFFICE FURNITURE RESTORED

JOBING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO
ESTIMATES

W. J. MacWatters

WITH

HARDWICK & GAGEE CO.

SUCCESSORS TO

IVINS, DIETZ & GAGEE

Let me help you in selecting your

Rugs and Carpets

Our new imports of Oriental Rugs
are of the highest merit

1220-22 MARKET ST. :: PHILA.

HARVEY T. WEBER

TAILOR

207-208 HALE BLDG., 1326 CHESTNUT ST.

The custom of Friends specially solicited.

RAILROAD AND PUBLIC UTILITY BONDS

FOR

CONSERVATIVE INVESTMENT.

Full Particulars on Request.

SEE WALKER & KEPLER

FOR

Good Electrical Work

531 CHESTNUT ST. - PHILA.

BACK LOG CAMP

INDIAN LAKE, N. Y.

In the Heart of the Adirondacks.

The name Back Log Camp means a great deal to many people. We shall be glad to send our booklet to any one who is interested in the latest development of the Back Log idea. THOMAS K. BROWN
Westtown, Pa.

The Pennsylv

5431 Greene St. - Germantown

After the middle of Sixth Month, there will be several pleasant rooms vacant for the Summer.

Apply to the Matron, Rachel Thomas.

PUBLIC STENOGRAPHER

GEORGE B. COCK, Liberty Building
Established 1896. Experience 39 years; Medical 12.

FOR RENT—WERNERSVILLE, PA.

BUNGALOW

of 7 rooms, bath, electric lighting, running water, etc.
Near Galen Hall Hotel, for seventh and eighth Months.

TATNALL & Co.,
P. O. Box 298, Wilmington, Del.

A FAMILY of THREE ADULTS would LIKE TO take charge of a house in the Suburbs, while the family are away, during the Summer or part of it.
Address R. T. B.,
Office of "THE FRIEND."

A DESIRABLE PERMANENT SITUATION is OPEN for capable young men in old commercial business. Equivalent of high school or college education necessary qualification. Nature of work, general office and administrative. Eight hundred dollars salary to begin.
Apply A. B.,
Office of "THE FRIEND."

SUMMER SCHOOL STUDENTS COMING TO CORNELL will find comfortable rooms in a Friends' family, at reasonable rates, near the Campus, at 238 Linden Ave., Ives, Wood.

A YOUNG FRENCH WOMAN, SPEAKING ENGLISH fluently, a teacher, desires summer position as tutor or companion.
Address, M. H. Z.,
11 Clarendon Place, Orange, N. J.

A YOUNG WOMAN WITH ACADEMIC and PROFESSIONAL education, wishes congenial work for summer months.
Address G.,
Care of "THE FRIEND."

A CAPABLE GIRL, SENIOR IN PHILADELPHIA High School, wishes some suitable work for summer months at shore or mountains. Apply to N.,
Office of "THE FRIEND."

WANTED PLACE in a FRIENDS' FAMILY in the country for a strong active boy of 12 who is to return to school in Fall. Address his parents, 4380 Market St., Phila., E. T. B.

YOUNG FRIEND STUDYING KINDERGARTEN desires to help with children during Summer vacation. Seashore or Mountains preferred. Apply E.,
"THE FRIEND."

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 91.

FIFTH-DAY, SEVENTH MONTH 12, 1917.

No. 2.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price $2.00 a year in Advance.

Publisher, DAVIS H. FORSYTHE.

Editors { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
 DAVIS H. FORSYTHE,
 MARY WARD.

Make remittances payable to
THE FRIEND,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

LONDON YEARLY MEETING EPISTLE TO FRIENDS EVERYWHERE.

DEAR FRIENDS:—

For the third year we have met under the ever deepening shadow of the World War. Our sympathy has been drawn out to the millions of sufferers in every country, most of whom, to our sorrow, we can neither reach nor help. For what has been done by various groups of Friends, working amongst the "enemy aliens" and the allied refugees and wounded, we are deeply thankful. There is a new missionary enterprise, often in strange and difficult surroundings. Remembering them, we remember our Friends beyond seas, who have for long been pioneers of Truth. All such service is no small contribution to better international understanding.

We have thought and spoken of those of our members, and the home-keepers in every warring country, whose dear ones have died, been maimed, or are still imperiling their lives in the unselfish fight for an ideal. To them—and even more to the fighters themselves, often moved by impulses for righteousness that challenge us to an equal devotion—we extend our prayerful sympathy.

We miss the company of many who in recent years have helped us at these gatherings, but who are now serving God and their country in prison for their refusal to accept liberty at the price of a compromise with conscience. Spiritual successors, and in some cases actual descendants, of our early Friends who witnessed for the Truth in like manner, we greet them with a special message of love and fellowship. We remember also with sympathy many others who from obedience to conscience are under special disabilities.

This terrible time brings us a unique opportunity and call. Out of his own folly, and self-will, and fear, man has created a great image of Mars, whose shadow darkens the whole earth. In this darkness that may be felt, with its menace to our hopes for the redemption of all mankind, we tremble and are afraid. Then we remember that beyond the darkness there is light, the shadow proves the sun.

Stepping forth into that light "which illumines every man by its coming into the world" we recognize those as brothers whom before, in the gloom, we feared, exploited, or at best regarded with indifference. This is no merely individual or local experience. The world over, the men who have labored and prayed and suffered for fuller light are coming to see that it is within their reach. The Russian nation, with dramatic suddenness, has stepped out of the darkness of oppression and claimed freedom of soul. The millions of India and China, turning their backs on age-long traditions—the racial races of Africa—and the awakening womanhood of the world—are alike becoming conscious of a new impulse towards freedom, that will not be denied. In Europe and America, the peoples, caught in the toils of the industrial machine, are demanding ever more insistently a better and a fuller life. There are multitudes who crave, not merely liberation from the tyranny of a despot or of a military system or of an oppressive capitalism, but to be free men—free not only to get but to give; not only to control but to serve.

Amidst all these stirrings of life we see the Spirit of God moving on the face of the waters; the God who "is in all that liberates and lifts." Before our very eyes the eternal purposes are being wrought out. Men struggling towards the light see dimly that in God alone is what they seek. With Him is the secret of effective service; the vision, the driving force, the all-essential release from self.

Are we to be mere spectators of this great world emergence, waiting till we are swept aside by its irresistible force? Or having been cradled in the Spirit, are we ready to take our place in this new fellowship of the Spirit?

Let us be careful how we answer.

"Revolutionary" is not too strong a term to apply to the changes involved. Out of the very depths comes the cry to an unknown God. "Oh that I knew where I might find Him." This universal passion for contact with the Divine, demands, from all who have in any sense found Him, something more than sympathy and help. It demands that we shall share the struggle, the limitations, almost the despair, of those who seek. Only by thus giving ourselves can we co-operate with the God who, in Christ, eternally gives Himself. To "win Christ" in this new and fullest sense, we too may have to suffer "the loss of everything," even the possessions we had thought to use as a trust from God, the power over other lives we have tried to exercise for their good, the security which has assured to us so much that is beautiful in life.

Now is the supreme opportunity to translate belief into action. Now, as in the synagogue of Nazareth, Christ has come "to announce release to the prisoners of war . . . to send away free those whom tyranny has crushed." Once again He claims His hearers' co-operation. Once again "everything is at stake . . . Christ is offering Himself for the world's acceptance." He is waiting to place Himself at our head. He will take us into paths we have not known, and by ways we have not trod. He will take us over seas uncharted. He will join us with strangers as new and close companions.

This is indeed the day of our visitation.

Individually, as Spirit-filled men and women, collectively, as a community of the Spirit, must we place ourselves in line with the world's need. In our experience of Divine leadership in corporate life, freshly proved to us in these days of stress, we have a possession of unique import as yet hardly realized. In this experience, varying gifts and aspirations are harmonized and developed for the common weal; out of poverty we are made rich, out of emptiness we are made full, out of diversity we are made one. To share this experience with the world—movements towards fellowship and freedom is to bring our highest and best to the cause of the Kingdom of God.

Let us then move forward together, knit in the bond of past failure, present need and future hope; together with all who, through suffering, are being made perfect; together with Christ, our Leader and our King.

Signed in and on behalf of the Meeting,

JOHN H. BARLOW, Clerk.

"REST IN THE LORD."

"Rest in the Lord and wait patiently for Him;"
Commit unto Him all thy burdens and fears;
Rest all securely in what He has promised,
Wait till the dawn of His glory appears.

Long may He tarry; the night may be weary;
Daunted thy soul ere the breaking of day;
Faint not! the God of thy life doth not slumber,
His coming will drive all the shadows away.

Then shalt thy strength be renewed like the eagle's,
Then shalt thy righteousness shine as the light;
In the beams of His goodness like noonday it shineth—
All brighter since weary and dark was the night.

Then shalt thou walk in the highway of holiness,
Then shalt thou come unto Him with joy;
Departed forever are sorrow and sighing,
Thanksgiving and praise shall thy lifetime employ.

Then rest in the Lord and wait patiently for Him;
In His promise abide till the darkness is past;
Love Eternal o'er shadows the night and the noonday—
Will reveal to thy soul His full glory at last.

—E. R.

AN EPISTLE FROM FRITCHELEY GENERAL MEETING OF FRIENDS, HELD ON THE SECOND AND THIRD
OF FIFTH MONTH, 1917.

TO FRIENDS IN AMERICA:—

Dear Friends:—Gathered together as a General Meeting, though few in number and feeling our weakness and infirmity, we can again testify that the Lord has been gracious unto us, and has remembered His promise of old, that in "the dark and cloudy day" He would both search and seek out His sheep, and that He would feed them in a good pasture.

Suffering for conscience' sake is still the portion of many in our land, but we are cheered by the knowledge that the meek are still being guided in judgment, and the meek are still being taught the Lord's way. One of our members is serving his second sentence in prison, and several other young men, more or less connected with our meeting, are also in bonds. Trying as these cases are, we are comforted in the feeling that not only they, but many others, are being led along in the way of the Lord, and we trust that in years to come they may be "pillars in the house of our God," bearing the "ark of the testimony" when some of us shall have been called hence to be seen of men no more.

While we can rejoice in a more ready acceptance of some of the principles of Friends that we have known in the years that are past, we feel how important it is that we should bear a living, earnest and well-balanced testimony to the Truth as it has been revealed to us, and that we shall continue to stand and build on the alone true foundation, Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day and forever. Whatever He has shown us as a people, and continues to lay upon us, must have its due place. Things that appear to some to be non-essential, if neglected, will unbalance our testimony, which will cause confusion and weakness instead of that going forward from strength to strength, which is the will of Christ for us.

We feel, therefore, beloved Friends, that it is important that we continue to stand fast in that liberty wherewith Christ has made us free, and that we be not entangled in any yoke of bondage. The large professing churches have failed in this crisis. Have we living meetings into which we can gather the tender seekers? Have we a ministry that can spiritually baptize and feed the flock, and is there amongst us that life and warm fellowship which will shelter souls now wandering as sheep without a Shepherd, but who are hungering, even if sometimes almost unconsciously, for the true bread of life, and are there amongst us laborers able to draw water for the refreshment of those who are weary and faint? We know, dear Friends, that you will unite with us in the feeling that none of us is sufficient for these things, and that our sufficiency can only be in the Lord. Let us all, therefore, endeavor to dwell deep, getting down to the springs of life, and by self-denial and the dedication of ourselves and our all, we, to whom the Truth as revealed to our early Friends is still precious, may, notwithstanding all our deficiencies, be made instruments in the Lord's hand for the further spreading of His Kingdom upon the earth.

It is for us to hold fast that which we have received, showing by living example that our simple manner of worship, depending only on the presence of our Lord, and our free Gospel ministry, have still that satisfying power which is often crowded out in congregations where pre-arrangement and a professional ministry are considered essential.

We feel sympathy for you in the prospect of difficulty in your country through recent conscriptive legislation, but we believe as your young men are faithful, they, as ours, will be upheld in the day of testing. Those of us who are older may help them greatly by an earnest exercise of spirit; but do not let us be over-anxious, for "the Lord's hand is not shortened that it cannot save, neither is His ear heavy that it cannot hear."

Three acceptable epistles from Yearly Meetings on your Continent were received and read in our General Meeting last Tenth Month, and three others, equally acceptable, have been received since, and read at this time to our comfort and encouragement. The Clerk is instructed to acknowledge them all, and to transmit to each of these meetings a copy of this epistle, and to such other meetings as may seem desirable.

With a salutation of love, we remain your friends.

Signed in and on behalf of the General Meeting of Friends held at Fritchley, England, the second and third of Fifth Month, 1917.

EDWARD WATKINS,
Clerk.

TO THE MEN AND WOMEN OF EVERY NATION WHO SEEK TO FOLLOW CHRIST.

A MESSAGE FROM THE RELIGIOUS SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

From the depths of our common sorrow rises a universal cry for help. How long are the peoples to go on killing one another? Men went into this war to defend the weak and to right the wrong. They have gone on with it lest wrong should triumph, lest the sacrifice of brave men should be in vain. Out of gratitude to the fallen, and out of a great hope for the future, has been born the determination to see the war through. Yet surely we all want peace if only it might be both just and lasting.

Is it really necessary to go on? Are we, by continuing the war, actually preparing for that world without war which we all long to see? Are we not rather multiplying evil and planting the seeds of bitterness which can never bear the fruit of peace? Under a sense of our common failure we must ask ourselves these questions in the presence of Christ. We are faced with great issues of justice, of freedom, of peace, but the greatest issue for the world is the challenge of Jesus Christ to the ways of men. His Way is to bring in justice and freedom and peace, not by might nor by power, but by His Spirit.

Because no other way than war was found in 1914, we need not therefore despair of finding a better way now. The longer we who seek to follow Christ stand by, consenting to the death of our fellow-men, the more clearly we show our disbelief in Him as the Saviour of the world from its present distress. He alone can reconcile our antagonisms, open our hearts to believe in the possibility of a society knit together in love, and fill us with the strength by which to achieve it.

By waiting upon God we may receive what He waits to give. Truly we have all been praying for peace. Why are these prayers still unanswered? Have we asked amiss, desiring selfish or national ends, resting, it may be, upon the humiliation of others? Has the spirit of free forgiveness, which was in our Master when He died for His enemies, been driven from our hearts? In a spirit which oversteps the narrow boundaries of nations, and reaches out to the great plans of our Father for all His children, let us turn to Him with new confidence and hope.

Might we not thus be shown the next step towards peace? Is it not possible that means could be found for men and women who have heard His call to come together from all nations, in one place, with one accord? So meeting they might rise above the things that divide mankind, and see by faith a world made one in the love of God. Such an assembling of the sons and daughters of God, in time of war, under the leadership of Christ, would itself be the beginning of the peace we seek.

Let followers of Christ give themselves to prayer, whether in international conference, in small groups, or in solitary communion. Then a joyous new confidence that God is in the midst of His people, mighty to save, will bring the only peace worth having, the peace of God, based not on military victories, but on the good-will of all peoples inspired by a common spirit, the spirit of Christ.—London Yearly Meeting.

UNIVERSAL DISARMAMENT.

MINUTE OF LONDON YEARLY MEETING.

We have again had under consideration the subject of Universal Disarmament. We earnestly desire that faith and brotherhood may replace distrust and suspicion and that justice and love may become supreme. We feel that our main contribution to this end is to point out that it is only upon spiritual foundations that Peace can be permanently built and that universal Disarmament can only be fully accomplished through a renewed revelation of Divine power in the hearts of men. At the same time we believe that if a single nation, moved by this energy, could take the lead in disarmament, it would prove an incalculable force for good. It would lift that nation to the highest level and would help to raise other nations with it.

While adhering to this, and calling Friends to this Testimony, we are glad to believe that the peoples are moving towards certain bases of agreement which may be briefly stated as follows:

1. That upon the uprising of any international dispute time shall be provided for arbitration and conciliation, so as to give every opportunity for a just settlement by pacific methods.
2. Arrangement for International Disarmament.
3. The erection of an organ of international expression in the form of some advisory body, democratically constituted, which shall meet periodically to consider changing conditions and matters of universal concern.

We hope that these or similar propositions may find a place in any treaty signed at the close of the war.

CONCORD QUARTERLY MEETING CONFERENCE.

Weather favored the attendance of Friends at the Conference on the 30th, and about one hundred and twenty-five of us, older and younger, gathered in the old meeting-house near 4.15 p. m., while a group of little folks were entertained outside by a committee of girls, that their mothers might be more free to enjoy the addresses.

The speakers, as announced, were to present the "Past," "Present" and "Future," and Isaac Sharpless, giving the first, told us how his own great-grandfather, Joshua Sharpless, was Clerk of Concord (then Chester) Quarterly Meeting during the Revolutionary War, and that his minutes showed that while war was being waged in the vicinity, committees were actively engaged in the endeavor to stop the selling and drinking of spirituous liquor by Friends, at taverns, as well as the holding of slaves. Also that a committee visited Friends in their homes to plead with them against luxurious living—the use of carpets being one thing against which they testified, although "even the humblest among us" would have thought these old-time homes plain and bare.

The habits of reading and study among our Friends of the past, as well as their participation in the public affairs of their time, were dwelt upon in a most interesting way.

Speaking of our affection for the old meeting-house, he said, that in a recent visit to Washington, Senator Chamberlain—the author of the "Chamberlain Bill"—had asked if he knew the old Concord Meeting-house, and said some of his relatives had attended there!

Anne Garrett Walton, the second speaker, was unavoidably absent, and Frances T. Rhoads spoke in her place on "The Present," outlining the changes which the conditions in the world to-day are making in our lives; stirring us up to earnest thought and a deeper sense of the need for guidance, so that we are indeed becoming "Seekers."

This need of drawing together in the stress of the time had been, perhaps, the secret of the remarkable meeting held at Media, on Sixth Month 10th, where there was felt such a unity in exercise for the building up of the Kingdom of God in the earth.

After some further allusion to present conditions in our Quarterly Meeting, the wider movements in our Yearly Meeting, especially the two important committees, that of the "New Social Order" and the "Emergency Service Committee," which have both sprung directly out of the needs of the present, were spoken of, with some outline of the work of each, as matters in which we are all vitally interested and with which we must keep in touch.

It has been said that "Friends do not organize easily," but these, as well as the American Friends' Service Committee, show that we are learning, and, while organization is the present-day method of work, we can not afford to leave behind, or do without, the "individual faithfulness," which has been so long a watchword with us.

The last speaker was the only one who read a prepared paper; an abstract of which follows. It was felt to be a helpful look into the possibilities of our "Future," and gave us food for thought.

After a brief time of silence, we adjourned to the grassy door-yard, where evening shadows were lengthening under the fine old trees. Baskets and boxes were opened, and pleasant groups gathered to enjoy the picnic supper. Then, strolling about, or chatting together, the social hour soon passed, and, again in the old meeting-house, the evening hour of worship came. Only the farewell calls of the robins from the tree-tops broke the stillness as we gathered.

Then the voice of prayer was heard that standing, as it were, on "holy ground," hallowed by the memory of faithful service, we might be enabled, however unworthy we felt ourselves to be, to come very close to our Heavenly Father. And surely this prayer was answered! We were, however, reminded that it was not for us to try to shape and model our lives, or our Quakerism, upon the lines of any other human life, or any traditions, but to seek for ourselves that Source of Power which had animated them, to earnestly desire such a baptism that self and self-seeking would be submerged, and our lives transformed by the Power which comes only from the true Source.

After the close of the Meeting we took our homeward ways, feeling that it had been good for us to be together.

The interest of Concord Friends, of both "branches," and their cordial welcome, made a pleasant feature of the occasion.

Our Chairman, Norris J. Scott, recalled that the first railroad train ran on Eighth Month Quarterly Meeting day, in the year 1859, to carry Friends to the Meeting, though the railroad was not quite finished.

Many of us recalled, in passing the house, the kindly entertainment given there by Benjamin and Rebecca Passmore, and the long line of carriages that used to turn in at the gate.

So memories and hopes blended in our thoughts, with desires that we may be kept and guided by the "Spirit of that early day," and strengthened for right service.

THE FUTURE OF CONCORD QUARTERLY MEETING.

J. PASSMORE ELKINTON.

As you have been so kind as to give me the easiest of the speakers' tasks this afternoon, I shall certainly have to try to do my best. You see, the historian of the past has always the spectre hanging over him of some essential fact unnoted; the historian of the present has his own unfriendly generation with which to reckon; while the prophet has a free hand. There is always the enticing chance of winning a reputation, and should events turn out otherwise than as predicted, good reasons will undoubtedly be patent and plentiful.

But let us get down to our task seriously. The next step in advance for the Society of Friends, at least in this Quarter, I believe, will be the gaining of a clearer and simpler conception of the purpose of our organization. From the beginning the Society of Friends has had and still retains a great central message: the presence of God Himself in every human soul consciously guiding its life. To the Quaker and to every mystic who has had the same experience, sacraments and symbols are superfluous, because he has fellowship with the Lord God Himself. To him love must be constant, because all men are equally the children of his Father's tender care.

Now I can see that a Roman Catholic or an Episcopalian, if he feels symbols and forms to be essential means of grace, could find little fellowship in a company of mystics, but I do not see why we should not welcome into membership in the Society of Friends that considerable company of earnest, spiritually-minded people who hunger for the essential interpretation which Friends put on these things. And I believe we shall.

If this prediction be correct it will involve our accepting into membership convinced persons without requiring their relinquishment of many other religious associations. We have no hesitancy about encouraging our members to take their full share in Y. M. C. A. and other such Christian work in addition to their devotion to the Society of Friends. I see no reason why we should not under appropriate conditions encourage our members distantly located to discharge an equal responsibility where membership in some earnest local Christian congregation seems to be the best field of service, at the same time retaining their interest and membership in the Society of Friends. An organization like the Fellowship of Reconciliation finds no difficulty in gathering into fellowship those of many associations who meet upon its common ground.

But to speak thus first of an increased usefulness especially, for our members, is placing the emphasis on the lesser part. Persons like Dr. Elihu Grant, who have joined Friends through conviction, tell us that among the educated and cultured classes of this country there are hundreds of spiritually-minded men and women who long for just such a message as the Society of Friends has to offer if only it can be carried to them. Dare we withhold it from them? Dare we hide under the bushel of our minute "Friendly" habits and congenial social acquaintanceships a light of truth and a power of sympathy which it has been the mission of our Society to deliver from the very beginning?

How to prepare and equip ourselves for a national service of this kind is our next subject for consideration. And it involves in the first place a careful understanding of the difference between organizing the community as a whole for religious work and maintaining a special fellowship such as we have been considering. Quite a little of our uncertainty has resulted from a confusion of these two tasks.

Some of us at times have imagined that the practices of Friends were of such universal application and service that our responsibility was entirely discharged by conducting twice weekly meetings for Divine Worship after our particular manner, and expecting that unless unregenerate, the entire community would flock to join us. But, Friends, it is no reflection upon the merit of our vital message and it is a considerable tribute to our ripened experience to confess that it doesn't work that way. We have maintained our meetings scrupulously and our neighbors do not come. They don't and they won't, wholesale, and yet we have our share of responsibility to go out and serve them in other ways.

Now what I am predicting is that we shall undertake to maintain the Society of Friends as a communion of special fellowship for those in the community who interpret spiritual things in the mystical manner and that we shall join with our neighboring Christians in conducting for the neighborhood whatever general religious work proves most effective, in serving the religious needs of all.

[Such are Bible Classes, Christian Associations, Camp-fire Girls, etc. The speaker suggested the laying down of small out-lying meetings so that Friends may often attend meeting in the larger centres, and thought that the resulting concentration of strength would result in a return effort to bring our message to those communities. As to the tools for the labor—he dwelt on the great demand for Quaker literature, written in the language of this generation, spoke of the usefulness of the religious conference and of a teaching ministry. He thought that a few employed executive persons will be needed to act as secretaries and to organize the detailed work. The paper ended with this paragraph: "Only our Father knows what plan He has for us. This paper makes no pretensions to authority, but its purpose will have been fulfilled if it has helped to awaken in some young heart an appreciation of the need for earnest reverent study of the purpose and fruits of a Society to whose service we are invited to devote time and energy for which there are so many other calls." F. T. R.]

NOTES FROM THE GERMANTOWN FRIENDS' SCHOOL.

It has been a long time since the editor of THE FRIEND has asked for notes from the Germantown Friends' School, and it is difficult to know how far back to go in the School year. There have been the usual number of interesting and well-planned gymnasium exhibitions both by the boys and girls, ending with the annual Field Day at Clark Field, on Fifth Month 25th.

On the intellectual side in contrast to the physical, there may be mentioned the contest in public speaking between picked members of the Third and Fourth Classes, in which a standard was reached that quite surprised those of earlier generations, including the teachers; the elocution contest between the Sixth and Seventh Classes; and the High School elocution contest on Fourth Month 13th, the high water mark for the year in our public entertainments.

Toward the end of the year the events grow more numerous and include the whole School in their range. First came the closing exercises of the Kindergarten with their Spring songs, stories, and games, largely attended by parents and relatives; and then on the morning of Sixth Month 8th, the Primary School had an interesting closing program followed by their ice cream and cake; and for the whole Intermediate and High School, the picnic on the afternoon of the 8th in the Cresheim Valley, close to the famous wall garden, made a fitting outdoor closing to the School year.

For the Seniors there was the Principal's reception on Fifth Month 11th; class night, as dignified and restrained as such a function can be expected to be, on the evening of Sixth Month 12th; and Commencement, on the afternoon of the 13th, followed by the annual Alumni meeting and supper. A class of twenty-one was graduated, most of whom will enter college in the autumn. They will be widely scattered, the colleges of their choice including Kenyon, Haverford, Tufts, Wellesley, Swarthmore, University of Pennsylvania, Smith and Vassar.

The Germantown Commencement is of the old-fashioned type. A Bible reading with appropriate remarks by George M. Warner was followed by three well-written and well-read essays as follows:—

"Physics of X-rays," M. Wistar Wood.
 "The Soul of France," A. June Warder.

"The Influence of Science on Social Relations," Robert L. Molitor, who was also the Valedictorian. After the presentation of diplomas, Floyd W. Tomkins delivered an address to the class that will not soon be forgotten for its inspiration, its humor and its common sense.

The School year has been a good one. The enrollment was a little in excess of the previous year, the largest in the history of the School, and the student activities have been well maintained and the standards of scholarship and achievement kept at a high level. It is interesting to note that the High School Honor Roll for the last month is the largest in the history of the School, numbering 45 students. The Intermediate Honor Roll also stood up well, although the number, 38, has been exceeded in other months. Each year at Commencement two lists of pupils are read, the distinguished list containing those who have been on the Honor Roll every month during the School year, and the commended list, those who have been on the Honor Roll six or seven times. This year the distinguished list included for the High School 38 names and for the Intermediate 17 names. The commended list included for the High School 12 names and for the Intermediate 9 names.

The chief honor of the School year is the awarding of the Davis H. Forsythe Scholarship to the boy of next year's Senior or First Class who has attained an average of over 90 per cent. in all of his studies for the School year, and who at the same time has been loyal and earnest in his School life; and the Susanna S. Kite Scholarship, awarded at the same time to the girl of corresponding standing. This year the Davis H. Forsythe Scholarship has been awarded to Dale Purves of the class of 1919, with an average of 93.1 for his entire School year; and the Susanna S. Kite Scholarship had to be divided between Mabel MacFerran and Elizabeth J. G. Gray of the class of 1919, whose averages, 93.4, were absolutely identical when they were carefully made out by a committee of the teachers.

An interesting feature of the School year has been the establishment of the Student Council. This is an organization made up of representatives of the different classes who meet to consider matters of real importance to the School and to carry out, in co-operation with the teachers or individually, plans for School betterment. Among matters that claimed their attention were collections for the Armenian sufferers and for feeding Belgian children. Although this work was taken up rather late in the year, collections were made totaling more than $250. Most of the contributions were made in five, ten and twenty-five cent pieces, and it was a pleasure to feel that the gift was given by the pupils themselves from their spending money rather than by their parents.

A gift of unusual interest was made to the School shortly before Commencement through the interest and activity of Herbert Welsh. It was a water color painting costing $200.00, by Carlandi, one of the most distinguished water colorists of Italy. He is an old man now who has lost heavily as a result of the war. Herbert Welsh and other Philadelphians have been his pupils, and an exhibition and sale of his paintings was arranged in Philadelphia to secure funds for his assistance. Herbert Welsh at once determined, if possible, to secure a beautiful example of his work, "Ostia in Flood," for the Germantown Friends' School. The fund of $200.00 was collected and the painting presented by Herbert Welsh in an appropriate speech at morning collection on Fifth Month 30th.

It has been interesting through the year to hear of the good work done by our boys and girls of earlier years now in college. Favorable reports have reached the School, particularly from Haverford and Bryn Mawr Colleges, with regard to the status of individual pupils.

A real distinction has also been earned by Charles Claxton, Jr., of the class of 1913, who graduated in Forestry this year at Pennsylvania State College. The United States Department of Forestry was asked to recommend a young man to take charge of the Department of Forestry at the new Lincoln University in Cumberland Gap early this Spring, and after a thorough search they recommended Charles Claxton, who at once took up his work there and who, we are told, has made a decided initial success. It is hoped that this Department of Forestry, situated among the southern mountains, will prove a great opportunity to the mountain whites and for the fine young men of limited opportunity who attend the Lincoln University. All of Charles Claxton's friends feel that he has been wisely chosen and look forward to a career of great usefulness for him.

The completion of the new locker-rooms for the girls and boys, largely by a gift of the Alumni Association, brought to a close the program for building extension and School development laid down a number of years ago. It is interesting in retrospect to note the steps of progress in the life of the School in this period, and things that we considered impossible have come to pass. The first of them was the purchase of Clark Field, beautifully located and well suited to take care of the athletic needs of the boys. Simultaneous with that came the extension of the main school building by the addition of the third floor over the front building. Then there followed in rapid succession summer by summer various improvements, including enlarged cloak-rooms in the basement, a new and well-equipped lunch-room, a Sloyd-room, a Primary play-room in basement of the rear building, and finally the extension of the third floor over the entire rear buildings and the locker-room extensions completed last autumn. The number of class-rooms in the School during the last ten years has been doubled, and the School has been made more efficient in every way in point of equipment and arrangement. What the next ten years have in prospect it is difficult to forecast, but those interested in the School hope that the progress may be equally substantial and the advance continue to be conservative and yet progressive, and in keeping with the best traditions of education as conducted by Friends.

S. R. Y.

LETTER FROM DANIEL OLIVER.

152 SCHOOL LANE, GERMANTOWN, Pa., Sixth Month 23, 1917

DEAR FRIEND:—

I am sending thee some extracts from letters which have lately come from my husband that Friends may like to see. It is disappointing to think that the relief supplies we sent on the Christmas ship should have got no further than Alexandria, but I understand they are safely stored there and a relief expedition is being organized in Egypt to enter Palestine at the very earliest opportunity, so before very long the gifts of so many kind friends may reach their destination and give the actual relief and comfort they were intended to, as well as the imaginary pleasure my husband refers to.

It is a great joy to know that funds can still reach Syria, and in a letter to J. Harvey Borton my husband gratefully acknowledges the receipt of funds sent, saying, "If I could tell thee how I used the money it would make thy heart glad." I know he would wish this gladness to be shared by all who have kindly contributed to the "Syria Relief Fund," and the deep gratitude of a warm-hearted people, peculiarly responsive to kindness and appreciative, as our Saviour was, of even the cup of cold water, will be finding expression in such earnest prayers as, "May Allah build up their houses, may He increase their goods, may He bless them and preserve them from evil and give them peace."

The sure reward He promised must be coming now into the lives of many in increased power of sympathy and desire to help, as in our turn drink His cup of sorrow and suffering and know more of His tender love and pity for this sin-stricken agonizing world.

Thy friend sincerely,

EMILY OLIVER.

RAS-EL-METS, Lebanon, Beyrout, Syria, Third Month 30, 1917.

You will have heard long before now that the Christmas ship never came to Beyrout. The cause of this you, no doubt, know better than I do. I am afraid you will feel very disappointed after all your loving thought and efforts. I can, however, assure you that I have got a great deal of pleasure and satisfaction out of the Christmas ship. No school-boy ever had more fun and excitement in guessing what he was going to do on his approaching holidays, and also in anticipating the pleasure he was going to have, than I have had over the Christmas boxes. We were guessing whether the boxes had this, that, and the other. Would there be some Ivory soap? Would there be some Bay Rum, and so we went on through a whole list of things. Some things we were doubtful about and some things we were sure of. Well, there has been a lot of pleasure and delightful anticipation, and therefore you need not feel, as far as I am concerned, that your work has been in vain. Notwithstanding all the guessing as to the contents of the boxes, and all the fun connected with that game, I never really believed that the ship would reach Beyrout, and therefore I have not suffered from any disappointment. I have lived too long, and seen too many fond hopes dashed to the ground to count on things beforehand. In the present instance I know a great deal, all of which made me inclined to the belief that the ship would never get as far as Beyrout. My opinion has turned out to be well founded. You need not worry about me, I manage to get along all right.

How very nice it is to be remembered, it has sent quite a thrill through me to know that my old friends do not forget me. Not that I think I am so much worthy to be remembered, for I know I am not, but at the same time I should not like to think that my friends would forget me, because then their character would not be quite what I have always thought it to be, and I should rather lose most things than lose my faith in the goodness and constancy and faithfulness of human love and affection. I can go further and say it would not be possible, in my opinion, to find more true and sincere friends than we have in Philadelphia and in the old country. The remembrance of many of them is a constant inspiration to me.

My study walls are covered with a regular Friends' meeting. Samuel Emlen sits at the top of the meeting, then comes George Abbot, Wm. Evans, James Wood, Thomas Scattergood, Margaret Haines, Helen Bacon, and her dear brother and sister, J. H. Borton, Alfred Garrett, etc., etc., I have not kept the men Friends and women Friends separate, but I am afraid that this will not be very interesting to you, and yet you may like to know that while indoors I am always surrounded by those I like best, and I need not say that your picture and the boys are everywhere.

Life is a great struggle, grim, hard, and cruel and there is a tendency the more one sees of life to grow hard and indifferent, but thank God for all the softening, healing, influences that come to one from day to day and keep us from getting petrified like a stone. Personally, I sometimes suffer from being too sympathetic, and that often makes me feel utterly worn out, but my constitution is a wonderful thing, and a few hours' rest makes me as fresh and sanguine as a school boy. To-day we have a very hot sirocco that makes one feel anything but lively, but it will soon pass. All disagreeable things pass, thank God, and the pleasant things remain, for one dwells on the memory of them, and in consequence one can have them over and over again.

I am in splendid health and I continue to receive kindness from all.

DANIEL OLIVER.

P. S.—To-night I think has been one of the most momentous nights in my whole life—so full of excitement and big issues. I never seem to get far away from deep currents, yet I live a charmed life, a real invisible charm always around me; that is fine, is it not? God is that charm.

O move in lonely vigil led
To follow Truth's new-risen star,
Ere yet her morning skies are red,
And vale and upland shadowed are,—

Girl up thy loins and take thy road,
Obedient to the vision be;
Trust not in numbers; God is God,
And one with Him majority!

LETTER FROM FLORENCE M. BARROW.

[This letter was written to the Cadbury family and now kindly shared with our readers.—Eds.]

I wonder very much whether this letter will ever reach you, but will send a short one on the chance. We feel very much out of the world here, and it is long since I have had news of American Friends and now hardly any letters are coming through from England. I wonder whether any parts of my circular letters have gotten to you, for if so, you will know about my work here.

It has been a most interesting winter. I have been living in the village of Andrecoka, where there was a doctor, room for the dispensary and out-patient department, but the hospital itself has not been opened, owing to the shortage of nurses. Dr. Pearson and then Dr. John Rickman have been the doctors in charge. Another member of the party, W. Collier, was first of all dispenser; then later helped with the relief work, and had also classes for some of the refugees, boys who were unable to go to school owing to the school being full, or to their being German-speaking Russians and Lutherans.

For the relief work, we have organized industries for the women, as we felt that the people not only needed food and clothes, but also fresh interests and occupations, for it was depressing in the extreme to see them sitting idle with nothing to distract their thoughts from past and present suffering and hardships.

I feel as if I have been living in a time before the industrial revolution, for our industries have been cleaning and preparing the wool and spinning and weaving it, also hemp and flax. I knew little or nothing about these industries before, and now feel that I am quite on the way to be an expert! With the material woven, part cotton and part wool, we have made excellent wadded coats for the children and young people in some of the other villages.

The Zemstvo has allowed us to use the house usually occupied by the doctors' assistants, for our looms, sewing-rooms, etc. The majority of the women, however, have worked at home, about 120 in all, and have done the spinning there and knitting of stockings and embroidery. This latter, mostly very fine cross-stitch in red and black, has shown some most quaint and interesting designs. The people seem to have a real creative power; each thing has some individuality about it; no two things are alike. Some of the designs include hares, birds, horses, even camels.

The payment for the work has enabled the refugees to buy food they so much needed, yet has in no way weakened their self-respect. It has been a great satisfaction to me to see how much the work has been enjoyed for its own sake.

Now we are just reaching the transition stage between the winter and summer work, for wherever possible we think they should work on the land and help the peasants in the villages. The winter with its snow, clear air and frosts has had its fascination, and the houses have been so warm that on the whole I was warmer than at home. Only occasionally, when driving, it was pure misery. The wind would drive through two fur coats and one's eyelashes would get frozen. Of course, when out, we wore nearly twice as much clothing as at home. Now the thaw has come, and on the way from visiting Mogotovo where there is the large house for refugee women and children, about 100 in all, who have been under our care, I have been held up in this town unable to get away for nearly two weeks, as the roads have been impassable. I have had to occupy myself with Russian lessons. To try to learn the Russian language, I feel would be the task of a lifetime.

The distances are so great from our various centres, and there is no means of conveyance except by sledge in winter and springless carriages in summer. It is a day's drive from the hospital at Lubemofka to Buzuluk; then another day's drive on to Mogotovo. I only wish we could have more centers of work out here. The need of the people is so great. The refugees are gradually getting weakened in physique and mental and moral effort. Are none of your young American Friends coming to help us now? We need money and workers.

I am sure you are living through difficult times in your country. Wonderful things are going on here, as you will see in your papers, without disorder. No vodka, I am sure, has helped much. I was so glad to hear through the London Committee that some of the American Young Friends were considering helping in this work. If you do come across any of them, do tell them how much they are needed. They would have to expect much of the work to be dull and unexciting, only seldom dealing with sudden emergencies and desperate situations, but the need of the refugees who have suffered so much and had to leave home and occupations and to live in a district with a different climate with people often of more backward development from themselves is a very real one. Then, of course, this work may lead on to more definite reconstruction work when the people will be able to return to their own homes. Of course the problem is a vast one. It is depressing to think how little we can do, but I do think it is a privilege for the Society of Friends to have such an opening for service. I do feel strongly that we need Friends with a deep concern for such work, and with the right spirit in it all. I write this much because you may be meeting those to whom such work might be possible.

RED CROSS INSPECTION PARTY.

[We are permitted to print portions of a report from J. Henry Scattergood.]

PARIS, Sixth Month 13, 1917.

Hôtel Vouillemont, 15 Rue Bossy d'Angles.

Here we are at last safely in Paris and ready to begin our work of investigation of the various relief societies, etc., and where best the work of the Friends' Unit can fit in. It seems right that no undue haste should be made in coming to a decision, because the situation is complicated in many ways and it is important that no false step should be made. This Commission of the Red Cross is made up of twenty-one of us representing all phases of work and Major Murphy at its head realizes the delicacy of the situation and the need for great diplomacy.

Morris Leeds and I were quite surprised to find, when we went on board La Touraine, that the party was so large and so carefully chosen, and later we were pleased to find the thorough way in which matters have been approached.

Perhaps some rehearsal of the facts of the Commission's existence should be stated here. Soon after the United States entered the war, Cleveland Dodge and others of importance were very anxious that the American Red Cross organization, which had done so much fine work on the occasion of many catastrophes, should officially take hold of relief problems in France, and perhaps elsewhere—Russia, Poland, Serbia, etc. President Wilson agreed to appoint a "War Council" of five in addition to ex-officio W. H. Taft, and Eliot Wadsworth, Chairman and Secretary of the Executive Committee. Henry P. Davison (of J. P. Morgan & Co.) agreed to accept the Chairmanship of this Council on condition that the U. S. Government should give its sanction and backing, that the Council should have full power and that the other appointees on the Council should be agreeable to him. Grayson Murphy was selected as a member of this Council and was delegated by H. P. Davison to head the work in Europe. He gave up his lucrative Vice-presidency of the Guaranty Trust Company, N. Y., to do so. He is Haverford ex-1900 (2 years), and West Point, 1902 or 1903, and served in the army in the Philippines, and is now a major in the U. S. Reserves. The first step was the selection of this Commission to come here and make a study of the needs on the field. There are three lines of work called for.

(1) To prepare for proper care for U. S. troops and navy on the lines long recognized internationally as a function of the Red Cross. This will cover the hospital and ambulance work, and so far as I can gather this is expected to be made a part of the U. S. military later on.

(2) To assist in such way as may be in relieving French sick and wounded. This work belonging, of course, to the French army, hospitals, etc., but already several American agencies have been at work—notably the American Ambulance, American Hospital, Harjes-Norton Unit, and now a goodly number of other ambulance units.

(3) To do Civilian Relief work in France and unoccupied Belgium, if way opens, but as to this the methods are not yet worked out or even in sight, and are to be carefully studied and if attempted are to be correlated with existing organizations already in the field.

The plan is to divide up among us all the various lines of work and inquiry, and lay out the whole work with methodical and careful analysis and co-operation or possibly absorption or combination with existing organizations, and then begin operations. The scale is apparently to be large, and as was announced before our departure, it is hoped that at least $100,000,000 can be raised for its support.

During the voyage the Commission met daily and heard talks on the tuberculosis situation, the clearing-houses, relief experiences, construction work and materials, etc., and on general policies, etc. The matter most emphasized is the urgent need of keeping open minds and using our best diplomacy to correlate all the relief work.

As for the voyage, we were crowded, and the boat was old and not modernly equipped, but we fared well enough. We had several misty days, but no rough weather, and we were perfectly well all the time. The boat had 250 or 300 American boys, mostly college men, who were coming for Ambulance service. Francis Goodhue was one of them in the Harjes-Norton group and is a nice fellow and set a good standard among the crowd. Morris and I both studied French as hard as we could, and attended daily a little class led by one of the French staff at Smith College, a pleasing French lady and excellent teacher. I feel I am making hopeful progress. We are impressed that anyone expecting to be really valuable in relief or reconstruction work will have to speak French enough to work with the people, because one of the fundamental principles must be to help them to help themselves, and not to do it wholly for them. Hence our men who look forward to coming here to stay must study French now, and make this a big part of their preparation. It looks also as if fellows with some handiness of tools will have to be the ones most needed for this particular reconstruction work that we hope will open up for us.

As to submarines, we saw no signs of any, we rejoice to say. We were anxious for two days and two nights at this end, and slid in on an indirect route after nightfall and came up Garonne River (4½ hours). We slept on deck the last night and were on a strain for two days.

J. HENRY SCATTERGOOD.

YOUNGER FRIENDS.

FRESH-AIR HAPPENINGS.—One of the teachers wrote of the children she sent away:

They all came back well and happy, and they wished to thank all their friends who were the means of giving them so beautiful a vacation. No one had been ill or unhappy.

The following is an account of the outing given to some of the day-pupils who attend our Industrial Schools, which are under the care of the Management of the Home for the Friendless.

When the boys of School No. 8 were about to leave the school for the train to Ardley there was a scene of great excitement, for dozens of boys who were not going had come to see their friends off, and others with their mothers came to plead at the eleventh hour to join the party, which was impossible without preparation and the nurse's examination and approval. Finally, the school-room was cleared as nearly as possible of the outsiders, and then two boys were found to be missing and had to be sent for, and when the line was fairly out on the sidewalk some one exclaimed that John L. was not there, and another volunteered the information that he was "trying to find some clothes to put in his bag." There wasn't a minute to lose, so one attendant kept watch over the line of boys to see that it was neither added to nor subtracted from, while another, capturing John's brother, announced, "We will go to your home and find out what is the matter."

Up two flights of stairs they went, and into the rooms the boys call home—rooms without any furniture except beds and a stove and a table or two, and looking as though they were rarely swept, and had never seen a scrubbing brush. Sure enough, John was rushing frantically from one room to another, looking under the beds and under the stove, from which hiding places he had drawn out four shoes. One pair he vainly struggled to get on, and gave up hopelessly, while another pair, as much too large as these were too small, and looking like a woman's shoes, were glanced at despairingly. "Why don't you wear those?" was asked. "They're my cousin's, but they ain't got any laces." Sure enough, there was no way of making them stay on. A nickel was produced and the elder brother sent flying to a shoemaker's, while John hobbled down stairs to be met on the sidewalk by the messenger with shoestrings. There was no time to lace the shoes, so a knot was made in the end of the string, it was put through a hole and wrapped round and round John's ankle, holding things in place till the party could get to the train. Who could blame the poor boys if they were not ready? No mother, and living with relatives, who are evidently kind enough, as the shoe-lending proved, but who give little thought to the boys, they evidently "jest grow," like Topsy. Well, they all got off at last, a happy crowd, and though John came back minus any stockings, and one boy's trousers were only held together by huge safety pins, which the conductor contributed, they had a rare good time and were as happy as kings.

All these splendid outings we owe to the kindness of the Tribune Fresh-Air Fund, which gave our children the first chance on its list of beneficiaries.

Last winter I visited a Home for the Friendless in New York City. There were over two hundred little children in the home. As it was just the supper hour, we saw the little tots eating their bread and milk with relish. As I looked into their faces my heart ached that so many little children could never know a mother's love and care.

The care-takers in this home are exceedingly kind to the children, and many would say they are blessed to be so well cared for. This is true, but I know these little people have moments when they long for mother-love and a mother's kiss!

In sending the following account of these children's summer outing for our "Younger Friends" to read, I hope that some who have not counted their blessings, or who have been discontented and criticized father and mother for not letting them go to camp or to the shore, that these boys and girls may stop, think twice, and like Pollyanna think of the things they have "to be glad" about.

I believe some who read this account will want to help, next summer, to make it possible for several little city children to have two weeks, at least, in the country, with plenty of fresh air and all the joys that go with such an unusual experience.—A. G. W.

THE AGRICULTURAL CAMP AT WESTTOWN.

This camp is now well organized, and is sending each day its ten or more boys into the fields and gardens around Westtown. Sometimes they work on the beans and onions which were planted earlier and sometimes they go in groups to help the neighboring farmers.

But it is of the Camp and of some of its needs that I wish to write. We sleep in a large open hut located between the Lake House and the ice-house and some fifty yards back from the lake. The boys keep their trunks and better clothing in one of the rooms of the Lake House. A wall tent shelters the food and the Camp eats at a table under the trees.

Wilmer J. Young has the oversight of the work of the boys. He finds where they are needed, and assigns them to their appropriate places. Benjamin F. Thomas, a teacher at Westtown some years ago, has charge of the commissary department, and attends to the cooking.

Now the Camp needs a lot of things which we do not wish to buy, and which we are therefore asking our friends to contribute. We want a lot of chinaware, plates, bowls, pitchers, cups and saucers, etc. If any readers of THE FRIEND, who are not too far from Westtown, have some odd parts of old sets which they are not using, we will be glad to come and get them, if word is sent us. It will cost a good deal to buy these things and at the end of the season they will be on our hands. Also has any one a three-burner oil stove not in use? It would be a great help to us.

We manage pretty well with the cooking of staples, but I wonder if some of our neighbors who occasionally come to the School would think of us when they are baking pies and puddings and cakes, and would make something extra and bring it to our boys. We are also finding it difficult to get stewed fruits. Our boys can pick fruit, but the cooking of it bothers us. Think how much the fellows would enjoy these things, and how such gifts would please the whole Camp.

Lastly, has any one an old Ford car which he would place at the disposal of the Camp directors during the Summer? It would be of great assistance in hunting places for the boys to work and in getting them to and from these places; besides its usefulness in the various errands which are continually arising.

Please communicate with Wilmer J. Young, Westtown, Pa., about any of these things. The writer has gone north to the camp in the Adirondacks. THOMAS H. BROWN.

LONDON YEARLY MEETING.

It takes nearly sixty pages of closely printed matter in The Friend (London) to give the proceedings of London Yearly Meeting. Those who read these pages year by year get in fairly close touch with the activities and exercises of English Friends. The deep undercurrents of their spiritual life have been impressive, especially during the period of the present war. For two years past we have endeavored to print selections calculated to make this manifest. We wish many more Friends would read the whole proceedings.—[EDS.]

In the "Notes from Yearly Meeting," preceding the reports, we select but one item: Together with this thought of enlargement and desire for extension came the converse picture when the tabular statement was presented. Ernest E. Taylor made vital some of the statistics which at first sight appear forbidding. He showed that there was a net gain of four new meetings, i. e., new centres of witness-bearing, but the query was raised: "What about the attendances at our meetings?" We hear reports that this is unsatisfactory in many places, and it behooves us to be humble and contrite and to consider seriously how to increase the witnessing power of our 400 congregations.

Other Friends pointed out facts concerning the lessened number of Ministers, the growth of admissions by conviction as compared with those by birth, the infrequency of visits by Ministers under concern, and the danger of what H. Sefton-Jones described as "machine-made deputations," sent down to Quarterly Meetings. Amy E. Sturge, in referring to the 2,300 Elders and Overseers and to the suggestion in Dr. Glover's recent book that "many people need to be reconverted at forty," expressed the desire that all of those holding office may be rebaptized for the work of shepherding and upbuilding the congregations to which they have been called.

In delightful weather Friends assembled in Yearly Meeting, in some measure of preparedness by the previous day's gatherings for retirement, prayer and preparation of spirit, and the appeal of the Swarthmore Lecture. The meeting was largely attended soon after the opening of the business. In the previous meeting for worship the vocal offerings included thoughts uttered by Gulielma Crosfield and Percy Bigland.

The Committee on Clerks recommended the reappointment of John Henry Barlow as Clerk, and of Roger Clark and Edith J. Wilson as Assistants; and of Henry Harris as Clerk to the Large Committee for preparation of the Epistle.

The Clerk, in introducing the main consideration of the day—that of the work of the Friends' Foreign Mission Association—said we had gathered for the third Yearly Meeting held under the shadow of the great war, a shadow which had grown wider and darker as the months had passed. He could not forget that even as we gathered in quietness and peace young lives, the brightest and best in Europe, were passing swiftly into eternity. Millions had gone before. Was it an exaggeration to say that millions would follow? Many a time we looked up and cried, "Watchman, what of the night?" Or we looked out eagerly through the darkness, wondering if as yet there were any sign of the coming dawn. We thought of what had happened in Russia, of the labor unrest at home, and we said to ourselves, "Are these signs that at last the end is drawing near, or, are they only portents in the dismal night which one can not yet interpret aright?" In regard to the great world, it was in those circumstances that we met. In facing our own business, in thinking of our work, in the foreign field, and at home in later sessions, what was to be our attitude of spirit? There had come to him that morning words from the Old Testament which he thought suggested the spirit in which we must look to our work and endeavor to carry it through. At a time of sore disaster and distress, when even his own followers had turned against him and threatened to stone him, we were told, "Therein David encouraged himself in the Lord his God." Surely we had need to encourage ourselves in the Lord our God, and in that spirit to go forward. It was that God of whom our Lord Jesus Christ spoke when He said, "If ye, then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Heavenly Father give His Holy Spirit to them that ask Him." Basing His thought upon what we know as the highest and purest and noblest in mankind, thinking of the love and care and sacrifice of the earthly father, our Lord implied that God Himself, our Heavenly Father, infinitely transcended all that. It was the same thought which came to us from the Old Testament,—“Can a woman forget her sucking child that she shall not have compassion upon him?” We were prepared to say, "No, she can not forget"; we knew all that was wrapped up in the thought of a mother's love. Yet the prophet went on, "Yea, she may forget." And then it seemed as though God took up the conversation, saying, "You are right to think it is almost impossible for a mother to forget, and you think that, because you know what is meant by a mother's love. And because of that, I have chosen this figure that from it I may interpret to you that which is in My heart. She may forget. Yet will not I forget you." Knowing these things, let us face all that lay before us and what was perhaps even more difficult all that lay before those whom we loved and esteemed and respected; basing our thought, our life and our work on that great idea, "How much more shall your Heavenly Father give good things—His Holy Spirit—to them that ask Him."

(To be continued.)

CHEYNEY SUMMER SCHOOL.

About one hundred teachers are in session at Cheyney, Pa. The decision to have the Summer School was reached, and the announcements made before our country entered the war. Had the managers been able to anticipate the present difficulty of securing funds they probably would have omitted this addition to their liabilities. Such an attitude is rebuked for some of us by the sacrificing enthusiasm of the teachers in attendance. Some of them have traveled at their own expense from Georgia and Alabama; all of them in addition to railroad fares pay a fee of $15. They are bent on helping others through this liberal opportunity to improve their own equipment.

The Managers are appealing for funds, but very especially do they appeal for visits from Friends to Cheyney while the Summer School is in session. Our judgment of Negro problems can hardly have a better opportunity for enlightenment than through the one hundred different points of view of these devoted workers.

NEWS ITEMS.

PROFESSOR FRANCIS B. GUMBER, of Haverford College, has been elected a fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, of Boston.

THE INDEX for Volume 90 will soon be ready for distribution. We shall gladly send a copy to any subscriber requesting it. This is the plan we pursued last year.

We are asked to note that S. D. Gordon, author of the "Quiet Talks" books, is speaking each week-day during this and next month near Ocean Avenue, on the Boardwalk, at Atlantic City.

We have assurances of full reports of the Young Friends' Conference at Westtown. We already have one of Emily Baleh's papers in type. We trust we shall be able to present other papers.

THOMAS E. JONES took his M. A. degree at Columbia University recently, and has completed his resident work with high standing for his Ph. D., his dissertation for the latter to be worked out through studies in Japan.

We are informed that there are still opportunities of enrollment for business men or others in the Westtown Agricultural Camp for periods of a week or longer in the Seventh Month. There is increasing demand for workers. Application may be made to Wm. H. Ritchie, 41 S. Fifteenth Street, Phila., or to Benjamin Thomas, at the camp.

UNDER date of Sixth Month 29th, on behalf of the Committee of the Representative Meeting, charged with forwarding relief for war sufferers, a draft was forwarded to William Fletcher Nicholson, successor to Isaac Sharp, London, for $1,054.11, for application as follows:—

Subject to Allocation by the Sub-Committee of the Meeting for Sufferings in London.....	$ 533.11
For Relief Work in Russia.....	100.00
For Red Cross.....	5.00
Emergency Committee for the Relief of Aliens.....	70.00
Friends' Ambulance Unit.....	93.00
War Victims' Relief Committee.....	203.00
Belgian Relief Committee.....	50.00

$1,054.11

By direction of the Representative Meeting, future contributions should be forwarded to Treasurer of the Peace Committee, Albert L. Bailly, Jr., 1508 Walnut Street.

On behalf of the Committee,
JOHN WAY.

WHO WERE THESE THREE FRIENDS?—The following was written to the Intelligencer—

"In Cleveland's American Literature, page 309, is the following extract from John Quincy Adams' Newburyport oration, delivered July 4, 1837.

"I have seen towards the close of the last century, in one of the most merciless periods of modern times, three members of the Society of Friends, with Barclay's 'Apology' and Penn's 'Maxims' in their hands, pass, peaceful travelers, through the embattled hosts of France and Britain, unarmed and unmolested as the three children of Israel in the furnace of Nebuchadnezzar."

"Can you inform me where an account of this can be found?"
"John Quincy Adams was minister to the Netherlands in 1794, and remained in Europe till 1801. In 1809 he was minister to Russia. In 1814, he was a commissioner to negotiate the treaty of peace with Great Britain; shortly after he was appointed minister to England.

"I should like to know the names and nationality of these Friends, the object of their visit and whether it accomplished its purpose.

"JAMES W. T. SCOTT."

FUNDS for the use of the American Friends' Service Committee have come in during the past week very satisfactorily. The total on hand reported a week ago was $34,252.00. At the close of Seventh Month 2nd, the amount of cash actually received is $53,384.13, a gain of nearly $20,000.00 during the week.

The Treasurer has heard of several large contributions that have not yet reached him. One Monthly Meeting connected with the Arch Street Yearly Meeting, is reported to have received four contributions of $5,000 each, in addition to other sums which have not yet been turned over. The money collected in the campaign by the American Red Cross, which was specifically designated for the use of the American Friends' Service Committee, has not been turned over owing to the magnitude of the task in straightening out the collection. No assurance has been received as to how much this will amount to, but it is thought it will be a considerable sum.

The above figures do not include the pledges of future payments, which now amount to several thousand dollars.

Several of the Monthly Meetings have sent representatives to the Treasurer's office to check up the list and see the total of contributions made by the members of their particular Monthly Meetings. The Monthly Meetings themselves are now being organized, appointing collecting committees and financial Treasurers for this particular purpose, which will very considerably lighten the Treasurer's labor by having the money come through these established channels, rather than having individual checks sent in.

But Friends who are not in touch with their Collecting Committees, need not hesitate to send checks direct to the Treasurer, if they prefer.

The largest single contribution received during the week was from a Germantown Friend, amounting to $5,175.75. Several contributions of $1000.00 have been received, but the bulk of the receipts are made up of smaller amounts.

Friends of Newtown, Pa., through Evan T. Worthington, have contributed approximately $1000.00, Yardley Meeting, $402.50, Goshen Monthly Meeting $1000.00, Abington Monthly Meeting $246.50, Friends of Lincoln, Virginia, by Henry T. Panoast, Treasurer, $375.00. White-water Monthly Meeting of Indiana, students of George School, Penna., Newton Preparative Meeting, by Allen R. Sharples, Treasurer, and Radnor Monthly Meeting, by W. W. Conard, have all sent contributions.

The total number of contributions received during the past week is 143, and the average amount contributed is $133.79.

Information has been received that Friends of the Five Years' Meeting have a substantial sum collected which will be turned over later.

The total reported collected by the American Friends' Service Committee a week ago was $53,384.13. Since the close of Seventh Month 2nd, the amount of cash actually received is $18,706.55, making a total of $73,090.68.

Friends from Newtown, Penna., Salem, N. J., and London Grove Monthly Meeting have all made contributions. Concord Monthly Meeting sent a contribution of $210.00, Orange Grove Monthly Meeting, of Pasadena, Calif., contributed $201.00, and Woodbury Monthly Meeting, N. J., Friends from Lincoln, Virginia, Friends from West Branch, Iowa, Goshen Monthly Meeting, and the Indiana Yearly Meeting all sent substantial contributions. Several contributions of $1000.00 and more were received during the past week.

Information has been received from several of the Yearly Meetings that more and larger contributions will be forthcoming later.

AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE.

CHARLES F. JENKINS, Treasurer.

SEVENTH MONTH 9, 1917.

MEETING MONTHLY MEETING at Elklands, comes in regular course Seventh Month 15th. Members of Philadelphia Quarterly Meeting of Ministers and Elders are reminded of the decision of that meeting to encourage as full an attendance of their number at this Monthly Meeting as may seem right.

WESTTOWN FARM CAMP.—The boys' farm camp at Westtown is diverting its energies largely toward helping neighboring farmers, who find it impossible to get all the help they need for weeding and harvesting their crops. Quite a little work has been done by the boys at the School in planting onions and beans. The latter promise well, but the weather was not propitious for the onions and only about one-third of the patch came up so as to warrant working them. The other two-thirds has been replowed and planted to beans. The triangular patch between the boys' orchard and the woods is under cultivation, and two rows of beans have been planted between the trees in five rows of trees on Walnut Hill.

There are at this writing—the first week in the Seventh Month—twelve boys in the camp. It is hoped that the average attendance in Seventh Month will be a little more than that. The boys work eight hours per day, either on the camp farm, or on neighboring farms, but chiefly the latter, as not enough planting was done to keep many boys busy here. They eat their meals at the camp, with a few exceptions. Benjamin J. Thomas has charge of this part of the work. The day's program is, roughly, as follows:—Rising whistle at 6.40. A plunge in the lake before breakfast at 7.00. Work from 8 until 12. Another dip in the lake, before lunch at 12.30. Work from 1.30 until 5.30. Swimming until supper at 6.30. After that the time is generally free until they go to bed, which is usually from 9 to 10.

WILMER J. YOUNG.

RECEIPTS.

Unless otherwise specified, two dollars have been received from each person, paying for vol. 91.

Jane B. Jacobs, Mary B. Bailey, Gilbert Cope, Aaron S. Edkin, T. Clarkson Eldridge, Sarah T. Huse, Lena H. Sharpless, Mary S. Kay, Rachel W. Scott, Deborah C. Smedley, Roland Smedley, Enos E. Thatcher, Jane S. Warner, Martha Price, Lydia D. Worth, Hannah C. Scattergood, Charles C. Scattergood, Sallie P. Woodward, Lydia A. Martin, Elizabeth Sharpless, all of Pa.; Benjamin S. Lamb, N. C.; Joseph E. Myers, Ohio; John B. Garrett, Pa.; Anna Morris, Pa.; N. Reece Whitacre, N. J.; Edna J. Whitacre, N. J.; Henry W. Whitacre, Pa.; George Wood, Pa.; Mary Vaux Walcott, D. C.; Florence E. Newlin, Ind.; Shubal Kersey, Ind.; Miriam Lovick, Iowa; Sarah Huast, Cal.; Townsend Cope, Ind.; Ezra Barker, Ind.; Wm. H. Gibbons, Pa.; Frederick C. Luthoff, N. J.; Minnie Bassett, Ind.; Margaret Jenkins, Pa.; John E. Forsythe, N. J.; Rebecca Price Hunt, Pa.; Thomas S. Downing, Pa.; Benjamin Vail, Pa.; Emeline P. Newbold, Pa.; Stephen W. Post, N. Y.; Martha W. W. Post, N. Y.; Mary E. Hoag, N. Y.; Emma H. Dolbos, N. Y.; Alice D. Mitchell, N. Y.; Annie F. D. Hoag, N. Y.; Franklin J. Hoag, Ohio; Charles S. Carter, Pa.; Caleb D. Cope, Pa.; Wilmer Cope, Pa.; Rachel E. Evans, Pa.; Jonathan Binns, Ohio; Dulan & Co., Eng.; Alonzo Cloud, Va.; Thomas Thomasson, Iowa; Clement Brinton, N. J.; Deborah C. Leeds, Pa.; Margaret E. Crenshaw, Va.; Adaline C. Baker, Pa.; David G. Yarnall, Pa.; Ellwood Cooper, Pa.; Robert T. Mickle, Ann Thomas, N. J.; John C. Pritchard, N. Y.; Jacob R. Elfreth, Pa.; Hannah B. Evans, Pa.; Edith W. Silver, Md.; Henry H. Perry, Mass.; J. W. Nicholson, Joseph Stokes, Martha Stokes, Ebenezer Roberts, S. and A. B. Warrington, Anna Mary Woodward, Henry W. Moore, Mary and Rebecca Matlack, Marianna Matlack, Miriam L. Roberts, Rachel W. Borton, William J. Borton, Nathan H. Roberts, Franklin T. Haines, Edith and Anna Roberts, Anna Mary Knighl, Morris Linton, Wm. E. Darnell, Elizabeth F. Darnell, Wm. Matlack, Wm. Matlack, Jr., Henrietta Wilbts, Alice C. Rhoads, Benjamin S. D. Coo, Spencer L. Haines, Charles C. Haines, Nathan Thorne, J. Powell Leeds, Mary L. Buzby, Joseph H. Matlack, Wm. E. Rhoads, S. and M. Leeds, Walton B. Leeds, Ida W. Roberts, Edwin R. Bell, Howard H. Bell, all of N. J.; Allen Maxwell, Ind.

Remittances received after Second-day evening will not appear in receipts until the following week.

DEED.—In Philadelphia, Sixth Month 26th, LYDIA ELVA PHIBAO, daughter of the late Archelaus R. and Louisa W. Phibao, of Tuckertown, N. J.; a member of the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia for the Western District.

— In Lansdowne, Pa., Sixth Month 29th, ABRAHAM L. PENNOCK, aged eighty-one.

WILLIAM H. PILE'S SONS, PRINTERS,
422 Walnut Street, Phila., Pa.

FOUNDED 1865.

THE PROVIDENT LIFE & TRUST CO.
OF PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Insures Lives Acts as Executor, Etc.
Accounts Solicited Deposit by Mail
Travelers' Cheques Monthly Statements by Mail

WRITE FOR LEAFLET.

Fourth and Chestnut Streets, Phila.

H. F. BRUNER

S. D. HALL

H. F. BRUNER & Co.
COAL

OFFICE AND YARD

16 N. TWENTY-FIRST STREET
PHILADELPHIA

TELEPHONES: $\left\{ \begin{array}{l} \text{LOCUST 243} \\ \text{RACE 661} \end{array} \right.$

H. G. CHALKLEY & SONS, LTD.

LONDON, ENGLAND LAKE CHARLES, LA.
LAWRENCE, KANSAS

OFFER:—

First Lien Farm Mortgages, paying from 6% to 6 $\frac{3}{4}$ % net to the investor.

Not to exceed 40% of our own valuation loaned to the farmer.

Full particulars of mortgages on hand ranging from $500.00 to $5,000.00, given on application to:—

T. H. CHALKLEY, LAWRENCE, KANSAS.

Letchworth Cottage
Spring Lake Beach, N. J.

Open for the Season 1917

A. C. & S. H. Letchworth

WALL PAPERS—All Grades
WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER

Custom of Friends Specially Solicited

FRANK C. BUEHL

Successor to S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON

902 SPRING GARDEN ST. - PHILADELPHIA

Opposite Spring Garden Station, Phila. & Reading R. R.

ESTABLISHED 1849

BELL 'PHONE

POCONO MANOR INN

The busy summer season is near at hand—also the beautiful mountain laurel and rhododendron, which will be found in abundance over the Manor Estate. The Golf Course is in better condition than ever before: the Fairways and Greens are all very beautiful and add greatly to the general picturesqueness of these Links in the Poconos. In arranging to come to the Pocono Manor during the summer if reservations have not already been made we should suggest that we be communicated with at once.

J. W. HURLEY, Mgr., Pocono Manor, Pa.
(Pocono Summit Station, D. L. & W. K. R.)

FRUIT TREES,
SMALL FRUITS,
SHADE TREES,
EVERGREENS,
SHRUBBERY,
HEDGE PLANTS.

EVERYTHING FOR THE ORCHARD,
THE GARDEN AND THE LAWN.

THE RAKESTRAW-PYLE COMPANY
KENNETT SQUARE, PA.

RESIDENCE: 254 S. 44th St. BELL 'PHONE: Bering 2084X
WILLIAM OAKES
Plumbing and Heating Contractor
ALSO LEAD BURNING
260 SOUTH TENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA
BELL 'PHONE: Filbert 2666.

Assoc. M. AM. Soc. C. E. Bell 'Phone—Lombard 3412

EDWIN M. EVANS
CONTRACTOR & BUILDER
My jobbing department is well equipped,
prompt and efficient

321 S. LAWRENCE ST. :: PHILA.

WILLIAM S. YARNALL
MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

118 SOUTH FIFTEENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA

Premier Duplicating Co.

Mimeographing, Multigraphing, Printing, Typewriting, Addressing, Mailing, etc.

630 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

ALFRED C. HAINES

Building Glass and Paints

86 N. Front St., Philadelphia.

THE HOLMES PRESS

Printers

J. L. Engle, Pres.

1336-40 CHERRY ST. - PHILA.

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE MATERIAL THAT WE SELL

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

THE LAKESIDE

EAGLES MERE, PA.

Unobstructed lake view; capacity 250. Elevator, steam heat, golf, tennis, bathing and bathing. Attractive motoring through the surrounding country.

GARAGE

J. S. KIRK & SON

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

GIRARD TRUST CO.
BROAD and CHESTNUT STS.

CAPITAL AND SURPLUS } $10,000,000

Acts as Executor, Trustee, Guardian, Administrator, Assignee and Receiver. Safes to Rent in Burglar-proof Vaults. Interest Allowed on Deposits. :: ::

E. B. MORRIS
PRESIDENT

To ADVERTISERS.—THE FRIEND is now open for selected advertisements at the following rates: One inch, 50 cents, or 4 cents a line; no insertion for less than 25 cents. Long term rates given on application.

Friends having real estate to rent or sell, also those desiring board or rooms, should find THE FRIEND an excellent medium for reaching interested parties. Standing business cards are also solicited.

THE CHEYNEY SITUATION

Friends of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting have as a legacy of the efforts put forth in the 60's in the interest of training colored teachers a unique plant at Cheyney. The Cheyney Training School for Teachers appeals for help to the descendants of those who originated the idea. The School is doing a great work, but it is cramped in many ways by a lack of funds.

An efficient staff of teachers and a student body numbering 100 present an unusual opportunity for the wise expenditure of energy and money.

The Managers can do little more than administer the Trust and must look to Friends and others, who have the means, to supply what is essential for the proper advancement of the School's interest.

Leslie P. Hill, Principal, is always ready to offer timely suggestions to any who have it on their hearts to assist in the laudable work that is carried on at Cheyney.

Because of the conditions which must be met, if the School is to continue its good work, the Board of Managers feel free to request Friends to include Cheyney among the charities to which they contribute, and ask that checks shall be drawn in favor of and mailed to

WILLIAM BIDDLE, Treasurer,
119 S. Fourth Street, Philadelphia.

SEE WALKER & KEPLER

FOR

Good Electrical Work

531 CHESTNUT ST. :- PHILA.

Philadelphia's
Representative Store

W. B. WEAVER
UNDERTAKER and EMBALMER

550-552 N. 5TH ST., PHILA., PA.

Special Attention Given to Funerals
In and Out of the City. Also Cheap
Accommodations for Funerals.

BELL 'PHONE 1 ESTABLISHED 1880

ELKINS, MORRIS & CO.
BANKERS

REPRESENTATIVES
WM. E. CADBURY
PAUL W. BROWN
JAMES P. MAGILL

LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

RAILROAD AND
PUBLIC UTILITY BONDS

FOR
CONSERVATIVE INVESTMENT.

FULL PARTICULARS ON REQUEST

We recommend the use of
RAG FEATHERWEIGHT

(Antique Finish)

As the paper for high-grade Books and other Publications

JOSEPH G. FOGG
FUNERAL DIRECTOR and EMBALMER
S. W. COR. 16TH and RACE STREETS
Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals
BELL 'PHONE SPRUCE 1648

R. C. Ballinger Ernest R. Yarnall John A. Stratton
TELEPHONES
Bell—Filbert 26-15 - - Keystone—Race 637
R. C. BALLINGER & CO.
CONTRACTORS and BUILDERS
218 N. Thirteenth St. Philadelphia.

HARRY S. LEE
313 WALNUT STREET
PAINTER and GRAINER

ANTIQUE and OFFICE FURNITURE RESTORED
JOBGING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO
ESTIMATES

W. J. MACWATTERS
WITH

HARDWICK & MAGEE CO.
SUCCESSORS TO
IVINS, DIETZ & MAGEE
Let me help you in selecting your

Rugs and Carpets

Our new imports of Oriental Rugs
are of the highest merit

1220-22 MARKET ST. :: PHILA.

BACK LOG CAMP
INDIAN LAKE, N. Y.

In the Heart of the Adirondacks.

The name Back Log Camp means a great deal to many people. We shall be glad to send our booklet to any one who is interested in the latest development of the Back Log idea.

THOMAS K. BROWN
Westtown, Pa.

PUBLIC STENOGRAPHER
GEORGE B. COCK, Liberty Building
Established 1896. Experience 39 years; Medical 13.

HARVEY T. WEBER

TAILOR

207-208 HALE BLDG., 1326 CHESTNUT ST.

The custom of Friends specially solicited.

Friends Arch St. Centre
304 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Provides comfortable accommodations for guests by the day or week. Meals at moderate prices.

AMELIA D. FEATHERSTONE, Matron.

PHONE—MAREET 1571.

FRIENDS' BIBLE ASSOCIATION
HAS ITS HEADQUARTERS AT
207 WALNUT PLACE : PHILA.

It is able to furnish Bibles and Testaments to Schools and Bible-classes and would be glad to have Friends everywhere acquaint themselves with the needs of their neighborhoods and allow the Bible Association to help them procure the books they may want.

YOUNG FRIEND STUDYING KINDERGARTEN desires to help with children during Summer vacation.
Seashore or Mountains preferred. Apply L.

"THE FRIEND."

OCEAN CITY COTTAGE TO RENT FOR SEVENTH or EIGHTH MONTH. Cottage will accommodate one large or two small families. Has five bed-rooms on second floor. Living, dining and kitchen on first floor. Large porch, veranda, garage. Anyone interested communicate with W. HAROLD TOMLINSON, 111 Yale Ave., Swarthmore, Pa.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 91.

FIFTH-DAY, SEVENTH MONTH 19, 1917.

No. 3.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price $2.00 a year in Advance.

Publisher, DAVIS H. FORSYTHE.

Editors { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
 { DAVIS H. FORSYTHE,
 { MARY WARD.

Make remittances payable to

THE FRIEND,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

THE GARDEN OF THE SOUL.

"And their soul shall be as a watered garden; and they shall not sorrow any more at all." (Jeremiah xxxi: 12.)

One of the most beautiful gardens of the world is the Santa Clara Valley. You ride for miles through its varied scenery, and are touched with its wondrous charm. The everlasting mountains embrace it in their distant misty folds. The smooth country roads penetrate miles of orchards white with bloom or glorious in their summer greenery. The little farm houses are surrounded with the gayest of roses and flowers. Graceful palms rustle and tall eucalyptus trees bow under the sweep of the breeze from the wide Pacific. The perfume of marvelous flowers and sweet-scented hay fills the air. The song of birds enchant the ear. The sun day by day swings across the heavens and pours a flood of light upon the rich and contented scene. Here is an earthly garden. It is typical of what the soul of man may be when it has been surrendered to and cultured by God.

We find from the context of the quotation from Jeremiah that we are considering that Divine love was the subtle force that compelled men and women "to flow unto the goodness of Jehovah." As the outward manifestation of God's love may be witnessed in a broad and beautiful valley or in the winsomeness of a tiny cottage garden, even so is its spiritual wealth more alluringly evident in those members of the human family who enjoy a vital Christian experience. Their souls indeed "are as a watered garden, the waters of which fail not."

One of the delightful tests of the spiritual life is fruit bearing. As the broad acres of our sun-lit fields produce abundant and delicious fruitage to the gladness of the husbandman, just so does the heart that has been warmed by Jesus' love yield the fruits of righteousness—faith, joy, peace. The results are beyond our narrow comprehension. They may extend round the world wherever the consecrated voice or pen have influence. They may be discovered within the confines of a narrow room, upon a bed of pain. In either case the personality of the Christ-life is comparable to a watered garden in the midst of a desert land. The fruitage is sweet and never fails to invigorate in body and soul the community of God.

A Camisard in France a few centuries ago, when brought to trial, exclaimed to his persecutors, "My soul is like a watered garden, full of shelter and of fountains." Those who have seen the shelter of the walls of the gardens of Southern France in winter or have noted the refreshing fountains within them in the heat of summer, will recognize the simile. How truly that haunted soul expressed itself. Even so may it be with us. Through this life God's people live as in a sheltered garden enclosed and refreshed by Him. In the life to come, "they shall not sorrow any more." Heaven shall be to them as an eternal garden and theirs shall forever be the Paradise of God.

W. C. A.

THE LARGER FELLOWSHIP.

Perhaps no subject has had so much attention concentrated upon it in the religious world of late years as that of church unity. The whole movement of the Federation of Churches is a movement with this end of unity in view. Certain minor movements to bring varieties of one denomination together are plainly in the same direction. As one follows the discussions and pronouncements that result from this world movement, certain dominant notes of difficulty recur, with a frequency that is most significant. Denominationalism in one form or another and the particular differences of point of view that have made denominations are perceived to include most of these difficulties. A few instances,—a multitude might be cited, will make this point clear. Thus George Wharton Pepper, in his little book, "A Voice from the Crowd," has a chapter devoted to this subject of unity. He makes the outward use of the sacraments absolutely essential to unity, although more than once in other chapters he comes near to an expression of a larger basis of fellowship, which might establish common ground for all Christians.

Edward Grubb, in a recent discussion of the question of appointing delegates to a Conference on Federation at Cambridge, is reported as saying, "The whole scheme of the Federation of the Free Churches proceeds on the assumption of a separated ministry and outward sacraments." He then shows how impossible organic unity is on this basis.

In the same line, but more fully expressed, is the following:

"The achievement of Christian unity is the most important concern of the present day," says the Christian Work. "How far it can be consummated in the direction of corporate reunion without the sacrifice of things essential remains to be seen. Attempted or consummated reunion, on the basis of a suppression of all truths or things which are at present the cause of disunion, is not Christian unity at all. But, putting first things first, the unity for which our Lord prayed, and which so many desire to see consummated now and perpetuated after the war, as one beneficial result from the great sacrifices made, is the unity in which truth and love are vital forces, leading to the exaltation of Christ, the mutual love between His followers, as such, in whatever church or nation they may be found, and the sanctification of the whole body of believers."

Finally, we have had sent to the office of THE FRIEND this very telling clipping which is not only the subject of our present writing, but in good degree a clear treatment of it:

A WORD FOR OUR TIMES.—Denominationalism in the church is a reversion to nationalism. It is a repudiation of the church's charter of universal brotherhood and service in the interest of a section of the race supposedly elected by God to special privileges and authority. What a pity that at this crisis when nations are in a death struggle and the interests of humanity are being sacrificed, the church is impotent! What a thousand pities that our failure to lead the nations to reconciliation is due to the fact that we have failed in fellowship among ourselves! How can we lead the nations to a European peace when we our-selves have not reached unity in Europe or in any other part of the world? How can we summon with any Divine power races to supreme allegiance to Christ, while we are rendering supreme allegiance to our denominational organizations in the face of our Master's cry for the unity of believers? Surely in the Divine order a united Christendom must precede a federation of the world.—BISHOP J. W. BASHFORD, of China, at the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

In view of these arresting quotations which we are printing merely as an index of a great mass of individual and group judgment, there must be found somewhere, somehow, a basis of Larger Fellowship in which our Lord's aspiration for His Church can be realized. Finally, when we are one we must meet on common ground from which the occasion of these differences (denominationalism) has been removed. It were surely little less than arrogant assumption to claim that Quakerism offers that "common ground." If in any degree we do assume it we must hasten to confess that we have failed signally so far to disclose it to the world in its universal character. Historically, the early Friends claimed no less than this common ground for their re-discovery of Christianity, but that was before their profession had hardened into an "ism." Their claim, in Penn's phrase, was for "primitive Christianity revived."

In the early history of Philadelphia's organic life, as expressed in philanthropic institutions, good Bishop White is quoted as saying he could make most any good work go if he could secure the co-operation of two or three Quakers. Not a few of these associations so founded continue. It may be accounted a very small matter, but we venture to think that the expression of the religious obligations of these associations in forms agreeable to Friends is very significant. Thus instead of being opened by formal prayer the meetings of such committees and boards began in periods of devotional silence and ordained or lay member had no difficulty of understanding how to use such opportunities. After a hundred years this common ground of co-operation is still much appreciated and even practiced when no Friend is present.

The later developments of the Society of Friends in our country may be recognized as towards, if not into the "denominationalism" which Bishop Bashford calls a "reversion." We can not see this in any other light than as a movement away from the common ground upon which real unity is to be attained. A "Friends' Church" may fit into the general scheme of religious organization, may find an advantage in accepting the currency of ordinary religious thought, may seemingly approach nearer to the majority of religious professors by making Quakerism accept ordinary church forms. No little good may result from such changes, but the chief good for which we were specially qualified may be forfeited. If the best organized churches conclude that "corporate reunion" is not possible what special gain is made by falling in line with their corporate forms?

We are not wholly insensible to the fact that a process very common to human nature has affected our history and our present capacity for usefulness in the great effort for unity.

Originally George Fox's plea that the Church is the body of believers in all denominations seemed a well understood expression for the Larger Fellowship. Finally, despite such pronouncements as that of John Woolman [I found no narrowness in my heart respecting sects and opinions], many Friends came to live as though their Society was the Church. In a confusion like that it made small difference whether the word was spelled with a capital or a small "C."

We would not claim too much for a distinction, but a living witness for this larger view of the Church does seem to involve something that is fundamental to Christian unity.

To preserve a special form of an organization because of our loyalty to our history, to insist upon a Society of Friends instead of a Church just for peculiarity sake, can have no justification at all. To preserve the ancient form because it involves a larger fellowship than is possible to any process of mechanical unity amongst denominations, is a totally different matter.

This point of view has a very large side and a very full expression in the best religious literature of the day. President Eliot's twelve-inch bookshelf must needs be multiplied many times to contain even the most striking collateral testimony along these lines. It is this larger Society of Friends that many of us belong to. We love our little meetings, we are ready to give sacrificing labor for them, but we perceive how they are beset with "denominational reversions." We have not yet had the prophet voice to make clear the freedom of the Church as distinguished from a church. Is it possible that the movement for internationalism involves a recognition of this common ground of larger fellowship in the religious world? Is it possible that not a few of us are ready to acknowledge that Jesus Christ has already come to be the Head of His Church—no invisible Head but actual presiding Head to the eye and act of faith? When ecclesiastic and layman, when gentile and Jew can realize that this was the vital thought of Christianity, progress in unity will not be so impeded. J. H. B.

WILLIAM PENN, BY JOHN WILLIAM GRAHAM.

The authoritative life of William Penn will be written after the volumes of his complete writings edited by Albert Cook Myers shall have been published. This may be some years hence, for the work is a large one. In the meantime we are assured that putting into print every shred of writing, public and private, studied and unstudied, ever made by the founder of Pennsylvania, will not detract from, but rather enhance, his reputation for versatile ability and purity of motive.

The present volume makes no pretense to research among hitherto unpublished materials. It takes up the already printed biographies, finds new light and facts in unexpected places, and puts into shape a readable and reliable portrait of the many-sided man—reformer, theologian, politician, courtier, sufferer for conscience' sake and for unpaid obligations, commonwealth founder and voluminous exponent of Quakerism.

The author is well fitted for the task. His style is pleasing and interesting. He is in large sympathy both with the political and theological views of Penn. His own activities in public life have shown him the difficulties in the path of a man who means to combine successful political achievement with a conscientious regard for principles which sometimes seem to stand in the way of securing results. He appreciates also the need of making the best of untoward circumstances and of yielding or postponing cherished plans for the sake of meeting temporary conditions of apparent pressing necessity; in short, of being at the same time and without hypocrisy a Quaker idealist and a smart politician.

While he has not unearthed any large amount of new material, he has made the best use of that already existing, some almost lost sight of, and shed new light on many points hitherto obscure. Errors of statement, which are very few so far as we can judge, are due generally to an ignorance of local geography, as when he places Chester in the "lower counties"; that is, the present State of Delaware.

The biographer of a previous generation, if a Friend, or semi-Friend, like Clarkson, could hardly rid himself of the idea, which grew up exuberantly in the medieval days of Quakerism, that direct contact with political life was destructive of spiritual experience. Penn himself suffered from such opposition, and George Whitehead, William Mead, his old associate in the noted trial, and Thomas Lower, who married the daughter of Margaret Fell, were all for some time his rather severe critics and sympathized, perhaps partly through misinformation, with David Lloyd and the anti-Penn politicians of Pennsylvania.

If the biographer were not a Friend he could hardly catch the meaning of Penn's devotion to certain principles of action which seemed to stand in the way of worldly success. He did not grasp the Quaker point of view and so failed to understand his subject on the side of his religious convictions and testimony bearing.

Thus, there was need of a biography of Penn from the standpoint of a modern scholarly Quaker, not a traditionalist or an opportunist, but who knew tradition as it has moulded character and actions, and who saw, as Penn did, the need of adapting principles and modifying testimonies to the circumstances of the day; and this the present book supplies.

Of the numerous biographies of Penn, those of Clarkson, Janney and Graham are distinctly Friendly. They have explained the doubtful passages of his life in a way to give the impression of an absence of faults and weaknesses which is hardly human. Their estimate is doubtless nearer the truth than what we would gain from the brilliant pages of Maccaulay, whose style entrances each generation of boyish minds ignorant of their inaccuracies; or from Buell, full of misstatements; or from Hepworth Dixon, reliable but incomplete. Yet we read the pages of Janney and Graham, while we can not say with positiveness that their judgment in these doubtful issues of Penn's life is not a reasonable one, we may also confess that another is possible. Had he lived all his time in Pennsylvania it is not clear that even his forceful personality would have conquered all obstacles and been wholly advantageous. For with all his courageous and undoubtedly sincere advocacy of democracy, he was at heart an aristocrat and would have been out of sympathy with the practical Americanism which seemed to spring into life as soon as the Atlantic was crossed. It was hard for a man reared as he had been, with such advantages of birth and fortune, however much he saw in his study the huge promise of civil and religious liberty, and however willing to concede them to his colonists, to live among them without intensifying the class feelings upon which David Lloyd largely fed his political fortunes.

It was too probably something more than trustful carelessness that got him into his trouble with his steward. It began in this way, but when he found himself tangled in the web, he still preserved a silence and allowed matters to drift from bad to worse, till they almost caused him to lose everything. Nor did he show the greatest wisdom in his choice of agents. Nor does it seem now that his attitude towards his friend, that bigot and libertine and concentration of unwisdom, the last of the Stuart kings, whatever its motive, was the best possible.

We mention these points not to throw against Penn any railing accusation, but to point out, which is so easy in a backward view, how the perfect man might not have acted in the difficult matters which beset him on every hand, about the details of which we really know so little.

For we feel sure that the final verdict of history written after some judicial mind has carefully studied Myers's great work, will approximate to the position taken by John W. Graham. Putting the worst possible construction upon such questions as the above, the towering services which William Penn rendered to England and America, to state and church, place him, with the doubtful exception of Roger Williams, as the greatest of colonial founders, as he was also the greatest Quaker ever in public life. Is there in the Declaration of Independence and the Federal Constitution more of the thoughts of any other man? Does the great principle of religious liberty on both sides of the sea owe more to any other? Did any other man at as early an age see more clearly, risk more bravely, and maintain more consistently, the great ideal of individual liberty of conscience?

In the face of these great qualities little discussions as to his wisdom in certain details of his troubled and complex life are insignificant and our author has probably done wisely in not emphasizing them. He has gathered in true perspective the qualities which make up the true William Penn.

The fine part of Penn's life is the early part, before the disappointments of Pennsylvania, the loss of friends and fortune, the malice and criticism of enemies clouded the outlook. The spirit of those early days which induced his acceptance of religious principles of action in risking all the brilliant prospects in his grasp, his hold on the same spirit through fair times and foul, with inextinguishable optimism, its continued efficacy even when disease had clouded his intellect and weakened his body is the central feature of his life. No one could have gone through his checkered and resultful career with sweetness and power without the reality of this sustaining influence.

I. S.

YEARLY MEETING IN JAPAN.

[Through an oversight this was not put in type immediately upon receipt.—Eds.]

Those of you who remember a notice about the annual meeting of Friends in Japan, that appeared in THE FRIEND last Fall, will be surprised to see so soon again the same heading. But here, as in Philadelphia, Spring is the regular time for the gathering, which last year was delayed by certain circumstances, until Fall. Friends here have not yet been able to find a time to which they can adhere every year. Third and Fourth Months are busy times for school people, since the new school year begins in Fourth Month, and in Fifth Month the farmers must begin work in their rice fields. It may, perhaps, take another year or two of experimenting before they discover at what time the greatest proportion can leave their homes, and attend three or four days' sessions of meetings.

The sessions began on the tenth of Fifth Month and lasted through the thirteenth. The Meeting was held this year in Tokio, and its transactions are a matter of history, because it was at one of these sessions that it first constituted itself as a Yearly Meeting. The movement to organize a Yearly Meeting began something over two years ago, and has been carried on with dignity and deliberation, and a sense of the importance of the issue, until its completion this year. Consciousness that it is only a part of a world body, and a desire to be admitted into brotherhood with the other parts, led Friends to arrange to send word to the Yearly Meetings of Friends in other countries of the birth of this youngest of all Yearly Meetings. The same feelings were in the heart and mind of one of its members when, at the last session, he gave thanks to God for the labor of the people—and he mentioned especially those in the United States, Canada and England—which for the last thirty years has gone into the building up of this Yearly Meeting.

The Meeting, as at present organized, consists of three Monthly Meetings, and three meetings which might be called preparatory to the Monthly Meeting stage. There are no Quarterly Meetings as yet. Petitions from two other groups of Christians were received by the Yearly Meeting, asking to be recognized as having arrived at the preparatory stage, and Committees were appointed to visit them.

The Clerk of the Yearly Meeting is T. Nomura, a member of Tsuchiura Monthly Meeting. He is a merchant of undoubted integrity and an influential member of his community. He has been a Christian for years. His wife also is a member of the Meeting, and the children have known what few children in this country know—the blessings of a Christian home. Nomura San feels deeply his responsibilities as a Christian and as a member of the Society of Friends. Hirakawa San, the President of the Girls' School, is appointed as his alternate, in times of unavoidable absence. As at present organized, the Clerk does not keep the records, but introduces the business and presides over the discussions, the records being kept by a secretary, Suzuki San, who for many years has been engaged in Christian work in Ishioka in connection with Friends, and was appointed as Recording Secretary.

Iwasawa San, who is known to many Philadelphia Friends, became Correspondent, and Kurama San, a tailor in Tokio, and a substantial member of Friends for a great many years, was chosen as Treasurer. There is also a Committee, which corresponds to the Philadelphia Representative Meeting, for interim business, and a Meeting of Ministers and Elders. Five ministers have been recognized. Business is conducted much as it is in Philadelphia, except that there is not yet the freedom of debate. This will doubtless come with time and experience.

It would require too much space to give an account of the different sessions of this Meeting, but there were two addresses given, which I wish at least to mention. One was by Alice Lewis, and its subject was the qualifications for membership in the Society of Friends. She held up a very high ideal which it is hoped will be followed by the Japanese Friends. The other was by Dr. Nitobe on the distinctive teachings of Friends. He began by telling how, even as a boy, he had been impressed by the fact that the worship he saw at the temples was outward, and that the real worship of God must be inward, and then he went on to explain the "Inner Light," and why Friends had rejected outward forms, mentioning especially baptism and the Lord's Supper. The principles that lay back of the refusal to take off the hat, and the use of the plain language, were set forth, and Friends' record of steadfastness in the observance of these principles. He kept a large and mixed audience listening intently for over an hour. For the general public, it was good, but for that little inner circle, who are just taking upon their shoulders the responsibilities of the Yearly Meeting, it was most valuable.

The Japan Yearly Meeting of Friends is entering upon its history at a time that is testing the faith of Friends of all countries. In Japan there are some peculiar difficulties, of which we have no experience at home. The band of Friends is small and, humanly speaking, weak. They will want the sympathy and prayers of Friends everywhere, that they may be true to the name, and to the past record, and that they may hold up the torch of spiritual religion to the needy brothers of their own land.

EDITH SHARPLESS.

POLITICAL DISTURBANCE AT CHENG TU.

In the days of the Manchu régime the affairs of a province were entrusted to a single head, the Viceroy, whose word was supreme save for the control of the Federal Government at Peking. Since the establishment of the Republic the military arm of the government has been exalted to a place co-equal with the civil authority, and in some instances has assumed supreme control over the unwilling people. In addition to the ever-present friction between the Military Governor and the Civil Governor, another element has entered to complicate the situation, namely, the appointment of governors who are natives of other provinces and who bring with them large numbers of soldiers from their native province. Thus in 1913, Chungking was the victim of Yunnan soldiers who had come to "deliver" her from the reign of terror of a local usurper, and in 1916, the Province of Szechwan was overrun by opposing troops from Peking and from Yunnan, the resulting condition of anarchy giving place slowly to order only after the Northern troops had withdrawn and left the Szechwan and Yunnan troops in possession of the province.

This dual control and the usurpation of power by the military has again brought its train of woe. For some months the Military Governorship has been held by a Yunnanese, Lo Pei Chin, who has maintained his position by means of his Yunnan troops, while the Civil Governor, Liu Ts'en Hou, has depended upon his Szechwan troops. Either because there really was no money to pay the Szechwan soldiers or because it was dishonestly withheld by Lo, they had not been paid for several months, whereas the Yunnan soldiers appear to have received their pay. Lo sought to disband as many of the Szechwan troops as possible, and did succeed in disbanding one regiment in a city forty miles west of Chengtu. As the Yunnanese were returning to the capital with the accoutrements they were attacked in the streets of Chengtu by Liu Ts'en Hou in an attempt to regain this equipment.

The Yunnan troops entrenched themselves in a portion of the city, with headquarters in the Imperial City, a walled enclosure near the centre of the city, which has been used since the Revolution for the Administrative Offices. There they were attacked by the Szechwanese, and for nearly a week the city was at the mercy (or lack of mercy) of the two opposing factions. In order to clear a space around the walls of the Imperial City the Yunnan soldiers threw oil on the roofs of the houses and set them on fire. The defenceless people were trapped and burned in their homes, as the gates across the streets were closed and they were not allowed to escape. It is said that as the fire crept from house to house mothers killed their children and then themselves. Full particulars have not yet reached us, but conservative estimates place the number of dead at not less than three thousand. One report states that 300 wounded have been treated by the Red Cross. Thousands of houses were burned, and the disaster to the city far exceeds that of the looting at the first Revolution.

Fortunately no foreigners lost their lives, though many foreigners' residences were struck by bullets or shells, and one, a frame building in the city, was "riddled" with bullets. In numerous cases foreigners and students took refuge in cellars, and hundreds of Chinese who could escape from their homes crowded into mission compounds to avail themselves of the superior protection of brick walls. The Friends' lath and plaster houses inside the city were almost in the line of most severe firing, so all except R. J. Davidson and L. N. Hayes, of the Y. M. C. A., made their way through desultory firing to the west gate and thence to the University campus, where they were comparatively safe, though even there several persons (not students or foreigners) were killed by spent bullets or shells.

Fortunately for Margaret L. Simkin and myself we have since Second Month been aiding in the evangelistic work of three of our stations at some distance from Chengtu, so we have been spared the terrible experiences through which most of the missionaries in Chengtu have passed. I had just completed a five weeks' class for evangelistic workers in the Tungchwan district and was making the round of some of the outstations when the trouble broke out. As soon as I learned how serious it was, and fearing that it might spread rapidly throughout the country, I returned to Suining where Margaret L. Simkin is living on the Hospital Compound. The lawlessness has not spread widely, however, so I am now on my way to Lungliang (two days from Chungking) to conduct a similar short term Bible Class for evangelistic workers there.

Whether the troubles in Chengtu are at an end we cannot say. Governor Lo and some of his Yunnan troops have withdrawn from the city to the arsenal, fighting has ceased, and it is reported that about half a million silver dollars are being raised by the people, on receipt of which he promises to withdraw his troops to Yunnan and leave Szechwan in peace. Both parties fear treachery, so whether either will keep its promises remains to be seen. "In any case," as a business man said to me, "it is the people who must eat the bitterness," a beautiful "heads I win; tails you lose" arrangement.

The consuls are reported to have been unwearied in their efforts to effect a compromise so as to save city and people, but the leaders were deaf to appeals for mercy. No Chinese could safely venture on the street even in the lulls between fighting, as the soldiers seized whomsoever they suspected and beheaded them by the dozens (one report said by the hundreds) on the city wall in full view of the Canadian Mission premises. Thus do the Chinese train and equip soldiers for their "protection!" If it is imperative for their own sakes that the Western nations should speedily adopt sane international sanctions of peace, it becomes doubly imperative because of its bearing upon the question of putting fire-brands into the hands of these children.

ROBERT L. SIMKIN.

STUNING, West China, Fifth Month 10, 1917.

JONATHAN CHACE.

The death of Jonathan Chace occurred in Providence, R. I., Sixth Month 30th. He was in his eighty-eighth year. Although not a member of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, he was so closely affiliated with it, that it seemed almost that he might have membership in two meetings. Perhaps more conspicuously than any other Friend in America during the past fifty years, Jonathan Chace was called to high public office. He demonstrated how compatible such service can be even with "following the tenets of that sect rather closely" as the Providence Bulletin phrases it. We are adapting the notice printed in that paper as we feel sure the details will interest Friends. Curiously enough, his most important effort in the U. S. Senate, viz.: "The Copy Right Bill," is not mentioned in these newspaper notices.

Former Senator Jonathan Chace Dead in Eighty-eighth Year. Member of National Senate from 1885 to 1880—Prominently Identified with Cotton Industry in Blackstone Valley for Many Years.

Jonathan Chace, United States Senator from Rhode Island from 1885 to 1880, died at his home, 190 Hope Street, after a long illness.

Jonathan Chace, one of the few men who ever resigned a seat in the United States Senate, was born in Fall River, Mass., Seventh Month 22, 1820. He was of a Fall River family, his father, Harvey Chace, being a native of that place, and was interested in cotton manufacturing there. His mother's maiden name was Hannah Wood. Harvey Chace went to Valley Falls in 1850, following his brother, Samuel B. Chace, who had gone there to engage in cotton manufacturing in 1840. Samuel B. Chace's distinguished wife, Elizabeth Buffum Chace, and his equally distinguished daughter, Lillie Chace Wyman, wife of the late John C. Wyman, served to make the other branch of the family well known, and to add to the eminence in an intellectual way of the whole Chace family of Valley Falls. All were Quakers, and Jonathan Chace followed the tenets of that sect rather closely, his Quaker broad-brim being one of the features of his personality. Samuel B. and Harvey Chace began to buy into the Blackstone Valley Mills in the '50s and in the '60s formed the Albion Company and greatly enlarged their cotton plants.

Prior to the Civil War the Chaces, already possessed of great social influence, increased their distinction by their intense sympathy with the anti-slavery cause. The village of Valley Falls became at length a refuge of fugitive slaves, and the histories of the "Underground railway" always refer to the place as one of its stations.

In the city of Fall River, then a town, Jonathan Chace acquired the beginnings of a good education, completing it at the Friends' School in Providence. When a young man he followed the interests of his father and uncle, and on their deaths he and his brother, James H. Chace, and other relatives succeeded them in the management of the mills.

In 1876 Jonathan Chace was nominated for the State Senate and elected and was re-elected in 1877. In 1880 he was nominated for Congress from the western district of the State and elected, his re-election following in 1882, but in 1885 he was elected to the United States Senate to fill out the unexpired term of the late Senator Henry B. Anthony, who died in 1884.

As soon as Senator Anthony's death was announced the members of the Republican party's inner circle picked out Jonathan Chace to succeed him. Somewhat to the surprise of the State Governor Bourn, who was called on to appoint the temporary successor, selected the late William P. Sheffield. In 1885, however, Jonathan Chace was duly elected to fill the vacancy caused by Senator Anthony's death. He had almost served out his second term in the lower House, but he went through the formality of resigning and a special election was called to fill the seat which he had vacated.

When Jonathan Chace went to Washington to serve his first term in the House, the late President Garfield was chosen by the nation as its Chief Magistrate. J. Warren Keifer was to be Speaker of the House, which was Republican. In this body, Jonathan Chace served on the committee on manufactures of the House and the select House committee on the alcohol liquor traffic. In the Forty-eighth Congress, elected in 1882 to serve from 1883 to 1885, the Democrats were in a majority, and John G. Carlisle was Speaker. In this body Jonathan Chace was on the committees on improvement of the Mississippi River and on weights and measures.

In the Senate, into which Jonathan Chace went in 1885, his first honors were exceedingly meagre. He was not given the committee positions held by the late Senator Anthony, but had to be content with the committees on mines and mining, Revolutionary claims and woman suffrage. In the Fifth Congress, covering the years 1887-89, he was recognized with all fitness, receiving appointments to the committees on the civil service and retrenchment in the District of Columbia, patents, post offices and post roads, Revolutionary claims, woman suffrage and the condition of the civil service. One of the important bills Jonathan Chace voted for in the House was the Tariff act of 1883. The most important one receiving his vote in the Senate was the Interstate Commerce law.

Jonathan Chace did not enter politics after his retirement from the Senate, although in 1892 he participated as a speaker and adviser in the campaign in the town of Lincoln, where he lived, and where the Democratic party, which had been in control for years, was the object of a special attack by the Republicans. His personal interest probably gave the victory to his party.

Jonathan Chace's attacks on free trade teachings by professors of economics in colleges were a feature of his public life and of his Rhode Island canvasses. He especially assailed Professor E. Benjamin Andrews, then recently installed in the chair of History and Political Economy at Brown University, and later President of the institution, who had made some speeches in the campaign of 1884. It was not long after this campaign that Professor Andrews went to Cornell, thence to be recalled to Brown as President.

In 1892 Jonathan Chace was elected a trustee of Brown University.

Jonathan Chace married, in Fallstown, Pa., in 1854, Jane C. Moon. She died Eighth Month 15, 1914.

He is survived by two daughters, Anna H. and Elizabeth M. Chace, who lived with him, and a brother, James H. Chace, 112 Keene Street, Providence. The last named is in his ninetieth year.

The funeral of former United States Senator Jonathan Chace was held at his late home, 190 Hope Street. It was marked by Quaker simplicity.

James Moon and Zebedee Haines, of Philadelphia, were at the services at the house, together with President Faunce of Brown. Burial was in the Quaker section of the North Burial Ground. There were no honorary bearers.

Governor Beeckman and wife, Mayor Gainer and other public officials were present at the services, together with the boards of directors of the Phenix National Bank and various insurance companies, with which Jonathan Chace was identified.

REST.

A little child upon my mother's breast,
Her tender, loving arms about me pressed,
Peaceful and still, I knew not any care,
For all my troubles, were for her to bear,
And her dear presence made my moments blessed.

Now older grown, and by life's cares oppressed,
I often long for that sweet place of rest,
And wish myself in sadness and despair,
A little child.

But still I hope, though weary and distressed
And knowing well that I have oft transgressed,
That I may find a place as safe and fair
As were my mother's arms and, enter there
With all my troubles gone, my sins confessed—
A little child.

—From Songs of Hope, by REBECCA N. TAYLOR. Sherman, French & Co., Boston. Printed by permission.

JOSHUA L. BAILY.

Several articles have appeared in THE FRIEND since the death of Joshua L. Baily—all much appreciated. This tribute will treat entirely of his wonderful touch at Pocono Manor. As we are now gathering for the season of 1917, we hear many times how we do, and will, miss Joshua L. Baily, the real lover and helpful friend of Pocono Manor. He loved this place and did much for the comfort and happiness of all who came within its borders.

About six years ago, when it became advisable to enlarge the Meeting-room, it was necessary to move the Library to the Main Building. Joshua L. Baily was heard to say, "You bring the stone and I will do the rest," and how well we all understand and appreciate the beautiful and comfortable Auditorium which he planned and completed, and handed it over to the Association in his own genial way.

All over the Manor, both inside and outside, his clear, clean touch is in evidence. His last gift of importance to the Manor was the American Flag. In his ninetieth year, on the twenty-fourth day of the Seventh Month, at 2:30 P. M., the flag was raised on the steel pole, in the presence of over two hundred people, our venerable friend made a most impressive and interesting speech of presentation, and the gift was gracefully accepted on behalf of the Board of Managers by our beloved late friend, Walter P. Stokes. Every day the Flag is raised to the mast-head, and carefully furled at the setting of the sun.

Joshua L. Baily has left many reminders all over the Manor property of his friendly interest, and his presence will abide in our thoughts as long as we live.

TEMPERANCE.

A department edited by BENJAMIN F. WHITSON, of Moylan, Pa., on behalf of the Friends' Temperance Association of Philadelphia.

The saloon exists "not because man, by nature, must drink, but because by proper incentives he can be made to drink, and there is money in selling it to him."

"This war," President Wilson has said, "is grim business on every side of it." And among the grimmest features of it, we think, are these that the government which tells American citizens how much they shall eat, and selects those who must risk their lives in battle, exempts from sacrifice the most useless and not the least harmful of all industries; and that, while demanding rigid economy as the only means of avoiding privation, it permits the waste of enough food to give every French and British and Belgian and American soldier a loaf of bread a day.—North American.

UNDER the new revenue laws it is estimated that the beverage liquor traffic will pay about $500,000,000. This fact seems to be the last refuge of certain Congressmen who refuse to support a law prohibiting the use of grain and other food-stuffs in the manufacture of booze.

Who ultimately pays this $500,000,000? The wives, children and other dependents of the drinkers—conceded alike by statesmen, sociologists, educators, publicists, employers and labor leaders to be the most needy class in America, and the class least able to bear additional taxation.

Who will bear it if Prohibition comes? It will be redistributed by other forms of taxation and equitably borne by the rich, the well-to-do and the poorer classes, in proportion to their conditions in life.

The Congressman who would seek to relieve the rich and middle classes of this burden by fastening it upon the helpless dependents of the drinkers is striking at the vitals of his country. He is more dangerous than a German submarine.—American Issue.

THE Pennsylvania Legislature in the year 1791 adopted the following resolution in opposition to the action of the United States Senate in attempting to collect revenue from the sale of intoxicating liquors:—

Resolved, That no public urgency within the knowledge or contemplation of this House, can, in their opinion, warrant the adoption of any species of taxation which shall violate those rights which are the basis of our government, and which would exhibit the singular spectacle of a nation resolutely oppressing the oppressed in order to enslave itself.

In 1862, Congress was taxing practically everything in sight to meet the demands of the great struggle then on, and yet the effort to put an internal tax on liquors was most vigorously fought in both branches of Congress.

Major Merwin, personal friend and associate of President Lincoln, is authority for the statement that Lincoln was hostile to any provision which would give standing and life to the liquor traffic. He consented to it as a war measure only after having been assured by such men as Chase, Seward, and others that the obnoxious feature would be eliminated when the war was over.

The action of the American Medical Association in ruling out alcohol from the practice of medicine and declaring that it has no drug value either as a tonic or stimulant hastens the doom of John Barleycorn. No intelligent layman will attempt to refute the opinion of these physicians of nationwide, and many of them world-wide, reputation.

The Association declared that alcohol has no food value in the treatment of diseases and that its only legitimate use in medicine is as a preservative. It has already been barred from the pharmacopoeia and thus is entirely eliminated as a legitimate remedy.

The President of the Association, Dr. Charles H. Mayo, the noted Minneapolis surgeon, declared that "national Prohibition would be welcomed by the medical profession."

DR. IRVING FISHER, Professor of Economics, at Yale, was in Philadelphia and gave an address at the City Club.

Dr. Fisher estimates that 85,000,000 bushels of grain are used each year in liquor manufacture which could be turned into food for human beings. From this he estimates that 11,000,000 loaves of bread a day could be added to our present output. Making his estimates on a most conservative basis, he believes that the income of the nation would be increased by at least $3,000,000,000 under Prohibition. Add to this the $2,000,000,000 now being expended for drink which would be saved and you have $5,000,000,000. Comparing this with the $500,000,000 which we now receive in war tax from the liquor business shows that we could pay that increased tax and still be $4,500,000,000 to the good.

Speaking of the control of our Government by special interests, he said:—

Two practical obstacles remain to Prohibition: age-long prejudice for the belief that alcohol is a tonic, and the vested liquor interests. The latter is the strongest argument for Prohibition. Give us Prohibition, if for no other reason, at least that this country may no longer be governed by special interests. President Wilson was elected on a platform which called for the elimination of the rule of special interest classes; it was a platform meant to strike at the tariff protected manufacturers of New England and Pennsylvania, yet I can tell you that no student of American political economy would deny the assertion that the liquor interests are the most unscrupulous, the most formidable, and the most demoralizing special interests in American politics.

A RECENT STATEMENT.—To make 50,000,000 barrels of beer, the brewers require approximately 58,000,000 bushels of grain. The by-products (malt sprouts and brewers' grains which are resold to dairy farmers) represent a salvage of 35 per cent. It will be seen from these figures that the actual amount of grain which will be used in the brewing process is about 37,700,000 bushels.—Statement filed by the brewers with Senate Committee of Agriculture, May, 1917.

A FORMER STATEMENT.—Never before have brewers, distillers and wine makers made so large a contribution to the agricultural prosperity of the country as during the fiscal year of 1913. Grain and other farm products to the value of $113,513,971 were used in the manufacture of liquors, the actual sum received by the growers. It exceeded the total combined crop values of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New Jersey and Florida.—From Year-book of United States Brewers' Association, 1914, page 265.

BREWERY ARGUMENT.—The mental processes of the liquorites are so interesting that we had thought of devoting our space in THE FRIEND this month to a consideration of this topic alone, but a short essay in an Ohio paper—The Cohocton Tribune—illustrates the point quite clearly, and, we think, truthfully:—

The brewery people in trying to be all things to all men get themselves into ridiculous positions. We called attention in this column recently to their insistency in saving at one time that beer is bread and that all the nourishment of the grains they use goes into the beer, and at another that there is no food value in beer, but that it all remains in the by-products and is sold to farmers for food for their stock.

This recalls the old story of the lawyer of Bengali who defended a man before the court on the charge of stealing chickens. At the zenith of his speech he gave vent to this eloquent plea in behalf of his innocent client:

"This man was not within 500 miles when the chickens were stolen," he said. "What is more he was walking along in the moonlight and dropped his bag and when he went back to get it the chickens had just crawled into it. In the third place they were not chickens at all, but were ducks. And in the fourth place they were his own chickens anyhow."

So the brewers say all the food value of the grain reaches the people in beer; all of the food value of the grain and more reaches the cattle in the refuse; the grain used in making beer is not fit for anything else anyhow, having no food value; and in the last place they don't use any grain to speak of in the first place.

BUTTERMILK FROM THE FRIENDS' SCHOOL.—The Superintendent at the Tunesassa Indian School has recently refused to continue the sale of buttermilk to a certain dealer in Salamanca, the advertisement on the front of a certain saloon being the occasion of a lively concern to avoid all "occasion of offense." The proprietor of the saloon protested, of course, claiming that he is doing "a clean business," and referred to two priests and a minister who are patrons of his. But his failure to comprehend the scruples of the Superintendent is illustrated by his written inquiry, "If you don't care to sell to me direct, can I get it through an expressman?"

YOUNGER FRIENDS.

WHAT MY AUTOMOBILE HAS TAUGHT ME.—The clutch of an automobile is the contrivance which connects the power of the engine on to the main shaft. This shaft runs through the car and by revolving, turns the rear wheels, thus propelling the car.

The engine may be going full speed, but if the clutch is not in operation, the car will not move.

If the car is moving rapidly and the clutch is thrown out, or disengaged from the main shaft, the car will run awhile on its momentum, and will stop, because no fresh energy is transmitted to the wheels.

It was a long time after I began to drive an automobile before I learned how the clutch acts, and probably many other drivers are as ignorant; yet it is very easy to understand, and it is very necessary that a driver should understand it.

In brief, the engine operates a heavy flywheel, which it causes to revolve rapidly. This flywheel is dish-shaped, and the end of the shaft is of the same shape, but reversed, so that it fits exactly into the flywheel. It is pressed against the flywheel by strong springs, and this is the contrivance which is called the "clutch."

When the clutch is pulled away from the flywheel by a lever worked by the driver's foot, the flywheel can have no effect upon the shaft. When the clutch is pressed against the flywheel by the springs, the friction of the wheel turns the clutch, and with it the shaft, which by its revolutions, turns the rear wheels, and the car moves.

The only connection between the clutch and the flywheel is friction. To increase this friction, one of the surfaces that rub together is covered with leather. This leather must be kept soft with oil, or it will fail to rub properly, and perhaps burn out with the rapid motion.

I have described the common form of clutch, called the "cone clutch" because of the shape of the shaft end which fits against the flywheel. There are other forms, but the principle is the same.

Why is the clutch necessary? Why not connect the motor directly with the shaft as in a steam engine?

Because steam expands slowly or rapidly according to the work it has to do and the piston rod communicates its energy gradually to the driving wheels, but on the contrary, a gasoline engine gets its energy from explosions, violent and sharp, which would break the shaft and its connections, if communicated suddenly to them while the car was standing still. Therefore this ingenious clutch was invented to set the shaft to revolving gradually faster and faster, even though the power comes in swift conceptions.

Now you see the importance of the clutch. It must not be too oily, or it will slip; or have too little oil, or it will burn. The springs must not be too strong, or it will jerk; nor too weak, for then also it will slip. It must work just right, or the engine and the car will not work just right.

As I have meditated on the clutch—and much meditation on the clutch is forced upon an automobilist—I have come to see the value of a parallel contrivance in our life automobiles.

Many a young fellow fails to use his clutch wisely. He generates plenty of power. He can play ball with the best. He can yell like a Comanche Indian. He can row a boat all day. But he does not harness up his energy to the shaft of any useful occupation, and so the car of his life never gets anywhere.

Other young fellows take a sudden notion to go to work. In they throw the clutch, there is a big noise, their life cars give a jolting bounce ahead, and you would expect them to fly up the pike, distancing all competitors. But the sudden weight stalls the engine, if, indeed, it does not break some of the machinery, and they come to a dead stop.

Give me the chap who uses his clutch with common-sense and discretion. He applies his energy—physical, mental, spiritual—with gradually and steadily increasing power. Every day betters the preceding day. Every day brings a slight gain in efficiency. He knows enough to throw out his clutch when he comes to a down grade, and to give his car rest and relaxation. He knows enough to throw in his clutch when he reaches again the upgrade of work. Thus he spins on swiftly, league after league, and turns a triumphant sweep into the garage at the end of the run.

Power is fine, and a beautiful car is fine, but unless the power is wisely and consistently applied to the car, of what use is the whole?—OLIVER SWIFT, in Forward.

LONDON YEARLY MEETING.

(Continued from page 21.)

In the somewhat prolonged discussion of the proposition to affiliate the Foreign Missionary Association with the Yearly Meeting we note the following:

John William Hoyland remarked that closer union could not be effected by simply adopting a minute, something much more living and vital would be necessary. In meeting groups of Friends in various parts of the country he had frequently found evidence that, as a result of concentrating attention upon the F. F. M. A. as an organization, the fact that in each of our fields a Native Church was growing up had hardly been realized. These churches were not managed by the missionaries. They were developing a life and character of their own. In India, for instance, the Church was taking on the characteristics and temperament of the people themselves. There was a deepening appreciation of spiritual things, and of our manner of worship which was in such harmony with Indian thought. The Clerks of the Yearly Meeting were Indians. In Madagascar, the situation was entirely different. Great multitudes came together, and to these the Gospel was preached. The Malagasy were one of the child races of the world. In China, again, we met with another type of person. The Chinese had receptive minds, power of initiative, and readiness to bear responsibility. They were one of the most virile and active of peoples. The Church in Ceylon had special characteristics of independence. Of poor distracted Syria little could be said at present, and we had no information as to whether meetings could still be held. But a church had grown up there also, although it was still small. There was a church in Pemba, and he had no doubt that Christian Churches had gathered round our Friends in Japan, and around that heroic woman, Ann M. Burgess, in Constantinople. All these churches were our children. They were intensely attractive, showing here and there signs of imperfection, but with abundant promise of mature life. Each church would develop in its own way. It was not control that we would offer them, but rather an expression of our affectionate interest in their growth and welfare. Wonderful enrichment to ourselves would follow as we took these young churches into our family. It should lead to visits. It would be good for half-a-dozen young Friends to go out; but the visitation should be in both directions, for we did want to know at first-hand our fellow-members in those far-off lands. The idea of closer union involved a change of view. No longer should we think of foreign missions in the abstract, but of a number of young churches, all part of a great world movement, none in tutelage to us, but all desiring to co-operate with us. Closer union was a matter, not of pen and ink and a minute book, but of heart and love.

The minute adopted in the case was as follows:

"The following report is received from the Joint Committee with reference to the closer union of the Friends' Foreign Mission Association with London and Dublin Yearly Meetings. This proposal for a closer union was cordially received by the last Yearly Meeting and we are now prepared to make a further move forward. We are deeply thankful for what the F. F. M. A. has been privileged to accomplish, a service marked by fifty years of strenuous labor, by devoted lives, and martyred deaths, by gathered churches in foreign lands, and quickened spiritual life at home. Through succeeding years the union between the Association and the Society has been steadily becoming more intimate, and we feel that the time has come for giving actual expression to this growing sense of oneness. We desire that this may be no mere official or mechanical transaction, but that it may strengthen the hands of the workers abroad and at home and may draw us into a quickened understanding of the native churches, and a deeper fellowship with their members, while also bringing fresh and vigorous currents of life into the Society as a whole and opening out for it a world-wide vision for the future."

The Foreign Missionary Association continues as a distinct organization, a definite number (less than a majority) of members to be appointed by the Yearly Meeting.

Joseph Taylor, in laying before the Meeting the concern which he and his wife felt to reside in Calcutta, said: The matter is really a re-echo of something which took place in this house in the year 1861 when Mariano and Cecilia D'Ortez, of Calcutta, were present at the Yearly Meeting as a deputation from a little group of inquirers who had been reading Barclay's "Apology." The Yearly Meeting had been asked to send out some one to help this group in Calcutta to know more about Friends. A beautifully phrased letter was written on behalf of the Yearly Meeting and taken back by the deputation. The next year Russell Jeffrey, Henry Hipsley, and William Brewin visited Calcutta, and reported to the Yearly Meeting of 1863. From that time until a few months ago a Friends' meeting had been held there regularly. It has been visited by various Friends, including myself. My wife and I have increasingly felt it our duty to go out and live in Calcutta for some time. We want to open our house for any who care to come and to help inquirers in their search after Truth. I feel this is a work that some younger person might do better, but it may be in the Lord's ordering that my wife and I should start it. The Church in India should be a universal and not a sectarian church, and the help of the Society of Friends is needed to bring this about.

S. Katharine Taylor said: All I would add is that it is our thought to start a meeting for worship in our own home. The solution of all the world's problems is to be found in Jesus Christ. The realization of this has often been lacking. Apart from the older effort there are young people who are ready for this message. A rightly guided eldership will be very important in the new meeting that it is hoped will be gathered. If it is our Heavenly Father's will that we should do this, we shall literally go forward as the way opens out.

After deliberation and liberal expression a minute was read liberating J. and S. K. Taylor for the service they had proposed.

THE AMERICAN EPISTLES.

New England Friends "rejoice that the spirit of loyalty to conscience remains as strong and true as in the periods of history which we have always counted glorious. Once more, as in those days, prisons have been as palaces, and bolts and bars as precious jewels."

Friends in Iowa recognized that "Mammon and Mars are twin brothers, born alike of the ruthless pursuit of selfish interest by individuals, classes and nations," while Baltimore felt that at the close of this war many would be found alienated from traditional Christianity, and thus an opportunity would be given to Friends as never before to present the spiritual and vital interpretation of the Gospel of Christ. Amid all the gloom there was much reason to rejoice. New York Yearly Meeting felt that there was "an increasing spirit of harmony and unity among the various organizations of Friends in this country," which was resulting in an increase of spiritual life and in a growing efficiency for service. In regard to the military position, Friends of Western Yearly Meeting wrote most touchingly:

"Your prayer that we may be able to resist the 'rising wave' of military preparedness in our own country brings anew the sense of our duties and obligations to our beloved country and the Kingdom of our Lord. We may not see yet so clearly as you do the wisdom of 'surrendering all our rights' to make possible enemies devoted friends, for not yet have we, like you, been forced into the Wine Press alone."

FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE.

I regard conscience as a vital element in Christian ethics, and true courage is needed when individuals, in times of national anxiety, find themselves bound to range themselves on the side of an unpopular minority.—LORD PARMOOR, in the Lords, Fifth Month 24, 1917.

The report of the Friends' Service Committee was presented.

A. Barratt Brown spoke of this practical form of witnessing to the truth so many Friends had felt they must take up. He thought we must go back to the seventeenth century to realize what some were called upon to suffer now for conscience' sake. The seventy Friends in prison, though few, were doing most important service of great future value to their country. They had been termed "absolutists." On the other hand, many conscientious objectors had felt they could accept conditional freedom by doing work of national importance or in the various ways offered. This was a matter for the individual conscience, and he did not think we ought to impute obstinacy or wrong motive to those who from definite religious conviction felt they would rather die than give in. To them it seemed, as had been aptly described, "like compounding a felony." It was true that, while the country was at war all of us, by our regular work, were involved and in some way helping the war; but these men had determined that they would be compromised no further. He desired that Yearly Meeting should appreciate the sincerity of these men, many of whom felt they had been misunderstood even by their dearest relatives and friends. Their action was called negative and obstructionist, while all they cared for was to be positive and active in service for Christ and humanity. In fact, they felt they were obeying the call of Christ in the only way open to them. As R. O. Mennell had written the other day, "I hope one day you will feel as we do, that by refusing to acquiesce in the establishment of conscription in England we are standing for the way of Christ as against the way of militarism and are so rendering a service which, being more fundamental, is wider than any other form of service open to us." These men did not write to enlist sympathy or to complain of suffering, but to make the meaning of their witness understood. Public conscience was not yet aroused; if anything it had become more hardened through the war; and of course the Government could not act ahead of public opinion. From Clifford Allen, in a guard-room (awaiting his third court-martial), he had received a message to the Yearly Meeting:

"May I send a message of thanksgiving to the Yearly Meeting? I trust the Society will decide not to advance any administrative scheme on our behalf; but will carefully consider the wisdom of now representing officially to the Government and public the reasons that now and always will lead us men to refuse every offer except unconditional liberty to render free service.

"Many of us feel that circumstances may soon demand from us new and vigorous action resulting in even further sacrifice. We look to you once again to hand on to us the guidance we know will come to you all in Yearly Meeting.

"We look to the Society for unmistakable evidence that the Friends are willing to suffer, not only for refusing to do things, but also for insisting upon doing things. We are full of joy, hope, humility and confidence; we know there must come to you to-day wisdom, love and strength. We in the cells here are joining with you in Yearly Meeting."

He asked the prayers of the Yearly Meeting that these men might be sustained in their service for future generations.

Edward Backhouse remarked that although the number of Friends in prison was small, it was large in proportion. He felt that Yearly Meeting must believe in these men, recognizing their right to refuse conditions and the force of their example. They would not acquiesce in the establishment of militarism and therefore could not accept conditions offered by tribunals established under the Military Service Acts.

Herbert I. Waller dwelt on the courage it had required to endure. He was reminded of the psalmist's words, "He looseth the prisoners, and opened the eyes of the blind." Just now men's eyes were holden, and therefore the prison doors were shut. However, the prisoners were not alone; God was with them and many witnesses from the prison cell told how He was breaking the bonds of fear. Already, too, God was opening the eyes of the blind, evident in the great change that had come over the nation in its treatment of the prisoners. He would not, however, have it thought that we believed other people's eyes were blind because they differed from us in opinion; we knew that our own eyes needed opening to see more clearly than ever the un-Christian character of militarism.

(To be continued.)

NEWS ITEMS.

BURLINGTON QUARTERLY MEETING at its last session appointed a committee to extend care to its smaller meetings. One public meeting, as announced in THE FRIEND, was held at East Branch Seventh Month Ist. It is understood this was a satisfactory occasion. Members of the Committee were at Tuckerton on the 8th and had a meeting at Barnegat that afternoon. Similar prospects of visiting these two meetings are scheduled for Eighth Month 12th, Ninth Month 9th, and Tenth Month 14th.

In writing of Charles W. Lawrence, who died Sixth Month 4th, J. Lindley Spicer has this to say:

"His quiet, unostentatious charities were wide-spread. His personal interest in young people and those new to Christian effort was inspiring and instructing. Hundreds can testify to the contagion of his buoyant faith and optimistic view for the establishment of the kingdom of God in the hearts of men. He was seventy-five years young. His last message to the Yearly Meeting, sent while undergoing extreme suffering, was 'Let God be honored!'"

TUNESAWA NOTES.—A class of four girls were graduated this year, three of whom are planning to enter higher schools.

The improvements for which the fund is being raised are mostly under way. The addition to the horse-barn, for the storage of vehicles and crops, is practically completed. The hog-house will be under roof in a few days and we expect shortly to begin excavations for the new cottage. The site chosen is that of the present tenant house, the latter being now on the road to its new location near the dairy barn.

We have been much pleased and encouraged by the presence for the past ten days or more, of Benjamin F. Whitson, John C. Borton and Marriot Morris, Jr., especially as their free service seems to point to an increased interest of the Yearly Meeting in its mission here.

Benjamin F. Whitson has returned to his home, and we are expecting William Tomlinson and Howard Wickersham this evening to join the other boys.

The total reported last week as having been collected for the use of the American Friends' Service Committee, was $73,090.68.

The total up to and including the 16th inst., is $81,249.50. This as yet does not include the amount which was raised during the American Red Cross campaign, and put into their Treasury. Just how much this will amount to is not known.

There is evidence that the various Monthly Meetings are organizing, and the week's contributions include sums forwarded from London Grove Monthly Meeting, by Edward A. Pennock, Purchase Executive Meeting of N. Y., by Charles C. Haviland, Friends of Newtown, Pa., by Evan T. Worthington, Friends of New England Yearly Meeting and Rhode Island Quarterly Meeting, by Charles Perry of Westerly, R. I., from Birmingham Monthly Meeting, by George Forsythe, Swarthmore Monthly Meeting, by Edwin J. Darnall, and Twelfth Street Monthly Meeting by William C. Lowry.

The largest contribution received during the week was from the Philadelphia Yearly Meeting's Peace Committee, of Fourth and Arch Streets, through its Treasurer, Albert L. Bailey, Jr. This amounted to $5778.33. There was one contribution during the week of $1000.00.

AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE,
CHARLES F. JENKINS, Treasurer.

PHILADELPHIA, Seventh Month 16, 1917.

AMERICAN FRIENDS' RECONSTRUCTION UNIT.

A new chapter in the record of the Society of Friends in America is just beginning. Six weeks ago a call was issued for one hundred men to enter to the war-stricken civil population of France the Gospel of good-will, expressed in service of hand and heart. Between two and three hundred answered the call, from all sections of the country. At this writing ninety-three have been accepted. They have been notified to report at Haverford for training Seventh Month 17th.

On the morning of the sixteenth, two are en route from California, one from Oregon, one from Washington, two from New Mexico, three from Nebraska, four from Kansas, four from Iowa. Others are about to start from Maine, North Carolina, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Ohio, and West Virginia. New York, New Jersey, Maryland and Pennsylvania are also well represented. In all eighteen States and at least sixteen Yearly Meetings are represented. Pennsylvania leads the list with twenty-nine, and Indiana second with fourteen. The Yearly Meeting, which meets at Fourth and Arch Streets, has supplied the largest number of members (approximately fifteen).

Word has just been received from Doctor James A. Babbitt that he has accepted the urgent request of the Committee that he serve as the Director of the Unit in France. His acceptance was made conditional upon one or two contingencies, but there seems now but little question that he will assume this responsible task. He can give but little time during the training period, and a council of three—Richard Gummore, Robert Brown, and Ralston Thomas—will direct the Unit at Haverford. An account of the training schedule can better be given next week after the work is under way.

The following cable has just been received from our Commission in France:

(English) "Friends can use following, immediately, consenting transfer later to status others; two best auto repairmen; six social workers, men or women talking French; one man orderly French unnecessary; two women trained nurses, more if speaking French; one woman doctor, tuberculosis experience desired; seven to prepare additional planning mill—namely, machinist, carpenter, stock keeper, secretary speaking French, two handy-men, foreman, three farm implement mechanics, one clerk, Paris office; hope soon to place more."

This indicates that our first workers (possibly all of the 100) will serve an apprenticeship under English Friends. They can later form the nucleus of our independent work and contribute to the whole Red Cross program their acquired knowledge and experience. This touch which we have with English Friends who have been learning this new and difficult task for nearly three years gives the importance of our work a peculiar significance.

The following five men will sail for France on Seventh Month 21st to work in the factory at Dole in making temporary houses.—Byron C. Collins, Moorestown, New Jersey; William L. Edwards, 2051 N. New Jersey Street, Indianapolis, Ind.; J. Hollowell Parker, 1923 St. Paul Street, Baltimore, Maryland; William Webb Price, Ross Valley, Moilan, Pa.; and Lester Burton Shoemaker, Tullytown, Pa.

AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE,
VINCENT D. NICHOLSON, Executive Secretary.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NORRIMANE 2, Vejle, Denmark, Fifth Month 28, 1917.

It may be of interest to readers of The Friend in America and elsewhere, that The Friend has a number of interested readers in Denmark.

An editor of a widely circulated Danish weekly writes the following appreciative lines:

"THE FRIEND is regularly sent me from America, and I translate not a few of its articles for The L. ———. It is a really interesting paper, which I am very glad to receive, and I like to spread the sound and good thoughts the paper contains."

PETER GULDBRANDSEN.

NOTE.—The pressure of timely matter is, for the moment, so great that the Summary has been omitted this week and last.

RECEIPTS.

Unless otherwise specified, two dollars have been received from each person, paying for vol. 91.

Ruth A. Clement, Pa.; Ernest B. Thomas, Pa.; Bertha C. Youm, Pa.; Catharine M. Shipley, Pa.; Margaret F. Wiggins, Pa.; Charles Grimshaw, Pa.; William Carter, Pa.; Alice H. Carter, Pa.; Joseph Elkinton, Pa.; Alfred G. Steer, Pa.; Phoebe S. Gawthrop, Pa.; Charles Lee, Pa.; Thomas H. McCollin, Pa.; Charles Cope, Ohio; Elwood D. Whitney, Ohio; Martha K. Foster, N. Y.; Emma Cadbury, N. J.; Nathaniel B. Jones, N. J.; Sarah N. Lippincott, N. J.; Albert Haines, N. J.; William Evans, N. J.; William B. Kirkbride, R. I.; Mary R. Williams, N. J.; Mary P. Nicholson, N. J.; Lucy W. Foster, R. I.; Harvey C. Perry, R. I.; Phoebe W. P. Biffum, R. I.; Eunice B. Nichols, R. I.; Eunice B. Clark, R. I.; Anna A. Gardner, R. I.; Thomas Perry, R. I.; Charles Perry, R. I.; David G. Alsop, Pa.; M. T. Akins, Pa.; Edward Jeffries, Pa.; Conly B. Shoemaker, Pa.; Martha L. Shoemaker, Pa.; Conly B. Shoemaker, 2nd, Pa.; Anna W. Bailey, Pa.; Franklin G. Swavely, Pa.; Elizabeth R. Cohen, Pa.; Ethel Leberman, Pa.; Henrietta Shamburg, Pa.; Edw. L. Richie, N. J.; William Bacon Evans, N. J.; Wm. J. Hanlin, N. J.; Joshua S. Wills, N. J.; Alan R. Sharpless, N. J.; Jesse Sharpless, N. J.; Anna V. Haines, N. J.; Jane E. Eyes, N. J.; William C. Allen, N. J.; Horace B. Foster, R. I.; Charles H. Willis, Md.; Joseph M. Downing, Del.; Catharine W. Morris, Pa.; Reece L. Thomas, Pa.; Fannie W. Sharpless, Pa.; Lydia B. Smedley, Pa.; William Waring, Pa.; Evinda D. Caldwell, Pa.; Julia T. Hoopes, Pa.; Anne E. Peirson, Pa.; Margaret A. Masters, Pa.; Joseph Masters, Pa.; Wilson Hatcher, Mo.; Mary D. Malone, Del.; Friends' Indian School, N. Y.; Elizabeth D. Edge, Pa.; Mary S. Walton, Pa.; Mary L. Lewis, Pa.; Agnes W. Braunfeld, Pa.; Benjamin H. Shoemaker, Pa.; Henry B. Abbott, Pa.; William B. Moore, Pa.; Margaret Sheppard, Pa.; Rachel B. Dowlin, Pa.; Edward S. Lowry, Pa.; Martha J. Moore, Pa.; Jane D. Engle, N. J.; Sarah W. Rhoads, Pa.; William G. Rhoads, Pa.; Sarah Hoyle, Ohio; Ephraim Robeson, Can.; Mary W. Cowgill, Cal.; William F. Garnett, Eng.; Charles W. Brown, Kan.; John E. Hinshaw, Kan.

✶ Remittances received after Third-day evening will not appear in receipts until the following week.

NOTICES.

The Religious Service Committee of Hadonfield and Salem Quarterly Meeting has appointed a meeting for worship, at Mt. Laurel, N. J., on First-day, Seventh Month 22nd, at 3:30 o'clock. An invitation is extended to all Friends.

A GENERAL MEETING of the Society of Friends (Conservative) will be held at New Hope, near Edgar, Randolph County, N. C., beginning on Seventh-day, the twenty-first of this month, and Southern Quarterly Meeting will be held at Holly Spring, near Ranscum, N. C., the following week, beginning Sunday of the week as the General Meeting. All desiring to attend the General Meeting will go direct by Greensboro, High Point, and on to Edgar, and to the Quarterly Meeting by way of Greensboro and Ranscum.

MEETINGS from Seventh Month 22nd to 28th:—
Frankford Monthly Meeting, Fourth-day, Seventh Month 25th, at 7:45 P. M.
Philadelphia, Fourth and Arch Streets, Fifth-day, Seventh Month 26th, at 10:30 A. M.
Germantown, Fifth-day, Seventh Month 26th, at 10 A. M.
Lansdowne, Fifth-day, Seventh Month 26th, at 7:15 P. M.

DIED.—In Providence, R. I., Sixth Month 30, 1917, JONATHAN CHACE, in his eighty-eighth year.

WISSAHICKON INN
REDLANDS,
CALIFORNIA.

THE WISSAHICKON INN is situated in an Orange Grove in Redlands, the most beautiful place in the San Bernardino Valley.

At the Wissahickon Inn, a family hotel of fifty rooms, you will find a homelike place, good food, and careful attention to your wants.

Steam heat, rooms with private bath and plenty of public baths. One or two cottages on the grounds. Near parks and golf course. Tennis court. Magnificent roads for motoring.

For reservations and prices, address

A. B. JOHNSON.

"WILLIAM PENN." John W. Graham, M. A.
Postpaid, $2.60.

"WHAT IS QUAKERISM?"

Edward Grubb, M. A.
1917 Swarthmore Lecture.
Limp Cover, Postpaid, 80 Cents.

"THE DAY OF OUR VISITATION."

William Littleboy.
Postpaid, 55 Cents.

FOR SALE BY

FRIENDS' BOOK AND TRACT COMMITTEE

144 East 20th Street, - NEW YORK CITY.

*Phone, 2806 Gramercy.

H. G. CHALKLEY & SONS, LTD.

LONDON, ENGLAND LAKE CHARLES, LA.
LAWRENCE, KANSAS

OFFER:—

First Lien Farm Mortgages, paying from 6% to 6½% net to the investor.

Not to exceed 40% of our own valuation loaned to the farmer.

Full particulars of mortgages on hand ranging from $500.00 to $5,000.00, given on application to:—

T. H. CHALKLEY, LAWRENCE, KANSAS.

Letchworth Cottage
Spring Lake Beach, N. J.

Open for the Season 1917

A. C. & S. H. Letchworth

WALL PAPERS—All Grades
WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER
Custom of Friends Specially Solicited

FRANK C. BÜEHL

Successor to S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON

302 SPRING GARDEN ST. - PHILADELPHIA
Opposite Spring Garden Station, Phila. & Reading R.R.
Established 1849 BELL 'PHONE

POCONO MANOR INN

The busy summer season is near at hand—also the beautiful mountain laurel and rhododendron, which will be found in abundance over the Manor Estate. The Golf Course is in better condition than ever before: the Fairways and Greens are all very beautiful and add greatly to the general picturesqueness of these Links in the Poconos.

In arranging to come to the Pocono Manor during the summer if reservations have not already been made we should suggest that we be communicated with at once.

J. W. HURLEY, Mgr., Pocono Manor, Pa.
(Pocono Summit Station, D. L. & W. K. R.)

Friends Arch St. Centre

304 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Provides comfortable accommodations for guests by the day or week. Meals at moderate prices.

AMELIA D. FEATHERSTONE, Matron.
PHONE—MARKET 1571.

RESIDENCE: 254 S. 44th St. BELL 'PHONE: Baring 2084X

WILLIAM OAKES

Plumbing and Heating Contractor

ALSO LEAD BURNING

260 SOUTH TENTH STREET

PHILADELPHIA

BELL 'PHONE: Filbert 2066.

3906 M. AM. SOC. C. E. Bell 'Phone—Lombard 3412

EDWIN M. EVANS

CONTRACTOR & BUILDER

My jobbing department is well equipped, prompt and efficient

321 S. LAWRENCE ST. :: PHILA.

WILLIAM S. YARNALL
MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

118 SOUTH FIFTEENTH STREET

PHILADELPHIA

Premier Duplicating Co.

Micrographing, Multigraphing, Printing, Typewriting, Addressing, Mailing, etc.

630 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

ALFRED C. HAINES

Building Glass and Paints

54 N. Front St., Philadelphia.

THE HOLMES PRESS

Printers

J. L. Engle, Pres.

1336-40 CHERRY ST. PHILA.

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE MATERIAL THAT WE SELL

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

THE LAKESIDE

EAGLES MERE, PA.

Unobstructed lake view; capacity 250. Elevator steam heat, golf, tennis, boating and bathing. Attractive motoring through the surrounding country.

GARAGE

J. S. KIRK & SON

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

GIRARD TRUST CO.
BROAD and CHESTNUT STS.

CAPITAL AND SURPLUS } $10,000,000

Acts as Executor, Trustee, Guardian, Administrator, Assignee and Receiver. Safes to Rent in Burglar-proof Vaults. Interest Allowed on Deposits. :: ::

E. B. MORRIS
PRESIDENT

TO ADVERTISERS.—THE FRIEND is now open for selected advertisements at the following rates: One inch, 50 cents, or 4 cents a line; no insertion for less than 25 cents. Long term rates given on application.

Friends having real estate to rent or sell, also those desiring board or rooms, should find THE FRIEND an excellent medium for reaching interested parties. Standing business cards are also solicited.

Light - Convenient - Lasting

Smooth and light, it is easy to use. Strong and flexible, it does not soon break and leak. It justifies its name, Nonkink. It lasts and means long-run economy.

18 cts. per foot, coupled.

With it let us send you needed reels, nozzles, sprinklers, etc.

J. E. RHODS & SONS

PHILADELPHIA: 12 N. THIRD ST.
N. E. W. Y. O. R. K.: 102 BEKMAN ST.
CHICAGO: 322 W. RANDOLPH ST.
FACTORY AND TANNERY: WILMINGTON, DEL.

Philadelphia's
Representative Store

W. B. WEAVER
UNDERTAKER and EMBALMER

550-552 N. 5TH ST., PHILA., PA.

Special Attention Given to Funerals
In and Out of the City. Also General
Accommodations for Funerals. 24

SELL 'PHONE 1 ESTABLISHED 1880

ELKINS, MORRIS & CO.

BANKERS

REPRESENTATIVES

WM. E. CADBURY
PAUL W. BROWN
JAMES P. MAGILL

LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SEE WALKER & KEPLER

FOR

Good Electrical Work

531 CHESTNUT ST. -:- PHILA.

JOSEPH G. FOGG
FUNERAL DIRECTOR and EMBALMER

S. W. COR. 16TH and RACE STREETS
Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals
BELL 'PHONE SPRUCE 1648

R. C. Ballinger Ernest R. Yarnall John A. Stratton
TELEPHONES

Bell—Fibbert 26-15 - - Keystone—Race 637

R. C. BALLINGER & CO.
CONTRACTORS and BUILDERS

218 N. Thirteenth St. Philadelphia.

HARRY S. LEE

313 WALNUT STREET
PAINTER and GRAINER

ANTIQUE and OFFICE FURNITURE RESTORED
JOBGING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO
ESTIMATES

W. J. MacWATTERS

WITH

HARDWICK & MAGEE CO.

SUCCESSORS TO
IVINS, DIETZ & MAGEE

Let me help you in selecting your

Rugs and Carpets

Our new imports of Oriental Rugs
are of the highest merit

1220-22 MARKET ST. :: PHILA.

RAILROAD AND
PUBLIC UTILITY BONDS

FOR

CONSERVATIVE INVESTMENT.

FULL PARTICULARS ON REQUEST.

BACK LOG CAMP

INDIAN LAKE, N. Y.

In the Heart of the Adirondacks.

The name Back Log Camp means a great deal to many people. We shall be glad to send our booklet to any one who is interested in the latest development of the Back Log idea.

THOMAS K. BROWN
Westtown, Pa.

PUBLIC STENOGRAPHER

GEORGE B. COCK, Liberty Building
Established 1896. Experience 39 years; Medical 13.

GLASLYN-CHATHAM

PARK PLACE

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

A Family House of Established Reputation.
Open Throughout the Year.

NATHAN L. JONES.

HARVEY T. WEBER

TAILOR

207-208 HALE BLDG., 1326 CHESTNUT ST.

The custom of Friends specially solicited.

FRIENDS' BIBLE ASSOCIATION

HAS ITS HEADQUARTERS AT

207 WALNUT PLACE :: PHILA.

It is able to furnish Bibles and Testaments to Schools and Bible-classes and would be glad to have Friends everywhere acquaint themselves with the needs of their neighborhoods and allow the Bible Association to help them procure the books they may want. :: :

OCEAN CITY COTTAGE TO RENT FOR SEVENTH or Eighth Month. Cottage will accommodate one large or two small families. Has five bed-rooms on second floor. Living, dining and kitchen on first floor. Large porch, separate garage. Anyone interested communicate with W. HAROLD TOMLINSON, 114 Yale Ave., Swarthmore, Pa.

WANTED — A YOUNG WOMAN FRIEND TO attend to light house-hold duties in a family of two. Would be one of the family. Salary, $5 a week, car fare and other expenses paid. Please send for any other particulars if desired. The age wanted is between twenty-five and thirty. A prompt response would be appreciated.
Address:
L. C. Ward, Riverton, N. J., Box 127.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 91.

FIFTH-DAY, SEVENTH MONTH 26, 1917.

No. 4.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price $2.00 a year in Advance.

Publisher, DAVIS H. FORSYTHE.

Editors { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
DAVIS H. FORSYTHE,
MARY WARD.

Make remittances payable to

THE FRIEND,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

THE ARGUMENT FROM EXPERIENCE.

At all times, but especially at this solemn hour of universal upheaval, it is of the utmost importance for every individual to be sure of his personal relationship to Jesus Christ. Christianity is primarily a converting and sanctifying power. Secondly, and only secondarily, it is a moral and social lever, an agent in the elevation of society. Its first concern is the regeneration of the individual. Any attempted regeneration of society which leaves the individual unregenerate, is a mere beating of the air. It is no part of the programme of Christianity. As it has been put: "Christianity is a religion of redemption or a dead and powerless nothing."

Now a man might adopt for himself the most beautiful maxims, the most exalted ethical demands and moral truths which the conscience of humanity recognizes to be self-evident; and yet remain unregenerate. It is Christ who makes all things new. The need of wounded and weak humanity is not met by being merely preached to. It is met only in an experience of the miracle of conversion, in a work of renewal by a power that is higher than man's. Buddha and Confucius have laid down wonderful maxims; but Christ gives more. He brings to us His life, that it may be in us "more abundantly." He is more than a beautiful memory, and more than a goal for future attainment. He is a present Salvation that actually saves from sin, and that brings into communion with the invisible God as revealed in Christ.

The conversion of the Apostle Paul might be looked upon as an outstanding event. But, its externalia apart, he himself regarded it as a pattern-experience for all others after him (1 Tim. i: 15, 16). Undoubtedly because of its exceptional circumstances it is one of the principal evidences of the resurrection and kingdom of the Lord Jesus. But every conversion is essentially of the same pattern.

In every conversion the soul obtains a deep sense of a vision of the Lord Jesus Christ; a revelation of His love; a personal affection on the part of a personal Redeemer, the soul's true Friend; a love that draws, that welcomes, that warms. A love which begets love in return, as fire kindles fire when it touches material that can be burned.

In every conversion there is generated in the soul by the revelation of Jesus Christ an ineffable certainty of His reality. The soul is sure of Christ, as sure as of any one with whom we have to do.

In every conversion there is the element of change. Even where there needs be no break from gross sins, no turning from the swine-troughs of the far country, the change is nothing short of a miracle. Our Lord pointed out in His great parable of conversion that the elder son needed conversion as much as his fallen brother. His soul was still self-bound. In conversion life becomes nobly new; it turns in another direction; it seeks other ends. It exclaims: "For me to live is Christ."

Said Paul: "From henceforth let no man trouble me, for I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus." The marks (literally: stigmata) were the brand-marks of slavery to prevent the escape of the slave. The marks of the Lord Jesus are the marks His own holy hands have left on the plastic clay of a surrendered life to shape it into likeness to His own. From the very beginning He called men to leave all and follow Him only. He claimed men. He presented Himself as well as His message, making no distinction between them, saying: "I am the Truth." Impulsive Peter left all for Jesus when Jesus was on the crest of the wave of popularity. The Pharisee Saul of Tarsus, when Jesus was considered by his countrymen a crucified felon. But neither of them ever returned to their past. Jesus had marked them permanently for Himself. And He does so still in the lives of men.

Some one has said: "We do not want the miracles the saints have made, but the miracle that made the saints." Conversion is this miracle. Our Lord, when winding up His earthly ministry, spoke of the "greater works" that were to follow those He had wrought. He meant, I believe, the victory of His redeeming love in the moral and spiritual order within the souls of men. Shall we not make sure of it for ourselves?

MAX I. REICH.

"THE DAY OF OUR VISITATION."

Rarely have subject and author and occasion been more favorably combined than in the recent Swarthmore lecture given as a prelude to London Yearly Meeting by our friend William Littleboy. The thoughts of Christians everywhere have been arrested by the claims that the cataclysmic world-situation must have some bearing upon those prophecies of our Lord in regard to His coming again in glory to His Church. These are often referred to as the eschatological prophecies, and they have been made of late the subject of no little investigation and study. William Littleboy has been a careful student in this field, but better than this fact as an equipment for his treatment of the subject, his general sanity and clearness as a teacher and his undoubted gift in prophetic discernment have made this effort a masterpiece of its kind. After a second careful reading of the fifty-six pages and after loaning it to others and conferring with them about it, there seems to be but one judgment of its claims upon us. It is a message of the hour for all Friends everywhere, and we would do our utmost by this plea to secure a general reading of the lecture.

Four distinct heads guided the author in his argument and appeal. They are given in the contents, as follows: "The Promised Parousia of Christ," "The Urgent Call to Watchfulness," "The Work Before the Society of Friends," and "A Personal Appeal." The line of argument may be briefly indicated, but the author's style is so direct and incisive that it is difficult to abbreviate his presentation.

Beginning with the "wonderful but perplexing words" addressed by Jesus to His disciples on the Mount of Olives, it is frankly admitted that they portend "the opening of a new epoch in which His Divine power and majesty would be signally manifested." But as "the failure [by the Jews] to recognize the Deliverer when at length He came" was due to the fact that "their minds were filled with the externals of the prophetic picture to the exclusion of its spiritual significance," how careful we should be not to fall into a similar error. "Is there not yet another—it may be a better—way? It is surely not unreasonable to suppose that this awful world-upheaval is the prelude to a new and glorious parousia of the Son of Man, even in our own time. But as when He came two thousand years ago, He was born of a peasant maiden and laid in a manger because there was no room in the inn, so now we look for no outward portent, no rending of the heavens nor trumpet call; but rather some form of spiritual manifestation, some new assurance of His presence and power in this distracted world, some tender and insistent appeal to those He loves, and for whose sake He died, to come to Him now at the end of the ages and allow Him to heal the wounds and bind up the broken hearts of poor humanity." Nor is this form of His coming without Scripture evidence of the most impressive character. Thus we quote again, "They were waiting in doubt and suspense [on the evening of the Resurrection Day], the doors were locked and barred; when in a moment they were made aware of His own living Presence amongst them. There was no change in Him; He had already been in their midst; it was their own eyes which were opened for a moment to see the eternal and ever-present realities. 'Then were the disciples glad when they saw the Lord.' It may be that soon, in this time of our extremity, we, too, shall see; the bolted doors of our hearts shall not avail to shut Him out, our spirits will be in conscious touch with His personal Presence, and all life will be renewed."

And what shall such a day of visitation mean? We let our author answer again: "Let us not deceive ourselves. Response to our Lord's appeal means for us, as a Society, a revolutionary change in our spiritual outlook. He would have us alert, expectant, listening eagerly for His foot-fall, that when He cometh and knocketh we may give Him an instant and joyful welcome, and then with generous ardor go whithersoever He may send us, though the way may be through a new and unexplored country." Finally, the author's conclusion will commend itself as the most safe as well as the most hopeful aspect of the quest for a solution of the present unspeakable difficulty of the apparently pilotless world. "Let us then wait in the patience of faith and watch in the eagerness of hope for the revelation of Christ in our own lives. We know not the manner of His appearing. He may come to us in the darkness and the storm, when fear says all is lost; and out of the bosom of the blackest night, His voice shall sound, 'Be of good cheer, it is I; be not afraid.' Or it may be in the quiet evening-hour, when the world is still, that our hearts will burn within us, as a consciousness of the unseen and eternal steals over our spirits, and His salutation will be the old message of understanding love, 'Peace be unto you.' But come He will to the waiting, watching spirit; and it may be very soon."

J. H. B.

TO YOUNGER FRIENDS IN AMERICA.

A MESSAGE FROM THE YOUNG FRIENDS' COMMITTEE OF LONDON YEARLY MEETING.

Dear Friends—

The entry of your country into the great war has drawn you and us nearer together, and there is a certain satisfaction in this, though we sincerely wish that the result had been attained in any other way. As true lovers of your country you will share this feeling of sorrow and disappointment. This need not, we are sure, involve any forgetfulness of the great difficulties that have confronted and still confront your statesmen, and of all that is to be admired in the motives prompting the action that has been taken. We greatly desire that the lofty ideals expressed by President Wilson may be maintained to the close of the conflict, though we can not shut our eyes to the many dangers to the liberty of the subject which seems to be inherent in war-time conditions. That has, indeed, been our own experience; and we fear nothing else can be anticipated from the presence of the spirit of war in any community.

We have greatly appreciated the messages of fellowship and sympathy already received from you during the experiences through which we have passed, and also your generous co-operation in the support of our various branches of relief work. We fully realize, moreover, the extent to which you are now being faced by many of the perplexing problems we have already had to meet. We know the urgent call upon your sympathies and active support which is being made by the right and natural claims of ambulation or relief work on behalf of sufferers by the war. We are sure you feel as we do that whatever form our work may take, the deepest call that comes to us all at this time is for work which shall aim directly to remove the ultimate causes of war in the hearts of men. In the words of John Haynes Holmes, "in a time of raging hate and brutal passion" we may "keep alive the spirit of good-will towards men, through which alone a durable peace on earth may some day be established," laboring always to "keep open the channels of understanding, sympathy and good-will between hostile nations and divided classes." May not our own greatest contribution to the life of our nations be in the testimony we are able to give to our deep convictions, as Friends, that under all circumstances the method of armaments, of force—even the "enforcement of peace"—is wrong, and that the right condition for a Christian state is a condition of entire disarmament, of courageous reliance on common-sense and good-will, as exemplified by the early history of Pennsylvania (on a small scale), and still more notably by the maintenance of peace for over one hundred years along the frontier line between your country and Canada? This is our supreme peace service. It might even be argued that the ending of the war by a single day would itself achieve more for humanity in the saving of life and human resources than the sum-total of all our relief work.

This is no easy ideal to maintain, and it may mean that you will have to take your own line of duty in the face of unpopularity and opprobrium, "and, having done all, to stand," refusing to allow yourselves to be carried away by the tides of popular feeling. It is difficult to avoid becoming "entangled in a network of accommodation," and by doing even apparently innocent work, releasing others to fight, or yourselves becoming a part of the military machine. We have a duty also at this time to study the deepest roots of war, nourished, it may be, in our economic and industrial systems, and to seek to eradicate these roots wherever they may be found. In a word, we believe with growing conviction that our great duty and responsibility to the world as Friends is to preach a "still more excellent way" than the way of war, even Christ's own way of love and unweaponed, yet all powerful, good-will. To this end we feel that good service is being rendered by several past and present members of our Committee and other Younger Friends who have visited you in recent years and are now under heavy disabilities under the Military Service Acts, or like Wilfred E. Littleboy, Wilfred G. Hinde, Maurice L. Rowntree, Stephen Hobhouse, T. Corder P. Catchpool and Roderic K. Clark who are actually in prison for conscience' sake.

With an assurance of warm fellowship in our common loyalties, we are,

Your friends,

For the Committee—A. MABEL HOLDSWORTH, Chairman.
ROBERT DAVIS, Secretary.

THE YOUNG FRIENDS' CONFERENCE HELD AT WESTTOWN, SIXTH MONTH 23rd-28th.

Two years ago Thomas E. Jones suggested the holding of a Young Friends' Conference on the Atlantic seaboard to be for the young people of the East what the Cedar Lake Conference is for those of the West.

The Young Friends' Executive Committee of Philadelphia cordially received the idea and was enabled to carry it out this year under the most favorable circumstances, for Westtown School threw open its doors and lovely surroundings to receive such a Conference.

It was a place full of inspiration for those for whom it held happy memories, while others felt, perhaps for the first time, something of the Old Scholars' enthusiasm as they watched sunset glow and rosy dawn touch with rare beauty undulating slopes and deep-shadowed woods. How far it all seemed from the blasted forests and shell-cratered fields of other lands, so short a time ago as fair and peaceful as that.

The average attendance throughout the Conference was between 150 and 200. The West was represented by Anna Cox, of California, Vincent D. and Caroline L. Nicholson, and Paul J. Furnes, of Indiana. Clarence E. Pickett brought a helpful message from Toronto. Errol Peckham came from Brooklyn, while New England sent Phebe F. Perry, Elizabeth Gidley and Elizabeth Paige.

The members of the Program Committee were Edward C. Wood, Henry J. Cadbury, Rebecca Carter and Hannah G. Dewees. Carroll T. Brown was the efficient Chairman of the Committee on Arrangements.

On Seventh-day evening, just after dinner, the first gathering was held. These vesper meetings were continued throughout the Conference, and were times of deep spiritual fellowship. On the south lawn, facing the sunset, the group heard many appeals for a fuller dedication and a complete surrender to the Spirit of God as revealed in the individual heart and in the life and teachings of Christ. Esther A. Balderston, Rachel R. Cadbury, Thomas E. Jones and Arthur Pennell were among those who gave impressive messages.

After the vesper meeting on Seventh-day evening, the Conference assembled in the gymnasium, where it was cordially welcomed to Westtown by Thomas K. Brown and Rufus M. Jones gave the first of his two remarkable evening addresses on the possibilities and powers of the spiritual life.

On First-day morning, after the early devotional meeting, which was held each morning in small groupings about the grounds, there was a choice of six Bible Classes, led respectively by Walter W. Haviland, William Edward Cadbury, Elizabeth A. Roberts, Max I. Reich, J. Passmore Elkinton and George L. Jones.

In the afternoon Margaret Jenkins and Rufus M. Jones gave readings from Whittier.

On Second-day morning such a full and rich program presented itself that many sighs were drawn because of the necessity of making a choice.

During the first hour of these four remaining days the Local Meeting and the Community were discussed by Albert G. Shepard, Henry T. Brown and Anna Rhoads Ladd, successively; Social Problems such as Social Work as a Vocation, Employer and Employees, the Christian Man in Business, and Personal Economy and Social Reform were presented under the charge of the Social Order Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, by Principal Neuman, of the School of Social Service, John B. Leeds, Bernard G. Waring and Jane W. Bartlett. Clarence E. Pickett gave his talks on Helping Young People.

At the second hour, Modern Ideals in the Prophets were pointed out daily by Henry J. Cadbury; some Basic Elements of Religion set forth by Agnes L. Tierney; and a Successful First-day School described by Thomas E. Jones.

At the third hour the classes of Emily Green Balch on War Versus Peace conflicting with those of George Nasmyth on Christianizing International Relations made choice peculiarly difficult. At this hour also, National and International Service was discussed by Harold Evans.

The last hour of the morning was entirely given over to a Quaker Forum, led by Carroll T. Brown. Such questions as What is the mission of Quakerism? How can we as Friends make ourselves felt beyond our membership? How can our meetings for worship be strengthened? were vigorously discussed. On Fifth-day, this hour being the last one of the Conference, a meeting for worship was held in Maple Grove. The inspiring addresses on Third and Fourth-day evenings were by Elbert Russell.

The afternoons were given over to walks, tennis and boating. A missionary exhibit of the Young People's Auxiliary was arranged in the girls' senior parlor, where afternoon tea was served on several occasions.

Sarah Bancroft Clark and a French lady spoke one afternoon on relief work in France.

A table of books recommended by the Social Order Committee of the Yearly Meeting was displayed in the Library.

A letter of greeting was received from the Friends' Conference in session at the George School, and a reply written and sent in return. A letter was also sent to the Young People of New England Yearly Meeting in session at Providence, R. I.

On the initiative of Sarah B. Leeds an afternoon and evening meeting on international relations was held at West Chester, at which the prominent lecturers in attendance at the Conference spoke.

On Seventh-day, a camp supper was served at the Lakeside, and an evening of delightful entertainment was spent beside the moonlit water. Again was it forcibly impressed upon the minds of older members of the group how much more conducive to initiative, originality and mental alertness were the games and pastimes there enacted than the conventional amusements which so often depress rather than stimulate the higher faculties of the soul.

The domestic and outdoor helpers, whose willingness to remain after the hard closing days of school made the holding of the Conference there possible, were not forgotten and many expressed regret that the meetings came at their busiest times.

The beloved hostess of Westtown, Mary R. Williams, made it possible for them to attend the last wonderfully favored vesper meeting and the address which followed it.

In reviewing the days thus spent together with a common desire on the part of all for strengthening and refreshment of mind and spirit, the impression remains that the young people of our Society have grasped the meaning of the Quaker interpretation of the Christian messages and are having an unmistakable call to dedicate themselves to the service of their Master. The way into which this will lead is not equally clear to every soul, nor is the call identical in every case, but out of the search for the path, the hunger and thirst of the seeking and the prayer for guidance in the quest will surely emerge in this time of world stress and agony a new soul of Quakerism strong to endure, to do, and to suffer, to receive and to give forth the Light.

For the united aspirations of the Young People's Conference may be assuredly expressed in these lines:

"Great Master, touch us with thy skilful hand;
Let not the music that is in us die!
Great Sculptor, hew and polish us; nor let Hidden and lost thy form within us lie!
Spare not the stroke! do with us as thou wilt!
Let there be naught unfinished, broken, marred;
Complete thy purpose, that we may become Thy perfect image, thou our God and Lord!"

A. L. T.

THE GREAT SOLUTION.

[PAPER READ AT YOUNG FRIENDS' CONFERENCE, WESTTOWN.]

The war is forcing on us a fresh consideration of the basic principles involved in a repudiation of war; an attempt to analyze some of the concepts involved may help others to think out the problem to the satisfaction of their own spirits.

Peace we must conceive not as an empty negation of conflict. We want life, the more abundant life that Christ came to bring, and life is a current of energy. Conflicting currents waste and confuse and often merely cancel one another. Current added to current gives added fullness, speed, depth, power. This is peace—the full flowing harmony of active wills.

This does not exclude effort, struggle, competition. These are deeply entwined elements of life, necessary to moral strength and mental alertness, we would not eliminate them if we could. They have no necessary relation to conflict or combat, that is, the effort to inflict mutual injury, the purpose to overcome and destroy the opponent.

Such conflict within the group is not, in spite of a common misinterpretation of the Darwinian struggle for existence, a characteristic feature of the evolutionary process. The fleetest hare is the hare that escapes and breeds a fleetier race. The tiger that is the most skilful hunter is the one that survives. But the struggle is not an intra-tribal battle. Mankind almost alone has been prone to such warfare, and that probably throughout a relatively short era of his long life upon the planet. There is good reason to believe that the period of war will prove to have been an episode only in his racial history, closing definitively as cannibalism closed when its time was done.

To such a close both politico-economic developments and voluntary moral determinations must contribute.

It is the latter with which we are here concerned. And first let us clear the ground of some common misconceptions with regard to the use of force. Force, that is energy, is involved in every bodily act. To split kindling or to write a letter is to use force. The use of force has in and of itself no moral color. It is sheer materialism to make this the criterion of whether or not an act is morally justifiable.

The criterion is the element of coercion. Violence is coercion by force, but the wills of others may be as effectually coerced by other means as by violence, and as wrongly. The essence of coercion is violation of that liberty which is the most sacred treasure of personality. The Creator of man has given him freedom to make mistakes, freedom to do wrong; only as a free agent is it possible for man to be a moral being. Coercion, therefore, if not always unjustifiable, is at least always subject to the gravest possible question.

That coercion by actual violence may in extreme cases be a duty seems impossible to deny. Tolstoy to the contrary notwithstanding. Suppose a man temporarily insane about to maim his child. How would you answer his reproaches if you did not force him to desist, at whatever cost of injury to himself?

We do not live in a moral world so simple that we can provide ourselves beforehand with infallible specific rules of conduct.

But all coercion, especially all forcible coercion, lands one in slippery places. It evokes in the actor the heats and confusions of fighting animal instinct, and the temptation to the hypocrisy which refuses to acknowledge in one's self the existence of any but the purest motives.

Moreover, we must consider the person, or the people, whom it is attempted to coerce. It is a primitive illusion to suppose that the force employed will have its simple direct effect and that only, that to try to mould, to break, to smash, will evoke no vigorous explosion of force in reaction. The opposite is true. Contrariness, self-justification, red-hot anger, with its literal madness, may easily more than offset the attempted pressure. And in conflict each side tends to forget rational aims, to fight for victory per se, if not for mere fighting's sake. It is an appetite, a lust, as real as any other.

When coercion does by exception attain its ends it is at best a very poor pis-aller. The broken will, the forced submission, the hated task, the humiliation of defeat, the sullenness of the beaten, are its fruits. Full of tragedies is the old historical path of coercion of heretics, punishment of offenders, forcible assimilation of subject nationalities, slave labor, enforced love, compulsory maternity. Only the free act has moral beauty.

The question remains—what is to be done in the face of attempted forcible wrong? This is the question of (as it is ordinarily phrased) non-resistance. It is not hard to see what the ideal solution is. The hard thing is to successfully act out that solution. Even "super-resistance" is too negative a term for the overcoming of evil by a fresh willing forth of good. A kindness so contagious that ill-will is not merely melted, but attracted into harmony; reason so clarified, so uncontroversial, so appealing, that the opponent becomes the auxiliary; will-to-good so strong that it does not merely annul that of the "enemy," but irresistibly draws him into co-operation—these are the ends we seek.

Not every person can solve every conflict by this method, doubtless. We are too poor, too little ready to use the unlimited power of good which the life of the spirit opens to us not to fail. But can anyone question that this is the way of Christ, the law of the moral cosmos?

When we see how to offer to Germany a proposal for a co-operative world which opens to her the scope which she ought to have, far from having to force her to enter such a society of nations it would be hard to keep her out. And in such a society of nations she would slough off her militarism as the traveler in the fable dropped his cloak. The blustering wind which sought to tear it away made him cling to it the more. In the sunshine it became a burden to be got rid of.

If the war-aims of this country are really what the President announced them to be, we should make that fact unmistakably evident by a standing offer of peace terms always open. The Russian formula of "no forcible annexation, no punitive contributions" might well be its basis, this being understood to imply agreed-on readjustments of territory—as, for instance, in Alsace-Lorraine—and generous compensation for ravaged areas. Above all the offer should include a proposal for adequate international organization to insure that "this thing never shall happen again," with disarmament all around as a corollary.

EMILY G. BALCH.

FOLLOW PRESENT LIGHT.—"Let us be content to follow the light of the present moment, without looking further. It is our daily bread, which God gives us only for one day, it is like the manna in the wilderness; and he that would gather a double portion, and make provision for the ensuing day, grossly deceives himself. It will corrupt in his hands, and he will have no more of it to feed on than he who gathers for one day only. He dispenses his internal light, as a prudent mother assigns to her daughter the task she is to perform, and as soon as it is finished, allots her another."—FRANCIS FÉNELON.

Selected by Lydia C. Wood.

AWAY FROM HOME.

Standing forth on Life's rough way,
 Father, guide them,
 Oh we know not what of harm
 May betide them;
 In the shadow of Thy wing,
 Father, hide them.
 Waking, sleeping, Lord, we pray
 Go beside them.

When in prayer they cry to Thee,
 Wilt Thou hear them?
 From the stains of sin and shame
 Thou wilt clear them.
 'Mid the quicksand and the rocks
 Thou wilt steer them;
 In temptation, trial and grief
 Be Thou near them.

Unto Thee we give them up,
 Lord, receive them;
 In the world we know must be Much to grieve them,
 Many striving oft and strong
 To deceive them,
 Trustful in Thy hands of love
 We must leave them.

—WM. CULLEN BRYANT.

APPLICATIONS FOR MEMBERSHIP IN NEW YORK.

"Let us be called by Thy Name."

In the New York meetings of the Religious Society of Friends, at 144 E. Twentieth Street, and Gramercy Park, new faces began to appear in Fourth Month, 1917.

In Fifth Month there were many inquiring about the Society and desires expressed to join. It became apparent that a large group, consisting of persons from a wide range of religious training, were coming. Many nationalities were represented, some resided in remote parts of New York State, others in New Jersey, and in Connecticut. They included university and college men and women, instructors, artists, musicians, professional men, manufacturers, commercial travelers and railroad men.

Few of these earnest seekers knew the others. Most of them seemed to be seeking a spiritual association, simplicity in worship, freedom from ritual and the illumination of the Holy Spirit. A very few, after finding that Friends offered no refuge from military requirements, came no more. None had been influenced by the great William A. Sunday campaign then in progress.

The Pastoral Committee took measures at once to meet these earnest souls, helpfully and wisely.

The Committee held a meeting at the close of each First-day morning meeting. A class was organized to meet for the study of "What Friends Believe and Why." Members of the Pastoral Committee here met the inquirers and a thorough practical study of the Uniform Discipline commenced. Any questions were answered, and requirements for membership defined. (Attendance has ranged from 14 to 27.)

A Bible Class for the study of the Gospel of John has been started, which meets at 10.15 on First-days. Many personal interviews have been arranged for consultation, instruction and advice. Ten new members were received at the last Monthly Meeting, Sixth Month 6th. Sixteen applications await the action of the Pastoral Committee at this writing (Sixth Month 14th), and 25 others are looking toward uniting with us if approved. Ten have made some inquiries and not returned.

Briefly, the Pastoral Committee requires: attendance at meetings, a confession of Jesus Christ, and satisfactory evidence of a true religious experience. Also a statement that the Uniform Discipline has been read and accepted, and that the applicant will conform to its requirements. Then this fuller statement is made by all the men who apply for membership:

"I make this application from sincere religious conviction, and not as an expedient to escape military service."

The above statements are made in the language of the applicant and addressed to the New York Monthly Meeting.

The Pastoral Committee passes upon all applications, and if they are approved, then they go to the Monthly Meeting for approval.

One is impressed by those seeking to be called by our name, that they are mostly young or in vigorous active health, educated, spiritual, prosperous, and really convinced of the doctrines and value of the views held by "The Religious Society of Friends."

J. LINDLEY SPICER, Chairman.

ADDRESS AT TUNESASSA.

The class graduating this year at Tunesassa was composed wholly of girls.

Sisters:—

Please allow me to use the Indian greeting, for I love it. From my school days I have read the speeches of Corn Planter and Red Jacket to the white men—so simple and sensible or eloquent and pathetic—and the paragraphs always began, "Brothers." Your fathers found the word that expresses so well how men should feel to those of all races and nations; and if all the world had learned to be brothers we shouldn't have in Europe the trenches with their stiling gases, and the Zeppelins dropping bombs on towns and people, and in the ocean the submarine destroying ships and food. Instead we should be helping each other, and making the earth a happy place to live in.

Perhaps, after all, it is the sisters of the world that are going to set things right. Won't you turn in and help? Won't you try to have peace in your hearts and homes? Won't you try to hold fast to your good word "sisters," and to the underlying thought?

While we are on this subject of peace I want to tell you two true stories which will show what we can do in our own homes and neighborhood.

There is a sunny valley in my country through which winds a little stream or "run," as we call it. On the south slope of this valley lived Farmer F., with his wife and family. And he had some pigs. Across the run, within a stone's throw, as some of our Indian boys know how to throw, lived Neighbor P., and he had a garden, just put in order. Somehow, the pigs and the garden got together. Very good for the pigs, very bad for the garden. Neighbor P., a loud-spoken, hot-tempered man, strode across to Farmer F., determined, as he told his wife, "to have a good fight with Farmer F." Farmer F. was six feet high and broad in proportion. What happened? The lion came back, turned into a lamb. Had Farmer F. got the better of him in a fist fight, and beaten him into submission? Not a bit of it. Farmer F. had overcome evil with good, and Neighbor P. acknowledged, "I came back, loving him better than ever." The garden was restored to an even finer condition than it was before, and the two lived as brothers ever after. Now, you can do something like this yourselves some day, I am sure.

The other story is about Peter Miller. It is possible you may have met with Peter in your reading. But in case you have not, I will say that Peter Miller was the good leader of a group of Seventh-day Baptists living at the quaint and interesting German settlement of Ephrata in Lancaster County, Penna., during the American Revolution. Sadly enough, there was a man who for some reason had a grudge against Miller. He treated Miller shamefully and made his life a burden. But it so happened that this same man fell into disgrace with the ruling powers and he was ordered to be put to death at the Turk's Head, West Chester.

Here was a noble man's opportunity and Peter Miller was that kind of man. So knowing that the business admitted no delay, he made straight steps to Valley Forge, where General Washington and his troops were spending a winter of anxiety and suffering. Here Miller pleaded before the General that the life of the condemned man might be spared. But Washington refused, saying, "I fear that I can do nothing for your friend." "Friend!" exclaimed Miller, "he is my bitterest enemy, and that is why I am here begging for his life!" Washington was moved by this noble revenge, listened to his cry for mercy, wrote out the order for the man's release and sent Peter hurrying to West Chester. Here he arrived just as the fatal sentence was to be executed. His former enemy was released and they walked off up High Street, arm in arm—two happy men.

"The fairest action of our human life
Is scorned to revenge an injury."

Perhaps you can't do anything just similar to this act of Peter Miller's, but you will find, I dare say, chances to show that as Jesus commanded, you, too, can "love your enemies." Will you take these chances, sisters?

I was speaking of our being brothers and sisters to all the world and that your people taught us so to call each other. You also have loved and cherished some of the other best things of life. You have lived close to nature. You have loved "the sunshine of the meadow;

Loved the shadow of the forest;
Loved the wind among the branches,
And the rain-shower and the snow-storm;
And the rushing of great rivers
Through their palisades of pine trees;
And the thunder in the mountains,
Whose innumerable echoes
Flap like eagles in their cries."

We could do well to love all these lovely and grand things as you love them and to see in them the poetry of life. You have a past full of that poetry.

Then, best of all, you have revered the Great Spirit, as One ever near you, who really tells what is right and wrong. Oh, this is marvelous, and so uplifting and inspiring!

Keep these great truths in your minds and hearts. Don't let what is said all around you rob you of the grand beliefs of your people.

To help you to keep your faith in them and to add yet more to your store of good things, the Friends here are working, and so it has been for many a year. I have just been reading a story of what happened one hundred and nineteen years ago. At that time a party of five horsemen left their homes in Southeast Pennsylvania, and after riding and resting for about three weeks they came to this neighborhood by way of Pittsburgh. They talked to the Indian chief Corn Planter and told him of the plans of the Friends of Philadelphia to have three young men of the party live here among the Indians; and that a boat was coming up the Allegheny River from Pittsburgh, laden with farming tools and other useful things. The three young men stayed at the settlement to carry out the plans, but the older men soon left for their homes. One of these was my great-grand-father, and he wrote a book telling about the beginnings of this colony here. That was in 1798, and the next year he and others came again and they were pleased to see how much improved matters were. But what would they say now if they should see your good gardens and houses and should hear your young people reading, reciting and graduating before us!

I have been thinking as I have written this paper that my life and interests seem to be woven in with yours in various ways, and allow me to tell a little personal incident which proves we have had experiences here before.

Nearly forty-five years ago, one autumn evening, a little company of strangers stood on the farther shore of the Allegheny River, waiting to cross the stream. But there was no bridge, a freshet had washed it away, and the current was too deep and strong for us to attempt to ford. A way, however, was at hand, and as I was young, the novelty and excitement of it were pleasant. A hollowed log made into an Indian canoe was equal to the passage. I wonder whether you have any here now. I can remember the sensation as, in the fading twilight, I sat very still on the floor of the unsteady boat, with the water rushing and swirling past, and very close at hand, while an erect figure, perhaps the grand-father of one of you, expertly and safely poled us over, making a V-shaped course as we went from bank to bank.

But, sisters, this is your day, not mine. It is your future, not my past that needs to be presented. You have been thinking of the time to come. Your thoughts have been reaching far ahead, for "the thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts." No doubt each one of you has some pictures in her mind of the brave things she hopes to do, and the fine woman she hopes to be. Ah, how good for us these day-dreams are, or may be if only they are joined to a longing, a desire, nay an intention to make them real.

Do you know the little poem Lowell has written, beginning:

"Of all the myriad moods of mind
That through the soul come thronging
Which one was e'er so dear, so kind,
So beautiful as longing?"

And then the poet shows why this beautiful and happy state is so very important to you and me, for he says:—

"To let the new life in, we know Desire must ope the portal."

And further:—

"Our lives must climb from hope to hope
And realize our longing."

In other words, we must go "forward" according to your motto, upward and onward as long as we live, trying to let the new or better life come in more and more. I hope you may never lose the thrill of hope and of admiration for what is true and good. And if you entertain and cherish these high thoughts, and enjoy them, you wont allow the ugly thoughts and feelings to get a place in your minds and hearts. You will drive them out as you would a wild beast of the forest from your homes.

To keep your ideals fresh, do frequently some good reading that will spur you on. And it seems as if the great apostle Paul, writing centuries ago, might have written this fine passage to help you just at this time:—

"Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." Think on these things! I wish you would say this verse in Philippians iv: 8 to yourselves every day, and then these will be the things you will strive for as you go "forward," as you "climb from hope to hope."

But I know there are going to be some hard places in this climb. Going up-hill is sure to require an effort and it may be a big effort. It takes much steady effort always to be true—true to the best you know, to your friends, to your Heavenly Father; to speak the truth, to act it; always to be dependable, so that people may count on your doing what is promised; always to be loving, and pure, and generous, and forgiving, and brave! Can you do and be all this? Not easily. But the Great Spirit is close at hand. Will you try to do it? You are not the ones, are you, to say, "We are not going to do hard things." That would be a fatal mistake for you to make. You have been doing hard things here at school. Some of your arithmetic questions were not easy. Sometimes you have had to work when it would have been pleasanter to play. Sometimes you have had to give up to your schoolmates what you wanted to keep yourselves. Well, this is a good beginning. Keep on doing what you don't want to do, because it is best, and one day when you get to the top of the Hill Difficulty you will find that the climb is grandly worth while, and that workers are happier by far than shirkers.

But, sisters, there are so many things to be said to girls when they are graduating that I am in danger of keeping you too long. So I will put much in little and close with what some one else has said, changed a little to suit my purpose:—

"Believe in yourselves. Believe in other people. Believe that you will succeed. Fear nothing but evil. Love your work. Work, hope, trust, pray. Keep in touch with to-day. Teach yourselves to be practical and up-to-date and sensible. You cannot then fail in living noble and successful lives."

ANN SHARPLESS.

POCONO NOTES.

The kindest thing God ever made,
His hand of very healing laid
Upon a fevered world, is shade.

His glorious company of trees
Throw out their mantles that under these
The dust-stained wanderer may find his ease.

Green temples closed against the heat
Of noontime's blinding glare and heat
Open to any pilgrim's feet.

The white road blisters in the sun;
Now, half the weary journey done
Enter and rest, O weary One!

And feel the dew of dawn still wet
Beneath thy feet and so forget
The burning highway's ache and fret.

This is God's hospitality
And whose rests beneath a tree
Hath cause to thank Him gratefully.

—THEODOSIA GARHORN.

We have never seen this "glorious company of trees throw out their mantles" more attractively and invitingly than during the past month. The evergreens have added many inches to their branches, doubtless owing to the abundant moisture, while the hardwoods are particularly perfect in their varied foliage. The Pennsylvania Forestry Association was the guest of the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, between the twenty-first and twenty-third of Sixth Month, when delegates, representing several similar societies, gathered to discuss the need of conserving the forests of this and other States.

The last group of original white pine trees in Pennsylvania, covering some 7000 acres, is about coming under State control. This will be added to the 1,200,000 acres already purchased by this State. New York has an equal acreage protected in like manner. The Federal Government has purchased or rather preempted several millions of acres on the upper levels of the lower Appalachian range. So there is practically a continuous belt of mountain lands from Georgia to Maine, reserved for reforestation on the Atlantic seaboard. There are also immense public domains in the various parks on the Pacific slope and among the Rocky Mountain wilds, which have been rescued from the woodsman's axe.

Professors of Forestry from Michigan and Canada Universities contributed useful suggestions as to the economic value of planting forests, which should be marketable in forty years. An outlay of $380,000,000 would, in such a span of years, surely return more than $1,000,000,000, under the most conservative estimate—not allowing for the gain in preventing floods.

Samuel C. Elliott, the nestor of Pennsylvania foresters, died the day before we assembled and a memorial service was held on a hillside just outside of Pittsburgh, where the women of that great metropolis had planted trees to adorn those steep hills. Seldom has such a company of fifty devoted souls scrambled up so difficult a trail to see young trees. But those who were there will not soon forget that scene and the speeches then made. After the women had convinced us all that they were determined to transform those unsightly steps into attractive parks, one of the ladies expressed herself as follows:—

"War time woes make our minds move
Only in a single groove,
Until the gust of conversation
Mainly now is conservation
And of U-boat irritation.

Coming in the midst of these
Is the pleasant change to trees,
We most forget the war to mention,
For the Foresters' Convention
Now engages our attention.

We hope they will make us see
That each one shall plant a tree,
As we hear talk of preservation
And the great deforestation
That has gone on in our nation.

As good husbandmen we're told
Still to plant trees when they are old,
Expecting not the ripe fruit to see,
So should we make, both shade and breeze,
For Future's child, by planting trees."

Dr. Henry S. Drinker, President of Lehigh University, and also President of our Pennsylvania Forestry Council, and presiding officer of this convention, was then called upon for a speech, and he, in turn, passed that privilege on to the writer, who had observed that some score of small urchins had gathered from the homes of the workers in the adjoining iron mills to listen to their seniors.

Returning to Pocono Lake, "The Fourth" was celebrated in a most satisfactory manner. It was a great comfort to demonstrate that at least one place exists on this war-ridden planet where we could get away from its distress.

The addresses were of a high international order, by missionaries from Africa and China, and a statement concerning the prospect of suffragists in Pennsylvania. Some six years ago, Virginia Blakeslee, a native of Pocono Mountain, went to British East Africa and has learned that the Bantus are worthy of her devotion, and she said it nearly broke her heart to have the young men who have embraced Christianity called to the ranks of the British army. Dr. Woods, of the Canton Christian University, was particularly interesting in explaining the Chinese character in the midst of the present uncertain developments at Peking. It is very helpful to hear one who has studied the inner life of the Chinese express such confidence in them.

The Town Meeting, held under a full moon and around a great log fire, was attended by 300 campers on the 4th inst., and brought out a frank discussion of local interests.

The Neighborhood Improvement Committee reported a progressive organization among the natives at Pocono Lake during the winter, with the foundation for a library and co-operative work along social lines. Nothing has contributed more interest in the betterment of this community of mountaineers than "Baby Week," with the medical assistance gratuitously offered. The rummage sales, netting a substantial sum, were very successful, and a bank account was opened with $350 toward the expenses of the native organization.

Our new Superintendent was very felicitous when presenting the relationship between the campers and himself—stating that he had endeavored to answer something over eleven thousand questions and had yet to find that there was not a sufficient reason for each enquiry. With a family of 500 to 600 souls to satisfy there is abundant opportunity to develop every faculty of mind and spirit.

Wm. C. Dennis conducted the concluding exercises of the evening, in which all took part so successfully as to secure a unity of feeling that was particularly gratifying.

Ernesta Drinker was our fellow camper in 1908. She married Wm. C. Bullitt, who has written several discriminating reports of his observations, while traveling in Germany during 1910, for The Ledger, and his wife has now published "An Uncensored Diary," full of spice and truth. He and his wife had a free interview with Zimmerman, who, when asked whether peace could not be made now, if the biggest men from each country were brought together, replied, "If it were possible to have a small absolutely secret meeting, then we probably could make peace now, but how is that to be managed? We cannot speak out frankly to the whole world, and how can one negotiate except publicly?" And he added, "We will have to have a United States of Europe some day, to enable us to compete economically with America. That may come in eighty or one hundred years, but not in our lifetime. If you would really develop your natural resources, we in Europe would be helpless."

We have just received word that the steamship upon which our Howard and Katharine sailed, safely arrived at Bordeaux on the 4th inst. Letters from William and Mary Duguid, giving their experiences crossing the Atlantic and after reaching Paris, have also come to hand.

The voyage was uneventful until they reached the danger zone, when they sighted a submarine, which was fired upon and probably sunk. M. E. D. writes under date of Sixth Month 16, 1917: "Yesterday William and I were sitting in our chairs when the boys began to notice something appear about two or three miles right off our ship's side. Some of the boys ran up to the captain. In a minute the guns began firing. The course was changed and in a minute or two everyone had gathered on deck. William made a dive down stairs for our belts and got back just as the submarine disappeared well to the rear. It certainly came up and disappeared just as you would expect a periscope to do. The people behaved very well, but we all had a very tense few minutes while we thought any minute the torpedo would come our way. Apparently it was a little too far off when the guns began to play. Everyone thought it was a submarine then and there is no way to tell.

One thing that added to the unpleasantness of the thought was that it was very damp and a cold wind was blowing, so the prospect of being all night or even a few hours in boats looked extremely uncomfortable, so many miles out at sea. Everybody was a bit nervous, which was not helped by a barrel floating by our boat about six o'clock. The first excitement was at three o'clock. The gunner took a shot at the barrel. Most people spent the night on deck and many walked about, making a good deal of noise. Fortunately we slept very well. It certainly is a blessing to be able to sleep well, especially after a little incident like yesterday's."

There were 150 young men from the States going over to help in the ambulance service, of whom M. E. D. says: "There are many nice chaps from all over the States. Many of them seem very young. I am sure it will be very hard on them."

One of these became unbalanced mentally, "worrying about German spies and submarines and jumped overboard, but was rescued by the boat of the customs steamer. He will be sent home again."

W. M. D., writing a few days later, from Paris, says: "The sail up the river (at Bordeaux) looms large in my mind, as a time of handling baggage in very hot weather. We had no trouble with the customs nor with the passport people, who only asked who the Society of Friends were and what they were doing in France and were easily made to understand. We got alongside the quay at 6 p. m., and were cheered all along by French soldiers and civilians. We had a scramble for voitures and got to the Hôtel de France before the majority of people. . . . We had a good but mealless dinner for 6.50 francs and a walk round the city till 9.30 p. m., when, thanks to the daylight saving scheme, it began to get dark. There are only two trains a day—11.05 A. M. and 10.30 P. M. The journey to Paris was most interesting, but uneventful. We had a whole car load of the ship's company, so had a pleasant time. The day was hot and the dining car was a blessing, with its iced water, citronade, etc. Maids waited instead of the usual men. Next day we went to find the Guaranty Trust Company, and found they had moved into a new building. They told us that J. Henry Scattergood and Morris E. Leeds were out of town till Fifth or Sixth-day. They were very nice and obliging. . . . At lunch at the hotel here we were sitting down to a table when who should appear but Alfred and Grace Lowry, who are staying here and have been for two weeks, having just come in from Switzerland. Mutual surprise and joy and wonderment to find ourselves in next door rooms with a communicating door between. Alfred is at the Y. M. C. A. We called on the War Victims' Relief Committee and had tea with them and were reassured by them that there was plenty for us to do, and they were glad to see us. They were busy, so we stayed only a short time. Dr. Hilda Clark and Ruth Fry and several others whom we hadn't heard of were there. We are going there to-night to dinner at 7 o'clock. There is only one mail a week and that by the French line on Seventh-day. Paris is much as it was when I saw it last. All the autos are the same old ones. Taxis are plentiful, but not quite enough so. There are many soldiers of all colors about. Some with steel helmets. Lots of English officers on leave and many Americans. Also there are numbers of young men in civilian clothes, but a small proportion indeed, compared with what one would see in New York or Philadelphia. War is now the business of the country and all the business men are in uniform. Peace doesn't feel any nearer than it did in the United States."

J. E.

POCONO LAKE, Pa., Seventh Month 7, 1917.

LONDON YEARLY MEETING.

(Continued from page 33.)

William Littleboy said that for our young men who had joined the army we had much sympathy; and it would be most regrettable if any should think we were lacking therein, but it was obvious that the Society could not stand behind their service as it could behind that of the young men who at great cost were carrying out principles for which the Society existed. We should be thankful to the Committee who had carried out one of the most difficult of services and in a way which showed that it had been guided by God. Nearly all those now in prison were with us a year ago and in spirit they were now present, pleading with that Meeting to support them, not in any personal sense, but for the progress of those great ideals for which they were now paying the price. Prison discipline was peculiarly severe upon sensitive men, so much so that many had already become insane. He thought we should rejoice that our brethren had been accounted worthy to bear testimony on our behalf. To his mind the "absolutist" principle was the only logical one. It was not true that these men had refused to do anything for their country. What could one say of a nation that took away men engaged in real national service and shut them up in prison to make mailbags? With the men outside the Society who were also suffering, he thought there must be loving co-operation. It was impossible to over-estimate the opportunity just now for drawing into closer fellowship those whose work now would influence the country in a remarkable degree in the future. If they were not yet fully acquainted with the deep things of God, it was our duty to help them. He hoped a message would be sent, not only of deep sympathy, but also of encouragement.

J. Percy Fletcher said when he considered the figures of the last few months, he almost felt they had cause no longer to rely upon the Society standing for its principles. If even that prop were removed, however, we still had the living experience of the faith of the early days of the Society. About 10,000 men applied for exemption on conscientious grounds. Practically the whole of these had stood firm and were not in the army. Yet most of them were not in prison, because to get over the difficulty raised by the Conscription Act the Government had invented various schemes which they could accept to reduce the numbers. Conscription was the great evil, and he admired those who would have no compromise with it. Theirs was the spirit that brought them into line with the men and women who had suffered in all ages and until recently in Russia.

Charles I. Evans was specially moved by a paragraph in the report which spoke of the perils of lads of eighteen who were expected to make a decision when as yet they were not ready to judge. It was extraordinarily difficult to help these lads by advice, and he asked for the prayerful help of all Friends in the matter. The work must not be left to parents or teachers or pamphlets, and he asked all, especially those in official capacity, to bestir themselves. There must be individual appeal.

The Clerk presented a minute expressing appreciation of the stand which our friends in prison were making, and assuring them of the belief that what they were doing, under discouraging and difficult circumstances, was destined to bear a rich harvest.

VISITATION OF PRISONERS' COMMITTEE.

Henry Harris expressed his sense of the privilege of service as one of the "Quaker Chaplains." The number of objectors in Wormwood Scrubs at first grew slowly and afterwards rapidly, and soon 200 men were attending the meeting. The meetings were times of great privilege and enjoyment, to which the men looked forward. He had had many conversations with men who had been drawn to Friends by our principles and said their interest had been first awakened by reading the Book of Discipline. At last he was commissioned by the officer in charge to ask how many would like a copy, and 112 hands were held up. The books were presented and the men were reading them over and over again. These meetings were carried out on the lines of strict punctuality and all came with great expectation, there was a deep and earnest desire to worship God. Many of those attending had seen in prison examples of true Quaker life. Some had already joined the Society and others were seeking admission.

William A. Albright recalled the words of William Littleboy that our friends in prison were with us now in spirit and mentioned Maurice Rowntree who, although his body was in prison, was free in spirit. He had spoken in terms of delight of the men he had met in prison whom he had never known before, but who gladly responded to the call of friendship.

THE FIVE YEARS' MEETING.

J. Thompson Elliot brought in a report from the Committee on Nominations for Friends to attend the Five Years' Meeting in America in Tenth Month, suggesting that the appointment be left till Seventh Month, and asking that Friends who felt a concern to attend the Five Years' Meeting would communicate with him before the close of Yearly Meeting.

The subject of Friends' Home Missions was introduced by A. Neave Brayshaw, who stated that the Report dealt not so much with the work done, but rather considered the opportunities now before us and how best to meet them.

William E. Wilson said A. N. Brayshaw had referred to the possibilities before us, not only in helping the conscientious objectors but also the members of the fighting forces when they returned. Our ministry needed strengthening. Many of our meetings were at a low spiritual temperature. There was one thing which would be in the way of our work. These men would use unconventional phrases; they would look at things in a very straight way (as it seemed to them); they would not exactly fit into our scheme. The Society might adopt an attitude of—should we call it?—snobbery. We must not adopt an attitude of superiority. We believed that there was something of the Divine in each of us. That meant that we could not put ourselves on a higher plane than others. We had something to give, but we had much to learn. By the side of these men we must take the place of learners. In the spirit of humility, we must get down to fundamentals.

Henry T. Hodgkin said that a week or two ago he had ventured to lay a concern before a conference at Letchworth. One of the reasons why some Friends had been afraid of the Home Mission Committee was the fear of an organized ministry. We had failed in not making a clear enough distinction between the gifts of prophecy and of teaching. More and more men were realizing that what was needed was a willingness to recognize the religious social teacher—not a mere teacher of creeds, but of applied principles. He would like to see a group of teachers—men and women far better trained than any that we yet had—who would give themselves to the work of the Society—one and another as an Educational Secretary for Social Problems, International Problems, Applied Christianity Problems. If we could find men and women who could give themselves to that work, we should find an immense field of service. But we should have to face the cost to our Society of being without a paid ministry. We must add to our faith knowledge if we were to face the needs of the present situation. The Society must put itself behind what had been done, and equip itself more and more to deal with those problems in a devotional and educational atmosphere.

Cornelius Boeke remarked that we had tried the mission method, which he felt was dead in this country. We must find an evangelism which was in complete accord with our views as Friends. In our Epistles to America, we never mentioned the word "evangel." We did not feel we had an "evangel"—glad news. This was a problem we ought to face.

The Clerk sought the guidance of the Meeting as to H. T. Hodgkin's suggestion. J. B. Craithwaite, Arthur Midgley, and other Friends urged that Cornelius Boeke's concern should be united with H. T. Hodgkin's. It was felt by many that the whole subject was really a discussion on the State of the Society.

(To be continued.)

NEWS ITEMS.

In reporting Pelham Quarterly Meeting the Canadian Friend says: "There was a meeting held at Beaconsfield, arranged for by a request coming from our Friends on Stover Street, whose Quarterly Meeting was also in session at the same time. There were present at this meeting Anna L. Hall, of Ohio, Emire Henderson, also of Ohio, Sybil J. Barker and husband, of North Carolina, Rebecca Meekeel and husband, of Poplar Ridge, New York State, whose messages of love and wise counsel were much appreciated. A large number of other Friends from their local Meeting also attended. It is gratifying to note the good fellowship that exists between the two bodies of Friends, also that we have much in common and the same objects in view. We trust that this union may grow stronger and the differences that wrought so much havoc in our Society in years past may finally disappear."

By letter from Minnie P. Bowles, dated 2115 miles out from Yokohama, on Sixth Month 28th, and finished on landing at Seattle, Seventh Month 6th, we learn that they had been greatly favored to have a calm voyage—rainy much of the way, but no storms. Weather had been cold and winter clothing was found to be comfortable.

There were only ten passengers and, with the exception of themselves, all were Japanese—the boat was what is called "a cargo boat." The five officers and three business men made up their family table. Two hundred came to say farewell, to our friends at the Central Station in Tokio—many bringing kind gifts of flowers—and one Japanese admirer brought for their acceptance on the voyage a box containing ten boiled eggs. The letter says "those more than two hundred faces, as we left, are a tender picture that we shall always gratefully carry with us."

Our friends were expecting to land on Seventh Month 7th, and it was their plan to attend the Seattle Meeting of Friends on the following morning, and the meeting at Everett in the afternoon, and on the tenth go to Prosser, to the home of Ethu Bowles, Gilbert Bowles's brother. Then after some investigating and few stops by the way to visit relatives, reach Earlham, Iowa, about Eighth Month 8th, and here they are looking forward to the meeting with their son Herbert, who has been a student at Westtown during the past two years. Almost every day between then and the time of the Five Years' Meeting seems very full. Their address until further announced will be:—Care Chester Mott, Earlham, Iowa—No. 1, R. F. D. M. W. H.

SERVICE FOR WOMEN IN FRANCE.—The American Friends' Service Committee has just received a cablegram calling for six women social workers, one woman doctor with tuberculosis experience, and an indefinite number of trained nurses, all speaking French. Married couples can be used if both qualify for the services needed in the general reconstruction work. Those who wish to offer themselves are asked to communicate at once with Vincent D. Nicholson, 20 S. Twelfth Street, Philadelphia.

The Committee has had for some weeks a sub-committee on the organization of a Woman's Unit to go to France. Three women have already gone to join English Friends there. It is well known that the special service which women alone can render in the reconstruction work is indispensable. It has been said that even more women than men will be needed after the first hard physical labor has been performed, to care for the women and children and the invalid men.

It is still very indefinite when this Unit can go; it may be several months or even longer, or it may be that the Unit will be sent in sections as needed. As the calls come we wish to be ready. This is an advance notice to women who are interested, to inform them of the fact that their services will probably be needed in France in the not distant future.

For those who consider applying, it is important to begin now to make definite preparations. A speaking knowledge of French is necessary, as well as experience along practical lines of simple cooking, nursing, and social welfare work. A course in first aid would be helpful. The stamping out and preventing of diseases will form a large part of the service.

It is sorely necessary to state that only those of robust health should consider going, and those who are willing to rough it. Application blanks will soon be ready and may be obtained from Vincent D. Nicholson, at the office of the Committee, 20 S. Twelfth Street, Philadelphia. It is important to apply for these early that the necessary information may be filed at the office and there be no delay after the call for women workers comes.

All possible candidates are urged to send their names and addresses as soon as possible.

LUCY BIDDLE LEWIS,
ANNE GARRETT WALTON,
HANNAH CLOTHER HELL, } Committee on Woman's Unit.

AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE.

TWO WOMEN NURSES WANTED IMMEDIATELY FOR RUSSIA.—A cable from English Friends asks that we send immediately two more women nurses to Russia. All desiring to apply should write to Lucy Biddle Lewis, 20 S. Twelfth Street, Phila., Pa. Knowledge of the language will not be required though of course greatly desirable.

The need in Russia is greater than in France. English Friends found not a single doctor in the whole area of 100,000 souls among whom they are working, one-fourth of whom are refugees from the frontier 1100 miles away.

AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE,
VINCENT D. NICHOLSON, Executive Secretary.

REPORT OF THE TREASURER OF THE AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE.

The work of collecting funds for the use of the American Friends' Service Committee is gradually becoming systematized and Monthly Meetings and Quarterly Meetings and other Committees are collecting funds and remitting them to the Treasurer.

It is thought that it might be well now to show credit each week to the various sources from which funds are coming. The following statement shows the collections from noon of Seventh Month 16th to noon of Seventh Month 25th, inclusive. In explanation of the delay of acknowledging some of the contributions, the Executive Secretary has been extremely busy and was not able to turn over to the Treasurer sooner some funds which came to his hands. It would be better if all funds were sent direct to the Treasurer, 232 S. Seventh Street, Philadelphia, Pa.:

Amount reported last week as having been collected	$81,249.50
Five Years' Meeting, Richmond, Ind.	8 5,000.00
Westbury Monthly Meeting	2,500.00
Norristown Meeting, Pa.	131.00
New York Monthly Meeting	125.20
Woodbury Preparative Meeting	64.00
Concord Monthly Meeting	56.00
Valley Preparative Meeting	26.00
Illinois Grove Friends' Church	21.15
Sturgeon Bay Monthly Meeting	13.00
Mooreland, Md., Meeting	12.00
Hopewell Young Friends' Association	10.00
Paoli, Ind., Friends' Bible School	5.15
Tilson Meeting, N. Y.	4.00
Evesham Monthly Meeting, N. J.	447.00
Jericho Preparative Meeting	1,145.00
Downington Monthly Meeting	230.00
Trenton Meeting	142.00
Crosswicks Preparative Meeting	106.00
Abington Monthly Meeting	112.75
New York Monthly Meeting	53.90
Upper Springfield Monthly Meeting	37.50
Norristown Branch Red Cross	11.25
Birmingham Preparative Meeting	11.06
Friends' Sunday School, Washington, D. C.	7.20
Purchase Executive Meeting, N. Y.	1,200.00
Stanton Monthly Meeting	4.00
Phila. Yearly Meeting, Peace Committee, Fourth and Arch Streets	11,006.80
Mattinecock Preparative Meeting	743.00
Chester Preparative Meeting, N. J.	1,400.00
Study Circle Young Friends (Philadelphia)	9.25
Green Street Monthly Meeting	288.00
Haddonfield Monthly Meeting	100.00
Friends at Buck Hill Falls	749.61
Amounts Received from 63 Individuals	3,278.63
	$29,050.45

$110,299.95

CHARLES F. JENKINS, Treasurer.

NOTE.—The pressure of timely matter is again so great that the Summary is omitted, and Receipts for the past week also.

NOTICES.

SOCIAL ORDER COMMITTEE.—A set of the books which the Social Order Committee recommends for reading has been placed in the Reading-room at Friends' Institute, 20 S. Twelfth Street, Philadelphia, where they are accessible for consultation and reading.

MEETINGS FROM NOVEMBER MONTH 29th TO EIGHTH MONTH 14th:—
Gwynedd, at Norristown, First-day, Seventh Month 29th, at 10.30 A. M.

Chester, Pa., at Media, Second-day, Seventh Month 30th, at 7.30 P. M.

Concord, at Concordville, Third-day, Seventh Month 31st, at 9.30 A. M.

Woodbury, Third-day, Seventh Month 31st, at 8 P. M.

Abington, at Horsham, Fourth-day, Eighth Month 1st, at 10.15 A. M.

Birmingham, at West Chester, Fourth-day, Eighth Month 1st, at 10 A. M.

Salem, Fourth-day, Eighth Month 1st, at 10.30 A. M.

Goshen, at Malvern, Fifth-day, Eighth Month 2nd, at 10 A. M.

DEED.—At her residence, near Hartsville, Ohio, Seventh Month 13th, EIRTH SMITH, widow of John W. Smith, in the ninetieth year of her age; a member and elder of Short Creek Monthly Meeting.

Seventh Month 13, 1917, at the home of her brother-in-law, George Blackburn, Salem, Ohio, REBECCA M. BLACKBURN, widow of the late Nathan M. Blackburn, in the eighty-third year of her age; a member of Middleton Monthly Meeting, Ohio.

FOUNDED 1865.

THE PROVIDENT LIFE & TRUST CO.
OF PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Insures Lives Acts as Executor, Etc.
Accounts Solicited Deposit by Mail
Travelers' Cheques Monthly Statements by Mail

WRITE FOR LEAFLET.

Fourth and Chestnut Streets, Phila.

H. F. BRUNER S. D. HALL

H. F. BRUNER & CO.
COAL

OFFICE AND YARD

16 N. TWENTY-FIRST STREET
PHILADELPHIA

TELEPHONES: LOREY 243
RACE 551

H. G. CHALKLEY & SONS, LTD.

LONDON, ENGLAND LAKE CHARLES LA
LAWRENCE, KANSAS

OFFER:—

First Lien Farm Mortgages, paying from 6% to 6½% net to the investor.

Not to exceed 40% of our own valuation
loaned to the farmer.

Full particulars of mortgages on hand ranging from $500.00 to $5,000.00, given on application to:—

T. H. CHALKLEY, LAWRENCE, KANSAS.

Letchworth Cottage
Spring Lake Beach, N. J.

Open for the Season 1917

A. C. & S. H. Letchworth

WALL PAPERS—All Grades
WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER
Custom of Friends Specially Solicited

FRANK C. BÜHEL
Successor to S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON

502 SPRING GARDEN ST. PHILADELPHIA
Opposite Spring Garden Station, Phila. & Reading R. R.
Established 1849 BELA' PHONE

POCONO MANOR INN

The busy summer season is near at hand—also the beautiful mountain laurel and rhododendron, which will be found in abundance over the Manor Estate. The Golf Course is in better condition than ever before; the Fairways and Greens are all very beautiful and add greatly to the general picturesqueness of these Links in the Poconos.

In arranging to come to the Pocono Manor during the summer if reservations have not already been made we should suggest that we be communicated with at once.

J. W. HURLEY, Mgr., Pocono Manor, Pa.
(Pocono Summit Station, D., L. & W. K. R.)

Friends Arch St. Centre
304 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Provides comfortable accommodations for guests by the day or week. Meals at moderate prices.

AMELIA D. FEATHERSTONE, Matron.
PHONE—MARKET 1571.

RESIDENCE: 254 S. 44th St. BELL PHONE: Baring 2982X
WILLIAM OAKES

Plumbing and Heating Contractor
ALSO LEAD BURNING

260 SOUTH TENTH STREET

PHILADELPHIA
BELL PHONE: Filbert 2666.

Assoc. M. Am. Soc. C. E. Bell Phone—Lombard 3412

EDWIN M. EVANS
CONTRACTOR & BUILDER

My jobbing department is well equipped,
prompt and efficient

321 S. LAWRENCE ST. PHILA.

WILLIAM S. YARNALL
MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

118 SOUTH FIFTEENTH STREET

PHILADELPHIA

Premier Duplicating Co.

Mimeographing, Multigraphing, Printing, Typewriting, Addressing, Mailing, etc.

636 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia

ALFRED C. HAINES

Building Glass and Paints

84 N. Front St., Philadelphia.

WANTED—A SMALL FAMILY TO SHARE A three-story house, delightfully situated in West Philadelphia. Present tenants' rooms cover rent. Additional tenants would have entire first floor and two rooms and bath-room on third floor.
Apply at 4247 Walnut Street,
Phone—Baring 8245. West Philadelphia.

THE HOLMES PRESS

Printers

J. L. Engle, Pres.

1336-40 CHERRY ST. PHILA.

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE
MATERIAL THAT WE SELL

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS

PHILADELPHIA

THE LAKESIDE

EAGLES MERE, PA.

Unobstructed lake view; capacity 250.
Elevator steam heat, golf, tennis, boating and bathing. Attractive motoring through the surrounding country.

GARAGE

J. S. KIRK & SON

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE

PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

GIRARD TRUST CO.

BROAD and CHESTNUT STS.

CAPITAL
AND
SURPLUS } $10,000,000

Acts as Executor, Trustee, Guardian,
Administrator, Assignee and Receiver.
Safes to Rent in Burglar-proof Vaults.
Interest Allowed on Deposits. :: ::

E. B. MORRIS
PRESIDENT

OWNER OF 98 ACRE FARM WITH A $5000 NEW poultry plant wants to get in touch with a young hard-worked friend with energy and ability poultry and farm experience. Will consider taking right party into partnership if he has $2500 to $3000 to invest. Must be unquestionably honest and trustworthy. Real opportunity for right party; state just what you can do in first letter.
Address, "H"—"THE FRIEND."

THE CHEYNEY SITUATION

Friends of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting as a legacy of the efforts put forth in the 60's in the interest of training colored teachers a unique plant at Cheyney. The Cheyney Training School for Teachers appeals for help to the descendants of those who originated the idea. The School is doing a great work, but it is cramped in many ways by a lack of funds.

An efficient staff of teachers and a student body numbering 100 present an unusual opportunity for the wise expenditure of energy and money.

The Managers can do little more than administer the Trust and must look to Friends and others, who have the means, to supply what is essential for the proper advancement of the School's interest.

Leslie P. Hill, Principal, is always ready to offer timely suggestions to any who have it on their hearts to assist in the laudable work that is carried on at Cheyney.

Because of the conditions which must be met, if the School is to continue its good work, the Board of Managers feel free to request Friends to include Cheyney among the charities to which they contribute, and ask that checks shall be drawn in favor of and mailed to

WILLIAM BIDDLE, Treasurer,
119 S. Fourth Street, Philadelphia.

GLASLYN-CHATHAM

PARK PLACE

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

A Family House of Established Reputation.
Open Throughout the Year.

NATHAN L. JONES.

Philadelphia's
Representative Store

W. B. WEAVER
UNDERTAKER and EMBALMER

550-552 N. 5TH ST., PHILA., PA.

Special Attention Given to Funerals
In and Out of the City. Also Chapel
Accommodations for Funerals.

BELL 'PHONE 1 ESTABLISHED 1889

ELKINS, MORRIS & CO.

BANKERS

REPRESENTATIVES

WM. E. CADBURY

PAUL W. BROWN

JAMES P. MAGILL

LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

RAILROAD AND
PUBLIC UTILITY BONDS

FOR

CONSERVATIVE INVESTMENT.

FULL PARTICULARS ON REQUEST

We recommend the use of
RAG FEATHERWEIGHT

(Antique Finish)

As the paper for high-grade Books and other Publications

JOSEPH G. FOGG

FUNERAL DIRECTOR and EMBALMER

S. W. COR. 16TH AND RACE STREETS
Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals

BELL 'PHONE SPRUCE 1646

R. C. Ballinger Ernest R. Yarnall John A. Stratton
TELEPHONES

Bell—Filbert 26-15 — Keystone—Race 637

R. C. BALLINGER & CO.

CONTRACTORS and BUILDERS

218 N. Thirteenth St. Philadelphia.

HARRY S. LEE

313 WALNUT STREET

PAINTER and GRAINER

ANTIQUe and OFFICE FURNITURE RESTORED
JOBGING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO
ESTIMATES

W. J. MacWATTERS

WITH
HARDWICK & MAGEE CO.

SUCCESSORS TO

IVINS, DIETZ & MAGEE

Let me help you in selecting your

Rugs and Carpets

Our new imports of Oriental Rugs
are of the highest merit

1220-22 MARKET ST. :: PHILA.

BACK LOG CAMP

INDIAN LAKE, N. Y.

In the Heart of the Adirondacks.

The name Back Log Camp means a great deal to many people. We shall be glad to send our booklet to any one who is interested in the latest development of the Back Log idea.

THOMAS K. BROWN
Watstown, Pa.

PUBLIC STENOGRAPHER
GEORGE B. COCK, Liberty Building
Established 1896. Experience 39 years; Medical 13.

SEE WALKER & KEPLER

FOR

Good Electrical Work

531 CHESTNUT ST. PHILA.

HARVEY T. WEBER

TAILOR

207-208 HALE BLDG., 1326 CHESTNUT ST.

The custom of Friends specially solicited.

FRIENDS' BIBLE ASSOCIATION

HAS ITS HEADQUARTERS AT

207 WALNUT PLACE : PHILA.

It is able to furnish Bibles and Testaments to Schools and Bible-classes and would be glad to have Friends everywhere acquaint themselves with the needs of their neighborhoods and allow the Bible Association to help them procure the books they may want.

(OCEAN CITY COTTAGE TO RENT FOR SEVENTH or Eighth Month. Cottage will accommodate one large or two small families. Has two bed-rooms on second floor, living, dining and kitchen on first floor. Large porch, separate garage. Anyone interested communicate with W. HAROLD TOMLINSON, 114 Yale Ave., Swarthmore, Pa.

WANTED—A YOUNG WOMAN FRIEND to attend to light household duties in a family of two. Would be one of the family. Salary, $5 a week; car fare and other expenses paid. Please mail for any other particulars if desired. The age wanted is between twenty-five and thirty. A prompt response would be appreciated.
Address:
L. C. Wood, Riverton, N. J., Box 127.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 91.

FIFTH-DAY, EIGHTH MONTH 2, 1917.

No. 5.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price $2.00 a year in Advance.

Publisher, DAVIS H. FORSYTHE.

Editors { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
 { DAVIS H. FORSYTHE,
 { MARY WARD.

Make remittances payable to
THE FRIEND,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

For the first time in our history, so far as we know, we are printing a double number of our paper this week. This is in order that our readers may have the advantage of some accumulated matter of timely interest.—Eds.

THE SERVICE OF SMALL MEETINGS.

What constituted a large meeting among early Friends it is not easy to say, since George Fox mentions "a large general meeting" held in a Friend's house in Yorkshire. When we are told that companies of a thousand or three thousand or five thousand people gathered upon an open fell or in an orchard, we know something of what a great public meeting might have been—a "threshing meeting," most likely; but, although several hundred would be "convinced" at one such meeting, it would appear that in many, if not most cases, the convinced ones afterward drew together for worship and spiritual help in rather small companies, and usually in the dwelling of one or another of their number. What has been called "the era of meeting-houses" did not come in for some twenty years, or more after George Fox's ministry began, although in London it was necessary early to provide accommodations for pretty large gatherings of Friends.

It was consistent with the position of the Friends relative to the commonly supposed sanctity of church-buildings, consecrated ground and so forth, that they should have met, after the manner of the early Christians, in any place convenient for the purpose, however much they might be "stranged at" for preaching or worshiping outside of a steeple-house. For mixed public meetings, not only a hillside or an orchard, but a barn, a city street, a close or soldiers' barracks would offer an opportunity.

The rapidity with which Friends "were gathered to be a people" was phenomenal; and no external opposition could stop the growing force of the spiritual seed that sprang into visible life in that period of seventeenth century history. "Truth spread," "many were convinced," "Friends increased"—these are familiar expressions, and descriptive of the conditions attending the formation of local gatherings, especially in the north of England. In Yorkshire alone, there were nearly three hundred groups, many of which were, when organization became somewhat developed, combined into one Monthly Meeting. Even after meeting-houses were built, these in most places were small; and in the compass of Richmond Monthly Meeting in Yorkshire, there were at one time "fifteen little meeting-houses." At Pardshaw, in Cumberland, a company of considerable size assembled in the summer-time, under the shelter of the shelving rocks, but in the winter the Friends divided into four groups, and held their meetings in private houses. In 1672 a meeting-house was built at Pardshaw; some years later one at Cocker mouth, and still later one at Eaglesfield, both not far from Pardshaw.

We may fancy then, by about 1685, a membership of some 50,000 in Great Britain, disposed for the most part (outside of London and perhaps Bristol) in rather small, or at least not large, individual meetings, although in some of the villages and "towns" the number convinced was large in proportion to the whole population. One of the most significant things, however, is the influence which even small numbers of Friends exerted in the communities where they lived and worked. Concerning this fact as shown in one part of the north country, a modern writer says, "These early Quakers impressed the county and influenced it for long. Into the glass manufactures of the Tyne they entered, into the coal trades of Durham, into the textile trades, into shipping at Whitby and Scarborough, and later into banking, and their influence on the industries was wide and beneficial. They influenced also the moral and spiritual life of the great district."

Now if we still accept George Fox's well-known saying that even one person who is "raised up" in the life and power of the Truth can shake the country for ten miles around, it is obvious that a company of twenty or thirty may leave a large community, if they but keep to the ground which still convinces of truth and makes its seekers, Friends of Truth.

The point is not that small meetings are always to be preferred to large ones, but that many small (not isolated) meetings scattered about, especially in rural or suburban districts, may be of more service than one or two large ones. In these times, much is made of "the group" and its psychological importance in Christian life and work, and perhaps little enough of individual and independent action. In the smaller meetings there may be a greater sense of each one's responsibility, and there is more opportunity for mutual acquaintance and understanding than would usually be the case in very large meetings. True, dissensions may, and sometimes do, arise in small meetings; and the great thing in all cases is that the meeting be rightly established, each member in his "right place" and occupying his own talent.

Thus far we have been considering mainly the "particular" meeting or neighborhood group. A Monthly Meeting has of necessity, in our present system, certain well-defined functions, and it is evident that the membership may be so small that these functions cannot be performed to edification or good purpose. In such cases some combination or co-operation of meetings is necessary for the transaction of the affairs of the Church. Doubtless what we need to remember, however, is that strength and unity will not come by our depending chiefly either upon the machinery of organization or upon "the multitude of an host."

M. W.

THE CHALLENGE OF CONSCIENCE.

"The seat of Divine authority is not exclusively in the individual, but also in the Church, which has the power to declare what it is the body stands for, and what supposed leadings of the individual are, and what are not, in accordance with the principles that have brought the body together and made it a unity."—ROBERT BARCLAY, in "Anarchy of the Ranters."

It has been reported more than once from England that something like 500 members of the Society of Friends have "joined the colors" since the war began. An English correspondent in the Public Ledger a few weeks since used these figures to prove that it is incorrect to say that the Society has stood by its historical position on the subject of war. Another correspondent in the New York Evening Post (we are not assured that he is a Friend) claims that these 500 are at the best only "hereditary Friends" and that their own act differentiates them from the Society which has reaffirmed its well-known position in unmistakable terms. William Littleboy, in a note to his Swarthmore Lecture ("The Day of Our Visitation") quotes the Yearly Meeting pronouncements to show that there has been no corporate surrender in this awful crisis. The case seems clearly established to us, and we are not a little inspired by the valiant stand of London Yearly Meeting as an organic body.

There is, however, this outstanding fact in England, already becoming apparent here as well, that not a few of our fellow-members, mostly our younger fellow-members, have decided a challenge of conscience in a way that violates the long-accepted interpretation of our Christian principles. We may chide them if we choose, denounce them if we must, but were it not better on all accounts to make the effort to enter into their feelings, to understand their point of view, and to determine for ourselves and for them, if we have place with them, where and how they have fallen short of so goodly an heritage.

First, then, if we are admitted to their councils, we shall find that their decision and their position is one of a good conscience. They may even say to us, "we wish we might honestly accept your point of view, but as we can not do that, our Quaker training makes it absolutely incumbent upon us to stand only by such conviction as we have. More than that is outright dishonesty." Evidently this is a situation of no ordinary difficulty. We draw near sympathetically and listen further. "It is this way," we hear the explanation proceed, "when the President appealed to the warring world to call a halt and enter into conference about the points involved it seemed clear that the last appeal of peace was made. In common with multiplied millions we were made heartsick that such an effort finally failed. After that, with the world constituted as it is, no other course was open to our country. We were forced into the war. Shall we then, having gone this far in judgment and feeling with our fellow-countrymen, turn back and claim the privilege of 'a special class'? Shall we assume that our conscience is something different and better than theirs? Shall we put a higher value on our lives than on theirs?" When one has advanced to these conclusions in this way it is no easy matter to turn him back in his argument, to point out that that entry into the war was not inevitable when the President's appeal had failed. It may be better, if possible, to lead such on to some understanding of the obligations of a corporate conscience, which certainly must not bind any against their conviction, but which may appeal to them as a point of departure even for so great a thing as a new world order. Is it any exaggeration to put it this way? When the world-appeal for peace was proclaimed, the principle of "good-will to men" was made absolutely basic in it. Had it succeeded, doubtless, the knell of warfare as an international method would have been sounded. It failed. Our country joined the allies in an undertaking which the unsuccessful effort for peace had itself characterized as unsocial and un-Christian. Was it at all inconsistent then, that a Federal act should exempt all corporate groups that had made a steadfast record in favor of the very principles that the government had commended to the world at large? Was it not as though the Federal act spoke in this way: "Your position contains the hope of the world. Cherish it. Cultivate it. Soon we shall need you to propagate it. Indeed, we know you will voluntarily set to work with it, even amidst the smoke of battle. We see your healing ministrations. They seem small to you. We assure you they have a large place in the reconstruction of the world."

In such a view we may not be relieved from the sense of separateness, from the fear of feeling superior. If, however, our country has put this upon us, we should not shirk the obligation of duty at any cost. How else is the better world-order to come? Force will not bring it. But is it not possible that even very small organized groups may become the centres from which it may spread over the whole world?

J. H. B.

"NATIONAL SERVICE."

DEAR FRIEND:—

May I offer a few thoughts concerning plans for organizing "National Service" for Friends and others who conscientiously object to taking part in war?

(1) It is constantly assumed by most people who use the term "National Service" that it means either service connected with the defense of the country, or at least service directly under the Government. The idea is commonly held that a person's ordinary business, whether he works on his own account or for others, is not national service, but service of self and family. Ought not Friends to do their best to break down this pernicious doctrine, and insist (a) that the real purpose of all business is to supply the needs of the community, and (b) that no Christian ought to be engaged in any business that is not of benefit to society? If this view were commonly held—if, that is, people in business were generally regarded, as they ought to be, as persons "out" to serve the community and not simply to make a living for themselves, would it be held that a person must leave his business in order to engage in "national service"?

(2) Friends profess to seek for the guidance of the Holy Spirit in all the affairs of life, "secular" and spiritual; and therefore if they are living up to their profession they ought ideally to regard their ordinary business as a vocation, as much as if they were ministers of religion. If they are able to so regard it, can they rightly leave it at the dictation of a Government authority? This sense of vocation would not preclude them from volunteering to do work for some special and pressing need, such as the supply of food; but it would seem that they ought to retain freedom to do what they are inwardly led to do.

(3). It may be right and wise to organize schemes of work for persons who feel the call to engage in such special and temporary forms of service. But if these are deliberately designed as alternatives to military service, and exemption is asked for or accepted on the ground that this other work will be undertaken, are not the organizers making themselves part of a Conscription measure, and facilitating its imposition on the country?

(4). I am not myself inclined to attach prime importance to the consideration that those who undertake such forms of service are probably releasing others for the army or for making munitions; for we must recognize freedom of conscience in others as well as ourselves and be prepared to release them if that is what they think to be their duty. Also, any useful work whatever might conceivably be done by some one else, and the rigid carrying out of this rule of no-substitution would end logically in our doing nothing at all in time of war. But to some it appeals strongly; and we need to be on our guard against allowing tender consciences to be forced into situations that appear to them equivocal.

My only excuse for offering these thoughts is that I have been very closely concerned with helping the conscientious objectors in this country, and that such considerations have been forced on my attention. I fear there is danger of their being overlooked.

I am, thine, faithfully,

EDWARD GRUBB.

CROYDON, England, Sixth Month 17, 1917.

—In The American Friend.

QUAKERISM IN ENGLAND UNCHANGED BY THE WAR.

Under the above caption a correspondent of the New York Evening Post devotes nearly two columns to an able defence of the Society in England. Referring to the statement that as many as 500 members "have joined the colors" the writer comments:

There can be no doubt, however, that these divergences from the traditional Quaker positions are exceptional, and not typical. As in all other religious bodies, the attachment of many members has rested mainly on hereditary or sentimental grounds, and the test of the war has revealed to what extent their connection with the Society has been a matter of birth and up-bringing. Some, too, valued the quiet respectability associated with membership without themselves having any real grip of the principles for which the early Quakers suffered. Certainly, there has been no hesitation or ambiguity in the corporate messages of the Society, and it is these only that can fairly be taken as representing its real spirit. The Yearly Meeting just held has issued an appeal to Christians of all the Churches which, in its protest against the continuance of the war—as "multiplying evil and planting the seeds of bitterness which can never bear the fruit of peace"—is so outspoken that it has been violently attacked in the secular press.

We venture to copy two other paragraphs from this interesting article. It is signed by H. W. H.

Those who differ most widely from the Quaker views about war can not but admire the services the Society has rendered in the relief of war's victims. An account has already been given in this correspondence of the practical contribution made by a Quaker organization to the rebuilding of such of the devastated districts of Belgium and Northern France as are accessible to British effort. A sum of no less than $585,000 has been spent to date by this War Victims' Relief Committee. Then there is the Friends' Ambulance Unit, with a membership of about 1,200. Up to May last the ambulances of the Unit had carried 141,000 wounded and sick soldiers at the front, and 24,000 on the two hospital ships in the Mediterranean and the Channel. It had also dealt with nearly 11,000 patients in its own hospitals at Dunkirk, Ypres, and Poperinghe. These returns do not include the thousands of patients who have passed through hospitals at home in which the Unit has supplied the orderly staff, nor the very large number of men carried on the four hospital trains. The Friends' Emergency Committee for Helping Aliens has now about 6,000 "enemy aliens" under its care, most of them the wives and children of Germans who have been interned. Many of these would otherwise be in real distress, having had to leave their former homes and go into crowded lodgings, where they had no means of subsistence other than a meagre Government allowance. Agents of the Committee have also effected many alleviations of the conditions in the internment camps themselves.

The Society of Friends has naturally been impelled to undertake a sort of unofficial leadership in the solution of the various problems connected with conscientious objectors. Its principal organ, The Friend, will be warmly thanked by future historians of this subject for the particulars of tribunal hearings that have been published in its weekly supplements. At present there are only about seventy Friends among the conscientious objectors in prison, but the Society has not confined its helpful offices to these. There is a Visitation of Prisoners Committee, which, among other things, has held a fortnightly meeting for worship in the great C. O. Corral at Wormwood Scrubs. This meeting has been attended by hundreds of non-Friends, most of whom have gladly accepted copies of the "Book of Discipline" and other Quaker literature. Though there has been no attempt at proselytizing, it is to be expected that many of these men, when they obtain their release, will remain under Quaker influences, even if they do not cast in their lot together with the Society that has thus ministered to their needs.

DOES THY HOUSE NEED SCREENING?

This article came with a personal letter to one of the Editors as follows:—

31, RUE BERGERE, 31—Paris, Eighth Month 7, 1917.

Enclosed thee will find, I hope, a little article I have just prepared, thinking you might be able to use it for THE FRIEND. If it seems unsuitable don't bother about trying to send it back, but I should be glad to hear if thee receives it. A postal card would do.

It does not say anything about the war—perhaps thee will be glad it doesn't; I know I am!

I should be glad to have THE FRIEND send to me at the address above. No copy has reached me since last Tenth or Eleventh Month.

Last night Morris and Henry invited William Duguid (Mary has already left for Savoy), Leah Cadbury, Francis Goodhue, Howard and Kitty Elkinton, Ernest Brown, George Downing, Edith Coale and ourselves to dinner in a little private dining-room. It did seem like home, but I think Grace and I enjoyed it even more than the rest, because they'd only just left Philadelphia. There is a meeting down at the Hotel Britannique, the headquarters of British Friends, on First-day evenings, which does taste good to us. I expect we shall see many, if not all those named this evening. M. E. L. and J. H. S. read us their reports to the Committee of Fifteen. There will be a great field of work for our Society if we measure up to it as the English have done and as I believe with Divine help we will.

My work is to release D. A. Davis [of the Alliance Universelle des Unions Chrétiennes de Jeunes Gens, Comité Universel—Genève (Suisse)] whose name appears at the head of this letter, so he can be entirely free for the needs of the troopers and sailors. For this work there are already nearly forty secretaries here. I suppose hundreds more will be needed.

ALFRED LOWRY, JR.

I suppose there is no verse we are any more familiar with or have more often heard quoted in meeting or elsewhere, than that occurring towards the end of the third chapter of the Book of Revelation: "Behold, I stand at the door and knock: if any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me." The reason why we are so familiar with it is because, to us Anglo-Saxons at least, the figure is such a natural and forceful one. Our homes signify all that is most intimate and sacred in our outward life, how better, therefore, could we express the idea of Christ's coming into our spirit than by the easy figure of opening the door to Him and receiving Him as a guest into our home?

And this figure will bear being carried farther than the initial opening of the door and the first meal.

There are those who act as if they were conferring a favor on the lowly Jesus to let Him in at all, and who are so engrossed with the ordinary cares of life that they pay Him scarcely any further attention, and whereas they can recall years afterward the very day and hour of His first coming to them, they were too preoccupied to be aware when He went quietly away again, for He does not stay where He is not wanted.

But most of us have some sense of the fitness of things: we realize that merely opening the door is not enough if we leave the squalor and confusion of our lives untouched. We realize that we ought to make of our hearts a place where Jesus will want to come and stay, a home we need not be too ashamed of. So we sweep and clean and straighten up the furniture in one or two rooms and mow the front lawn, and hope things will stay that way, and that He will not notice the closets filled with dirty linen, the cobwebs in the dark corners and the clutter in the back-yard. Others open a part of their homes to Jesus and keep all the rest locked up, forgetting that He is happier when He can roam at will through even the two or three little rooms in the simple white-washed cottage of a child than when confined to one suite, furnished in dingy splendor, of some great mansion, whose owner keeps the keys of all the other apartments to himself.

We have almost all of us, however, as I said, a more or less well-defined consciousness of what we ought to do, if we are really to receive Jesus into our lives. We know that we should open up our whole spiritual home to Him. We know that He wants to come and live with us—not just to be invited to dinner on First-days and Christmas, when we are in our best clothes and on our best behavior—not to weddings and funerals and such other times of unusual joy and anxiety as may come to us. We know that our religious life must be honest and open and clean, an affair of every day, and, if possible, of every hour as well, and we do try, with God's help, to make of our hearts a home where Christ will love to come and stay. He wants to stay—to abide: think how often the word "abide" occurs in the Gospels. We do desire, too, and earnestly, that from the windows of our soul there may shine forth, when it is night outside, the Light of Christ into the lives of those around us, for we know that even though the darkness comprehend it not, this Light will shine more and more unto the perfect day—until for them, too, the day dawn and the day-star arise in their hearts.

I do not know how it may be with others, yet I realize that in my own case these very windows are too much neglected, in my effort to make for my Master a fit place for Him to dwell in, a home where, like the home in Bethany, He will want to come and stay. I have been lately conscious how badly these windows of mine want screening in. Is your home "not made with hands" never troubled with swarming flies? If so, you are indeed fortunate.

To some of us there come darting in, often just when we want particularly, like Mary, to sit at Jesus' feet and hear His word, the great black flies of our evil thoughts, dirt-carrying and disease-laden, full of all uncleanness, flying about so that it is next to impossible to catch them, and so filling the room with their continual buzzing that we can no longer hear the low-spoken words of the Master, which we had been so hungry for. Sometimes there are mosquitoes, too; the envious and resentments and unfair criticisms and unkind words which are bred in the swamps of human meanness (where the "oil of gladness" must be poured out before they will cease to live), and come doling about, leaving poison and fever in their stings.

If we permit this, have we done enough towards making our heart a home for Jesus?

There are those who try to rid themselves of these pests by darkening their houses, shutting out all the sunshine of life, and making it appear as if no laughter was ever heard there. That is not the best way.

Others do not bow the shutters but they close down all the windows. This is effective, it is true, but how soon the rooms grow stuffy. The same air is breathed and rebreathed. That is not the best way, either, for we shut ourselves off from so much of the freshness in life. Think how Jesus loved the open air, how much of the time He was out of doors. We must keep our windows open—not, perhaps, to "every wind of doctrine," it is true, but to the health-bringing breezes from fields and woods and hills and sea, and more especially, to the scent of the flowers in our neighbor's garden over the way. He may not think about all things just as we do, yet he does have his love for his plants rewarded.

Therefore, I want to screen my windows. That is the only satisfactory way. We must, of course, make every effort, too, to get rid of all the heaps of filth and rottenness about us, where these disgusting pests of our imagination can breed. But nearly always there will be left some to torment us. You all know what one single fly can do when one is trying to rest, and how they multiply in next to no time. So I want screens: the best ones I can get, fine-meshed, of interwoven, "rust-proof" faith and love, with tight-fitting frames of prayer and watchfulness.

Then I shall have for my Christ a home that I can gladly ask Him to, and He will knock gladly on my door, towards supper time.

ALFRED LOWRY, JR.

PARIS, FRANCE, Eighth Month 7, 1917.

THE ADVENTURE OF PACIFISM.

[We have made some note in a previous number of the imprisonment of Corder Catchpool. The following was written shortly before his arrest.]

In an age of criticism there are always some who look upon life as a set of phenomena requiring to be catalogued. Pigeon-hole a personality to your own satisfaction, and the new life that may be surging through it will cause little discomfort to the easy conscience which has thus lightly disposed of it. But you can never catalogue soul, and the world at large certainly can never regard pacifism objectively, because it is a growth, a leaven at work, a force that will change men's lives and build a new, wholesome, saner order of human society upon the ruins of the old. It is intensely social, striving to realize for mankind as a whole progress towards a noble destiny. It is united by the inspiration of a common ideal, a passionate strength of common purpose.

Pacifists can appreciate the love of adventure, for above all else it appeals to them. The man who equates pacifism with pusillanimity forgets that war is primarily the outcome of fear and ignorance and prejudice. Pacifists refuse to regard a man as an enemy because someone else tells them to do so. And even if they did, they would not think of meeting him with gas and bombs and bayonets, because they know that love is the only power that can redeem, and for them redemption is the only victory. They have the courage of an unalterable faith in human nature, and refuse to be hypnotized into the game of mutual slaughter, however adventurous it may seem, however bravely men bear the pain they inflict and receive. They cannot be relieved of conscience, independence, manhood, at the dictates of statecraft. They choose to be men, and call others to join them, standing unweaponed and fearless, seeking to know and to follow Truth in the midst of lies, asking no protection but that which God chooses for those that believe Him.

Already in other countries men are rallying to the inspiration of this new ideal, breaking down the artificial barriers that isolate race from race, or that permit contact mainly for infection from the virus of each other's sores. Only as mankind embarks increasingly upon this, the supreme adventure of life—trust in the power of love; good-will, reconciliation—will the world be rid of the degrading survival of barbarism by which it is enslaved. No doubt a mind to whom the idea of pacifism is as yet unknown will be quite ready to treat it on the label and pigeon-hole system, if encouraged to do so, but the reception of a new ideal may be very different when appeal is made to the noblest aspirations. This has been my own experience in discussing pacifism with people in France—while serving for eighteen months at the front in Flanders with the "Service de Santé" of the French army, frequently messing with the doctors and officers, I spoke constantly to them, and to the men, of the principles to which I am committed. I met with almost universal sympathy. "Your ideals are very beautiful; if everyone believed as you do there would be no war. I respect them, but in the present state of the world they are not practicable." Occasionally there was a fuller measure of agreement, but this was the usual comment. The attitude was unequivocal towards those who sincerely held pacifist views. "You cannot do other than remain loyal to your convictions."

Even when, early last summer, I felt that I could better serve humanity by returning to England to work for peace and goodwill among men than by remaining at the front, in only a few cases was there failure to understand and sympathize, although the situation had become much more difficult to explain. Before leaving France, I went to Paris and took leave of the old colonel under whom I had worked earlier in the campaign. I had a long talk with him at the Ministère de la Guerre. He begged me to accept a testimonial to the value of my services to the French wounded, which he thought would help me in appearing before the Tribunals.

Now, when very many of my old friends in France know that I am awaiting arrest, I frequently have letters with the words of encouragement which French warm-heartedness knows so well how to give, begging me to stand firm to principle, at all costs, not because they fully understand or agree, but because they realize that to do so is the only possible course which a true man, a friend fit for their love and respect, can take without dishonor.—CORDER CATCHPOOL, in Friends' Fellowship Papers.

WONDERMENT.

As some child perched upon a hillock smiles

In wonderment beside the summer sea,
So I upon my spirit hillock smile

As vagrant fancies wander here to me;
I, too, look out upon a boundless main,

The sea of life, whose rhythmic ebb and flow
Sings to me here, at times so sweetly sings,
Then comes a wailing chord of unspent weal.

The blue, the blue, the spirit's wonder hue,
That back reflects the soft-toned azure sky,
The hue to longest hold our childish hearts,
And keep us asking the All Father why;
So like the child, why, God, is't thus and so,
What means the song that ever comes to me;
Now so triumphant, now so like a dirge,
From out that boundless tide, humanity?

At times the tempests lash it into green,
The calm but follows in a deeper blue:
Here on my hillock do I wonder still
And, finite, try so hard to think it through;
If, at the last, my questioning at rest,
I shall have caught His tenderness in song
I shall be glad I shared the wonderment
Of love and work and play and tears and wrong.

FLORA SHUFELT RIVOLA, in the Springfield Republican.

LET this be thy whole endeavor, this thy prayer, this thy desire—that thou mayest be stripped of all selfishness, and with entire simplicity follow Jesus only.—THOMAS A KEMPIS.

YOUNGER FRIENDS.

THE VISION.

I

I sat alone in my study,
My cheery fire burned low,
The red and dying embers
Sent forth a feeble glow.
Outside the wind was howling,
It whistled through the trees,
Inside was warmth and comfort,
Where I sat in welcome ease.

II

As thus I sat in silence
I slowly fell asleep,
And in my dreams beside me
I heard a woman weep.
And lo! an angel led me,
He held me by the hand,
And he and I were walking
In a far and distant land.

III

I looked down at the woman,
And lo! her child lay dead,
The mother, too, was dying
Because of lack of bread.
I could not bear to see them,
The angel led me on,
Through pleasant fields he led me,
And sad he looked and wan.

IV

He led me to a farm-house,
Some peaceful peasant's home,
The house lay all in ruins,
The people far did roam.
The fields once green and fertile,
Where farmers' crops did grow,
Now lay in waste in trenches,
For warding off the foe.

V

Then we approached a city,
Once peaceful and serene,
The buildings all were shattered,
It was a dreadful scene!
The people who had lived there,
Among the ruins lay,
And when at last they staggered out,
Half clothed, half starved were they.

VI

And then the angel spoke to me,
These were the words he said:
"When I was naked ye clothed me,
When hungry, ye gave me bread;
Even as thou hast done this Unto one of the least of these,
Who were caused to suffer unjustly,
Thou hast done it unto me."

—S. L. Y., AGED FIFTEEN.

THE OLDEST SHIP IN THE WORLD.—The story of the Success is one of the most interesting and extraordinary that could be told of the life of any vessel, exceeding in weirdness Vanderdecken's famous legend, "The Flying Dutchman," or Coleridge's "Ancient Mariner." If the spirits of the troubled lives which passed through years of sorrow and suffering in the dark, deep cells of the Success, could return to the scene of their torment, the old convict ship would indeed be haunted.

The Success was launched at Moulmain, British India, as far back as 1790. She is built of solid Burman teakwood, and the skill of her coolie builders is attested to, not only by her stanch construction, but also by the many beautiful and cleverly wrought bits of woodcraft, which may still be seen from stern to bow. The graceful figure of a woman adorns her prow.

For ten or twelve years she pursued an honorable career as a merchantman, her decks sweet with the scent of Indian spices and aromatic teas, and her hold laden with rich cargoes of ivory, precious stones and other luxurious goods of the Orient. As commodore of the Anglo-India Merchantman Fleet, it was not infrequently her privilege to carry in her cabin, kings and maharajas, and wealthy traders. Traces of elaborate heraldic signs and escutcheons may still be seen on the vessel.

In those days beautiful brass guns bristled from her side, and she is recorded as having had many a spirited encounter with various pirate craft of the time. In one instance she met and successfully beat off a French sea robber, La Rosa, in the Bay of Bengal. The deep impressions where the enemies' fire entered are still visible just above her water line.

In 1802, however, the little merchantman fell from caste, when she was chartered by the British Government to transport such prisoners as could not be accommodated in home jails, to the penal settlements in Australia; and instead of being the home of mighty potentates, she then became the harbor of England's most desperate criminals. At that time the dark, deep, sunless, unventilated cells were built upon her, 'tween-deck and lower deck, for the reception of her human freightage, which for nearly fifty years she carried over the sixteen thousand miles of ocean separating England and her colonies.

Those were days when offenses, which to-day would be termed petty, and warranting at most, but a small fine, were punishable with a term of imprisonment extending from seven years to that of a natural lifetime. Instances are on file where even women and children were subjected to transportation for thefts of a small pork pie or a square of bleached linen.

The cruel treatment meted out to the poor unfortunates upon these voyages was barbarous beyond words, the wardens seeming to have vied with one another in the invention of means by which to break the spirits of the prisoners in their charge; and it is not to be wondered at that at least thirty-three per cent. of those embarking are said to have died before anchor was cast in Melbourne Bay, and that the remaining number were seldom able to go ashore unaided. Reports of the human outrages committed reached the public, and finally aroused a protest in Australia, leading to the abandonment of the prison-hulk system in 1857.

For some years following, the Success and her sister ships were used as ammunition stores in Sydney Harbor, but later were ordered sold by the British Government, with the express condition that they be broken up, in order that all memory of their infamous past be lost to public recollection. By a clerical error, however, this condition did not appear upon the terms of sale of the Success, and so she has come to be the only British prison ship afloat.—ETHEL S. RHODA, in Forward.

Some of our readers may have seen this old ship two or three years ago, when it was exhibited near Philadelphia. Among the more pleasant objects shown, were pictures and framed notices of religious meetings held with the convicts before they left England, in which Elizabeth Fry and other English Friends were interested.

HORACE MANN was a great educator. He studied the unfolding of the mind and the character. He knew the laws of mental growth, and he had this to say about the psychology of soul-development: "Doing nothing for others is the undoing of one's self." Kindness, brotherly love, self-sacrifice are qualities that build up character and make for power.

SOME EXTRACTS FROM THE MEMORANDUM OF ABNER HEALD, OF MIDDLETON, OHIO, WHILE ON A RELIGIOUS VISIT TO NORTH CAROLINA YEARLY MEETING.

On twenty-fourth of Ninth Month, 1841, I took leave of my beloved family and set out on a visit to Friends and others in Tennessee, North Carolina, Virginia, etc. (Wm. Fawcett was his companion, and they rode on horse-back the whole distance.)

Eleventh Month 4th.—The Yearly Meeting opened. Attended the several sittings of Yearly Meeting in silence, till 12th, when it closed.

At Deep River Meeting I, through deep wading, felt relieved, and after the conclusion, the enemy tried and buffeted me so much that I had almost drawn the conclusion that the appointment of the meeting and labors therein were all in my own will, but after a time of deep distress his temptation ended, then I recollected the temptations that our Saviour endured, and when the temptations ended angels came and ministered unto Him. I thought that sweet communion I then felt was comparable to the ministering of angels and I was enabled to praise His holy name.

Twelfth Month 8th.—Attended Men's Meeting. A pretty large gathering in which I sat about half an hour in quiet and calm. Then a subject presented itself with which I arose, and as I moved on with a strict attention to the opening it proved a favored season and many were broken into tears.

First-day, 26th.—Attended meeting at Simons Creek, after which I felt the workings of the Father's love to fill my heart.

1842, First Month 12th.—Had an appointed meeting at Gunpowder. Nearly silent, but near the close way opened for a short communication on the subject of the necessity there was for all to feel and experience that we of ourselves can do nothing that would advance the Redeemer's Kingdom. Particularly the Ministers of the Gospel must recognize this, in order that they may be clothed with that baptizing power that accompanied Peter's ministry at the house of Cornelius, and that proved effectual as the preaching of Jonah to the Ninevites.

27th.—Had an appointed meeting, which I attended and found a large collection of Friends and others assembled where-in the people were looking for words. Way opened for a short communication, but not for delivering fully the whole counsel of God. The meeting closed in solemn supplication. I had to regret that I had not been more watchful and had not waited for more clearness.

First-day, 30th.—Attended a meeting at Bellefonte, wherein I found my mind drawn to tell them that I believed many of them had set out right, that the Lord in His abundant mercy had been pleased to enable them to see the state of their oppression under a hard taskmaster, and had brought them out and was disposed to lead them safely through if they would follow Him, but a fear had entered many minds that there was a danger of some of them turning back into spiritual Egypt, of which danger there was a sensible feeling. If there was an enduring of the many trials and sufferings of the tribulated followers of the Lamb of God, the Lord would raise up amongst them as it were, a Moses, standing upon the mountain in the day of battle with hands stretched out to God for Israel.

" . . . You are not mistaken in supposing that I regard the Society of Friends with very deep respect & admiration. They have stood up for principles wh all the world had forgotten & I tell you honestly, that I am growing more & more to see the deep debt humanity owes them, not only as the true apostles of education, but as the denouncers of War—the last scourge of mankind & yet the parent of seven devils worse than itself."—From a Letter from Charles Kingsley (1810-1875), quoted in the Journal of the Friends' Historical Society.

"What a man hath felt and tasted, one cannot beat him off from by argument."

For "THE FRIEND."

A TEACHER'S TRIP WEST.

The generosity and thoughtfulness of the late T. Wister Brown have laid under lasting obligations all Friends who are teachers and all who are interested in opportunities for Friends' teaching to become better fitted for their work. Various teachers are attending summer schools this year by virtue of the T. Wister Brown Teachers' Fund, several teachers of the past, present and future are to spend the coming year in study; and at least one is enjoying an educational trip across the continent, thanks to the Fund.

My objective points are the annual convention of the National Educational Association, to be held at Portland, Oregon, Seventh Month 7th-14th, and the Annual Conference of the California High School Teachers' Association, to be held in conjunction with the summer session of the University of California, at Berkeley, Seventh Month 16th-20th. With these objectives in view it is my intention to pick up as much, coming and going, of things educational and recreational, as may be gathered incidentally, without interfering with the main purpose of the trip. The journey is to be confined to northern routes, going by the Canadian Pacific Railway and returning by the Great Northern.

I left the Reading Terminal, Philadelphia, at 8.05 P. M., in the Lehigh Valley's Niagara Falls and Canadian Express. I will not attempt a description of the beauty of the Lehigh Valley route, for the good reason that I did not see it. For this there are three reasons, any one of which is persuasive and any two convincing: First, I passed through in the night; second, I was in an upper berth; third, I was sound asleep. The following morning a lady was overheard remarking about the wonderful beauty of Wilkes-Barre, with its rare situation, as it stood out in its setting of darkness, radiant with electric lights.

About six o'clock the next morning, Third-day, Sixth Month 26th, it began to rain, and it was pouring when the train pulled into Niagara Falls Station, an hour and a half later. By the time a breakfast was found and disposed of it was only raining gently. This did not interfere with a walk to the Falls. Though one likes to see such natural wonders under the best conditions of sun and air, there is something peculiarly charming in the harmony of soft gray tones which fog and mist and rain give to earth and sky and sea—and Niagara.

After walking around for some time, getting views and sprays from many angles, I came out on Prospect Point, where a colored man, close to forty, clad in shabby and even ragged garments, was gazing intently at the spectacle. Knowing that a little human sympathy helps on such occasions, as on all others, and perhaps feeling quite as much the need of a kindred soul to deepen my own enjoyment as the desire to be friendly to him, I asked him what he thought of it. His dark face brightened, if it did not really lighten, as he said: "It suitinly is a grand sight. I've always read about it, and I've been longin' all my life to see it." He told me he was from Tennessee, and now that he had come to Buffalo for work, he had taken the first chance he could get to come over and see the Falls.

It was a little rainy to spend very long out of doors, so I took advantage of the hour at my disposal to visit the "Home of Shredded Wheat," the second wonder of Niagara! I suppose there isn't a better managed plant of its kind in the world. The shredded wheat biscuits, two millions a day of them, are manufactured under conditions of the most scrupulous cleanliness and the workers are treated with great consideration for their welfare. The factory is built largely of glass, and is situated in the residential district. It is no blot on the neighborhood. The processes of manufacture and packing are all most interesting. The wheat is thoroughly cleaned, then steamed soft, then partially dried, so as to be just right for shredding, which is made possible by the gluten in the wheat, and done between rollers, one of which is grooved. The shreds are piled up until enough are laid together for the biscuits, which are then cut and run into the ovens for thorough baking. The curling process is completed in the driers. Then the little bales are packed in the cartons, which in turn are packed into cases. The lids are fastened down by automatic nailers, which put all the nails in at once, and then this popular food is ready for shipment all over the country.

A great deal is done by the Company in the line of social welfare work for their employees. Forty-eight hours is the week's work. The plant is shut down every Seventh-day at eleven o'clock. The hours on other days are from 7 to 5.30, with a full hour for lunch and recreation, and fifteen minutes in the middle of the forenoon and also in the middle of the afternoon for relaxation. A substantial luncheon is furnished every girl employed free of all charge. A nominal charge of ten cents is made for each man's luncheon. There may be two reasons for this, he is paid more and eats that much more on the average.

Visitors are served with a very dainty lunch of shredded wheat biscuits, fruit, sugar and cream, plus biscuits and cheese, while a demonstrator instructs them as to the uses of the two forms of shredded wheat made there. Here is a recipe for the readers of THE FRIEND, which I have never used myself, partly because it was new to me. Hollow out the top of the shredded wheat biscuits, break an egg into each depression, and place in a hot oven. By the time the wheat is crisped the eggs will be cooked. What to do next need not be told.

Leaving Niagara Falls at ten o'clock, I took the trip down the gorge of the Niagara River, "the most scenic trolley trip in the world," the advertising says. There is no question about its being a wonderful ride. The power of the rapids is somehow more comprehensible and in a way more impressive than the Falls themselves. In an hour we were aboard the trim steamer Cayuga, steaming down the peaceful homestretch of the Niagara River, and out into Lake Ontario, passing Fort Niagara, at the mouth of the river, with its training camp for some 2000 candidates for army officers. A few weeks back they started in with 2500 young men. This number has been reduced, they say, to 1800, by a process of weeding out. Would that all the armies might be entirely weeded out by processes as painless!

The trip to Toronto was uneventful. The lake was smooth, but it was raining so constantly that the view was cut off, and it was pleasanter to remain inside. It was a glad surprise to be met at the wharf in Toronto by a former Select School pupil, now residing in Toronto, who guided me about the city that afternoon. It is a fine city, the second in point of size in Canada, the capital of the Province of Ontario, and the seat of the University of Toronto, the official university of the Province. We spent a good part of the afternoon at the University, seeing the buildings and in conversation with some of the professors and officials.

The institution is really a federation of colleges, each in some measure independent, but yielding many functions to the federal or university authorities. No other university system was taken as a model, but certain features of English, Scotch and American universities may be found here. The main constituent colleges are University College, undenominational and provincial, Victoria College, Methodist, Trinity College, Anglican, and St. Michael's College, Roman Catholic, Knox College, a Presbyterian divinity school, and Wycliffe, an Anglican divinity college, are also federated, and thirteen other institutions of various sorts are "affiliated."

Students enter only on examination. I saw a large hall pretty well filled with boys and girls, toiling over their matriculation examinations, which are set by the provincial Department of Education, as are final examinations for all the high schools and collegiate institutes—a local name for the larger and most efficient high schools—in the Province.

During the summer the University buildings and grounds are given over almost entirely to the housing and training of volunteers for the army. The list of University graduates and students already killed or maimed for life is appalling. The number of male students has fallen off so as to be almost negligible. The number of women students has increased greatly, and this may be regarded as one of the good things which will issue from the war, so productive as it is in general of things evil. Families who have sent their sons to college are now sending them to the war. They know not if they will ever return. They are feeling that they must look to their daughters to bear the burdens of the future, and they feel as never before that the girls must have the best training that can be given them. The likelihood of marriage for many of them is becoming increasingly remote. These and other considerations are influencing conservative families who have never thought of sending their young women to college to do so now. While they are not coming in in sufficient numbers to replace the young men, they are coming in greatly increased force and are a source of power and hope for the future.

It was my intention to run out some twenty-five miles to Pickering to attend the morning session of the Conservative Canada Yearly Meeting, which was said to be in session, but finding the train service inconvenient, and, in fact, insufficient to bring me back in time for the two o'clock train for Port McNicoll, I spent the morning in a call at the office of Walter D. Gregory, a prominent lawyer and leading Toronto Friend, and in another visit to the University.

Pickering College, the boarding-school under the care of Canada Friends, has been suspended, and the building given over to the government for use as a hospital for soldiers who are suffering from certain forms of mental or nervous breakdown. I never saw so many specimens of mutilated physical humanity in so short a time as during my twenty-five hours in Toronto. Young men, fine looking fellows, with one or both arms or one or both legs gone, are common sights.

The amount of nervous wreckage strewn over Canada is beyond belief. Just to suggest something of it, let me say that magnificent Hart Hall, the million-and-a-half dollar building now being completed for a centre of social life for University of Toronto students, has been entirely given over to "Re-education." This means the re-training of men to use their original powers. Lots of men have nothing apparent the matter with their legs or arms, only they cannot use them. Some shock may have deprived them completely of the power to walk, for example. So they have to be "re-educated." The University Department of Psychology has undertaken this re-education. Divers machines and devices and exercises have been invented and arranged to give the needed training, and scores of men have been helped or cured.

I said a little while back that the University buildings had been given largely over to the military. This was impressed upon me as I went to luncheon with Dean Robertson, of Victoria College, in the dining hall of the men's residence hall, a fine new building accommodating some 250 students. The hall was completely filled with young men in khaki and the long table on the raised platform at the end, occupied usually by the faculty, was entirely filled by army officers, except for the Dean, two other Victoria College professors and myself. Only four civilians out of some 300! Two young officers of the Royal Flying Corps sat opposite me. They were giving instruction in aviation.

It was very pleasant to meet again Professor Charles B. Sissons, of Victoria College, whose wife was and is a Philadelphia Friend, Anna Normart Sissons. He, like scores of other university men, is working as a farm laborer some distance from Toronto this summer, but he chanced to be in the city in connection with the publication of his new book, "The Bilingual Schools of Canada," a historical argument on a very difficult Canadian subject. The race problem is quite as pressing in Canada as in some other places, and the Roman Catholic question is equally perplexing.

The French of Quebec have remained the most unprogressive element in Canada, persistently clinging to their language and institutions, and almost fanatically devoted to their Catholic faith. Their language and institutions have certain guaranteed constitutional rights, which add to the difficulty.

The chief topic of discussion just now is a possible conscription law. The leading opponent of such a law is Sir Wilfred Laurier, former premier, brilliant leader of French Catholics, and typical of all that is best among them. The prevalent feeling is that the French are "slackers." Few of them have volunteered for the war. They are even less sympathetic with their French brethren in the old country than with their English Protestant Canadian neighbors, because they think that the French in France have proved faithless to their religion and repudiated their most sacred traditions and obligations. How to bring the reluctant French to do their share in the war is the problem of the hour. Some form of conscription seems inevitable. I have not heard or read a word of opposition to it, on the ground of conscientious objection to all war.

Fourth-day afternoon, at two o'clock, I left Toronto, by a special train on the C. P. R., for Port McNicoll, to take a steamer through Georgian Bay, Lakes Huron and Superior to Fort William, where I am to board the train which is to take me on to Winnipeg and westward into the Canadian Rockies. The country through which we pass is Canada's best farming land. It is rough and conditions are not favorable to prosperity, yet there are signs of comfort and industry, and one might find much less favored sections in the United States.

The steamer Kewatin was waiting for us at Port McNicoll, a fine Clyde-built boat, capable of accommodating comfortably 250 passengers. The Canadian Pacific makes a great point of excellent meal service on its steamers and trains, and to judge by the meals on the Kewatin it succeeds. While there may have been greater variety on some of the ocean steamers on which I have traveled, I have never found the food better, better cooked and so well served. Georgian Bay is a great summer resort for Canadians, bordered by hotels and cottages, and set with multitudes of islands. It is the most beautiful part of the Great Lakes. Our weather has been superb, we have had the rarest day in this month of days. The air, the light, the clouds, the young and crescent moon, the sunset, lingering with its rich and gorgeous glow, until past nine o'clock, and the eternal stars, all have combined to make the day memorable.

At noon we reached the famous "Soo," or Sault de Ste. Marie, which connects Lake Huron with Lake Superior. Nature did not make a passage for big boats between these lakes, but filled the connecting stream with rapids which only Indians and other intrepid canoeists care to shoot. The American and Canadian Governments have vied with each other in building a succession of four or five locks, each greater than its predecessors. Our boat had to wait a little while at the big Canadian lock for the passing of the Noronic, the big Grand Trunk steamer, the largest passenger boat on the lakes, running between Port McArthur on Lake Superior to Sarnia on Lake Huron. After a brief half hour, the lock floated our steamer up to the Superior level, and soon we were out on the broad waters, out of sight of land, steaming straight away toward Port Arthur and Fort William, where we are due at 8.30 to-morrow morning.

WALTER W. HAVILAND.

ON LAKE SUPERIOR, Fifth-day, Sixth Month 28, 1917.

(To be continued.)

"We cannot improve the future except by disturbing the present" was a saying of General Booth. It may be far easier to let things alone, far more comfortable to leave the old order undisturbed, and refuse investigation and reform; but progress and improvement do not come by settling contentedly down with what is. We may pay too high a price for peace, however much the ease-loving soul longs for it. Disturbance is often more healthful than calm.

VESPER THOUGHTS AT WESTTOWN

Some years ago I was, one day, rather bewailing the noise and bustle of a certain dear friend of mine. She was a woman of fine character, but always hurried and nervous in manner. The woman to whom I was speaking said to me, in reply to my complaint, "My dear, she has not yet learned to 'go softly.'" In a flash, I had a vision of that high-strung, excitable character transformed by love and service into a poised, strong and gracious person—and the picture suggested by those few words has never been forgotten. It has seemed to me that perhaps we might profitably consider the phrase "go softly" in reference to our own lives in these troubled days, when the ideal is so increasingly difficult to attain. Long before the war cloud settled upon us and cast us into manifold reasonings and heart-searchings, another cloud, far less tangible, but just as destructive in the last analysis, was slowly enveloping us—a cloud which can be dispelled only by the breath of heaven and our own determination. It has many names, and no doubt many souls in all ages have been conscious of it—though surely with less reason than we—and many manifestations, and it affects many people not at all, but the weight of it is strong on the spirits of many others. One name for this condition of affairs might be "The increasing multitude of things"—another—"Following the crowd"—and its very familiar phraseology runs something like this: "I really think we must get one, dear—they are so convenient, and everyone has one now." It may be "one" almost anything that makes for ease and a sense of general well-being. Some of the signs of its development are costlier clothes, finer homes, more expensive entertaining, an automobile or a larger one. And its ultimate result is insidious, but sure materialism with the things of the Spirit crowded out. To a large part of the world's population, just now, this subject would seem far from portentous. War has stripped life of all but the grimmest realities for millions of people. But after it is over, unless something more positive, more vital, than the memory of deprivation and suffering grips us, we shall be in danger of slipping back into the easy way. And not only upon us are the complexities of social life falling, but upon our children as well. In a certain community not outrageously rich or worldly as such things go, a group of children, eleven or twelve years of age, formed an exclusive club, which is entertained at the homes of its members. One entertainment last winter consisted in the group being taken in limousines to Keith's Theatre in Philadelphia, and afterward to supper at the "Bellevue-Stratford." This is not an exaggerated case—some of those children came from Friends' homes and all from families with ideals well above the average. Verily if it were not for the saving and eternal youth of the young one might almost despair of such children and wonder if the simple pleasures would ever appeal. Could such a young person say with Stevenson:—

"If I have faltered more or less
In my great task of happiness;
If I have moved among my race
And shown no glorious morning face;
If beams from happy human eyes
Have moved me not; if morning skies,
Books, and my food, and summer rain
Knocked on my sullen heart in vain—
Lord, thy most pointed pleasure take
And stab my spirit broad awake."

Oh! the simple pleasures of the out-of-doors—the small things that delight the sensitive spirit—the sense of accomplishment that comes from the successful manipulation of raw material! Are our children's efforts and spirits being stifled under the increasing multitude of finished products?

Not only may the spirit be dulled by the multitude of possessions—but even more by the effort to answer the numberless calls to do and serve. How we rush from one committee meeting to another—forgetting, I doubt not, many times, to put first things first. It is easy to fall into the habit of leaving our definite and appointed responsibilities to others while we undertake some more appealing or spectacular form of service. Public speaking, for instance, is a very fine, important and helpful thing, but private living of the right kind is just so much better as it is harder!

I wonder if this sounds like harking back to warnings against "creatively activity?" The over-emphasis of the thought behind that phrase caused much stagnation of effort in our Society—and we are effectually laying the bogie to-day. No, not for one moment would I have effort paralyzed—but I would have it clarified, simplified and strengthened, and our material lives shorn to a certain extent, at least, of much that makes for care and thought. I would have us "go softly" and take time to grow our souls a bit! I think I may safely say that the average human being can not thoroughly and effectively understand and attend to more than three or four distinct lines of thought and service. We need more than one, certainly, to keep from growing over-concentrated and narrow, but after a certain point in the diffusion of effort and interest has been reached, the quality of our service seems to be in reverse ratio to the quantity. For after all there are not so many worth while things. In the final analysis there is but one—to grow like Him. And there, of course, we have the crux of the matter. To test our lives, continually, by His standard, is the only unailing recipe I know, for a really effectual, simple and serviceable life.

"Simplicity" has become a much over-worked word since Pastor Wagner focussed our attention upon it some years ago. But it is over-worked because we feel the need for the condition, and because it is the essential atmosphere for real growth. Ellen Key says: "Only persons who distinguish themselves by an 'abyss of superficiality' have not experienced the severe and beautiful psychic truth of Jesus' glorification of simplicity. The quiet harkening to the voice of God or to the inspiration of work or to the delicate vibrations of another soul, which daily, hourly, momentarily, are the conditions that enable the soul to live wholly in its belief, its work, its love, so that these feelings may grow stronger and the soul grow greater through these feelings—all this has simplicity as a condition."

The psychological time of appeal for a plea for simplicity is often the time of weariness that follows a struggle to distinguish the prior claim among one's family duties, one's social duties, and one's duties to oneself. It is often a very real difficulty, but "going softly" with Jesus Christ will help the duties to fall into their relative positions. We have come to believe that fatigue is one of the greatest enemies to efficiency there is, and certainly much participation in many interests in almost continuous succession will result in fatigue of body, mind and spirit.

In conclusion—it seems to me that God is especially needing just now men and women who will dare to stop in this headlong business of living and sift out the essentials—men and women who will dare to be different in a hurried world—men and women who will standardize their lives by that of a courageous peasant whose life two thousand years ago personified the only solution of life to-day. For verily I believe that just in proportion to the depth of our desire for Him, and the singleness of our purpose in finding and keeping Him will our duties and claims become clear—our spirits be clothed in serenity, and our courage kept high enough to meet the small things of life with cheer.

RACHEL REEVE CADDURY.

MOORESTOWN, N. J.

THE best way to end a quarrel is simply to drop it. Trying to settle it is usually like trying to settle a muddy pool whose waters grow only thicker the more they are stirred. A great many things that never can be argued down will drop out of sight and be forgotten if only they are let alone.

THE MORALITY OF METHOD.

WILLIAM L. HULL.

Morality includes, not merely motives and aims, but methods as well. The standard of Christian morality in particular requires the adoption of Christian methods for the realization of Christian ideals. Unlike some philosophies to which the name of casuistry is applied, Christian morality rejects the doctrine that the end justifies the means; and it insists that not even for the attainment of heaven's ends is it justifiable to break heaven's laws.

The world has been face to face at many times in its history with this fundamental question of morality, and the convictions of men have been divided as to the means which should be resorted to for the attainment of high ideals which were common to both sides in the controversy.

The rulers of ancient Assyria, Tilgath-Pileser II, for example, and the Pharaohs of ancient Egypt, looked beyond their own prosperous and orderly empires into what appeared to them to be a world of barbarism, and they determined to carry order and prosperity over to the barbarian world in the train of their victorious armies. Darius of Persia, after applying his political genius to his own great empire, cherished the ambition of doing the same thing for the barbarian world of the Greeks and the Western Mediterranean, and endeavored to fulfil his ideal by the military methods of his imperial predecessors.

On the other hand, the Hebrew people gave rise to such idealists as Isaiah, who cherished the same ideal of establishing peace and prosperity throughout the world, but who believed that this could be accomplished only by the promotion of individual and national righteousness.

To-day, the empires and the very names of the Assyrian, Egyptian and Persian kings and captains have vanished, while the Jewish people have continued through every age and among all peoples to promote the kingdom of God on earth by means of monotheistic worship and personal righteousness.

Alexander of Macedon, rightfully called "The Great" because of his far-reaching ideal of creating a new world and a new type of man by means of the amalgamation of the best that there was in Hellenic civilization with the best elements of Oriental culture, attempted to achieve his ideal by means of his phalanxes and the extension of his own imperial rule. Alexander's tutor, Aristotle the Great, cherished the ideal of establishing an empire over the minds of men by means of the development and inculcation of science.

Alexander died at the age of thirty-two, and his Empire perished with him; but the Hellenic civilization, of which Aristotle was the most illustrious and successful exponent, was carried by scores of Greek colonies scattered throughout the Orient to the farthest confines of China and perhaps Japan, and became the basis of the civilization of mediæval and modern Europe as well.

Julius Caesar and his imperial successors conceived the great ideal of Romanizing the entire Mediterranean world, and of preserving it in unbroken peace against the attacks of the barbarian world outside; and they established their forts and their legions in every province and on every frontier. Contemporary with them, St. Paul and the Christian apostles entered upon the apparently impossible task of Christianizing the Roman Empire, and opposed to the militarism and political despotism of the Caesars the spiritual weapons and the righteous methods of the lowly Nazarene.

The Roman Empire went down in blood and flames, and lives only in history, while Christianity conquered the Roman Empire and a large part of the barbarian world as well, and lives to-day beyond all the seven seas as a vital force among men and nations.

Roman emperors, like Decius, Diocletian, and Julian, determined to destroy what seemed to them to be the enervating and debasing religion of Christianity, and to restore the virile and heroic virtues of the pagan past. To accomplish this ideal they resorted to the sword, the fagot, the gladiator, and the ravening beast. The Christian martyrs, intent upon the preservation of Christianity, overcame evil with good, and compelled Julian, the last of their imperial persecutors, to confess: "Thou hast conquered, Galilee."

The Barbarians, bursting forth from the forests of Germany into the provinces of the Roman empire, attempted under such leaders as Alaric and Theodoric to establish their Gothic kingdoms upon the ruins made by their victorious battle-axes. Their contemporary, St. Augustine, in the midst of what seemed to him a falling world, wrote a book in which he described the "City of God," which should be the truly permanent successor of what had been regarded as "immortal Rome." The very names of the Gothic kingdoms are forgotten, while the Christian Church, of which St. Augustine's book was one of the corner-stones, has dominated for centuries all of Western Europe, including the lands of the Barbarians themselves.

A great Teutonic chieftain, Charlemagne, in full appreciation of the Roman culture which his predecessors had attempted to destroy, conceived the ideal of civilizing and Christianizing the Teutonic peoples from which he sprang, and in the course of a thirty years' war drove his Saxon "converts" at the edge of the sword by thousands into the baptismal rivers. But it was not until St. Boniface and the bands of monks and friars who followed him substituted the plow for the sword, industry and education for the force of arms, that Charlemagne's great ideal was fulfilled.

William the Conqueror, crossing the Channel from the cultured land of France into the barbarian land of England, strove by means of fortresses and castles to force the turbulent Englishman into an orderly and law-abiding life. But it was not until one of his successors, Henry II, substituted trial by jury for wager of battle, and developed the judicial settlement of disputes between individuals, that England's peace and order were placed upon an enduring and successful basis.

Philip II, of Spain, and his Queen, Mary of England, determined to save the souls of their subjects in all succeeding generations by stamping out the Protestant heresy. But the blood of the martyrs who died on the gibbets and in the fires of Smithfield became the seed of the Protestant church in England; while John Fox's "Book of Martyrs," which recorded the tragic story of the use of force in the suppression of heresy, and which inspired the souls of Englishmen with devotion to the new faith, illustrated in striking and convincing fashion the truth that the pen is indeed mightier than the sword.

A century later, Louis XIV, of France, cherished the ambition of making French culture predominate throughout the world, and in furtherance of this ambition waged four wars of aggression in the Old World and in the New. But the peaceful progress of the English colonies in government, industry, and education made New France but a memory in America; while Louis's half-century of effort to propagate civilization by means of the sword was a complete failure in Europe. Meanwhile his contemporary, William Penn, applied with noteworthy success the peaceful method of conquering the wilderness in the New World, and outlined a plan for the judicial settlement of international disputes, the realization of which has become the chief task of our twentieth century.

In the world of politics, the leaders of democracy in the French Revolution, such as Danton, Marat and Robespierre, attempted to establish self-government by applying the method of force, and only succeeded in making their own names synonymous with violence and establishing a reign of terror. Their contemporaries across the Atlantic, Madison, Hamilton, Jefferson and their peers, tried the great experiment of representative government and the settlement of disputes among the States by the Supreme Court, and succeeded by these peaceful means in establishing a permanent government of, by and for the people, and the preservation of national peace for three-quarters of a century.

Time will not permit a more detailed statement of the lesson which history supplies so convincingly to those who have eyes to see as to the failure and iniquity of military force, and the success and beneficence of the peaceful methods of attaining high ideals.

To-day our country is summoned to pursue the realization of two high ideals—the triumph of democracy within every nation, and the establishment of international organization among all nations. These ideals are cherished alike by those who believe in the pacific, and by those who believe in the military, method of achieving them; and it is a reason for much gratitude that we all have this great aim in common. Where we differ is on the question of whether we shall resort to peaceful or to military means of achieving these ideals. This question can only be answered for each individual in the light of conscience. But I would remind you that there is something even more important than acting in accordance with one's conscience; and that is acting in obedience to a tender and enlightened conscience. The administration of the Inquisition, and of many another engine of human tyranny, was done at times in the name of high ideals and in accordance with individual conscience; but it would have been well for the administrators themselves and for the world if they had taken as much pains to enlighten their consciences as they did to follow them.

Our college motto is, "Mind the Light." I have read in this week's issue of the college paper that a stranger addressing a company of our students referred to this motto, and argued that in these days the light should be the glare of the fiery cross lighted a fortnight ago and now being carried throughout your country as the fiery cross was carried of old. This stranger is a Scottish captain in the British army, detailed to this country to inspect arms or ammunition manufactured in America for the use of the British armies. His allusion and his nativity carried my mind back to the story of those four hundred years of border warfare during which the fiery cross was carried through the glens of Scotland, summoning the Scotch to rally "to the defense of Scotch independence and to Scotch homes against the English enemy." At the same time, on the hills of northern England were kindled beacon fires which summoned Englishmen to rally "to the defense of their lands and homes against the Scotch marauders." During these four centuries the fiery cross and the beacon light led their followers to steal each other's cattle, to destroy each other's crops, to burn each other's homes, to massacre each other's families, and to cut each other's throats.

It seems needless to say that the adoption of such methods as these even for the attainment of the highest ideals should make no successful appeal to the truly enlightened and tender consciences of the men and women of the twentieth century. Two hundred years ago, the four centuries of Scottish and English border warfare were permanently ended by the peaceful means of political organization,—the same means which has been so successful in preserving the peace within the nations, and which is now on the eve of adoption for the permanent preservation of the peace between and among the nations. The light referred to in our college motto is not "the light which shone on land and sea," still less on fields of bloody battle and mutual slaughter. If any cross be needful as a symbol of it, let that be, not the "fiery cross," but the cross which stood on Calvary, from which beamed the light of heroic self-sacrifice, and the salvation instead of the destruction of men, as well as the Divine light of God's love and mercy for all mankind.—From the Intelligencer.

FULLY ANSWERED.—Through all the ages until Christ came the course of human history was an unanswered indictment by which every attribute of God was seemingly discredited. The Divine power and wisdom and righteousness and love were all brought into question. But the advent of Christ was God's full and final revelation of Himself to man. God points to the cross as the unreserved manifestation of love, so inconceivably infinite as to answer every challenge and silence all doubt forever.—ROBERT ANDERSON.

THE FUTURE HOPE OF THE WORLD.

BABON SHIBUSAWA.

[This article is sent us from Tokio by our friend, Herbert V. Nicholson. In several points, the view of one who confesses himself a disciple of Confucius, shames what passes for Christianity.—E.Ds.]

To be frank and brief, I was one of those, in old Japan, who believed in the moral superiority of Asiatic civilization and looked down on Western nations as dominating merely in material achievements. In later years, especially since my stay in Paris in the sixties, I have been gradually converted to faith in Western civilization at large. However, since the outbreak of the present world war, my faith in modern civilization has experienced terrible shocks; and now I must doubt which was right, my old Oriental conviction or my later conversion. Still I shall never be a pessimist, but look forward to a new world order to be constructed, or initiated, after the war.

There are, to be sure, deep-lying causes for the gigantic struggle, which may explain, if not justify, the war and its consequences, and even perhaps the atrocities and barbarities as committed by the Germans. I know the claims of the belligerents, the defense of the rights of nations, on the part of the Entente powers; the plea for a "place under the sun" and the claims based thereupon, on the part of Germany. I do not intend here to examine one by one these claims or pretensions; but my point is that the war shows the logical consequences of the creed of competition by force, over against the principle of mutuality and harmony.

Whatever the basis or necessity of competitive methods may be, they, as advocated and practiced by the advocates of might for right, mean brutalizing human life, while the nations, the classes, the individuals, can achieve real culture and civilization only by co-operative association. Man in this life needs not to be an angel, perhaps, but ought never to be a tiger. Even tigers never devour creatures of their own species. Then does not war mean something more than brutality? Cannot mankind remain human and progress along human lines?

Now the nations of Europe are experiencing the bitterest results of the competitive principle, aggravated by mutual distrust and hatred and belief in sheer force. They, nay whole mankind, are doomed, unless they emerge out of the dreadful crisis by purging themselves from the sins committed through their blunder in believing in force and might. The fatal creed of force is, as I assume and hope, proving to the German people the vanity of their pride and greed. They are destined to a terrible disillusionment as regards their pride in German "Kultur," and their faith in competition and militarism. I wish to know now what are the thoughts of the German scientists who signed the famous manifesto of 1914 and tried to justify the war measures of their Fatherland. My sympathy sides naturally with the cause of the Entente powers and I am convinced that they are fighting for the defense, not only of their own territories, but of justice and civilization. I am sure that the present war against Germany means a supreme issue for humanity and righteousness. The question is, whether or not the powers fighting German militarism derive abiding lessons from the facts of great disasters and turn to take the course of humane association and international co-operation, instead of the appeal to force and aggression.

Industrial régime, commercial competition, territorial expansion, the "struggle for existence," diplomatic intrigues, international suspicion, these have meddled with each other, in the course of the nineteenth century. The necessary consequences are clearly set forth before our eyes. Now the time has come, for which I have been wishing, that all nations, both belligerent and non-belligerent, must repent of their past transgressions, undergo a process of purification and transformation, and step into a new order of international relationship. Otherwise the modern world civilization is doomed to the same fate as many ancient civilizations.

The averted of further catastrophes depends primarily upon a heart conversion of the nations, which should be guided by a high vision of ideal humanity, and by careful thought and investigations into the causes and remedies of the deplorable situation. This could be done by sincere co-operation between real statesmen and conscientious thinkers of all nations. Various plans for establishing durable peace are surely necessary, but by far the most important and fundamental will be a reconstruction of the social order and international relationship, based upon penetrating insight into the root of the matter and carried out by open-minded co-operation among the leaders of the nations. Not only arbitration, international police and tribunals, but the real nature of the moral life of mankind, the universal spirit of ethical and religious teachings, the culture of internationalism in education,—all these ought to collaborate for the coming new régime of the world.

This may sound vague, but my object is to express the fundamentals of my faith in humanity and leave concrete investigations and plans to the rising generation of leaders and thinkers. In any event, I shall never lose faith in humanity, as taught by my master, Confucius, along with many other sages of the world, that it shall not succumb to brute force as claimed by some thinkers and as attempted by German militarism. The most essential thing is that all men, regardless of difference in nationality, creed and race, who cherish the same hopes and faith shall co-operate for the same end,—for justice and humanity.

PATRIOTISM OF THE SOIL.

Patriotism has varied interpretations placed upon it in a crisis like the present one; some feel that they must go to the field of battle, some that they must go and alleviate suffering, some that they must care for alien enemies; while others feel that they can best help the world out of this dilemma by quietly and efficiently serving in their present places. Every one wishes to show the love that they have for their country and to be of the greatest service. What the service is to be, can only be rightly decided as each individual seeks proper guidance. Perhaps most people have felt that the greatest service would result from remaining at their present posts, and this seems desirable, especially where people are located in positions that are important to the country's welfare. The necessity of food, for instance, is so insistent at the present time that farmers as a class have not entered military and other service in proportionately as large numbers as at other times of stress in the nation's history. The reason seems evident, for important as food is at ordinary times, it is even more important when so many millions of men are withdrawn from productive work.

Europe is calling upon us for all the food-stuff that we can spare, and the possibility of a food shortage in our own country brings us face to face with a problem concerning which we are unaccustomed to thinking. America is a land of plenty, and in the light of the economy of other peoples we are a lavish nation. We have enjoyed an abundance of resources that has resulted in waste, but now when the world is in an hour of need the waste must cease. Europe's energy is going into the war, millions of her men are in the trenches, her resources are greatly reduced and for her, even more than for ourselves, the maximum production of crops is an impossibility. As a result the call comes to America for help.

Of course we have been helping to some extent for almost three years. Government reports show that during the first year of the war our export of wheat increased almost one hundred and fifty million bushels over the average export of the two previous years. The second year of the war we exported even more. Records for the third year are not quite complete, but they are likely to show an increase over the normal export of wheat to the extent of about ninety million bushels. Other exports have greatly increased also, but now we must share even more. If the United States does her part in the present crisis she must look toward sending more food-stuff abroad than she has ever done before in her history.

In view of these facts the American farm and the American farmer have a very important rôle to play. Perhaps in no other sphere can the tiller of the soil be of greater service at this time than the one in which he already finds himself. He owes it as a patriotic service to his country and to humanity to increase his efficiency to the maximum. The problem is not just to feed our army and the armies of the Allies that our side may win the war. Producing food is an effective way of doing our part on the firing line without enlisting; but that by itself is carnal, to some of us un-Christian. The service should be regarded from a broader viewpoint. Not only the men in the armies, but everybody should be fed. May it not be a part of our duty in this crisis to help feed God's children everywhere, regardless of nationality, that they may live through this hour of darkness to see the light of a better day?

JAMES F. WALKER.

LETTER FROM HERBERT V. NICHOLSON.

30 KOUJIN-CHO, Mita, Shiba, Tokio, Japan, Fifth Month 21, 1917.

DEAR FRIENDS:—

When I realize that I have visited the Sawada Glass Factory across the river in Honjo twice since writing you, I know it has been a long time since I wrote. Something always happens when I go to this factory and I should like to tell you a little about one time when I got there before the work had stopped and looked around a bit.

It was three or four weeks ago, and as there were some special evangelistic meetings in Leno Park, over in the general direction of Honjo, I decided to go to the Park to help out in any way I could in the afternoon and then go over for our Bible Class at seven. The Park was still beautiful, although most of the cherries had snowed to the ground, and many people were attracted by the sights as well as a special exhibit to celebrate the fiftieth year of the establishment of Tokio as the capital of Japan. I was told there was preaching going on in three different places all afternoon and evening, so I walked over the Park on the lookout for a tent meeting of some kind. Finally I saw a crowd in the open which looked encouraging, although there was no tent. On coming closer I saw it was a Buddhist priest on a stone, talking to a lot of people with another priest standing in front giving out tracts to all who passed. Going on further I saw another group by the road-side listening to a man standing on another stone and another man in the road giving out other tracts to all passers-by. The man was speaking from John, and I knew I had found one of the groups of Christian workers. I found I could be of no service to them so decided to look further for the others, who were not far away, I was told. It is interesting that the Buddhists have adopted many of the same methods used by Christians. They never had this kind of street preaching until Christians came with it. I didn't find any traces of the other preaching places, but I did happen to run into the Zoo. I had never been in there and I always wanted to see the poor elephant that is so much sympathized with by all humane persons! So I went in and saw a few bears, foxes, lions, tigers and horses. While looking at the monkeys I heard a great noise like an elephant trumpeting, and running over to a large brick house, there stood the poor creature, being fed on sweet potatoes and rice straw! He did look rather bony, but I did not waste much sympathy over it.

After one more search for the preaching places, and finding the Buddhists were still going on and even the one Christian place was now vacated, I disposed of a few Gospel portions and walked over to the factory district just in time to get a look at things before closing up. I met the manager and he was rather afraid to let me go back and look around, saying everything was so dirty! He was not mistaken either, for it was certainly a poor, filthy factory. A lot of boys were dipping long tubes into the molten glass and blowing them out into small bulbs. These were dipped again and blown by a man into a mold. Other boys carried the hot tumblers, over to the "cooling" oven and broke them onto a shovel which a man pushed into the oven. I asked a number of the boys how old they were, but none of them would answer. I saw one who couldn't have been much over six, and Yasuda San told me he knew many of them were only nine, although they were supposed to be twelve before they could be apprenticed. Outside a lot of them were trying to wash up in a big tub of hot water. Others were trying to get the black off their teeth, but to no avail. All the boys had black lips and teeth from blowing the lead pipes. The dormitory was nothing but a long shed, about 120 by 18 feet, with very filthy worn tatami or mats—home for sixty boys and men—with a second floor of the same size. The dormitory keeper, one time a school teacher and interested in Christianity, claimed there were two mats per man, which the law requires. He admitted it was very dirty and out of repair. The women had all left when I got to the packing-room. I have a Bible Class for the office force of about eight young men.

A NEIGHBOR.—One Seventh-day evening I was called from a meeting of our First-day School teachers to the telephone. It was one of my boys saying he could not come to the Bible Class the next morning. Then the cook's wife showed me a telegram saying that M. P. Bowles would return from Kobe at 8.30, and we had a discussion as to whether it was 8.30 that evening or the morning after, or just when. This was interrupted by the door bell and a student was there to see me. I said "How do?" when the telephone went off again and the voice of an Englishman said he wanted to speak to one Ross. I said I knew of no one named Ross around here, and in fact knew of no foreigners within five minutes of us other than our own people. But he insisted that he lived right by the temple at the back of our house. I went out our back gate and around a small alley and soon found a little Japanese house with C. C. Ross painted on the gate. The man came over to the phone and I found two more guests in the form of two Chinese gentlemen, whom I was to conduct over to the Coleman's for an English Speaking Society meeting. After getting rid of the man at the phone we all started out together for the Coleman's. All this happened in ten minutes' time, but I found out a little about our mysterious neighbor.

A few nights later I went over to see him and found that he has lived most of his life in South Africa and served in the present war until he was wounded. He then came to Japan on some money-making errand and on arriving in Kobe had a hard time getting "in with" any foreigners. So he took to drinking and in this way made some "friends" who really did not amount to anything. They promised to back him in a large financial deal and he went ahead. But now they have gone back on him and he is stranded here with a large debt and with his creditors after him. His breath was strong with liquor both times I saw him, and there was some bleary-eyed Japanese men with him one night. He is certainly a suspicious character, but when he grasped me by the hand and said he was "going straight to the dogs" and that he needed some decent company to keep him up and asked to call on me and I told him I was usually busy all day and evening, I wondered if I did the neighborly act. He wasn't asking for money—I couldn't give him any of that—but merely for companionship and friendship. I might have said with Peter, "Silver and gold have I none, but what I have I give to thee." If you could unearth all the tragedies of the suspicious foreigners in Tokio you would certainly find some weird tales. They get hidden in some of these little back streets and even their closest neighbors do not know they are there or what they are after.

A FIRST-DAY.—But to come to more recent history: I would like to tell you about yesterday. A Chinese Friend named Yang from Chengtu, West China, was at meeting and gave us a peace message and greeting from Friends in West China, in Chinese, interpreted by one of our members who has been in China. Friend Yang is principal of the Union Middle School and President of the Y. M. C. A. in Chengtu, and we were glad to meet him and make a link between the two Oriental Yearly Meetings. I went with him in the afternoon to the Chinese Y. M. C. A. and from there to a Chinese church service. I was reminded of the little Chinese Mission I used to visit in Philadelphia. After this I went to the English Friends' Hospital and visited a small friend of mine who is recovering from a serious illness. I call him by a pet name which means he is half my size, and yesterday he told me not to call him that any more because he was growing bigger. He stood up on the bed and showed me that he came nearly to my shoulder! We had everybody in the ward laughing before we got through, and I promised to call him by his real name after this—Masato San. I had supper with the Braithwaite near the hospital and had a helpful evening with them.

This is the first time I have written over one page to you in a long time and I trust it's not too much for any of you. With best wishes to all,

As ever your friend,
HERBERT V. NICHOLSON.

DRYING AND EVAPORATION.

FRUITS AND VEGETABLES PRESERVED BY THE SUN, WITH HELP FROM THE KITCHEN STOVE.

Drying or evaporation is for many fruits and vegetables cheaper and more satisfactory than any other method of preservation, and the product is more easily stored than fruits and vegetables put up in cans. Drying or evaporating may be done by the use of the sun's heat, by the use of artificial heat, or by the combination of both. It is generally believed that higher quality and better color are obtained by evaporation, while drying is inexpensive since neither fuel or special equipment are required.

The higher quality of the evaporation products, especially the fruits, is due largely to the conversion of some of the starch into sugar through the influence of the high temperature during the first stages of the process. This same result can be had to some degree by a combination of evaporation and drying, that is, by starting the drying process over the kitchen range or in the oven. For evaporating small quantities of fruits and vegetables in the home some type of kitchen stove evaporator or some sort of a makeshift device will be found efficient. Occasionally one may find the oven of the kitchen stove utilized as an evaporator. Anyone handy with tools can construct a home-made affair which will give satisfactory results where small quantities are to be handled.

In drying fruits and vegetables the products are spread on clean cloths on a low flat shed roof, or on a platform of suitable size, high, sloping, a little to the south, and set up in a sheltered place. In the earlier days the pioneers strung such products as apples, peaches, pumpkin and squash on strings which were hung on the side of the house on sunny days, and around a kitchen stove during rainy weather. A process called scalding which subjects the products that are to be dried to a relatively high temperature, will save time and result in a higher quality of product.

Three methods of drying have been found by specialists in the department of agriculture to give satisfactory results. These are sun drying, drying by artificial heat and drying with air blasts, as before an electric fan. Trays for drying by any one of these methods, as well as tray frames for use over stoves or before fans can be made satisfactorily at home. Frames and trays for use with artificial heat may be purchased complete if desired.

Home-made trays may be made of side and end boards three-fourths of an inch thick and two inches wide, and bottom boards of lathing spaced one-fourth of an inch. If desired, one-fourth-inch galvanized wire mesh may be tacked to the side and end boards to form the bottoms of the trays. Frames for use before fans may be made of wood of convenient size. Frames for use with artificial heat should be made of non-inflammable material to as great an extent as possible.

As many as six trays may be placed one above the other when artificial heat is used. In drying before a fan the number of trays that may be placed one above the other will depend, to a large extent, upon the diameter of the fan. In drying in the sun, trays as described may be used or the products to be dried may be spread on sheets of paper or muslin held in place by weights.

Vegetables and fruits will dry better if sliced. They should be cut into slices one-eighth to one-fourth of an inch thick. If thicker they may not dry thoroughly. While drying the products should be turned or stirred from time to time. Dried products should be packed temporarily for three or four days, and poured each day from one box to another to bring about thorough mixing, so that the whole mass will have a uniform degree of moisture. If during this "conditioning" any pieces of the products are found to be too moist they should be returned to the trays and dried further. When in condition the products may be packed permanently in tight paper bags, insect-proof paper boxes or cartons, or glass or tin containers.

The department offers the following recipes:—

Spinach and parsley—Spinach that is in prime condition for greens should be prepared by careful washing and removing the leaves from the roots. Spread the leaves on trays to dry thoroughly. They will dry much more promptly if sliced or chopped.

Beets—Select young, quickly grown, tender beets, which should be washed, peeled, sliced, about an eighth of an inch thick, and dried.

Turnips should be treated in the same way as beets.

Carrots should be well grown, but varieties having a large woody core should be avoided. Wash, peel and slice crosswise into pieces about an eighth of an inch thick.

Parsnips should be treated in the same way as carrots.

Onions—Remove the outside papery covering. Cut off tops and roots. Slice into one-eighth-inch pieces and dry.

Cabbage—Select well developed heads of cabbage and remove all loose outside leaves. Split the cabbage, remove the hard, woody core, and slice the remainder of the head with a kraut cutter, or other hand-slicing machine. All these products should be "conditioned" as described above.

Beet tops—Tops of young beets in suitable condition for greens should be selected and washed carefully. Both the leaf stalk and blade should be cut into sections about one-fourth-inch long and spread on screens and dried.

Swiss chard and celery should be prepared in the same way as beet tops.

Rhubarb—Choose young and succulent growth. Prepare as for stewing by skinning the stalks and cutting into pieces about one-fourth inch to one-half inch in length, and dry on trays. All these products should be "conditioned" as described.

Raspberries—Sort out imperfect berries, spread select berries on trays and dry. Do not dry so long that they become hard enough to rattle. The drying should be stopped as soon as the berries fail to stain the hand when pressed. Pack and "condition."—From the Springfield Republican.

Be ours the vision, ours the will
To follow, though the faithless ban;
The love that triumphs over ill,
The trust in God and hope for man,

And thou whose tide of purpose bears
These mortal lives that come and go,
Give us to feel through toil and prayer
Thy deep eternal underflow!

—FREDERICK LYMAN HOSMER, (ATFINGER),

LONDON YEARLY MEETING.

(Continued from page 45.)

John William Graham, speaking to the report of the Peace Committee, thought the propagation of Peace had occupied less of the efforts of the Society than it deserved; but the Committee now had a separate office and the services of a secretary. Even now it was not spending more than £350 a year on the work of London. The Northern Peace Board spent twice as much.

Marian E. Ellis reminded Friends of the seven millions who had already laid down their lives in the war. Friends must avoid any feeling of separateness. She had heard of men returning from the front with an intense hatred of organized Christianity, claiming either that Christians had no message, or that they had been false to their message. Had the Society been faithful to the light might we not have prevented this war more than any other body? Yet might we dwell on the vision described by William Littleboy; and as in the days of George Fox, might there not be another revelation awaiting us now, showing that Christ was the solution of every difficulty in the world? This was the message of the time. The first step in the peace movement was to see the answer of Christ to this awful problem of the ending of the war. She hoped that Christian people might be called together to decide the great question of the moment, which could only be rightly dealt with in the spirit of Christ. It might be right for the Society to endeavor to call upon the leaders of the Churches, or upon the followers of Christ, in all countries to bring into being a conference for the promotion of Peace. It might be that a great call was coming to the Society to take up this message. The greatest sorrow as we looked over the world was that we knew He saw the way out and the solution of all difficulties, and men's eyes were blinded that they could not see. Let us wait for the least whisper of His voice, to hear the message and take it to heart.

Robert Davis quoted Lord Hugh Cecil's remark on the inconsistency of both nationalism and war with Christianity, and urged that the Society should call upon Christians to take this matter up. They might prove to be merely a voice crying in the wilderness; but it would be better to try and fail than never to have tried at all. We needed to create an international mind in the churches, to strengthen and apply the growing desire for peace among the people.

I. Edmund Harvey, M. P., hoped that Friends might be able unitedly, and very humbly and penitently, to appeal to their fellow Christians that they might seek together to get nearer the spirit of Christ and do what they could to bring to the trouble and misery of the world the only healing that could bring peace, a healing that would come with the coming of the spirit of the Master. We did not want to order our fellow Christians, but ourselves, and to kneel as penitents together, praying for mercy and light to this world in trouble. And we were not alone. We must remember that the old Pope who died near the beginning of the war, refused to the apostolic Emperor of Austria the blessing of his arms, and said, "No, I bless peace." And the present Pope had suggested a better way than war, and had enjoined on all Catholics to make a special effort and prayer for peace. And there were other Christians who were longing for peace, a peace of justice. As at the beginning of the war the Society were guided to make an appeal to all men of good-will, might they not now make an appeal to all the followers of Christ that they might bow together at the Divine seat and ask for the blessing of peace and reconciliation. These fellow Christians could be brought together in one place when they came to the place of prayer. If we made that appeal to the individual conscience of the followers of Christ, they would be helped to find out the true way, to kneel together in the Divine presence and to go out in the power of love which should bring together the divided nations of the earth in one great society, that of the followers and disciples of the Lord Jesus Christ.

The Clerk said it was evident at the table that it was the wish of the Meeting to approach the Churches in all nations in this matter, and asked Friends to concentrate their remarks on that point.

The Clerk afterward presented the following minute: "We have been baptized into a deep sense of the agony of the world as we have thought of the great tragedy now in progress in Europe. We have questioned whether there is any remedy for this evil, any response to the cry of suffering humanity. The answer to that question is to be found in Jesus Christ. In all our afflictions He is afflicted, and He is waiting to meet our need as He has done again and again throughout the centuries. In the desire that this great spiritual force may be liberated, we decide, in all humility and love, to make an attempt, and to urge upon them that the time has come to unite in waiting upon God for the putting forth of His Spirit, praying for forgiveness, for light and for reconciliation, and that He may bind up our broken humanity."

WORLD DISARMAMENT.

The subject of Disarmament was introduced by minutes from Bedfordshire and Yorkshire Quarterly Meetings. The Bedfordshire minute stated:—

"Deep concern has arisen amongst us as we have realized, through facts presented by our missionaries and others, that the great nations of the East have been led, by contact with and fear of the West to plunge more and more deeply into militarism and war-producing methods of industry and commerce. There is grave danger that unless both East and West turn away from reliance upon physical force, from fear and suspicion, the nations of the earth may become involved in struggles, greater and more terrible than those in which we are now engaged.

"We therefore appeal to all Friends to study, most earnestly, the history and underlying causes which have led to the adoption of militarism by the more pacific nations. Such study and prayer will assuredly lead our Society towards action which may be, in some measure, instrumental in bringing about complete disarmament throughout the world, and the triumph of love and service over fear and mistrust."

Yorkshire Quarterly Meeting said:—

"The ultimate choice before the world would appear to lie between fear, with its more complete organization of the nations for war, and the venture of faith, with its reliance on spiritual and moral forces only. To adopt the latter course will need a greater courage and a greater faith in God's governance of the world than any nation at present possesses. Here, then, is a task worthy of our best endeavors—to attempt by every means in our power so to mold public opinion that our nation may be prepared to lead the way, be the consequences what they may, towards a world of mutual trust and good-will, towards a world where they shall beat the swords into ploughshares and the spears into pruning hooks, and where nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

The minute expressed the hope that Yearly Meeting would give adequate time for the thorough discussion of the subject, and might impress upon Friends the vast importance of doing everything possible to persuade people of the practicability of ultimate disarmament.

Albert P. I. Cotterell, speaking for Bedfordshire, in the absence of Malcolm Sparkes, serving "in another place," remarked that the minute had arisen from the feeling that Eastern nations were in danger of learning the lesson of Europe that their rights were only to be gained or upheld by the use of military force. Before the countries of the world were two policies—that of mistrust, and that of love and service. Had not the Society a responsibility to spread the idea of the latter policy? If as a Society we moved forward, we should not move alone. A step taken in faith would find us amongst those who were eager to uphold us in the cause of Christ. He believed that the Kingdom of God could not come before there were total disarmament. Quaker embassies had been suggested. He trusted that the Society would be among those called to proclaim the new and higher order.

J. Stephenson Rowntree, supporting the minute from Yorkshire Quarterly Meeting, asked if we could not now stand for complete disarmament, when were we going to do so? At the close of the war would be the time of all times for an agreement upon disarmament, and he would suggest that if we let that opportunity pass it would be the loss of an opportunity which might not recur for very many years. The talk about this war ending war was now largely discounted, for it too frequently represented the idea of ending war by the improvement of military organization. Was not the Society prepared to join with the men returning from the war, hating war itself, and to agree with them to "down tools," so that this thing should never happen again?

"ENEMY" ALIENS.

Rachel B. Braithwaite, in course of an interesting address introducing the report of the Emergency Committee, pointed out that the object of the work was to heal some of the wounds caused by the war. The number of "enemy" aliens under their care was now about 6,000, and there had been hundreds of others whom they had helped. The work of the Committee started in England immediately after the outbreak of war and a similar work was commenced in Germany, and on similar lines to ours. And although they and the English Committee felt how impotent they were in face of the conditions of need, there was abundant evidence of the good which had been done. As to present conditions, generally speaking, the husband of the family was interned, and the wife and children had nearly all to leave their former homes and go into cheap lodgings, where they were many of them in close crowded quarters on a meagre Government allowance, which could hardly be described as other than a living starvation. Many of the mothers were in great need and distress. The speaker read from a report of the Camp visitation describing the effect of long internment upon many of the men as most debilitating. At the Alexandra Palace she had visited a prisoner who said she was the only visitor he had had in more than two years. An important part of the work was the keeping of husbands and wives in touch. In the camps alleviations of various kinds had been effected. The wives and children at home had been comforted and assisted. Any distraction in the lives of these people was most acceptable, and the Committee had been enabled, through the kindness of a friend, to establish a Rest Home for some of these poor people. Many other details of this widespread work were given by the speaker.

WAR VICTIMS' RELIEF.

A. Ruth Fry, in introducing the above Report, dealt chiefly with the work in Russia. Respecting the work as a whole, the Committee was now represented by upwards of 200 workers in the different fields, there were 4,000 subscribers, and great numbers of helpers at home and in the United States; 380,000 articles had been distributed, and the expenditure to date had been £117,000. Respecting Russia, A. R. Fry remarked on the early attitude of heartlessness of some of the people, needing much patience and faith in order to raise them from their lethargy, and dispel their suspicions of the motives of the English visitors. Fatalism and a sad lack of common sense were conspicuous features. The workers had now, however, set many of the people to work in the native industries, and many of them had become transformed in appearance and attitude. The workers had heard very little of the results of the revolution in the far-off region in which they were engaged except that the boys seemed to think now that they need not work gratuitously, notwithstanding all that had been done for them! A. Ruth Fry thanked Friends for their pecuniary help, to which they would no doubt be able to continue to look. The United States was now coming into the war not only in a military sense but in the sense of peaceful penetration and help, friendship, food, and love. The great work before us would, she hoped, be realized in practical furtherance of our ideals of brotherhood.

Wilfred Shewell described some of the work in France. So far as the erection of houses and the distribution of furniture were concerned that work of the Committee was completed for the present. About 500 temporary houses had been built—substantial wooden huts, to last, with a little attention, perhaps ten or fifteen years. Gifts of clothing had been made to over 30,000 people. Thousands of families had received furniture. Although the last named distribution was concluded in France, the Committee were now arranging a system of easy purchase of articles of indispensable furniture. A building camp had been established, with workshop, saw mill, and erecting tank, where hut sections were being made. For provision in the districts won back in the recent advance of the British and French armies huts made in their camp had been largely ordered by the French Government. Wheat and other grain had been threshed, which would otherwise have been wasted, 150 tons of seed potatoes had been distributed, the people paying cost price. W. Shewell spoke of the medical work of the Committee, the convalescent home and hospital work. There were two to five million refugees from the northern part of France occupied by the Germans, and much disease had been occasioned by the abnormal conditions of life, and the Committee could only touch the fringe of the enormous need, but they had sought to do what they could for weakly children and women. In connection with the recent French attack in Champagne, the Committee had helped to evacuate the hospitals threatened in the fighting and had removed several hundred children exposed to shell fire in the villages. A great deal of their work could not be represented in terms of cash.

FRIENDS' AMBULANCE UNIT.

Oliver Holdsworth introduced the above work. New features of the work had been the recreation huts for service men, a fourth ambulance train, and a second hospital ship, though the work on the ships had now been relinquished owing to new conditions. On Tenth Month 28th the Unit celebrated their second anniversary. The Unit had been pleased to co-operate with the War Victims' Committee in evacuating people from villages under fire. As to the future they were looking forward to further advance, in connection with which various ambulance and other duties were expected. The work of the Unit had only been possible because of the generous assistance of Friends, and to all who had helped them hitherto, the Unit tendered their sincere thanks.

T. Edmund Harvey said that while it might be difficult for the Meeting adequately to grasp the full details of these three distinct forms of service at one session, he would ask Friends to regard the work as a whole. The work was essentially one work, and there was happy fellowship between the three different services. He had had the privilege of spending a week or two among the workers of the Unit and of seeing some of the convoy cars and other details, but no word picture of the service could give an idea of what it meant. It had involved risk, two of the members of the Unit having been killed by shells, and others having lost their lives in other ways. There was a warm sympathy on the part of the Unit with those who were bearing their burden in a special sense in the trenches, the Unit having seen so much of the horror of the war among its more immediate victims. The Unit's work was not confined to places abroad, but much was also being done at home, especially at York and in Birmingham. Some Friends had wondered at the continuation of the Unit's work since the passing of the Military Service Acts. But their work had been undertaken long before there was any idea of compulsion, the desire of the Committee all along having been that the work should be done in the spirit of service. The Committee regretted the change to compulsion, but desired to maintain in the Unit the spirit of fellowship and voluntary service. One might be thankful that there were others engaged in like service. It was true that some of the work of the Unit might have been done by the R. A. M. C., but one could see the difference in the spirit in which the duties were done. The members of the Unit found their hearts in their work, and the spirit of comradeship and good-will had made it what it was. He believed no trains were run so efficiently as those staffed by the Unit. The Unit were thinking very much of the problems that were arresting attention among the Society at home, and what their future way of life should be. He hoped that as a Society we should feel that all these forms of service were at the root as one, and that if they were done in a true spirit they were all service for humanity, that the Society could work for them all, and pray for them all, that greater blessing might ensue.

In reply to E. Ernest Boone, it was stated that efficient arrangements had been made for the visiting and supervision of the work of members of the General Service Section on the land.

Isaac Sharp reminded Friends of the continued and liberal assistance that was coming from America. The work they were doing for us, and the warm letters of sympathy and encouragement they were sending helped to bring them nearer to us by the many avenues of co-operation now opened. On one day a single donation of £2,500 was among the presents received. The money was still coming in.

William A. Albright, notwithstanding what had been said about American liberality, thought it well to remind Friends at home that the needs were very great and such as to give the War Victims' Relief Committee ground for grave anxiety.

John Henry Lloyd pointed out that it was essential that Friends should continue to help liberally the work of the Unit in the future, as in the past.

A. P. I. Gotterell, on behalf of the Emergency Committee, pointed out that the distress would be very great indeed when the war was over. At least £20,000 could be well spent at once on the Committee's relief work. Anna B. Thomas added that a great blow to the Committee had been the recent shipping restrictions, which had cut off from them their market for camp goods among their American friends. She hoped British Friends would make up for the deficiency.

T. Edmund Harvey, in reply to a question, said there were about 1,200 members of the Unit, of whom about 900 belonged to the ambulance section.

The Summary of the Proceedings of the Meeting for Sufferings was presented and minuted without discussion. An item of interest was the issue of 82,000 copies of the last Yearly Meeting Epistle, the normal quantity being about 35,000.

CONTINENTAL COMMITTEE.

The Report of the Continental Committee was presented. J. P. Fletcher remarked on the large number of persons, up to 200,000 or more, who were known as Molokhani in Russia. In most of their ways, including the holding of their meetings, they were very much like Friends, but they were illiterate and were very subject to persecution. He believed this was the spiritual force which had made recent events in Russia possible, and there seemed a special opportunity for Friends among their brethren in that country.

Anna B. Thomas thought there was another country with which we wanted to get into touch—Germany, which seemed at present closed to us. But many of the Germans interned in camps in England were inclined towards Quakerism. She believed the Spirit of God was working, and would be a means, later on in Germany, of educating a better understanding between them and ourselves. She was much in favor of a central Friends' bureau on the Continent.

FRIENDS' BOOKSHOP.

The Report of the Friends' Bookshop Committee for the first eleven months of its working was presented. The gross sales had been £1,868, yielding a gross profit of £472.

Hugh T. Crosfield stated that whereas last year it was estimated that the loss on the first year would be £500 the actual loss had been only £391, which had been largely met by the generosity of individual Friends and others, and only £113 of it had fallen on the Society funds. The aim of Friends in the undertaking—that of providing a centre of spiritual influence—had been successful. But with a view to the making of the effort a permanent success he would ask Friends generally to take an interest in the shop and render it all the support possible.

Rosa Hobbouse, while recognizing the value in the meetings of Young Friends, regretted the formation of any organization based upon organized effort by young Friends alone, and hoped the aim of the Union would be the merging of itself in the Society.

Edward Gregory and J. Rosslyn Earp were both in some measure of agreement with R. Hobbouse, the latter deprecating too much attention to organization among young Friends exclusively.

STATISTICS.

The summary of the Tabular Statements was presented, showing a total of 346 Particular Meetings and 65 Allowed Meetings, increases of 1 and 3 respectively. The membership was 20,059 (9,230 males and 10,829 females), an increase of 53. (The New Zealand return for 1916, which came in after the figures were made up, showed an increase of 55 to 198 members.) Those residing in foreign parts, and retaining home membership numbered 1,169. The number of Attenders was 6,065, a decrease of 105 (445 in three years), and of Associates 1,093, a decrease of 21 (192 in three years). Admissions by conviction and reinstatement numbered 302, 27 more than 1915, as minors 73, an increase of 24. Resignations and dissociations accounted for 149, a decrease of 28. Births numbered 109 (17 less) and deaths 326 (49 more). The number of Recorded Ministers was 299, a decrease of 15, and of 95 in eleven years.

WAR-TIME LEGISLATION.

Harold J. Morland desired to call attention to some of the larger questions associated with the word "Freedom." The greatest of Christian paradoxes was that the bondsman of Jesus Christ was he who was free, and when we thought of freedom we were considering something which was not only a great ideal, but was as absolutely indivisible as was the spirit of man. Religious freedom and social and political freedom were one and indivisible. At a recent court-martial he attended, a history of the Friends' Service Committee was taken down. Early in the war, the Service Committee was formed to assist Friends in giving non-military national service, but with the introduction of conscription, it was found impossible to carry on that work outside prison walls. Friends objected to conscription in that it injures those whom it compelled. To those it did not compel it might be a serviceable tonic. Adjourned Yearly Meeting of 1916, in course of a minute, said: "We have in mind not only conscientious objectors, but also a large number hitherto held back from military service from no unworthy motive, but by a restraining influence to which they would find it impossible to give expression." In St. Francis and John Woolman we had illustrations of that overwhelming effect of freedom, the true freedom of the spirit, and of how completely it overmastered and filled a man's whole life. To-day, once again the Society had to stand, not for any religious privileges for ourselves, but for the right of the spirit to live from within outwards, to express itself in its own way. We had to think of the boys of the nation, not so much of the Society, who to-day were being mercilessly pushed into the military machine, not over much regretting it, that was what he was sorry for, in thinking of the great number who were unable to stand against the unfair force to which they were subjected. So let Friends together dwell on the thought of freedom in its large sense, the right of the human spirit, in dependence on Him from whom it sprang, to frame its own life upon principles which sprang from the heart and the great, general interests of mankind. Friends must guard against limiting their view to the perspective of nationalism, not that it was entirely wrong to be nationalist, but that the principle of nationalism was being exalted to the position of a religious principle, and so was hindering the pursuit of those greater interests of humanity at large.

Charles E. Stansfield, on behalf of the Service Committee, spoke of the boys who were being compulsorily drafted into the army; whether their convictions were formed at the time or not. There were many boys in Friends' schools who would have to face the position, some quite ready to serve, and others who would have to endure imprisonment. The cruelty in the matter was specially with those whose convictions were not formed, compelled to go out and kill men with the rest of their lives spent in regret at what they had thus done. Friends could not possibly allow Officers' Training Corps to be set up in our own schools to afford the boys an opportunity of coming to their convictions. Nor could they allow their boys to join Officers' Training Corps in other schools. The question immediately concerned only three or four of our boarding schools at which boys attended till the age of eighteen, but the overseers were advised of the need for sympathetic advice to these and other boys. Perhaps this Meeting might decide to send a deputation to the various meetings. It was no part of our desire to manufacture conscientious objectors, but some meetings might require assistance from some central committee. The case of boys of eighteen in face of the question of military training at the end of the war was another part of the problem needing consideration. With regard to the larger problem of military training in schools the view had been widely expressed that Friends should not play for apparent safety by adopting means of evading military service.

Arthur Midgley heartily agreed with Harold J. Morland in his desire that Friends should consider the best interest of our country, and asked how could we better do that than in caring for its younger citizens. Friends accepted the imperialism of the Lord Jesus Christ. He also agreed that compulsion injured the compelled. He hoped the Society would be helped to build wisely a nobler and better State.

Edward Gregory held that all compulsion struck at the heart of Quakerism and the root of Christianity, taking away from man not only freedom of conscience, but the right of every man to walk by the Spirit of God. As to manufacturing conscientious objectors, our duty was to seek to bring the world into line with a full-orbed Christianity.

Under the head of War and the Social Order the following may show the conclusions emphasized:

On the request of J. E. Hodgkin, the Clerk read the seven propositions set forth in the Message of the Conference, as follows:—

"1. That brotherhood, as taught by Jesus Christ, knows no distinction of social class: human worth is something deeper and broader.

"2. That a man should in large measure be free to order his own life is a spiritual necessity: it should not be cramped or spoiled by evil conditions, or crushed by economic pressure. Whenever this happens it is a spiritual loss to the world, and indicates failure on the part of the Christian Church. Rather we must see that the fullest opportunity of human development—both in childhood and in adult life—should be assured to every member of the community.

"3. That the spiritual force of trust and loving-kindness is mighty because of the appeal it makes to the best in every man, and, when applied even to the conduct of industrial relations, achieves great things.

"4. Our belief in the futility of the methods of outward domination, and of the appeal to force, applies not only to international affairs, but to the whole problem of industrial control, and to the resort to industrial strife. Not through antagonism, but through co-operation in its widest sense, will the best be achieved for each and all.

"5. That if human need has a claim to service, and if service is the key to the best life, this great truth cannot be confined to the casual encounters of life, but should be recognized and relied upon in the very motive and method of its chief activities. It is upon this basis of need and service that life should be organized.

"6. That our membership one of another involves the use of all our gifts, powers, and resources for the good of all. No system which uses these for mere money-making or private gain, alienating them from their true end, can satisfy.

"7. That we shall seek for a way of living that will free us from the bondage of material things and mere convention, that will raise no barrier against brotherly comradeship with all, and will put no oppressive burden of labor upon any by reason of our superluous demands."

J. E. Hodgkin pointed out that the work of the War and Social Order Committee (which was not only a social ameliorative body) was essentially peace work, with Peace as its real objective. He believed there would always be a need of Social Order committees for ameliorative propaganda. As regards the "ailing rich," did not their ailment arise for lack of the education that comes from service? He hoped the Meeting would adopt the seven propositions of the Message, all of which were based on a true understanding of Quaker principles, as shown in the Book of Discipline, and that so the War and Social Order Committee would have that new charter for their future work.

After further discussion, however, it was decided not to adopt the propositions at once, but to refer them to the serious consideration of Friends. The hope was expressed in the Meeting that there might be a general stirring up of the membership in regard to our social duty. It was suggested that the Quarterly Meetings should be asked to consider the propositions and report to the Yearly Meeting how far they accepted them as a correct statement of the Quaker point of view, the matter to be further considered next year.

The latter suggestion was adopted and included in the minute, and the Meeting for Sufferings was asked to revise and reappoint the Committee on War and the Social Order.

In considering the subject of Education the following announcements of interest were made:

The liberal response to the appeal for the Teachers' Scholarship Fund resulted in a total subscription of £10,200. That scheme is thus started on a satisfactory and solid basis, although the number of suitable applications show that a larger income could be suitably employed.

The Report alluded to the need for fuller provision for "the higher education of the daughters of Friends," in connection with the gift by W. S. Clark of 100 acres at Longbridge in trust for above purposes. Under the terms of the trust the Governors of Leighton Park School have the option for fifteen years of opening a house for girls at Leighton Park, and during that period they will have the use of the income.

In discussing Disarmament, Rosa Hobhouse said it seemed to her impossible that her husband could fight in a national army, it was equally inconceivable that her sons could take part in the activities of an international army. Therefore the only plan for Friends to support was disarmament, and those who were pleading for nothing less should put their heart and mind to the present industrial system, inasmuch as the sudden shutting down of munition making and all industries connected therewith would plunge thousands into starvation. But the fact that the problem was enormous was no reason why it should not be tackled. So long as we made machines and goods for the provision of war, as Friends were unfaithful to the Divine light. Surely if it were wrong for Peter to defend Christ, there was nothing worthy of defence by steel. A league to forcibly insure peace seemed to her impossible from a Quaker point of view.

Edward Grubb believed that international arrangements for the enforcement of peace would not succeed. He thought that Sir Edward Fry's recent advice was right when he said that in his judgment the treaty of peace should not only embrace the system of federation, but provisions for the limitation or extinction of armaments. The establishment of a league for the enforcement of peace was surrounded by difficulties of all kinds. Most Friends thought mediation, arbitration, and the moratorium should be supported, but they recognized the danger of trying to secure the preservation of peace by means of force. They dissented from the proposition that government ultimately depended upon force, which he took to be a German formula. Let us in no wise compromise with militarism, which would probably be the only alternative to disarmament at the close of the war.

Alfred Kemp Brown combatted the argument against action in a former meeting, that the world was not ready for disarmament. Was the world, he asked, ready for the law of Christ when He appeared, and even for the law of Moses in his time? The only way to make the world ready for disarmament was by letting the sound of Friends' principles be heard. We could help to make it practicable by even mentioning the very thought of it. To act on any other principle Friends might as well lay down all their beliefs because other people were not ready to accept them. Surely we might put forward our testimony to disarmament as the only method which would heal the present gigantic trouble.

THE MESSAGE TO THOSE IN PRISON.

This message, which had been before the Meeting more than once, was again presented on Fourth-day, the 30th, and agreed to in the following form, to the Meeting for Sufferings being committed the duty of its distribution as they deemed best.

"TO OUR FRIENDS IMPRISONED FOR CONSCIENCE' SAKE:—

"Dear Friends,—We thank God for the faithful witness which you are bearing to the Truth, and to Christ's Gospel of love. We rejoice that strength has been given to you to bear all hardship cheerfully and bravely. We stand by you, and long that you may know how closely we associate ourselves with you. We know that the sacrifice you are making will not be in vain, but will be richly rewarded both in your own souls and in the service and help of mankind. Such was the price paid by our forefathers, in their more bitter day, in their great struggle for religious liberty. We rejoice to know that many of you have been able, like William Dewsbury, to enter prisons as palaces, and to esteem their bolts and locks as jewels, and that you have been upheld by the presence of One whom no bars can keep out. To you, we believe, has been given a notable place amongst those who are saving the country from permanent conscription, and it may be, the world also, from military domination.

"We look forward to the time when, prepared and tested by all that you now experience, you will step into freedom to take your part in a very special way in bringing the spirit of Christ into all our service for the future, with its new hopes and new responsibilities. Your faces are set towards a glorious day of love and liberty in the light of God. Whether it come sooner or later depends in some measure on us all. We pray that in the outward desert of prison life your souls may be continually refreshed by the upspringing of the living water in the presence of the Christ of God."

ISAAC SHARP'S FAREWELL—APPRECIATIONS.

The Clerk called attention to the report from the Meeting for Sufferings respecting the intended retirement of Isaac Sharp from the Recording Clerkship after the Yearly Meeting, after completing twenty-seven years' service in that office. "He is now about to retire," said the report, "beloved by Friends the world over with whom he has come into touch personally and by correspondence." The Meeting had appointed, as from the first of Seventh Month, William Fletcher Nicholson, B. A., first Assistant Master of Ackworth School, as successor to Isaac Sharp. The Clerk said we must all feel that it was very hard indeed to lose Isaac Sharp from the post of Recording Clerk to this Yearly Meeting and the Society. Without exaggeration, which he hated, he could say that the Society had emphatically come to lean upon him as one on whom they could absolutely depend. His ability, courtesy, judgment, and integrity were known to all. Not only was he known to and by a very large number of Friends throughout the world, but where he was known he was loved. We, his friends here, tell him that we love him. Though we were to lose these services, Isaac Sharp would still remain among us, not only in spirit, but in bodily presence also. Friends would all join this afternoon in saying to him, "The Lord bless thee and be with thee."

REPORT OF J. HENRY SCATTERGOOD AND MORRIS E. LEEDS.

Our visit to the Marne region has given us such a vast amount of new impressions that we despair of conveying any adequate idea of them in a letter, so must ask for your utmost efforts of imagination and sympathy to piece out our meagre descriptions. During the major part of this trip we were fortunate in having the company of three of the Red Cross Commission. Their wide experience in relief and other lines made them keen observers, and in this as in our other contacts with them, they were most pleasant and helpful companions. The region itself, entirely aside from the influence of the war on it, presents so many things that are strange to American eyes, that I had better first say a word or two in regard to it.

To a very large extent it is agricultural, but so far as we saw there is almost nothing that compares with our American farms. The land is divided up into a great number of small pieces—half an acre to one or two acres—which are individually owned and apparently never fenced. One travels through these regions for miles at a time without seeing a house, although all of the land which is not wooded is or has been quite intensively farmed. The peoples' homes and barns are gathered together in villages, from which they go out to their farm operations and to which they carry all their harvest crops, and in which they keep all of their live-stock. The village street usually presents on each side an unbroken front of houses; to each one of these there is a large door through which wagons loaded with hay can be driven. The dwelling is at the front and is directly connected with various buildings to a fair-sized barn, in which, hay, etc., is stored. In this barn or in the buildings between it and the house the live-stock is kept. The villages and towns range from these in which there is very little except the homes of the peasant farmers, to very much larger towns having a considerable industrial community in addition to the farming population.

In the valley of the upper Marne, lying between Bar-le-Duc to the southeast of it and Chalons-sur-Marne to the northwest along the extreme line occupied by the Germans the Battle of the Marne seems to have raged most furiously and a very large number of these towns and villages have been either completely destroyed or wrecked in very large part. Bar-le-Duc was not destroyed at all, being outside of this line, and Chalons-sur-Marne, although inside of it, has been very little damaged, as there appears to have been no fighting there.

From what we can gather, by talking with our English Friends who have worked among them, the peasant class here is represented by no similar class at home. These small farmers, while they are hard-working, and live very simple lives, are thoroughly self-respecting and self-supporting, and are said to have considerable savings. Few, if any, of the pauper class exist. Among them family ties are very strong and unfortunate members of families are helped by their relatives.

Those who need help on account of the war are of three distinct classes.

First, those who lived in the region, whose homes and property were entirely or partly lost due to the Battle of the Marne and who are trying to re-establish themselves in their old localities.

Secondly, the refugees—they are the people who come from the regions now occupied by the Germans or which are in the present line of fighting, but who have never been behind the German lines or at any rate were able to flee directly from their homes through the French and German lines during the earlier part of the war.

Thirdly, the repatriated. These are the people either too old, too young or in too poor health to be of use to the Germans who have been living behind the German lines, and who are now being sent at the rate of one thousand to two thousand per day through Switzerland back into France.

The work which our English Friends are doing may be divided for convenience of description, and is actually divided for purpose of organization under the four heads:—Medical, Relief Work and Industry, Reconstruction, and Agriculture, but in the actual prosecution of their work there are no water-tight compartments, and one of its most useful features is the freedom with which the different workers, who are living together, co-operate with each other, exchanging experience and information, and so build up that kind of detailed knowledge of a community and its needs which must be the basis of any successful social and relief work.

MEDICAL.—We visited first the Maternity Hospital at Chalons for refugees, which was established among their earliest work in 1914, in a wing of a group of buildings which had previously been used to house old and feeble-minded people. This hospital has done an invaluable service to the refugees of the entire Marne region. About 500 babies have been born there. The hospital keeps in touch with them and their mothers after they leave, and also to a certain extent takes care of other small children of the family.

We also visited the Children's Hospital at Bettaincourt, delightfully established in a chateau loaned by the Countess Monillo. It has accommodation for about sixty children, and is filled with children who are sick or have to be separated from their families, because the latter are sticking to their homes in regions actually in or close to the war zone. An illustration of the conditions which make this home and hospital necessary is that of a little girl who was brought there by her mother with the remark that she could not keep her at home because she could not make her keep her gas mask on.

We have previously described our visit to the convalescent Home at Samoens, in the Haute-Savoie, where the Friends are building up the health of incipient tubercular patients taken from the crowded slums of Paris and other cities. This work is now being doubled in size by the opening of the convalescent home at Entremont.

We must also refer to the district nursing done by the Friends in the neighborhoods of Chalons, Bar-le-Duc, Troyes, Sermaize, Paris, etc., in connection with relief work among the refugees. At Sermaize they maintain a small hospital for women and children with a doctor and dentist and several nurses, who also look after the needs of out-patients and the staff.

Another line of most useful work accomplished by the Medical and Relief branches jointly is the placing of refugee children in the country or in improved living conditions. This has applied especially to the work of evacuation of the people of Rheims and vicinity, almost continuously under bombardment. This city had 120,000 people before the war; now there are less than 7000, and those dodge around from cellar to cellar. The children have mostly been taken away for safety, and the part the Friends have played in it is well described in a special circular which we herewith send.

RELIEF WORK AND INDUSTRY.—In several towns we had an opportunity to see the very bad conditions under which the families of the refugees have to live, even in those which have not suffered directly from the war. We visited buildings which before the war had been condemned by the authorities, but which now rent small rooms, some 12 or 15 feet square, into which are crowded three to six people, mostly women and children, but sometimes old men also, where they must sleep, cook and work. Such rooms often are rented at the extortionate price of 25 to 35 francs per month. In one such building that we visited there were crowded on an interior court in the first and second stories eight or nine such rooms, each one of which housed a family. The lot of these people is much harder than that of our ordinary slum dwellers in that they have come from homes where they had been able to live decently and had themselves been owners of sufficient property to live in comfort.

For these people the relief work has therefore taken the form in the first instance of providing them with clothing, as in very many cases they left their homes with nothing but the summer garments which they were wearing. Following that they were furnished with the simplest household necessities: a bed, small stove, simple wardrobe and a very few other things. These generally were given outright at the first, but later, whenever the sufferers had any money or were in a position to earn money, the furniture was sold to them at three-fourths cost price, although the clothing is always given. Oftentimes these sales are made on a basis of long-time payment by installments, and the fact that out of many hundreds of such credits, there have been almost none which have not been paid as due, speaks volumes for the character of the people. In addition to the large amount of material given by the Friends themselves, they have acted as the distributors of even larger amounts of furniture paid for by the public authorities, various French societies, the American Relief Clearing House and others.

On account of the large amount of military work being done in the larger towns, most people able to work can find it. For the old and for the women who cannot leave their homes, the Friends have started some simple industries, and particularly a simple type of embroidery which was designed by Margery Fry, to meet the necessity of furnishing work to women who were not already expert needlewomen. This work looked to us most attractive, and we were interested to learn that specimens of it had been ordered by a representative of the South Kensington Museum on account of its interest as a sample of a new domestic art being established among these people.

At all the centres of work, complete records are kept of the families visited, and before help is given them, their cases are carefully investigated, and so far as possible the work is done in co-operation with the church and other local authorities. In all this modern lines of well-organized social work are followed. This requires a large amount of office work which seems to be attended to in the evenings and other odd times, and the records are admirably kept in spite of the very limited time and office facilities.

RECONSTRUCTION.—During parts of two days, working out from the Friends' Centre at Sermaize, we visited many of the ruined villages. You have doubtless seen pictures of these—they remind one of the illustrations of Pompeii more than anything else. The little village of Sommellies is typical. In this all but six houses out of one hundred and fifty had been destroyed. Forty-nine houses have been built here by the Friends.

In doing the reconstruction work, the Friends have adopted the plan of placing comparatively few workers in each village. This has the advantage that the workers living for several months among the people are able to establish just this kind of intimate and friendly relationship which is such an admirable characteristic of their work. Perhaps the ministrations of personal and intimate friendship and good-will has played a part almost as important as the physical aid in helping these homeless and bereft people to attack anew the problems of life with courage and hope. We trust that our American work may be so organized as to give full scope to all who are able to render these inestimable services.

At Villers-aux-Vents, only two houses out of one hundred were undestroyed. The Friends have erected twenty-seven there. We visited one family and crawled into the vaulted cellar where they had lived for more than a year. They are now relatively comfortably established in one of the wooden houses and have some fifteen head of cattle and considerable other property accumulated since the destruction. The affectionate, friendly greetings which Baker received from people of all ages throughout the town were clear evidences of the strong bond of friendship and affection which had been established.

A large amount of rebuilding has been done in Sermaize itself, one hundred and three wooden houses having been erected there and twenty-four brick ones. Before the war this was a place of 34,000 inhabitants, of whom perhaps 2000 have now returned. The brick houses are grouped together in an attractive little settlement just outside of the town and were built to accommodate people who did not own property and who, previous to the war, had been working in the sugar factory or in other industrial work and living in rented quarters. Each house is surrounded by a good-sized garden, all of which are admirably kept.

AGRICULTURE.—An important part of the work which centres itself at Sermaize is the agricultural. This takes the form of providing the people with seeds, chickens and rabbits, and of loaning and to some extent giving agricultural implements. The rabbits were particularly interesting to us. They have something like one hundred and fifty of them and they are even a more important source of meat supply than chickens to these people who are used to raising them. This is particularly so at the present time, when grain is so scarce, as the rabbits seem to thrive on alfalfa and other greens. The extent of this agricultural work may be judged by the fact that they have had as many as one hundred and fifty mowing machines. Most of these have now been given to various villages where they are intended to be used by the entire community, but thirty of them are still retained and are loaned directly. All of the one hundred and fifty are followed up to see that they are kept in repair and are being used. They have forty-two reapers and binders which are used in a similar way and five motor threshing machines and five horse-power threshing machines. The men go out with the threshing machines and operate them, living when they do so with the families for whom they are working. They also have a Mogul tractor, which pulls three plows and is kept busy during the ploughing season. For all of this work they charge only for the gasoline used. Throughout this region a very large part of the agricultural machinery was destroyed when the villages were wrecked, and in addition to that there is a great scarcity of farm labor and of horses, so one can see that this is an exceedingly important part of the work. This department distributed forty-five tons of potatoes for seed this Spring, and had it not been for vexatious delays, due to congested traffic conditions and the over-worked French Department of Agriculture, they would have distributed 200 tons for which they had orders.

The largest centre of the Friends' work is at Sermaize, where we had the pleasure of staying two days. There are now about thirty workers centered there. They are quartered just outside of the town in a resort hotel property, which had a mineral spring and baths as its centre of attraction. Near this a small hospital has been built which takes care exclusively of women and children. The main bath-house serves as a garage and automobile repair shop, and in a building near it farm implements are housed. Dining-room, kitchen, central office, warehouse for clothing, etc., are in what was the amusement building of the hotel and the clothing stores are behind the stage of a little theatre. Most of the workers sleep in wooden houses made at Dole and erected here for this purpose.

During these few days in the Marne in which we have seen our Friends in direct contact with the people whom they have come to help and have had the privilege of long talks with many of them, individually and in groups, our respect and admiration for them and their work have grown continually. Their problem is beset with very great difficulties, which must be experienced to be appraised at their full value, but even a very brief contact shows how many hindrances there are to be overcome. Strange people with unfamiliar customs must be dealt with in a foreign language. Permission must be obtained from the military or other authorities for almost every journey and for every change of residence. Innumerable officials, high and low, local and at Paris, are to be consulted about every line of work. Movements of materials and all these other matters must be arranged through officials tremendously overworked and with resources overstrained by the war. Co-operation has to be arranged with numerous other relief societies, French and foreign, and necessarily giving precedence to military movements. Pacifists and men of an age to fight who engage in civil work are regarded with suspicion, and this is a recurring cause of trouble and delay. The work has to be done with inadequate facilities, often under very crowded and uncomfortable conditions, and last winter, which was unusually cold, under severe discomfort due to lack of fuel and poor houses. All these discouragements they seem to have met cheerfully, patiently and with persistent good judgment. They have among them men and women of a wide variety of training and background, doctors and nurses, architects, mechanics, farmers, social workers and men of multifarious business experience as well as younger people recently out of school and college. All these seem perfectly willing to work along lines where their training may count or for long stretches at humble and menial tasks, as occasion may demand. Everything that they do seems to be inspired with a combination of untirable good-will and practical wisdom, which has secured them a firm place in the affections of the unfortunate people whom they serve and the highest praise from competent judges who have studied their work. In talking with us, as in their printed reports, they were very modest about their accomplishments and emphasized mistakes and failures to be guarded against, but we have seen enough to know that these must have been small in comparison with their successes. Out of a group of people, largely unknown to each other, from this wide variety of social and business experience, and of constantly changing individuals, they have organized themselves into an effective society which is doing its work so well that Dr. Van Schaick, who has known relief work in many lands, said that it was the best that he had ever seen.

We hope that our American Friends may enjoy a very large measure of their help and guidance when they come over here. If a plan can be developed which will allow our people to serve an apprenticeship under them and continue connections that will infuse each group of our workers with their splendid spirit of service and good-will, it would seem to us to be a most happy one for us and for the work. Everywhere they have given us the most cordial welcome; and have taken us into their gatherings with a delightful freedom that has made us begin to feel at once that we belonged with them. After two days and nights at Sermaize we parted as if from friends whom we had known much longer, and with the strong hope on our part that other times and places may offer opportunities to renew and strengthen the friendship there so pleasantly commenced.

(Signed) MORRIS E. LEEDS,
J. HENRY SCATTERGOOD.

HOTEL VOULLMONT, Paris, Seventh Month 3, 1917.

If there is a place for you, then assuredly, if you wait on the Lord, you will find it, and having found it, you will know that the Lord hath need of. The porters in the temple were as numerous as the singers, and the watching of the gates was as needful as the service of song. Those who stand by night in the house of the Lord are as much in service as the players on musical instruments in the morning. To know the Lord's will and to do it is service.—ANNA SHIPTON.

NEWS ITEMS.

The following has reference to the little book of which we printed a review last week.—Eds.

We desire to call the attention of our readers to the Swarthmore Lecture for 1917, delivered in London, Fifth Month 22nd, by William Littleboy, on "The Day of Our Visitation." The first edition was quickly sold out, and a second edition is being prepared, part of which will be bound in paper covers and sold at a cheaper rate. It may be obtained from the Friends' Book and Tract Committee, 144 E. Twentieth Street, New York.

The Lecture contains a very powerful call to the Society of Friends to be ready for the great opportunity that is now, or shortly will be, offered it for a new venture of faith in preparing the way for the coming of the Kingdom of God.—(Communicated by Edward Grubb, Croydon, England. Secretary to the Swarthmore Lecture Committee.)

SOME Friends know, all will be interested to know, that Arnold C. Scattergood has enrolled for the Summer in Dr. Grenfell's peaceful army on the coast of Labrador. We hope to have selections from his reports home to print in our Paper. The following from Halifax will make a suitable introduction.—Eds.

Halifax is quite a quaint old town, full of soldiers. I saw some of them leaving on a very large transport. There were also 3000 American soldiers on her. I almost felt as though I could go, too, they were so cheerful and fine looking.

I have a soldier sleeping with me now. He is an ex-lieutenant, who was "gassed" on the other side. He said to me that he would never tell anybody to enlist.

There is another Newfoundland on board, who went over for the fun of it and got shot in the leg with shrapnel. He told some awful things, too. They don't like it after they've seen it.

There are several deaf mutes on board, who are quite interesting.

A. C. S.

COAST OF LABRADOR.

AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE.

RECONSTRUCTION UNIT.—The following was a part of last week's report for which we had not reserved sufficient space:

Rufus Jones remarked at the close of the first full day of the training period, "I have never known a day to be more perfectly satisfactory in every respect." This remark rightly characterizes a most auspicious beginning of this history-making venture of the Society of Friends in America.

The numbers recently drawn at Washington, so full of significance for the whole of a nation, held a peculiar interest for the Reconstruction Unit during its first week of training. About a dozen men—most of them Friends—found their serial numbers within the danger zone, and their sailing for France will probably depend upon the action of Local and District Boards upon their claims for exemption. We anticipate no difficulty in the case of Friends, and hope to secure exemption for non-Friends from the District Boards on the ground of this service.

The following is an account of the training routine by Lewis Cannett, a newspaper man on the Unit, who has charge of the press work for the Unit:

"It is a stiff day's work that the boys go through. A five-minute drill in pajamas, bathing suits or other hastily donned garments opens the day, followed by a wild dash for the shower. Six o'clock brings breakfast; by seven, rooms must be in order, beds made, clothes put away, and the floor swept.

"Then the training work begins. Among the members of the Unit are doctors, expert carpenters, engineers, and men with other special qualifications for the work. For an hour these men talk to their fellows. For another hour outside experts have the floor. Dr. Wilbur Horn, of Bryn Mawr, led off with the first of a series of five lectures on Sanitation.

"A series of ten lectures on Social Work by some of the leading experts of that field is an important part of the program. A great social reconstruction must accompany the building of houses and the tilling of fields. In another valuable series of ten lectures men who love France and are intimately acquainted with its life will give the men an introduction to the peasant—his habits and prejudices. A sympathetic understanding of the social life to be reconstructed is absolutely essential to any measure of success.

"French has a two-hour session beginning at 9.45. Half a dozen

"Messieurs and Mademoiselles" do the teaching to small groups. There is little book work—the attempt is to accustom the members of the Unit to hearing and understanding spoken French.

"Forty members of the Unit had never studied French at all. Only two of the boys from west of the Alleghenies had even learned to say 'Je ne sais pas.' But they waded into it with American conviction that there is no such word as can't, and the leaders hope to have every man at least able to ask the way and understand the answer by the time the Unit lands in Bordeaux. A few of the men show real proficiency.

"The afternoon brings no rest. Later on, it will be given over to lessons in road-building, masonry and chimney-making, to camp life in the open, and erecting portable houses, and to farming; but in the first week the men went through a stiff physical drill and then marched off for hikes of growing length. This was to harden them up and enable them to march in order when they move from village to village in France.

"Supper is followed by a half-hour's devotional service, and this in turn by a ten-minute talk on the news of the day by one of the Unit who was formerly a newspaper man. Sometimes there are lectures in the evening; sometimes the men are free to study French. William W. Confort, Haverford's new President, talked on 'The Spirit of France' one night of the first week. He said he might give a series of talks on French literature if a 'loud request' was made; and the end of his first talk found him surrounded by a group of loud requesters.

"Rufus Jones touched the key-note of the spirit of the Unit on the first morning. 'Yours is not merely a work of physical reconstruction,' he said. 'You must reassess families who are living in caves in the delirium, ill with tuberculosis, their little children underfed and playless. The world is very close to a spiritual as well as food famine. You will not have done your full task unless yours is a real spiritual ministry restoring the faith of people who have come to wonder if there really is any supreme good to appeal to.'"

AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE,
VINCENT D. NICHOLSON, Executive Secretary.

REPORT OF THE TREASURER OF THE AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE, FOR THE WEEK ENDING SEVENTH MONTH 30, 1917.—

Amount reported last week as having been collected.....	$110,298.95
Contributed by Meetings or Groups in various centers.....	86,311.29
Fellowship of Reconciliation.....	6,000.00
Both Branches of Friends at Waynesville, Ohio.....	141.00
	7,105.29
Contributions by Individuals.....	3,735.61
	$121,139.85

The contribution of $304.00 reported several weeks ago as from Orange Grove Monthly Meeting of Pasadena, California, should have been credited to numerous Friends in that city and not to any particular organization, although Friends of this Monthly Meeting assisted.

CHARLES F. JENKINS,
Treasurer.

AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE.—In response to the recent cable from our Commission in France, we have selected from the Reconstruction Unit the following men to fill an immediate need in various departments of the work of English Friends:

Caleb Canby Bablerston; Sidney F. Brown; Joseph Haines; William Waldo Hayes; Weston Howland; Given C. Johnson; Harold S. Lally; Lewis Marshall; Robert D. Metcalf; Alan G. Smith; D. Owen Stephens; Lester Taggart; Edward L. Webster; W. H. B. Whitall.

The men were selected for various duties specified and outlined in the cable and letter from France.

The well-balanced character of the Unit was disclosed by the fact that several men could have qualified for each of the ten distinct lines of work which the men will enter, many of them requiring wide technical training and experience.

A persistent rumor seems to be current that our original plans for work in France have miscarried. The rumor is wholly groundless and has evidently grown by the usual chain of misunderstanding and exaggerated statements. At no time has the probable scope of our work seemed larger. Our plans continue steadily to assume more definite form.

Everyone should take pains to allay such rumors that only tend to handicap the Committee by dampening the interest in the work.

VINCENT D. NICHOLSON,
Secretary.

RECEIPTS.

Unless otherwise specified, two dollars have been received from each person, paying for Vol. 91.

Herbert R. Bacon, Pa.; Joseph Roberts, Pa.; Mary D. Snowdon, Pa.; A. and F. E. Zook, Pa.; Joseph Pennell, Pa.; Margaret Maule, Pa.; Phebe Harned, Pa.; John W. Cadbury, Pa.; Elizabeth T. Bettle, Pa.; Gilbert E. Thomas, Ohio; Sarah E. Mitchell, Mass.; Isabel L. Gifford, Mass.; Job S. Gidley, Mass.; Henry T. Gidley, Mass.; James H. Tucker, Mass.; Thomas K. Wilbur, Mass.; Sarah M. Bailey, Ohio; John E. Hodgkin, Iowa; Lucy T. Burlingame, N. Y.; Eli Hadley, Ind.; Sarah Ann Johnson, Ind.; Ada V. Stanton, Ind.; Ashley Johnson, Ind.; George A. Rhoads, Del.; Ambrose H. Chappell, Del.; Geo. S. Hutton, Pa.; Walter P. Hutton, Pa.; Arthur W. Hutton, Pa.; Mary V. Hutton, Pa.; J. Harvey Darnell, N. J.; Fred Lippincott, N. J.; Morris P. Thomas, N. J.; Josiah P. Engle, N. J.; Dallas Reeve, N. J.; Maria Willits, N. Y.; Edward S. Sharpless, N. J.; Eli Sharpless, N. J.; Harvey J. Sharpless, N. J.; Samuel Forsythe, Pa.; Wm. Biddle, Pa.; James G. Biddle, Pa.; Tracy T. Bines, Pa.; Elizabeth S. Smedley, Pa.; Amy Mendenhall, Pa.; Edward Lippincott, Pa.; Thomas B. Lippincott, Pa.; John E. Lippincott, Pa.; Ellen Bromley, Pa.; John W. Tatam, Pa.; Sarah D. Hoopes, Pa.; Rebecca Evans, N. J.; Eliza J. Barton, N. J.; Sarah F. Evans, N. J.; Hamilton Haines, N. J.; Ella T. Gause, N. J.; Elizabeth H. Richie, N. J.; David R. Richie, Pa.; Dr. E. Roberts Richie, N. Y.; Francis R. Taylor, Pa.; Arthur L. Richie, N. J.; Wm. H. Richie, N. J.; Annie W. Thompson, Pa.; Josiah H. Newbold, Pa.; Rebecca C. Pandrich, Pa.; Henry B. Ward, Cal.; Susanna Brinton, Pa.; E. W. Bacon, Pa.; Wm. Evans Wood, Pa.; J. W. W. Lysinger, Pa.; Emma H. Darnell, N. J.; Arthur Perry, Mass.; Arthur Perry, Jr., Mass.; Henry H. Perry, Mass.; Willard L. Sperry, Mass.; George M. Coleman, N. Y.; Sarah Richie, N. J.; Hannah D. White, Ohio; Sarah A. Conard, Pa.; Anna M. S. Hamilton, Pa.; Rebecca N. Hoopes, Pa.; Anna B. Jacobs, Pa.; Alex. C. Wood, N. J.; Chas. Evans, N. J.; David Roberts, N. J.; Helen B. Roberts, N. J.; Jos. H. Ashard, N. J.; Mary R. C. Reeve, N. J.; Ella Cowman, Md.; Abigail B. Mott, Cal.; Rezin Thompson, Cal.; Henry W. Satterthwaite, Pa.; Caroline H. Brinton, Pa.; Henry D. Keith, Pa.; Harold Evans, Pa.; Albert H. Votaw, Pa.; Nathan P. Hall, Pa.; John S. Brown, Pa.; Abel McCarty, Pa.; Job McCarty, Pa.; George W. Thorpe, Pa.; Henry Cope, Pa.; Walter F. Price, Pa.; H. Mark Thomas, N. Y.; Hannah R. Willits, Ia.; Ellis C. Willits, Cal.; Samuel C. Smith, Ala.; Mary Haworth, Ohio; Elizabeth Faron, Del.; Samuel Buffum, Me.; Pearson W. Thomas, Ia.; William Thomas, Ia.; Wilson T. Sidwell, Ia.; Benjamin Elyson, Ia.; Jane Dyer, Ia.; Anna M. Walker, Ia.; John C. Thompson, Can.; Ezekiel Shoemaker, Pa.; Mary Sharpless, Pa.; Anna T. Griffith, in account with THE FRIEND, subscriptions to THE FRIEND received since draft of $44.00 was forwarded on Seventh Month 6, 1917, viz.:—George Forsythe, Rachel M. Hopkins, Hannah H. Savery, Lydia Darlington, Anna P. Rhoads, Elizabeth Savery Taylor, George B. Mellor, Thomas S. Mellor, Isaac Sharpless, William T. Sharpless, Ann Sharpless, Anna S. Webb, Mary E. Eldridge, Susanna T. Cope, Deborah D. Maris, Thomas C. Hogue, Jane B. Temple, Mervy A. Roberts, Elizabeth L. Roberts, Charles C. Roberts, Francis T. Warrington, Elizabeth S. Brinton, Ralston R. Hoopes, Edward Brinton, Charles Stratton, Lydia T. Hare, all of Pa.; total $50.20.

Remittances received after Third-day evening will not appear in receipts until the following week.

NOTE.—The pressure of timely matter is again so great that the Summary is omitted.

NOTICES.

In future members of the Philadelphia Yearly Meeting are requested to send all orders for foreign garments, patterns, etc., in connection with sewing for the reconstruction work, to 301 Arch Street, instead of to 140 N. Fifteenth Street. The request is made in order to avoid financial complications between the two committees. Garments for both home and foreign relief may be had free of charge by the members of the Yearly Meeting on application to 301 Arch Street, although voluntary contributions when possible will be welcome.

ANNE GARETT WALTON, Secretary.

WISSAHICKON INN REDLANDS, CALIFORNIA.

THE WISSAHICKON INN is situated in an Orange Grove in Redlands, the most beautiful place in the San Bernardino Valley.

At the Wissahickon Inn, a family hotel of fifty rooms, you will find a homelike place, good food, and careful attention to your wants.

Rooms with private bath and plenty of public baths. One or two cottages on the grounds. Near parks and golf course. Tennis court. Magnificent roads for motoring. For reservations and prices, address

A. B. JOHNSON.

"WILLIAM PENN." John W. Graham, M. A.
Postpaid, $2.60.

"WHAT IS QUAKERISM?"

Edward Grubb, M. A.
Limp Cover, Postpaid, 80 Cents.

1917 Swarthmore Lecture.

"THE DAY OF OUR VISITATION."

William Littleboy.

Postpaid, 55 Cents.

FOR SALE BY

FRIENDS' BOOK AND TRACT COMMITTEE

144 East 20th Street, - NEW YORK CITY.

*Phone, 2806 Gramercy.

H. G. CHALKLEY & SONS, LTD.

LONDON, ENGLAND LAKE CHARLES, LA.
LAWRENCE, KANSAS

OFFER:—

First Lien Farm Mortgages, paying from 6% to 6½% net to the investor.

Not to exceed 40% of our own valuation loaned to the farmer.

Full particulars of mortgages on hand ranging from $500.00 to $5,000.00, given on application to:—

T. H. CHALKLEY, LAWRENCE, KANSAS

Letchworth Cottage Spring Lake Beach, N. J.

Open for the Season 1917

A. C. & S. H. Letchworth

WALL PAPERS—All Grades
WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER
Custom of Friends Specially Solicited

FRANK C. BUEHL

Successor to S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON

902 SPRING GARDEN ST. - PHILADELPHIA
Opposite Spring Garden Station, Phila. & Reading R. E.
ESTABLISHED 1849 BELL 'PHONE

POCONO MANOR INN

The busy summer season is near at hand—also the beautiful mountain laurel and rhododendron, which will be found in abundance over the Manor Estate. The Golf Course is in better condition than ever before; the Fairways and Greens are all very beautiful and add greatly to the general picturesqueness of these Links in the Poconos.

In arranging to come to the Pocono Manor during the summer if reservations have not already been made we should suggest that we be communicated with at once.

J. W. HURLEY, Mgr., Pocono Manor, Pa.
(Pocono Summit Station, D. L. & W. K. R.)

Friends Arch St. Centre

304 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Provides comfortable accommodations for guests by the day or week. Meals at moderate prices.

AMELIA D. FEATHERSTONE, Matron.
PHONE—MARKET 1571.

RESIDENCE: 204 S. 44th St. BELL 'PHONE: Baring 2084X
WILLIAM OAKES

Plumbing and Heating Contractor

ALSO LEAD BURNING

260 SOUTH TENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA

BELL 'PHONE: Filbert 2666.

ASSOC. M. AM. Soc. C. E. Bell 'Phone—Lombard 3412

EDWIN M. EVANS
CONTRACTOR & BUILDER

My jobbing department is well equipped,
prompt and efficient

321 S. LAWRENCE ST. :: PHILA.

WILLIAM S. YARNALL
MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

118 SOUTH FIFTEENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA

Premier Duplicating Co.

Mimeographing, Multigraphing, Printing, Type-writing, Addressing, Mailing, etc.

630 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

ALFRED C. HAINES
Building Glass and Paints
86 N. Front St., Philadelphia.

THE HOLMES PRESS

Printers

J. L. Engle, Pres.

1336-40 CHERRY ST. - PHILA.

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE
MATERIAL THAT WE SELL

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

THE LAKESIDE

EAGLES MERE, PA.

Unobstructed lake view; capacity 250.
Elevator steam heat, golf, tennis, boating and bathing. Attractive motoring through the surrounding country.

GARAGE

J. S. KIRK & SON

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

622 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGUE

GIRARD TRUST CO.
BROAD and CHESTNUT STS.

CAPITAL
AND
SURPLUS } $10,000,000

Acts as Executor, Trustee, Guardian,
Administrator, Assignee and Receiver.
Safes to Rent in Burglar-proof Vaults.
Interest Allowed on Deposits. :: ::

E. B. MORRIS
PRESIDENT

OWNER OF 98 ACRE FARM WITH A $5000 NEW poultry plant wants to get in touch with a young married Friend with energy and scientific poultry and farm experience. Will consider taking right party into partnership if he has $2000 to $3000 to invest. Must be unquestionably honest and trustworthy. Real opportunity for right party: state just what you can do in first letter. Address, "H"—THE FRIEND.

RHOADS
LEATHER BELTING

A Michigan corporation are well pleased with the 38-inch 3-ply Rhoads driving belt shown above. It is one of an installation of large belts that have run with remarkable trueness and balance, and with remarkably little stretch. Another of these, a 20-inch double, has been pronounced by several men the straightest belt they ever saw.

Such Belts Mean Satisfaction and Service

J. E. RHOADS & SONS

PHILADELPHIA: 12 N. THIRD ST.
NEW YORK: 102 BEKMAN ST.
CHICAGO: 322 W. RANDOLPH ST.
BALTIMORE: 37 S. CHARLES ST.
FACTORY AND TANNERY: WILMINGTON, DEL.

Philadelphia's
Representative Store

SEE WALKER & KEPLER
FOR
Good Electrical Work

531 CHESTNUT ST. -- PHILA.

ELKINS, MORRIS & CO.

BANKERS

REPRESENTATIVES

WM. E. CADBURY
PAUL W. BROWN
JAMES P. MAGILL

LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

JOSEPH G. FOGG
FUNERAL DIRECTOR and EMBALMER

S. W. COR. 16TH AND RACE STREETS
Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals
BELL 'PHONE SPRUCE 1648

R. C. Ballinger Ernest R. Yarnall John A. Stratton
TELEPHONES

Bell—Fibert 26-15 - - Keystone—Race 637

R. C. BALLINGER & CO.
CONTRACTORS and BUILDERS

218 N. Thirteenth St. Philadelphia.

GLASLYN-CHATHAM

PARK PLACE
ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

*A Family House of Established Reputation.
Open Throughout the Year.*

NATHAN L. JONES.

FRIENDS' BIBLE ASSOCIATION

HAS ITS HEADQUARTERS AT

207 WALNUT PLACE : PHILA.

It is able to furnish Bibles and Testaments to Schools and Bible-classes and would be glad to have Friends everywhere acquaint themselves with the needs of their neighborhoods and allow the Bible Association to help them procure the books they may want. : :

W. J. MacWATTERS
WITH

HARDWICK & MAGEE CO.
SUCCESSORS TO

IVINS, DIETZ & MAGEE

Let me help you in selecting your

Rugs and Carpets

Our new imports of Oriental Rugs
are of the highest merit

1220-22 MARKET ST. :: PHILA.

RAILROAD AND
PUBLIC UTILITY BONDS

FOR

CONSERVATIVE INVESTMENT.

FULL PARTICULARS ON REQUEST.

BACK LOG CAMP

INDIAN LAKE, N. Y.

In the Heart of the Adirondacks.

The name Back Log Camp means a great deal to many people. We shall be glad to send our booklet to any one who is interested in the latest development of the Back Log idea.

THOMAS K. BROWN
Westtown, Pa.

PUBLIC STENOGRAPHER

GEORGE B. COCK, Liberty Building

Established 1896. Experience 39 years; Medical 13

W. B. WEAVER
UNDERTAKER and EMBALMER

550-552 N. 5TH ST., PHILA., PA.

Special Attention Given to Funerals
In and Out of the City. Also Chapel
Accommodations for Funerals. ? ?

BELL 'PHONE ESTABLISHED 1889

HARVEY T. WEBER

TAILOR

207-208 HALE BLDG., 1326 CHESTNUT ST.

The custom of Friends specially solicited.

HARRY S. LEE

313 WALNUT STREET

PAINTER AND GRAINER

ANTIQUE and OFFICE FURNITURE RESTORED
JOBGING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO
ESTIMATES

H. F. BRUNER

S. D. HALL

H. F. BRUNER & Co.

COAL

OFFICE AND YARD

16 N. TWENTY-FIRST STREET
PHILADELPHIA

TELEPHONES: } LOCUST 244
} RACE 501

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 91.

FIFTH-DAY, EIGHTH MONTH 9, 1917.

No. 6.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price $2.00 a year in Advance.
Publisher, DAVIS H. FORSYTHE.

Editors { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
 { DAVIS H. FORSYTHE,
 { MARY WARD.

Make remittances payable to
THE FRIEND,
No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.
Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

WELL ROOTED.

"Rooted and grounded."—Eph. iii: 17.

Have any of my readers watched the swaying of the tops of the great pine trees in the Southern Alleghenias or on the High Sierras? Some, straight as an arrow, shoot one or two hundred feet into the air. The massive trunks are immovable, and only the tops swing under the pressure of breeze or wind. They gracefully toss their green plumes and, like things of life, offer obedience to the Creator. These beautiful trees remind us of genuine Christian character with respect to its growth, beauty and power.

True Christian character is, like these dignified trees of the forest, magnificently rooted. Have you, when in the mountains, noticed the over-turned trees? Have you observed that it was the shallow-rooted trees that had been flung over by the storms? Those with deep rootage were the ones to stand—they were able to defy the snowy blast or hurricane. So is it with all believers in Jesus Christ. The further their roots descend into God's life-giving soil, the better they withstand adversity and temptation. Still better for them is it when, as Paul expresses it, they are "rooted and grounded in love." Then they are immovable.

Have you seen a grand old tree with a rotten core? That rottenness was at first not known to men. The decay was insidious and slow. But it struck at the very heart of the sturdy work of Nature. Some day when a storm assailed it, it came down with a thunderous crash and possibly bruised or prostrated lesser trees in its pitiful fall. Many a Christian character has been similarly wrecked and destroyed. A writer has said that every Christian should be re-converted at forty. There is a great truth in this. Frequently youthful Christians, like young pine trees, are straight and strong—their characters give promise of a maturity vigorous in faith and power. They point heavenward. Their arms reach out protectively to those about them. But some day they let into their hearts the germs of temptation, fear or hate. The world may not see the change, but the rottenness is there—it grows.

Suddenly in the midst of a grievous storm they unexpectedly fall. The secret decay is revealed. Their hearts have accepted the unhappy things which destroyed character and others have been involved in the ruin. Smaller men often falter and lose confidence in God and human integrity because some fair Christian reputation has in this manner been destroyed!

Let us be solicitous regarding our spiritual rootage. Let us watch against the first attacks of hidden sin, or sinful thought, upon our hearts. The power of God's Grace to change us is very wonderful, and if we keep His virtue and spirit in our souls all will be well. Like the great pine trees, we will shelter those about us and bear daily witness to the beauty and majesty of the Creator's love and power. For:

If our hearts well rooted be,
Their love like sap within the tree,
With silent quickening moves;
Enlarged and liberated power
More light, and balmy warmth are ours,
And God his presence proves.

SAN JOSÉ, California.

W. C. A.

REVERSION TO TYPE.

During the Boer War public opinion in Great Britain gave unmistakable signs of recession from what had been regarded as well-established standards of civic morality. This became a signal to Peace people, even in America, for a revived activity of education. Not a few Peace meetings were held in various Friendly centres about Philadelphia. The most notable, perhaps, was at the Twelfth Street Meeting-house. J. Rendel Harris had come to this country and his first-hand knowledge of the outrages committed upon Peace propagandists in Yorkshire, added to his well-known breadth and acumen, made his name on the program of speakers a great attraction. A large company of people assembled. When Dr. Harris appeared, it was immediately apparent that the seriousness of the situation was resting heavily upon him. His natural buoyancy evidently had had a sore shock. When he spoke this feeling was even more evident. The sudden outburst of national hate, which he had witnessed, seemed almost to have broken his heart. In measured words, protesting that no words were equal to the emergency, he said war, then as ever, was plainly "reversion to type." Reversion from sanity to insanity, from good-will to hate, from a moral and spiritual estate to the lowest depths of animal degradation. Perhaps the learned doctor never made a briefer speech on a more momentous occasion, but the feeling that clothed his spirit was unmistakable. It brought into the foreground those most pathetic of recorded words: "I would and ye would not." We were helped to see and feel the suffering of the bleeding heart of Christ as He contemplates a rebellious world.

Now after years have past, now with three years of unparalleled bloodshed as our daily portion of suffering, "reversion to type" seems to epitomize better than any phrase we hear, the scenes of woe and wickedness that accumulate beyond all our powers of computation with each revolving day. Nor need we adopt the phrase in any degree of self-complacency. It involves ourselves, quite involuntarily at many points, in spite of strenuous effort in other points. Let us, if we can, compare the present effect of the day's war news upon us with the feelings aroused by reports of bloodshed during the first months of the war. Evidently something has happened! But more pointed than this, and of much wider significance, is the change in the general feeling and attitude of the press. One may test this by any of the great dailies. A half dozen of their editorials of three years ago, put side by side with a half dozen of the past month, reveal a world of difference in feeling and judgment that they themselves would have said would be impossible. Nor has the religious press escaped the reversion. The twenty or more well-known weeklies that come to our table present very few exceptions to this general condition. They have suddenly turned from the Gospel to "tables of stone."

As to the general temper of public opinion in this reversion, one hardly knows where or how to turn not to be appalled by it. The savagery of race riots may be the superlative manifestation, but one can truly record now as our paper did record under date of Third Month 20, 1862, "War continues to desolate [the world] and deprave the morals of the people."

Some months ago one of our esteemed subscribers (the adjective applies to all our subscribers) sent us a clipping from the New York Evening Post, giving some impressive statistics of the great increase in juvenile crimes in Great Britain since the outbreak of the war. Figures from other countries in the war zone, especially from Germany, are well nigh sickening to tender sensibilities. Already this "wave of juvenile crime" has affected our own country. Perhaps it presents one of the most hopeful fields for constructive work to those of us who are bent on resisting the effort to make us allies of destructive efforts. We can lend ourselves to preventive and corrective organizations at least to the extent of being a "big brother or sister" to one or more of the wayward. The war can not proceed without growing reversions to crime amongst the child life of the world. One would think this the final and absolute argument against the whole system of warfare. It is a part of the reversion, however, that arguments have lost their wonted power!

The call of the hour to each of us as we survey the feverish condition of the world is for a studied quiet and poise in the strongholds of Faith. Ex-President White, of Cornell, sees revolution for us as a nation after the present war. His point of view is world-wide and philosophic. If enough of us have a surplus of spiritual power to release for the healing of the conditions which he deplures, we may be instruments of mercy to avert such a calamity. Any resistance we make therefore to the general current of reversion may prove our best contribution to the largest issues we can possibly serve.

J. H. B.

CONSECRATION to Christ's service is not what we often fancy it—a faraway height of religious attainment; it consists in doing the simplest everyday duty that comes to us, in such a spirit as to make it a consecrated work. MARY H. HOWELL.

Suggested by Rebecca R. Bucknell.

A PLEA FOR PEACE.

Dear Lord! this world of thine,
Is torn by war and strife,
Man murders man.
From out Thy starlit skies,
The deadly bomb comes hurtling down
And babies in their beds are dashed asunder.
The mothers of the earth are hurled to death,
And unborn children slain.
Thy sweet, pure air,
Which Thou hast given to be the breath of life,
Is poisoned by the devilish wit of man,
Till all who breathe must die a fearful death.
In deep dug gashes on the breast of earth,
Far down beneath the waves
And high above the clouds,
Men lurk and plot and scheme
To kill their fellows.
From stately altars rise the prayers of men,
Asking Thy aid, to slay their brother man.
Amidst a world, where violence is law
And might is right;
Where pledge and promise are but scraps of paper,
They call us to prepare to do our part,
To turn our hearts from all Thy gentle precept,
And train our children up to be prepared to kill.
To answer bitter words, with words more fierce,
And be prepared to render blow for blow.
Dear Lord! long, long ago,
Thou stretched Thy hand above a raging sea
And let Thy wish be known,
And all was peace.
Stretch forth again Thy hand
Of pity and of power,
Above a world tossed by a storm of rage and hate.
Breathe peace into the souls of men
And bid the tumult in their hearts be still
And save us from ourselves, before it is too late.

—T. HOWARD HANSON.

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES AT BARNESVILLE SCHOOL.

On the evening of Fifth Month 30th, the collecting-room at Olney was crowded in honor of the graduation of the largest class in the history of the School. If the large crowd of relatives and friends were expecting something a little above the ordinary in commencement addresses, they were in no way disappointed. The outstanding features of the essays, as a rule, seemed to us to be the high moral character of each one, the enthusiasm of the class in handling their subjects, the number who touched on the subjects of peace and temperance, and the large number dealing in whole or in part with subjects of particular interest to rural residents, showing the preponderance of that class among the patrons of the School.

The address to the Class by Edith A. Stratton follows:—

MEMBERS OF THE CLASS OF 1917 AND FRIENDS OF OLNEY:

Last winter Dr. Richard Roberts told a story of some boys he knew in an English boarding-school. A serious quarrel had arisen between the two gangs, who faced one another angrily on opposite banks of a small stream. Their missiles were first words, then stones, and finally they resorted to kitchen knives brought from a nearby dormitory. At this juncture the loved headmaster of the school stepped into the breach and quietly said, "Boys, come, let's talk it over together."

The boys paused in their belligerent occupation and a bit reluctantly stepped back. They followed the master, and under his firm, gentle leadership peace was restored.

This incident Dr. Roberts told as a prophecy of reconciliation between warring nations.

"Come, boys, let's talk it over together. Let's stop throwing stones and understand one another. We have failed in human brotherhood."

In this industrial strife, waged a bit less conspicuously, between capital and labor, employer and employee; in this great inequality of opportunity; in these extremes of wealth and poverty; in this race and class prejudice—are the “seeds of war” in our social order. Here, too, we need to talk it all over and understand and help one another. Here we have failed in human brotherhood.

Through the coming weeks, if we think deeply and observe keenly, we shall see in our home communities, in our meetings, in our individual homes, in our individual hearts, these “seeds of war.” “Come, let’s talk it over together.” We have all failed in human brotherhood.

These difficulties are external indications only of a universal failure in social adjustment. Is not the fundamental cause of all this desperation and misunderstanding and hatred and intolerance, after all is boiled down to the essential element, a lack of human brotherhood? Perhaps this sounds too simple to cover the case, but it implies a tremendous lot. It implies a sense of God as Father of us all, and it is inextricable from the life of the One who taught and lived out perfect sonship and perfect brotherhood. Beneath and above the tumult of warring factions without us and within us, we would hear His voice saying, “Peace, be still.” Then we would be willing and able to speak face to face and understand one another.

Concretely, then, the world’s crying need is the example of Christian brotherhood worked out in specific groups. Carried back to its foundation, one arrives at the individual lives which might form such a group. “The Kingdom of Heaven is within you.” It always comes back to the consecration of the one person—myself. And the minute my life touches the life of another, the problem of social relationship begins. What is this other to me?

A policeman happened along the River Drive in one of our city parks in time to see a little street urchin falling head-long into the water. Boy number two, slightly larger, with out one moment’s hesitation, leaped in and rescued the little fellow. The admiring policeman addressed boy number two. “My lad, that was a fine thing to do!” The boy looked at him rather scornfully. “Why, cop, he’s my brother!” Of course! It is a very little thing to risk life for a brother. That is the foundation for a real Christian society.

Slowly, from childhood to old age, the circle of one’s brotherhood should widen. Has not the time arrived when it should extend beyond the seas and men should say of this German, of this Russian, of this Chinese, “Why, he’s my brother?” There have been many individual lives consecrated to this principle; a few groups; no steadily consecrated nation. America has just missed her stupendous opportunity to be this pioneer nation. We who want to find a better way for nations to live together must begin farther back and manifoldly increase the number of groups which are true Christian brotherhoods—the number of individuals who can feel, not only in disaster, but in every working day of the week, “Why, he’s my brother!” I would be more than just; I would be generous; I would give him the benefit of the doubt; I would not repeat such a charge against him; I would not speak or think evil of him, for “He’s my brother!”

From this immense subject of the working out of Christ’s principle of brotherhood, in this warring world, I want this afternoon to ask you to think very simply with me of two marvelous opportunities open to us. The first is this School itself.

It is difficult for me to put into words the weight of my conviction that a School such as this is one of the greatest opportunities for achieving this ideal that was ever conceived. If education is to be a true preparation for life, it must be itself life. One learns to live the more abundant life, not by reading and arguing about it, but by simply and earnestly and joyously living it. If this School family, gathered from different environments and homes, can learn to live together and regulate their lives by the spirit of good-will, mutual confidence and co-operation, what a powerful leaven they can be in the world!

They are learning to do this very thing. If I were asked to sum up the specific contribution of the students of the past three years to the life of the School, I should say, without one moment’s hesitation, it has been their experiment in self-government. Through this organization they are evolving a social system which will allow to the individual the greatest possible liberty for development compatible with the good of the group as a whole, and with the ideals for which the School stands. They are developing personal initiative and a social conscience. They are developing powers of leadership and, quite as important, powers of intelligent, unselfish “fellowship.”

As a matter of fact, this method of self-government seems to me the only logical conclusion for a true democracy. As a nation, we stand upon the assumption of the superiority of democracy in political life over government by an autocracy; as a religious society we stand upon the assumption of the superiority of democracy in spiritual life over religion presided over by a clerical class. Now we are applying this principle educationally and these students are demonstrating that the principle which has been the ideal (never yet fully attained) in our national and in our denominational life, should also control our educational life.

When once the seed of democracy is sown, it exerts a most germinating influence. It reacts on all the details of living and seeks applications of brotherhood in widening circles. Many have noted a distinct increase in spiritual vitality in the last few years at the School. There are many causes for this. The whole world stands on the brink, as I believe, of a colossal spiritual upheaval. Young people to-day are not red-blooded citizens of the new kingdom, for their very souls are not energized by this stupendous cataclysm. But one of the immediate causes of this increased interest in spiritual matters is, I believe, self-government. It has lifted the students from the realm of expediency to the realm of ideals; from outer compulsion to inner conviction. There is a close spiritual kinship between realizing brotherhood in community life and realizing the fatherhood of God in individual life, and between responsibility for the whole group in the character standards of a self-government organization, and in the united worship of a Friends’ meeting.

These students will disappoint me deeply if they do not make more responsible and concerned members of your local meetings, more capable and unselfish citizens of the United States because of this experiment station in democracy.

This brings me to my second point—another opportunity for affording to the world an example of true Christian brotherhood. Many students have asked, in substance, this question: “This wonderful Olney spirit—can we carry it into the world? Do they want it?”

In other words, are our experiment station conclusions practicable? Is this ideal of human brotherhood workable? The world to-day, crazed by the engines of war, cries “No” in terror. But let us rise up even in this dust of despair and answer: “Yes! Brotherhood has never failed where it has been applied. The denial of it is slaughtering the world to-day.” “But how can we carry it?” they urge. “Do our home neighborhoods feel the need of it?”

I pass the question on to you with no misgiving as to the answer in your hearts. Moreover, I feel in your eager response an answering question as you welcome these students to the home neighborhoods: “How can we help you to bring it and to give it?” You will work that out together. You will “talk it all over” frankly and try to understand and help one another. May I make three suggestions that may help pave the way for this sympathetic understanding?

The first is the removal of the barrier of age. I speak out of a most grateful heart when I say that I know the deep strength and joy that can come into a life from someone of much richer, riper experience of years; and also from those who have not traveled quite so far along life’s strange path—the friendship of an older person with a younger person—a man of ripe years and a young heart with a girl or boy in the “teens”; a woman of large sympathy and delicate discretion to a boy or girl opening eyes on an expanding inner world of conflict and aspirations. In the young person it is the cry for the hand of a steady friend who has been over the road and has come out radiant and strong. In the older person it is perhaps the joy of rediscovered youth. I am one of those who believe that a difference in mere years shall form not only not a barrier but a positive bond between us. The younger need the mature judgment and sympathetic counsel of older companions; the older need the new life and vigor and vision of the young. "Your old men shall dream dreams, and your young men shall see visions." We are all struggling toward the city of God. We need the charts of the past and the plans of the future.

"The eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee; nor again the head to the feet, I have no need of you." No more can the younger say to the older, "We have no need of you." They have sometimes said it and have impoverished their own lives and saddened and narrowed the lives of the older ones. And suppose now and then the older ones have given the impression to the younger that they could not be trusted to share religious responsibilities, or to take an active part in the meeting. They have sometimes given this impression, perhaps half unconsciously. Many a student has come to me after I have made some such entreaty as the foregoing and said, "But they won't trust us."

"Have you shown by your actions that you care for the ideals of the Society; in other words, that you are worthy of their trust?"

And repeatedly the same expression of self-condemnation darkens the puzzled face. "No, I'm afraid we haven't shown it. We went off and made it worse because we weren't trusted for our best."

Which brings me to my second concrete suggestion of ways to help these bring to you of their best. You can help them forge out their activities. You know when you're young how overflowing full of energy you feel? Your animal spirits just bubble and splash over the edge of the cup of life. As a girl said to me once:

"What can I do? I just feel as though I wanted to go down to the woods and yell and yell as hard as I could!"

"By all means go and yell!"

She came back a little disappointed. "I guess it wasn't quite as nice as I thought."

Of course not. Mere yelling doesn't satisfy ambition. I didn't do full justice by that girl or I should have helped her then to find the activity for which she vaguely longed. I was too busy at the moment.

So are we all. So busy that we lose the precious energy that might remove mountains of difficulty in our community and international life. So busy that we let the energy which should turn our windmills blow down our chimneys. So busy that we let the younger people wander away where life is not so pure or so beautiful as their heart of hearts really wants. Too busy!

They want to be busy, too, but mere physical work will not satisfy. Mind and heart also cry out for employment. The whole man speaks at first, until we have stifled part of our whole selves into disuse. We all know the social craving which is so insistent in young people. It needs the consecration of a great purpose, the guidance of a great companionship, to keep it pure and high and uplifting.

But perhaps we have not realized so keenly a craving that is stronger, more compelling, more searching than this social instinct even. It is the cry of the religious life for expression. I believe it would be a positive surprise to many people older and much wiser than I if they could step again into the very life of apparently careless youth and feel this restless, hungry longing for spiritual reality.

Curiously enough, it is often the most desperate in those boys and girls whom no one thinks of as religious; who would shrink farthest from scrutiny and hide deepest their religious thirst.

Yet this compelling instinct we often unconsciously strangle. Impression must normally flow out into expression. The Dead Sea is dead, not because life-giving streams do not flow into it, but because it has no outlet. Many and many a life has grown into religious stagnation because of religious inactivity.

Do we wish it were otherwise? It puts a tremendous responsibility upon our own lives—that they pour out "the last full measure of devotion"; for these other lives that we provide channels of appropriate activity.

What can they do? We shall provide for their physical lives, that they may find suitable employment. We shall provide, I hope, for their social lives, that they may know the joy of fellowship. Can we provide outlets for the religious vigor of inexperience, immature people with a hunger to serve, out of all proportion as yet to the ability for service? This, it has seemed to me, is one of the greatest problems we are facing, if indeed we have even as yet recognized it? It is sad to be forced to recognize it by seeing some of our vigorous, red-blooded youth leaving the Society and by seeing young people cooling in their support to the extent that mid-week meetings, for example, are attended only by the faithful few who are actively carrying the heavy burden which all should want to share. One result is a saddened skepticism on the part of the burden-bearers, which further drives the others away.

"What makes these older people look so sad if religion is really a joy?" many a one has asked. It is very difficult for them to understand without coming to doubt either individual Friends or religion.

My third suggestion for keeping these close to you and the Quakerism you and they love is this: recommend your religion by your lives as the most spiritual, the most satisfying, the most challenging, the most joyous thing in the world. As someone has said, "If you want to spread Christianity you must have a contagious case of it yourself." There should be a radiance, a warmth of love, "a beauty of holiness" about a Christian that would draw others to it as a magnet draws the needle. Have our own lives been magnetized by the radiant life of the Master? Unless He has gripped our lives so utterly that every seven days of the week and every department of our every-day living has felt the touch, we cannot enter the fullness of discipleship and become "fishers of men."

These three simple but fundamental suggestions, then, for extending the School spirit of brotherhood into the home communities—making difference of age, not a barrier, but a bond; providing for religious as well as physical and social activity and expression; recommending our religion by our lives.

And, Members of the Class of 1917, on you ultimately the future of the undertaking depends. You have served your Alma Mater gladly and well in your life here. Her heart gives thanks for you. She loves you for what you have done and for what you are, but more than these—for what you are to do and for what you will become. You can prove your loyalty, as the knights of old, by going out now into the big, puzzled world and living out your ideal of human brotherhood. If you fail in contributing your full share to your own communities, it will be because this ideal has not become the guiding star of your own hearts. It must become so deeply entrenched in your lives that it will influence every business deal, every social relationship, every civic and religious duty. It will make gossip and slander impossible; generosity and sympathy essential; self-sacrifice a joy.

Become worthy of great friendships; prove by your lives that you are worthy of being trusted with deep responsibilities. Do not distrust your conviction of the joy and the height and the depth of the love of God. At first the old loved ideal will seem alien to the new environment. You have never lived it there. Life will seem suddenly cramped and monotonous and exacting, perhaps, but the little corner will be discovered deep; the daily routine God's way of service.

Together and with Him we may achieve in each of our little home neighborhoods the great thing that the world is wanting—proof that the principle of Christian brotherhood is workable. First, in our individual lives; then in our home life; our meetings; our villages. When each Friends' neighborhood the world over has achieved this, people will believe it and carry it on to national and international relations. Perhaps, after all, this will be our great contribution to the future—the contagious living-out of brotherliness in widening groups. Perhaps to us as a Society comes the high calling of being a nucleus of brotherhood in a war-ridden world. Would we be any less than this?

The present cries out against us, because we dare to believe that love is the strongest thing in the world—stronger than U-boats, stronger than bayonets, stronger than defenses of steel. We live for the future, for the triumph of brotherhood. We hold very lightly the scorn of the present, and yet bear on our hearts the suffering and despair of our brother men.

"Dreamers of dreams! We take the taunt with gladness,
Knowing that God, beyond the years you see,
Will weave the dreams that count with you for madness
Into the substance of the life to be."

—From the Olney Current.

"IN QUIETNESS AND CONFIDENCE SHALL BE YOUR STRENGTH."

Isaiah xxx:15.

[The following was delivered in the Cathedral at Toronto by F. H. Cosgrove, early this year. Its reference to Friends naturally arrested the interest of one present for those of her circle still in membership with her father's denomination, and she secured a copy from the rector. We had the privilege of reading this and asked that we might print it in our paper. It shows better than any thing we might write the reaction in Church circles of books like "The Fellowship of Silence" and "The Fruits of Silence," both noticed some time since in our columns. The coming of these distinctly Friendly ideas into ritualistic services does not at once modify the points of emphasis in such sermons. This appears very clearly in this sermon. Another fact, to us quite as clear, is that eventually this effort to make communion personal and spiritual will swallow up outward form and ceremonial. "He must increase, but I shall decrease."—Eds.]

I believe that the name of Alan Gardiner will be familiar to many here this morning. You will remember it as that of a captain of the British Navy who went as a Christian missionary, first to South Africa, and afterwards to South America, and who, along with several gallant comrades, died by starvation on the coast of Patagonia in 1851.

I have been reading lately of another Alan Gardiner, a grandson of that heroic missionary, who was vicar of the village of Havelock in New Zealand, and died in 1912. Some years ago he was asked by a number of Quakers in that district to allow them to use the vestry of the church at Havelock for their weekly meetings. The vicar not only gave the permission, but along with a few friends, joined the Quakers in their quiet worship every Saturday evening. When the number of persons grew too large for the vestry, the meetings were held in the nave of the church. This curious experiment in Christian unity was most successful. The Quakers found in the church just the atmosphere which they desired, while the vicar and his friends felt the restful quietness of the Quaker worship to be an excellent preparation for the work and worship of the following day.

In 1910, several English clergy went out to New Zealand to conduct what they called a Mission of Help. In due time some of them came to Havelock, and were invited to the Quaker meeting in the church, and so there in that little church in far-off New Zealand, they came to appreciate the devotional value of silence. When they returned to England they spoke and wrote about it. Two interesting books have been published on the subject. They are entitled, "The Fellowship of Silence" and "The Fruits of Silence." The former of these both Churchmen and Quakers give us their testimony to the helpfulness of this form of worship. What are called "Fellowship Meetings" for silent worship have been started in many places in England, in the United States and in Canada.

Two important ideas are here brought into relation with one another, the idea of Fellowship and that of Silence. The importance of Fellowship is fully recognized in ordinary life. Man is a social animal. His soul is always moving out towards association with his fellows. It is upon this movement that all civilization is based. It receives a similar recognition in religious institutions. That is why we have a church. We cannot work and worship in isolation. Here as elsewhere we seek to be associated with one another. In Holy Baptism we bring our children into the great Fellowship of the Faithful. We associate them with that multitude of men and women—a multitude that no man can number—who in the past and the present have striven or are striving to follow the Christ. The Holy Communion again is the sacrament of Fellowship and Unity. We all partake of one loaf and drink of one cup, and thus recollect that we are all brothers and sisters in the great family of God—children of one Father with one Redeemer who saves us and one Holy Spirit who inspires us.

But there is another movement of the human spirit even more important. It also moves outwards or rather upwards towards God. It seeks to enter into communion or fellowship with God. All religion is based upon that movement. There is in every soul a great hunger for God—a hunger that is often unsatisfied. You remember Mr. Britling's conclusion: "Religion is the first thing and the last thing, and until a man has found God and been found by God, he begins at no beginning, he works to no end."

Now we seek to realize our fellowship with God through worship or prayer. Uninstructed and unthinking persons have often much too narrow an idea of prayer. They think of it as a kind of magic, by which we force or induce God to do what we want done. They suppose that prayer is asking God for things, and that if we only ask urgently and persistently He will do anything at all for us. There is surely some great misunderstanding here. Prayer cannot possibly be an effort to impose our wills on Almighty God. We all feel that prayer must be much more an effort to bring our wills into line with God's.

"Our wills are ours, we know not how Our wills are ours to make them thine."

Prayer is really communion with God, and while it is true that in that communion we speak to God, and make our desires known to Him, yet it is or ought to be even more true that He speaks to us, makes His will known to us, and gives us strength to do it. I think that that is a very important thing to grasp—that God speaks, not merely to a few saints scattered through history—not merely to a few inspired prophets, but to all who will listen. But many—perhaps most of us—will not listen. We are otherwise engaged. Our lives are filled with too many distractions. Our minds are preoccupied with other interests. There are no quiet spaces in our lives, in which the Voice of God can be heard and the Will of God learned. We are wasting on trivial things the capacities of the soul, created for communion with God. Yes, He speaks only to those who will listen, only to those who will realize His presence and seek to live with Him. In one of the books which I have mentioned, there is a reference to an ancient ballad which tells how a certain count walking by the sea hears the notes of a song from one who, alone in a small boat, is coasting the shore. Attracted by the melody he calls to the seaman to sail nearer in shore that he may catch the words of his song:

"To him the mariner replied
In a courteous tone but free
'I never sing that song,' he cried,
'But to one who sails with me!'"

For us—for you and for me—the most important thing in all the world must be the Will of God—to learn what it is and to do it. Come away this Lent into the silence, come away from the hurry, the anxiety and the restlessness of the world, and of your ordinary life. Seek in the quietness to realize the presence of God and to learn His will. So we shall be stronger, calmer and more confident as we face the future. So we shall gain spiritual strength, and be ready for any crisis. In quietness and confidence shall be your strength.

"In simple trust like their's who heard

Beside the Syrian Sea,
The gracious calling of the Lord,
Let us, like them without a word
Rise up and follow Thee.

O Sabbath rest by Galilee!
O calm of hills above
Where Jesus knelt to share with Thee
The silence of eternity
Interpreted by love!

Drop Thy still doves of quietness,
Till all our strivings cease.
Take from our souls the strain and stress,
And let our ordered lives confess
The beauty of Thy peace.

Breathe through the heats of our desire
Thy coolness and Thy balm,
Let sense be dumb, let flesh retire,
Speak through the earthquake, wind and fire,
O still, small voice of calm."

REPORTS FROM OUR COMMISSION IN FRANCE.

The following extract from a letter from Henry Scattergood, written Seventh Month 11th and received the 27th, explains how the situation is developing.

"After many long talks with the English Friends and the Red Cross people, it looks to us as if the best way for us to work, as well as the quickest in getting at it, is to enlarge the English Friends' organization by getting the Red Cross Commission to assign such persons as the Friends will send from America and may request, to the English Friends, thus enlarging the scope of their most excellent work—such of course to be subject to the general oversight and inspection and reporting to the Red Cross Commission and our American workers to maintain their Red Cross status; wear its uniform (unless by special arrangement, the English Friends' uniform should be allowed in their cases—which seems unlikely), but have the English Friends' star on their arms; and be listed as Reconstruction Unit No. 1 as per their original volunteering. This plan was actually proposed by our English Friends and with those of them in charge here it is in good favor. It is now to be submitted to the different camps for "democratic" approval and of course the London Committee has still to pass on it. The Red Cross people so far committed seem satisfied, except that very likely others we send out may be assigned to other work than the Friends, (if we are willing) but of similar civilian character. We approve of this in special cases, like Wm. Bicknell's proposed experimentation with different forms of building in a sample village. But we like the idea of Friends generally working together—English and American—so that our message may be more definitely and markedly evident by our work.

The following is the latest description of conditions in France as reported by our Commission.

HOTEL VOULTEMOIST, RUE BOISSY d'Anglais, Paris,

Seventh Month 10, 1917.

Since our last report we spent two days at Troyes, which we wish to report on in some detail because it is an example of a kind of work which we understand is very much needed in many parts of France.

Troyes is a very old city and as you know is entirely outside of the zone of fighting. A very large number of refugees from the regions occupied by the Germans or in the war zone have come to it temporarily.

The old city with its crooked streets, curious and artistic houses that lean in every direction is most interesting, but due to the fact that the building material has for a very long time been chiefly timber and some forms of not very durable stone and brick, the old houses in the centre of the city are in a very bad state of repair and in many cases are really dangerous and have been condemned by the city authorities. The better people of the city have moved into the suburbs, and so it is just into these miserable old houses that the refugees have been crowded. The extent of this crowding can be imagined when you know that the city had before the war about 53,000 inhabitants and now has a little over 70,000, of which some 7000 are refugees, the remaining increase being due to the operations of the army.

The owners of these old buildings charge the refugees what seem like extortionate rents. When they first began to come the rents were 20 to 40 francs per month for a single room, and now are up in some cases to 50 and 55 francs per month. The refugees are very largely country people, not used to city life, and they are not liked by the city people, and do not understand or like them. The seemingly heartless attitude of the landlords towards these unfortunate people is in part to be understood by the moratorium on rents for refugees during the war, and as a result the landlords feel that they have to make money out of such people as they are able to make pay, and they also feel that they have to make arrangements for payment of rent a long time in advance, which is a great hardship on people having so little money.

We found temporarily in charge of the work there Ethel G. Connah, whose parents were Irish, but who was born in France, and got all of her early education here. She works in very close operation with the town's relief authorities, with whom she is on the most friendly terms, and here, as in the other Friends' relief work, the organized charity methods of visiting and of keeping very careful records of each family are scrupulously carried out. They have given away a large amount of clothing, but at present their chief activity is the sale of furniture and of materials to be made up into clothing, mattresses, sheets, pillowcases, etc. They have demand for a very large amount of such material, which they sell at about three-fourths of the cost price. They have recently, through permission of the Central Committee at Paris, adopted the plan of having a Capital Fund of £5000, which is kept invested all the time in these supplies. They find the fund smaller than would be desirable for the city of Troyes, and think that they could use to advantage two or three times as much money. This fund is never depleted, because supplies, as soon as taken from the Capital Stock, are charged to relief work, and it is the relief work which has to stand the expense of the sale at 75 per cent. of cost price as well as carry the expenses of transportation, distribution, etc.

They have started the manufacture of mattresses in some rooms near their headquarters, and hope that in that way they can not only furnish work but reduce the costs of the refugees.

In order to protect some of the refugees from the extortionate practices of the landlords, they have taken three houses, two in the centre of the city and one on the outskirts, which they have put in good order and in which at rents that barely cover the expenses, a very considerable number of families are now housed.

Another important part of their work is that of visiting nurse Dunbar, who goes about the city tirelessly on her bicycle and daily visits a large number of refugees. They do not have any doctor, but this does not seem to be necessary, as she finds it quite easy to get the local doctors to take care of the cases that require it, though the refugees being strangers and having very little money, do not themselves seem to be able to get into contact with the doctors.

This work for refugees which is being done in Troyes is equally needed among the 20,000 refugees scattered in the smaller villages throughout the Department of the Aube, and they would very much like to have the staff increased so as to be able similarly to take care of these needy sufferers. This would require one or two motor vans with people to drive them, two nurses and facilities for them to get about, and one or two investigators who also should have facilities to get about. This could probably be done with some combinations of automobiles and bicycles.

The Friends have investigated the needs for relief work of the character above described in a number of other Departments and towns. These investigations indicate that there are many other places in France where this need is very urgent and open up the possibilities of a large amount of work along these lines, provided the necessary staff to carry it on can be secured, as well as permits from the various civil and military authorities. Quite a large amount of money is of course also essential. This is one of the lines of work in which a good knowledge of French is absolutely necessary. One cannot get far in an understanding of the needs of these rather ignorant country people and in discriminating between the deserving and the undeserving unless he is able to talk freely with them.

[Signed] MORRIS E. LEEDS,
J. HENRY SCATTERGOOD."

C. O.'S IN PRISON.

Fresh light is constantly being thrown on our prison system by the experiences of C. O.'s, and one feels certain that penal reform will be one of the great works opening out before Friends and others after the war.

Wilfred E. Littleboy writes—"Questions of diet sound somewhat mundane, as a rule, but they fill a large part of one's thoughts in prison. Present food difficulties were of course felt in Scrubs as elsewhere; for some weeks we had no porridge, and found the substitution of one pint of cocoa at breakfast and one and a-half cubic inches of cheese at tea seemed rather meagre, and one had some slight glimpse of what it meant to be continually hungry. The thought, however, of the numbers of starving women and children in England, Germany and all countries, made brooding over one's own slight discomforts unthinkable.

"There were comparatively few ordinary prisoners in at the present time, almost all the eligible men having been liberated to join the army; the result of this was the considerable proportion of aged men, some sixty or seventy or over, I should judge. This seemed very pitiful—also the presence of some boys under sixteen. I never knew that we sent juveniles of this age to prisons of this kind. Many of the types were low and degraded, some repulsive-looking, some weak-looking, and some quite pleasant and almost refined.

But the prison system! There seems absolutely nothing to reform a man—I don't know whether the Church services or the Chaplain's discourses were supposed to do this—but I certainly don't see that there is anything else in the whole routine that would improve a real criminal. To set a man of admittedly defective mind to feed on that mind almost entirely is a hopeless business. One of the warders whom I had a word with on the subject, said he didn't think anyone went out better—I can believe it. The thing that made me saddest was to see and think of the condition of our civil prisoners. May I never forget them in their need, in the days to come! Elizabeth Fry and John Howard appear in stone at the prison gates, but their work is by no means ended.

"This, of course, is all written from the point of view which looks at the ordinary prisoner—for myself, of course, the thing is very different. One talks of prison cells and monastery cells—to me at any rate the former became and continued to be the latter. I have been thoroughly happy the whole time, never having any real sense of depression or discouragement; on the other hand, many times of great elation and uplifting."

The difficulties of prison life vary, of course, with temperament—another Friend writes: "There is a continual struggle to live up to a decent spiritual level. To 'live' in prison is really very hard. Everything seems deliberately designed to take away the dignity of life, to degrade it and make it trivial and petty. The temptation to petty mindedness and irritation over trifles is difficult to combat. The atmosphere is utterly dehumanizing. I tried hard to establish something like human relationships with the warders, but it was like beating against a wall, and I had to admit complete failure."

Awaiting his third court-martial, Clifford Allen writes of his fellow prisoners at Maidstone, "I have never been so much moved by men's love, and I don't think I have ever loved men so much as at Maidstone. . . . Weary, of course, I am physically, but far more confident of the truth of it all than I was at Scrubs. None of us have doubted for one moment that (however slow the time) your work outside was telling all the time, and my reason for raising a new issue for discussion was my desire that you outside should tell us whether even further sacrifice from us inside would help you. Our warder said to me one day (he had come to love us), 'I call the C. O.'s corner of the factory holy ground.' You people who are making effective the effort we are sustaining don't know and won't know how you are loved by us inside, not for yourselves, but because you make it easier for us to be sure we are giving something new to the world, and after all, we are all human in prison."

Frank Ward, who, it may be remembered, was one of those who went through terrible experiences in barracks early in 1916, writes from a guard-tent while awaiting his third court-martial:—"Looking back it seems almost impossible to believe I have been away from home (in prison) for thirteen months. In spite of all my weakness I am deeply thankful and grateful for the experiences of those months. I think all we fellows in prison realize very deeply at times the guiding of a great and all powerful Hand. We have wanted often to go in one direction and it has seemed quite closed to us, and although the other alternative offered no pleasant prospect, the walking of it has been a strengthening and inspiring journey. We feel that Friends outside have been with us, sharing the joys and pains with us and shouldering for us the harder burden outside prison walls of open scorn and ridicule.

"I make a practice of scrubbing out the guard-tent, polishing the tea tins and bowls, and washing up—this is to show the N. C. O. my objection is not to work. The result is I am the best of friends with everybody. The men in the guard-room are a curious collection. It is, of course, a floating population, and I never know from one day to another whom I shall have to meet, or what spirit I shall be met in. Every day I am more and more convinced of the efficacy of Friends' attitude to men. I prove it in case after case in a really wonderful way. If the Government was out to spread the spirit of pacifism and convince those not holding the views we do, it could not have done better than periodically loose us in camps all over the country. I do not say the men understand my conscience—most of those I meet in the guard-room are entirely ignorant of the application of Christian principle, but one said to me the other day, 'at all events, you chaps are showing the Government there are still some stubborn Britishers.'

Another Friend writes from a guard-room in the West country: "The unpleasant officer who has been censoring our letters has just been up and taken every shred of anything of value from us, money, stamps, pocket knives, watches, rings, &c. I don't know whether such a proceeding is legal, but the officer is autocrat enough to invent any regulation that he thought would reduce us to a close realization of our state of serfdom and impotence.

"The censoring here has become such an unpleasant occasion as almost to take away the joy of receiving letters, the chief of guard-room amenities. The new officer brings another up with him to share the fun, reads carefully and slowly through every word, making obnoxious verbal comments and then passes it on to his colleague. The least pleasant thing of all is his brutal inquisitiveness as to the authors. He makes a sheep and goat pile. The latter he slowly and wrathfully tears up into little pieces and then seems to look about for something to wipe his fingers on!"

At this same barracks, containing over 3,000 soldiers, an N. C. O. informed the Quaker chaplain that he thought it was putting it at a low figure to say that nine-tenths of the men themselves sympathized with the C. O.'s.

From one after another of the absolutists in prison and guard-room comes the same message, "make the facts known, but do not agitate on our account." G. A. Sutherland, for example, writes from Mountjoy Prison, "Heaven save us from our friends if they are whining on our behalf! Let the facts be known, but for my part I don't forget that the men in the trenches have consciences too, and that even taking into account the worst cases of brutality we have been treated as gentlemen compared with them."

The Friends' Service Committee have issued a pamphlet "The Absolutists' Objection to Conscription," (price one penny or ninpence a dozen), which contains most valuable statements of fact, and up-to-date figures. It can be obtained at 18 Devonshire Street, E. C., or at the Friends' Bookshop, Hubert Peet's pamphlet, "112 days Hard Labor" (3rd. or 1s. a dozen) is also being widely read and circulated. All who are interested in prison experiences and in future reform should see it without fail.—From Friends' Fellowship Papers.

NEWS ITEMS.

REPORT OF THE TREASURER OF THE AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE, EIGHTH MONTH 6, 1917.

The total reported received last week as contributions to the American Friends' Service Committee was $121,139.75. The following contributions have been received since that time:

Amount reported last week	$121,139.75
Chester, N. J., Monthly Meeting	50.00
Plymouth Preparative Meeting, by A. Conard Jones	203.50
Upper Greenwich Preparative Meeting, by Martha K. Allen	219.00
Westbury Monthly Meeting, by John A. Albertson	700.00
New Garden Monthly Meeting, by E. Wharton Shortidge	50.00
Westfield Monthly Meeting, by Levi Brown	6.25
Wrightstown Monthly Meeting, by Julius Hand	136.34
Green Street Monthly Meeting, by A. S. Jenkins	15.00
Five Years' Meeting, by Walter C. Woodward	5,000.00
Long Plain Preparative Meeting	100.00
Friends at Millville, Pa., by Bernice Eves	103.75
College Park Association of Friends, San José, Cal.	75.00
Swarthmore Friends' Peace Committee	74.50
Friends at West Branch, Iowa	66.50
Woodbury Preparative Meeting	39.50
Bellefonte, Pa., Meeting	30.00
Friends at West Branch, Iowa	26.00
Friends of Valley Meeting	12.00
Newtown Friends, by Clarence C. Peters	32.00
Wrightstown Monthly Meeting	188.75
Philadelphia Yearly Meeting Peace Committee, Fourth and Arch Streets	5,190.45
Newtown Y. P. B., by E. T. Worthington	3.15
Contributions Received From Individuals	1,926.00
Contributions During Week	$ 14,677.97
Total to Date	$135,817.72

CHARLES F. JENKINS,
Treasurer.

AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE.

A cablegram dated Seventh Month 27, 1917, addressed to the American Red Cross in Washington, from Major Murphy expresses desire that the Haverford Unit should come with equipment, and that while they can co-operate with English Friends, he hopes they may not lose their identity nor connection with the American Red Cross.

Owing to a prohibition of the War Department, the dozen young men whose departure was announced for the 11th inst., will not be allowed to sail on that date.

VINCENT D. NICHOLSON,
Executive Secretary.

ELLWOOD B. MOORE, of Bucks County, Pa., and a recent graduate of Ann Arbor (Mich.) High School, is in jail for refusing to register under the Conscription Act. From a letter written by him to the Ann Arbor Times-News, we extract the following:

"They say that I accept all the advantages of this land and will give nothing in return—nothing! For the very principles of freedom on which this country was founded, I have already given up my liberty and stand ready and willing to give my life if necessary. More than this can no man do.

"Few will agree with me. I shall be condemned. The spirit of tolerance for dissenters has been engulfed in the excitement of war, unpopular though it be; but one must be true to his ideals, for without them, life is but the existence of the brute. Therefore, in spite of the prospect of months and perhaps years of burial within a living grave, in spite of stigma, scorn, ostracism, I must hold to the truth as I see the truth, and say with Herbert Spencer that 'While man is a descendant of the past, he is a parent of the future, and his thoughts are as children born to him, which he may not willingly let die.'"

BATTLE HARBOR, Labrador, Seventh Month 6, 1917.

I am certainly having a great time here and plenty of work, all out of doors. I've done shingling and painting mostly so far, with plumbing, etc., on the side.

The people are very nice, ten so far and two coming to-morrow. . . . When we wait ice here we go out and pick it up out of the sea.

Yesterday we found a Plover's nest, four young ones and a Horned Lark's nest, with five young ones. We are on an island here, with a tickle running between it and Caribou Island, which is much larger and wilder than our island.

Dr. Grenfell was in the other day and is certainly a very interesting man. Next week we go up a bay here to bring back 1400 logs for burning.

The dogs here are wonderful, some of them being pure huskies for hauling sleds. Fishing is the only industry and nearly everybody does it. It's foggy nearly every morning and clears up in the evening, usually.

I can't get travelers' checks cashed here. A. C. S.

THREE FRIENDS.—Some of our readers may have seen Professor Win. Hull's answer to this question in the Intelligencer. Our article was in hand before that appeared and it is due to our contributor to note this. The interest is only the greater that more than one Friend has a fund of historical knowledge for the use of the Society. J. H. B.

THE THREE FRIENDS

An answer to the inquiry reprinted in our columns recently from The Intelligencer may perhaps be found in the journals of William Savery and David Sands. In the latter part of the eighteenth century, these Friends traveled together in religious service through Germany, Holland, "Flanders" and France. A young man named Benjamin Johnson was their companion in France, and in some other parts of the countries visited, and he may properly be considered the third person in this interesting group. They had left George Dillywen and his wife in Germany; and before going out of Holland, they were obliged (for reasons that will be obvious) to part with another Friend, William Farrer, who had been companion to David Sands for more than a year. The following extract from the journal of David Sands is of particular interest in connection with the quotation from Cleveland's American Literature and with the questions suggested by it:

"First Month 11th, 1797. [The Hague.] We visited the American Minister, John Quincy Adams from Boston, who received us very kindly, and appeared disposed to do anything for us he could, in the line of his appointment. We were desirous that William Farrer should have a line from some one in power, but as he was an Englishman, we could not obtain any toleration from him [Adams] for William Farrer to go to France; he recommended us to the French Minister, and sent his servant to show us where he lived. . . . The French Minister received us very kindly, and served us as far as was in his power; but said he could do nothing for an Englishman, though he thought he might pass without much danger, being in company with us. He appeared to be of an open disposition, and expressed a regard for us as a religious Society."

Apparently the Friends did not choose to proceed upon the French Minister's supposition, nor seek to perform their embassy by any clandestine or questionable methods. At Dunkirk the three who went on into France were furnished with passports which stated that they were Friends, or Quakers, as well as Americans; and so, in that stormy and troubled period they were able to go forward with considerable freedom and satisfaction. A part of their service consisted in distributing books, such as Barclay's "Apology" and some of William Penn's writings, but it may be noted that although their mission was a purely religious one, it was not accomplished without some regard to the conditions resulting from the political situation in Europe, which in the early part of 1797 had reached a very acute stage. Hence the worthy Englishman was deluded from having a share in the work of his American brethren in France.

It has not been the manner of Friends to attempt to measure in a complete or statistical way the results of their Gospel labors; but as regards "these three," who presumably were the ones referred to by John Quincy Adams, it may be remarked that "the object of their visit" in Europe and the extent to which "it accomplished its purpose" will be fairly well understood by a perusal of the account as given in the two journals aforesaid. M. W.

ONE who has consulted with a Philadelphia Exemption Board has this to report:

Clinton Rogers Woodruff, member of the Board, and Assistants were all courteous. They took pains to make clear the steps to be taken in claiming exemption and in stating that they could exempt only from bearing arms. C. R. Woodruff in connection with the claim, asked for a copy of some statement of the Friends' position, which I complied with by filing a copy of the Discipline noting the section on War. With the filing of the claim for exemption and supporting affidavits to the effect of being a conscientious objector and member of the Society of Friends, there is no reason to expect any further relation with the Board unless there is a draft in the future for noncombatant work.

Everything went as expected, the interesting points being the request for some statement or reference to the generally accepted Quaker views on war, and the courtesy with which I was treated.

The following are reported as going to Cedar Lake Conference this year, leaving Eighth Month 2, 1917:

Esther B. Rhoads; Elizabeth P. Smith and Nancy Morris, of Germantown; Helen P. Cooper, of Moorestown; Mary Helen Jones, of Haddonfield; Edith Thorp, of Media; Elizabeth T. Rhoads, of Wilmington; Bertha Balderston, of Colora; Horace D. Webster, of Frankford; D. Robert Yarnall and Harold M. Lane, of Philadelphia; Elizabeth Thomas, of Chester, Pa., expects to join the party at Cedar Lake.

RICHARD MOTT JONES, some forty years head-master of the William Penn Charter School, died in Philadelphia on the first, in his seventy-fourth year. He was a unique character, able to give vitality to the old-time methods of thorough-going drill, and so maintain a very wide reputation for his school.

BALANCE OF LETTER FROM OUR COMMISSION IN FRANCE UNDER DATE OF SEVENTH MONTH 11, 1917.

I received Rufus Jones's cable on my return to Paris from our Troyes trip and can picture the anxiety to get the fellows started over here that his inquiry portrays. I wish it were possible to say "when the work can begin."

We have been struggling to get matters going for everyone's sake, and all we can say now is that (after much effort and long consultations with the English Friends) we are sending a cable [this has been noted previously].

As we have intimated in previous letters, the Red Cross Commission is not yet ready for such workers as our men, and we do not yet know its plans (if there are any yet) for undertaking reconstruction work itself. So far it is investigating many fields and amalgamating existing agencies here. It is so far not working in first hand touch with relief, but no doubt is making rapid progress in preparation to help many existing agencies. As for reconstruction, the problem is most complicated. It is a fact that many thousands of homes have been destroyed, sometimes whole villages being wiped out. It is clear that rebuilding in permanent form is a task beyond even the $600,000,000 of the Red Cross, if it all were to go to houses, and it is necessarily beyond the scope of temporary relief measures. The French Government regards the loss of each individual as a national loss to be paid for by the nation as a whole, the damages to be paid to the individual sufferers when such damages can be properly assessed. This question of such assessments and awards is now being discussed in the French Parliament. In some localities local Boards are beginning to make assessments with the hope of expediting it. Evidently work of a permanent character is impracticable on privately owned property until all these questions are settled, and we are told that owners often do not want any clearing done yet for fear of interfering with the proofs of their losses. Yet it is evidently advantageous to get the people back when and if they can find a place to live so that the land can be tilled, and so that the overcrowded conditions of other places can be relieved, etc. The natural solution is the temporary hut to serve for the years until permanent rebuilding can be worked out that the English Friends have devised. Yet even these need much preparatory work to be done before they can be built or our men start work on them. They have to be made in sections in some part of France where the lumber can be obtained, as in Dole in the Jura. A mill of large dimensions in floor space and storage capacity (to season lumber) has to be found or built before this work can be started. Then the houses have to be shipped to the War Zone before anything can be done there, and this may take weeks or months. If any great military work is on, civilian shipments are postponed indefinitely. The English Friends, for instance, are only just receiving their first twenty houses to be erected in the newly released district (Nojen and Harve in the Somme), although they have been waiting for many weeks for them and also for the permits to go there. Our preconception of a group of one hundred of our men rapidly arranging themselves among the destroyed villages, building the houses, already to hand, in a short time, and passing on to the next village to repeat the operation, is utterly impossible of immediate execution, although some may hope to work to this when once under way. Meanwhile until the work is ready, it is better for the men to remain in the United States at their regular work than to come over here and fret in Paris, for they would not even be allowed to go to the War Zone. Another difficulty which time is needed to settle is whose huts are to be built in any given village and the order of building. This has to be left to the decision of local authorities, and this cannot always be hurried.

As for the time of getting most of our men at work, we hope we can soon for fifteen or twenty for Wm. Bisknell's building experiments (if approved); also that the English Friends and we can settle soon on a site for the new planing mill and get it equipped with the needed machinery quickly. M. E. L. is sending data as to machinery required. We will be fortunate if we can find a mill already more or less equipped and thus save time. The Clearing House here some time ago said it would give the English Friends 10,000 francs for such new machinery in a new mill. So if we find it has to be bought (whether in U. S. or here) we hope to arrange for the Red Cross to reimburse the cost of all equipment for this new mill. No doubt if your investigation in U. S. shows it should be bought there, the Red Cross would arrange the shipping promptly. Perhaps you may locate some mill which has failed or is ready to sell out. One of the Commission told me of his luck in a similar case where he got a full equipment for twenty-five per cent. of first cost.

When this mill is ready, it will keep fifty or more men busy right away making houses, and perhaps fifteen more erecting them in the villages. Others up to the full figure of one hundred will no doubt fit in in agriculture, relief work, etc., and when once it all gets under way, we see openings for more. The seven fellows to form the erection gang for the new mill will be first and immediately broken in at Dole. This mill will be running pretty full when they are there and it is doubtful if more than that number can be permanently kept busy there.

The two expert repairmen for autos are needed to put in spare various cars in the English equipment and really good men are desired. There is a good little machine shop available at Sormaiz, where probably these would go. The six social workers are for the relief work which we have described—clothing, furniture sales or gifts, etc. It is very interesting work and thoroughly worthy of our best people—men or women—but French is necessary. It is also not likely that permits can be had for girls under twenty-three.

We hope to go to England in a few days. We have been declined permits to Dunkirk to see the F. A. V. at present, but are invited to try again in three weeks or so. This is a sample of the difficulties and delays. The English authorities did this and say that at present there are as many non-military people in that region as they care to have at one time—that our turn may come later.

Let me add as stated in the cable that the people sent for are in anticipation of our arrangement of combinations with English Friends and Red Cross and that these and perhaps also the seven already here or coming can all take the same American Red Cross station assigned to Friends' work when that is worked out in detail and approved.

J. HENRY SCATTERGOOD.

—GIRARD, in the Public Ledger, is responsible for this:

A broadside dated 1832, which has just come to my notice, gives some idea of the method taken at that time to stamp out the use of liquor.

The plan was novel. The Pennsylvania Society for Discouraging the Use of Ardent Spirits, of which George Vaux was President, addressed this circular to innkeepers and hotelmen, with the idea that they could change the tide if they would.

It probably expected too much of this fraternity, but the idea was curious.

"We would recommend you," explains the circular, "to keep a variety of pleasant vegetable syrups and fruits, such as lemons, to make lemonade, and dried fruits of your own country, the infusions of which make agreeable drinks.

"The sale of these at your bar would prove a source of handsome profit without exposing you to the odium of making drunkards or being yourself annoyed and disgusted by scenes of riot and turmoil."

There also was a suggestion that a soda-water fountain might be readily kept, and the use of coffee and of cold tea was advocated.

Needless to say, the plan didn't work, for those were the days when even gentlemen did not blush to be found under the influence. It was no dishonor then for a man "to get drunk like a gentleman."

Our friend, Isaac Sharp, advises us that the article of his on I. Penington, to which we referred a few weeks since, was in the Friends' Quarterly Examiner for Fourth Month, 1914, not 1917, as stated.

This is from a letter of Wilfrid Littleboy, written from prison and published in The Friend [London]:

"During the time of the Yearly Meeting—the meetings were constantly in my thoughts, I do not think I missed being present in spirit at a single sitting, and on the evening of the closing sitting, even before I had set myself specially to think of it, a most deep and profound sense of peace laid hold of me, and so I felt sure that the 'Truth had reigned.' I cannot be sufficiently thankful that this wonderful opportunity for quiet thought and communion has been granted to me. It is wonderful how a thought with which one has always imagined oneself to be familiar can become transformed and can grip one in an altogether new way, and I am filled with joys and hopes and confidence in the midst of all the great problems which lie ahead. I believe I can understand in some measure Christ's frequent references to peace and joy on that black evening, for as the greatness of the problems ahead grow as one meditates on them, so in much greater degree grows the soul-satisfying sense of the illimitable Divine resources. For myself I have been quite content in the thought that God will not let any time here be wasted, and whether it be weeks, months or longer, this stage will end when I can serve His purpose better elsewhere; either along old lines reinvigorated or in new direction which time will show."

NOTE.—The pressure of timely matter is again so great that the Summary is omitted.

RECEIPTS.

Unless otherwise specified, two dollars have been received from each person, paying for No. 10.

Albert H. Forsythe, Sarah C. C. Reeve, Wm. M. Parker, Ruth Anna Sharpless, Pennock Cooper, J. Adrain Moore, Priscilla Hughes, Zebecde Haines, Wm. F. Wickersham, Ellen C. Tomlinson, Crosby M. Wright, Mary Bacon Parke, Wm. T. Llewellyn, Geo. R. Chambers, Jane C. Moon, Amanda Taylor, Sarah McFadden, Mary Coltrant, Philadelphia Quartz Company, Martha A. Gregson, Wm. T. Elkinton, Joseph W. Jones, Wm. Balderston, Geo. W. Bakerston, Mary B. Hopkins, Martha H. Garrett, Hannah E. Sheppard, Letitia P. Hluston, Robert B. Haines, Wm. C. Warren, M. J. Windel, Susan G. Shipley, Francis R. Bacon, Joseph T. Miller, all of Pa.; Hanna Mary Matson, Ohio; C. F. Sanders, Cal.; Susanna T. Clement, Cal.; C. R. Branson, Ind.; Abner L. Newlin, Ia.; Russell Z. Taler, Ia.; Alfred Stanley, Ia.; Alva T. Wildefield, Ia.; Lewis L. Rockwell, Ia.; M. Emma Allen, Annie H. Stokes, Maurice W. Haines, Everett H. Haines, Joseph H. Haines, Allen B. Clement, Margaret T. Engle, Gertrude Heulings, Susan D. Ivins, Martha T. DeCou, Dr. Howard Ivins, Catharine Jacob, Chas. A. Bartlett, Wm. H. Roberts, Wm. H. Roberts, Jr., Samuel A. Willis, Thos. W. Elkinton, Ella B. Mercier, Ezra E. Darnell, Benjamin W. Cooper, Thomas W. Draper, Joseph H. Roberts, Alfred S. Roberts, Joseph S. Evans, Ezra Evans, Sarah Nicholas, Isabella W. Reed, Sarah H. Kaighn, James Hunt, Howard Evans, Sarah W. Stokes, Chas. J. Allen, Geo. Bacon, Henry W. Leeds, Sarah W. Leeds, Priscilla M. Bell, Richard M. Cooper, all of N. J.; Rachel G. Cope, Ohio; Martha Harris, Ohio; H. J. Barley, Me.; James Mott, Ia.; Oman K. Tow, Ia.; Thos. E. Mendenhall, Ia.; Arehild Henderson, Ia.; Lars Stangland, Ia.; T. H. Strand, Ia.; Christian Thompson, Ia.; Cyrus Cope, Ia.; M. Lilhan Moore, Del.; Nellie B. Nichols, N. H.; Anucha Bedell, Cal.; Phineas Pickett, Ind.; E. A. Bascom, Mass.; Mary M. Kirk, Ohio; Jesse A. Carter, Kan.; Irene J. Pickett, Ind.; Philadelphia Quartz Company, Ind.; Philadelphia Quartz Company, N. Y.; Philadelphia Quartz Company, Ia.; Philadelphia Quartz Company, Kan.; Philadelphia Quartz Company, Cal.; Mary A. Gowdy, N. Y.; Tilman Patterson, Cal.; Mary P. E. Nitobe, Japan; Semira L. Confort, Cal.; Stewart Waring, Ill.; J. S. Moore, Kan.; James W. Bradley, Cal.; Joseph Hall, Ohio; Martha H. Gamble, Ohio; Catharine M. Thomas, Ohio; George Blackburn, Ohio; Rebecca Hodgkin, Ohio; Carrie E. Williams, Ont.; David Holloway, Robert Smith, Perley Pickett, Silas Hartley, Oscar J. Bailey, Wm. H. Sears, Wm. G. Steer, M. and S. Doudna, R. W. Hall, D. C. Bunday, Joseph S. Hoge, Finley Hutton, Lydia J. Bye, Elizabeth L. Bowman, Carl Patterson, Jason Penrose, Hannah P. Smith, Belinda H. Schofield, Martha M. Vaughn, C. W. Van Law, Lizzie M. Smith, all of Ohio; E. M. Hacker, R. I.; Anderson M. Barker, N. C.; Anna M. Deason, Cal.; Benjamin Lewis, W. Va.; Joseph N. Dewees, Iowa; Henry Standing, Iowa; Nicholas Larson, Iowa; Clarence Morris, Iowa; Jesse Negan, Iowa; Mary H. Murray, N. Y.; Mary Alice Kelley, Cal.; James A. McGrew, Iowa; Lon McDill, Neb.; Henry Spring, Del.; Anna T. Tostensen, Iowa; Abbie W. Kennard, Kan.; Milton Mills, Iowa; Mary H. Patterson, Cal.; Louisa Peele, Va.; Sarah Peep, N. C.; Metta R. Lowe, N. C.; Florence E. Litzay, Ind.; Mills E. Raiford, Va.; Rebecca F. Evans, Marshall Evans, Edith Lippincott, Helena J. Connor, Emma D. Embree, Deborah J. Wandle, Hannah W. Haeker, Beulah Palmer, T. Chalkey Palmer, Edith P. Griseom, Mary W. Young, all of Pa.; Arthur B. Maxwell, Ind.; Edward Maxwell, Ind.; Morris Peacock, Ind.; Edward Edgerton, Ind.; Elmer Pickett, Ind.; Richard S. Ashton, Ind.; Joel Cadbury, N. J.; Joshua R. Evans, N. J.; Gertrude Bountree, N. J.

☞ Remittances received after Third-day evening will not appear in receipts until the following week.

NOTICES.

THE section of the Burlington and Bucks Unitarian Committee assigned to the shore intend to be at Tickerton on the 12th and to hold an appointed meeting at Barnegat at 3:30 that afternoon.

MEETING. At Haddonfield Friends' Meeting-house, N. J., Sixth Month 30, 1917, WALTER TAYLOR PHARO, of Collingdale, Pa., and SUE HAINES WILKINS, of Collingswood, N. J.

DEED. At home of her grandson, W. J. Aldrich, in Syracuse, N. Y., Sixth Month 26, 1917, LENA D. MEADOW, widow of the late Wm. C. Meadow, in the eighty-sixth year of her age; a minister of Scipio Monthly and Quarterly Meetings.

FOUNDED 1865.

THE PROVIDENT LIFE & TRUST CO.
OF PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Insures Lives Acts as Executor, Etc.
Accounts Solicited Deposit by Mail
Travelers' Cheques Monthly Statements by Mail

WRITE FOR LEAFLET.

Fourth and Chestnut Streets, Phila.

H. F. BRUNER S. D. HALL

H. F. BRUNER & Co.
COAL

OFFICE AND YARD

16 N. TWENTY-FIRST STREET
PHILADELPHIA

TELEPHONES: LOCUST 241
RACE 661

H. G. CHALKLEY & SONS, LTD.

LONDON, ENGLAND LAKE CHARLES, LA
LAWRENCE, KANSAS

OFFER:—

First Lien Farm Mortgages, paying from 6% to 6½% net to the investor.

Not to exceed 40% of our own valuation
loaned to the farmer.

Full particulars of mortgages on hand ranging from $500 00 to $5,000.00, given on application to:—

T H. CHALKLEY, LAWRENCE, KANSAS

Letchworth Cottage
Spring Lake Beach, N. J.
Open for the Season 1917

A. C. & S. H. Letchworth

WALL PAPERS—All Grades
WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER

Custom of Friends Specially Solicited

FRANK C. BUEHL
Successor to S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON

902 SPRING GARDEN ST. PHILADELPHIA
Opposite Spring Garden Station. Phila. & Reading R. R.
ESTABLISHED 1849 BELL 'PHONE

POCONO MANOR INN

OPEN ALL YEAR

Situated in the beautiful Pocono Mountains in northeastern Pennsylvania is most attractive
the year 'round.

Golf, Tennis, Bowling, Driving, Motoring.
Swimming and Boating are but few of the recreations found at this popular resort.

J. W. HURLEY, Mgr., Pocono Manor, Pa.
(Pocono Summit Station, D., L. & W. R. R.)

WOOLMAN SCHOOL

A Friends' School for Social and Religious Education, Board of Managers from both branches of Friends. Courses in Old and New Testament, Church History,
History and Principles of Friends,
Missions, First-day School Organization,
Social Betterment, International Organization, History of Religion, Comparative Religion, and Allied Subjects.

Instruction by scholarly experts from the Faculties of Swarthmore and Haverford Colleges, and from other Educational, Social and Religious Institutions of Philadelphia and vicinity.

Full term opens Tenth Month 10, 1917.

ELBERT RUSSELL, Director
WOOLMAN SCHOOL :: SWARTHMORE, PA.

RESIDENCE: 254 S. 44th St. BELL 'PHONE: Baring 2084X

WILLIAM OAKES

Plumbing and Heating Contractor

ALSO LEAD BURNING

260 SOUTH TENTH STREET

PHILADELPHIA

BELL 'PHONE: Filbert 2666.

Assoc. M. Am. Soc. C. E. Bell 'Phone—Lombard 3412

EDWIN M. EVANS
CONTRACTOR & BUILDER

My jobbing department is well equipped,
prompt and efficient

321 S. LAWRENCE ST. :: PHILA.

WILLIAM S. YARNALL
MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

118 SOUTH FIFTEENTH STREET

PHILADELPHIA

Premier Duplicating Co.

Mimeographing, Multigraphing, Printing, Typewriting, Addressing, Mailing, etc.

630 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

ALFRED C. HAINES

Building Glass and Paints

56 N. Front St., Philadelphia.

THE HOLMES PRESS

Printers

J. L. Engle, Pres.

1336-40 CHERRY ST. PHILA.

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE
MATERIAL THAT WE SELL

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

THE LAKESIDE

EAGLES MERE, PA.

Unobstructed lake view; capacity 250.
Elevator steam heat, golf, tennis, boating and bathing. Attractive motoring through the surrounding country.

GARAGE

J. S. KIRK & SON

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE
PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

GIRARD TRUST CO.
BROAD AND CHESTNUT STS.

CAPITAL
AND
SURPLUS } $10,000,000

Acts as Executor, Trustee, Guardian,
Administrator, Assignee and Receiver.
Safes to Rent in Burglar-proof Vaults.
Interest Allowed on Deposits. :: ::

E. B. MORRIS
PRESIDENT

OWNER OF 98 ACRE FARM WITH A $5000 NEW poultry plant wishes to get in touch with a young married friend with energy and scientific poultry and farm experience. Will consider taking right party into partnership if he has $2000 to $3000 to invest. Must be unquestionably honest and trustworthy. Real opportunity for right party; state just what you can do in first letter.
Address, "E"—"THE FRIEND."

THE CHEYNEY SITUATION

Friends of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting have as a legacy of the efforts put forth in the 60's in the interest of training colored teachers a unique plant at Cheyney. The Cheyney Training School for Teachers appeals for help to the descendants of those who originated the idea. The School is doing a great work, but it is cramped in many ways by a lack of funds.

An efficient staff of teachers and a student body numbering 100 present an unusual opportunity for the wise expenditure of energy and money.

The Managers can do little more than administer the Trust and must look to Friends and others, who have the means, to supply what is essential for the proper advancement of the School's interest. Leslie P. Hill, Principal, is always ready to offer timely suggestions to any who have it on their hearts to assist in the laudable work that is carried on at Cheyney.

Because of the conditions which must be met, if the School is to continue its good work, the Board of Managers feel free to request Friends to include Cheyney among the charities to which they contribute, and ask that checks shall be drawn in favor of and mailed to

WILLIAM BIDDLE, Treasurer,
119 S. Fourth Street, Philadelphia.

W. B. WEAVER UNDERTAKER and EMBALMER

550-552 N. 5TH ST., PHILA., PA.

Special Attention Given to Funerals
In and Out of the City. Also Chapel
Accommodations for Funerals. : : :

BELL 'PHONE

ESTABLISHED 1886

Philadelphia's
Representative Store

SEE WALKER & KEPLER
FOR
Good Electrical Work

531 CHESTNUT ST. PHILA.

ELKINS, MORRIS & CO.

BANKERS

REPRESENTATIVES

WM. E. CADBURY

PAUL W. BROWN

JAMES P. MAGILL

LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

RAILROAD AND PUBLIC UTILITY BONDS

FOR

CONSERVATIVE INVESTMENT.

FULL PARTICULARS ON REQUEST.

We recommend the use of RAG FEATHERWEIGHT

(Antique Finish)

As the paper for high-grade Books and other Publications

R. C. Ballinger Ernest R. Yarnall John A. Stratton
TELEPHONES

Bell—Filbert 26-15 - - Keystone—Race 637

R. C. BALLINGER & CO.

CONTRACTORS and BUILDERS

218 N. Thirtieth St.

Philadelphia.

GLASLYN-CHATHAM

PARK PLACE

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

A Family House of Established Reputation.
Open Throughout the Year.

NATHAN L. JONES.

FRIENDS' BIBLE ASSOCIATION

HAS ITS HEADQUARTERS AT

207 WALNUT PLACE : PHILA.

It is able to furnish Bibles and Testaments to Schools and Bible-classes and would be glad to have Friends everywhere acquaint themselves with the needs of their neighborhoods and allow the Bible Association to help them procure the books they may want. : *

W. J. MACWATTERS

HARDWICK & MAGEE CO.

SUCCESSORS TO
IVINS, DIETZ & MAGEE

Let me help you in selecting your

Rugs and Carpets

Our new imports of Oriental Rugs
are of the highest merit

1220-22 MARKET ST. : : PHILA

JOSEPH G. FOGG FUNERAL DIRECTOR and EMBALMER

S. W. COR. 16TH AND RACE STREETS

Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals

BELL 'PHONE

SPRUCE 1648

BACK LOG CAMP

INDIAN LAKE, N. Y.

In the Heart of the Adirondacks.

The name Back Log Camp means a great deal to many people. We shall be glad to send our booklet to any one who is interested in the latest development of the Back Log idea.

THOMAS K. BROWN
Westtown, Pa.

PUBLIC STENOGRAPHER

GEORGE B. COCK, Liberty Building
Established 1896. Experience 39 years; Medical 13

HARVEY T. WEBER

TAILOR

207-208 HALE BLDG., 1326 CHESTNUT ST.

The custom of Friends specially solicited.

HARRY S. LEE

313 WALNUT STREET

PAINTER and GRAINER

ANTIQUE and OFFICE FURNITURE RESTORED
JOBGING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO

ESTIMATES

Friends Arch St. Centre

304 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Provides comfortable accommodations for guests by the day or week. Meals at moderate prices.

AMELIA D. FEATHERSTONE, Matron.

PHONE—MARKET 1571.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 91.

FIFTH-DAY, EIGHTH MONTH 16, 1917.

No. 7.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price $2.00 a year in Advance.

Publisher, DAVIS H. FORSTYHE.

Editors { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
 DAVIS H. FORSTYHE,
 MARY WARD.

Make remittances payable to

THE FRIEND,

NO. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

"IF THOU WILT": "IF THOU CANST".

"Lord, if Thou wilt, Thou canst make me clean", was the earnest address of the leper who came to Jesus "and worshiped Him". It seems to have contained the substance of a true and acceptable prayer, and it was followed by a gracious answer from the Divine Healer. The narrative is at once brief and full:—"And He stretched forth His hand and touched him, and said unto him, I will; be thou made clean. And immediately his leprosy was cleansed", or "straightway departed from him".

But if Infinite Power was thus exhibited in the reward of a faith already existing, not less manifest was it in another where faith was yet to be established and the understanding informed. "If thou canst do anything for us, have compassion upon us and help us", cried the distressed father of the demoniac boy. The note of uncertainty is at once made use of by the Master, and a denial of limitation emphatically shown in His exclamation, "If thou canst"—for so the Revised Version has it, in the ninth chapter of Mark. "If thou canst! All things are possible to him that believeth," and the assurance brings out an appealing response: "I believe: help thou mine unbelief".

The Divine compassion is moved, and the Divine power effectually revealed in a demonstration that was to be a lesson in faith, not only to the witnessing multitude and to those whose affliction was thus healed, but to the disciples who had vainly essayed to perform the miracle. These were to learn also the great lesson of the necessity of an immediate authority and of a sensible influx of power not their own. So, to their question, "Why could not we cast it out"? the answer was, "Because of your lack of faith"; and further, "This kind can come forth by nothing save by prayer", or "by prayer and fasting".

The state of mind in the poor man who prayed for help on his unbelief was far removed from that of the Scribes and Pharisees, when they cried out concerning the One who worked such miracles, "He casteth out devils by the prince of the devils". The Lord Jesus, penetrating to the soul's need, accommodating Himself to a weak state, and compassionating the case of the suffering parent, would now bestow upon him such a measure of faith that the condition of his prayers, we may suppose, would thereafter be, not "if Thou canst", but "if Thou wilt".

But if the disciples of old could not cast out or overcome evil without prayer and fasting, no more can we, and these in the true and availing sense were impossible without faith. That faith, however, which is born of the deepest experience of the Lord's work, will lead to humility and carefulness; to watchfulness against "presumptuous sins", and against disclosing, unwarrantably or unseasonably, that which may belong to the Lord's secrets. "See that thou tell no man", may still be the word of command to not a few.

Yet, among the things that have been written from time to time for our comfort and help, there are illustrations, almost without number, of the efficacy of faith and of that prayer which is according to the will of God. How significant is that expression of George Fox, "I was moved to pray"! and many were witnesses of the extraordinary power that accompanied his prayers, and that testified to the Divine influence and authority constraining him.

Among the records of many notable experiences not far back in the centuries, an account left by Thomas Story is one of peculiar interest and instruction. He was on his way to America, and the ship was in peril from a great storm. The passengers "met together", many of them solemnized in a sense of the extremity of their situation. "In waiting upon the Lord", writes Thomas Story, "I became concerned in prayer; and wrestling in Spirit with the Lord, I received hope that we should not perish. Having concluded for that time, and my concern returning, I prayed again, and then some stout hearts were broken, and the Lord's power glorified; we were likewise greatly comforted".

The violence of the storm presently abated, and in time the voyage was safely completed.

Not less impressive is the familiar narrative of Mary Pryor. Guided by a sense of duty to embark upon an unseaworthy ship, she was, by her example and encouragement, made instrumental in saving the entire company from fatal disaster. Although impressed and sustained with a belief that their lives would not be lost, she was nevertheless "often in prayer", both in her own room and vocally among the passengers. They were rescued by an unmistakable providence, and Mary Pryor did not omit, upon their safe arrival in port, publicly to commemorate their deliverance "with thanksgiving".

How often in these times of tribulation and perplexity may we recall some of these things with comfort and hope! The healing of diseases, the casting out of evil spirits, the stilling of the tempest! What else indeed than the Power that accomplished these (though we are to be co-workers with it) can now heal the tremendous moral maladies of this suffering world, or quiet the storms of anger and strife, the commotions and disorders of the earth? Does it not behoove those who have faith in that Name to attend earnestly upon the Spirit of intercession, embracing the liberty of access to the springs of help, though it be sometimes "with groanings that cannot be uttered"? "I will therefore," said the Apostle, "that men pray everywhere,—yet how? "Lifting up holy hands, without wrath and doubting".

In something of this spirit, we may believe, did William Penn pray that sin might be ended, and transgression finished, and the day of everlasting righteousness dawn; "that Thy poor creation may be delivered from the bondage it groans under, and the earth enjoy her sabbath again: that Thy great name may be lifted up in all nations, and Thy salvation renowned to the ends of the world".

M. W.

For "THE FRIEND."

THE CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTOR.

Starting, as they do, from different assumptions, the mind of the conscientious objector and that of his critics fail to meet. If he believed what Bishop Cooke, for instance, believes (as evidenced in an article in the Methodist Advocate-Journal, reprinted in the Tribune of 28th ult.), he would deserve the Bishop's sentence of civil excommunication.

Bishop Cooke argues substantially—since our precious heritage of free institutions was won and can only be maintained by war, the man who refuses to bear his share of this necessary cost deserves to be shut out of any part of the good things thus won and thus maintained. But this assumption that war can be of real advantage to the people is just what the conscientious objector can not believe. He can not believe that the precious things bequeathed to us by our fathers are due to war nor that they can be maintained by war and all that it involves.

Suppose a community of people who insist on putting out burning oil by pouring water upon it. They see the conflagration spread the more, but will not open their minds to the suggestion, so contrary to what seems to them the plain and obvious common-sense of the matter, and patent to any one, that their painful activity is making things worse and worse.

Suppose one of the group happens to see that his friends are really spreading the fire. When he tries to make this understood and refuses to add to the sum of their fatal effort they are naturally angry with him as a shirk. Yet if they understand his position they see that, mistaken as he appears to them, he is as public-spirited in his refusal as they in their fighting the flames.

This parable puts the matter in a nut-shell.

In practice the conscientious objector may be doing a harder thing than the men who submit to the pressure of public opinion and go to war. He bears the almost intolerable burden of separation from the movement of his own time. He stands lonely against the overwhelming rush of his fellow-countrymen to war. He makes himself a by-word and a hissing. He faces not only disgrace but torture (for imprisonment in many American prisons is to-day literal bodily torture), and the possibility of death as a mutineer.

He does this to serve, as he believes, first his own country, and then all men everywhere. He is seeking, so far as in him lies, to open the road to the Kingdom, to day as when literally the meek shall inherit the earth, and he testifies to his conviction that war puts back liberty, destroys democracy, shames Christianity.

If he has any humility, or (what is closely allied to that grace) any sense of humor, he is alive to the danger of griggishness that lies in his isolation, in his claim to deeper moral insight than his elders and betters and those who have given and are giving their lives in war. In his moments of depression and self-searching he is likely to fear, even to morbidness, lest unworthy elements are entering into his own sacrifices that he would like to keep so clean.

His is not an easy path. Let us at least be fair enough to recognize that he believes that he is serving not himself but us.

EMILY GREENE BALCH.

BOSTON.

FROM GERMAN PRISONERS OF WAR.

[Dr. Fael Williams has kindly permitted us to copy three letters from two prisoners of war. The observations in them in regard to Christianity and war will interest our readers. The English, though somewhat broken, will be plain, we think, so we are printing without editing.—Eds.]

13th of May, 1917.

Your kind letter from the ninth of April has arrived a few days ago. I thank you very much for your kindness. I never thought that the bones I carved would go to America, at least I never expected to get a letter from there. Unfortunately we have no more buyers now for this sort of work or better the money paid for it is not so much to encourage to make more of them as only a few pence are paid for it now, so I have given up this work though I should like very much to earn a little money for as I am a prisoner for almost three years now I'm much in need of it. I have been working as a stoker on board a German ship and have been taken prisoner in October, 1914 in ——— as so you will understand very well that I should be very happy if the war would soon come to an end. But there is little hope in this regard the more as America has also declared war now. I don't know much about the opinions of the Quakers to take a positive standpoint as to your writings, but this I see, that there are still men in this terrible times who are not only thinking about war and destruction.

That was the third Easter that I am spending in Prison, will there be another one before peace comes? Nobody knows but I hope and wish that this should have been the last behind barbed wire. We also have had bad weather here after Easter cold winds and heavy snow storms were blowing but now it is somewhat better. Spring has come now. As I'm not able to write in English a friend of mine has written this letter. You will excuse it I hope. Thanking very much for your kind letter, I remain your obedient servant,

H. H.

"Do not write between the lines!"

30th of May, 1917.

Perhaps you will be somewhat surprised to get already another letter from here of the same handwriting. Simple matter. The man ——— is my table neighbor besides this he is a close countryman to me and above all he has been captured in ——— he on his ship, I on the cocoa plantation where I was employed and since then we have been together all the time. He and I together have carved those bones referred to in your kind letter and as he doesn't know English I have written that letter to you so as he advised me. After this introduction you will not be angry I hope when I take the liberty to write to you on my own account after asking permission from my friend, but as I myself do not know very much English I beg your pardon for my style of writing.

Whitsunday! but what does it matter to us? The same rainy weather, the same barbed wire, the same sad faces and the same day as all the others have been since three days. And yet it is a difference, to me at least, for on such days as Christmas, Easter I feel much more than on other days that I'm a prisoner of war only and what this means to a man who is accustomed to his liberty so as we colonists are. Only a man can understand this who knows the life in the free forests and vast plains of the tropic land, the life in free nature. I think an Easter or Whitsunday alone or with one or two comrades only in the quiet solemn virgin forests is quite another thing than such a day here amongst thousands of peoples of all sorts. Perhaps that you will say that we have a church or at least a preacher here for such days. True, but to speak freely I cannot agree with the current comprehension of Christianity so I go to church here very seldom. I don't take the same standpoint as the young painter mentioned in your letter, but is that religion preached now-a-days in great stone blocks, called churches, that religion, that church the servants of which call themselves substitutes of God on earth? Is it the same religion, the religion of love taught by the great sufferer who died at the cross 2000 years ago? This terrible war now raging, would it be possible if the teachings of "love your next" had been followed off? No, thus there must be something wrong. In this the young painter is right I think. Not religion itself but the church, the followers of the Nazarene, the servants of the church have turned it so as they think it advantageous to themselves. To be continued next week.

Yours,

G. H.

7th of June, 1917.

When I was writing the letter on 30 May I suddenly found myself at the end of the paper so I had to interrupt and will continue it to-day. Am I writing too much? Then I beg your pardon that as I have no relations except one good friend in Germany I feel happy to express my thoughts to somebody. Are you angry about it? I also don't know exactly what position the Friends take regarding religion but as they are opposed to war they surely are closer to the words "love your next" than we are. Our religion, our church has stiffened in dogmas, it is no more the religion taught by Jesus yet I dare say that it never has been rightly understood what he taught. How could it otherwise be possible that within the Christian church bloody wars were fought His name being used as a battle cry? I have been planter-assistant at a cocoa plantation and was taken prisoner at the outbreak of war so I didn't see very much; but what I saw and what I read in the newspapers shakes me in my very heart. Men which have never seen each other before are tearing themselves to pieces and for what? Only because there are only a few men who are telling them that the men at the other side were his enemies, and the more of his adversaries he kills the greater the honor for him. And what is the church doing? On both sides her servants are blessing the weapons, praying for victory, thousands of men are sent to death by men crucifix in hands. Is that the religion of love? To it (is it) astonishing if men have opinions such as your young painter? When in our civilized century things are possible such as the present war? I'm not a studied man or philosopher so I shall not dare to say how things could or how things should be, but this I say that so as they are they are unworthy of mankind, who has had 2000 years of Christian teaching. You asked in your letter if there were many people materialists in Germany so as that young painter. Perhaps there were, perhaps there are still very much but it is sure that many a man has changed his opinions in this regard but the church ought also to change their position. This war has given a terrible lesson to many people who never thought of God and religion. Christianity has not failed, it has only been guided the wrong path. The church shall not rule, but she shall also not submit herself to the "state," and the latter she has done, the "state" prescribes what her servants have to preach, including in their prayers army, fleet and all the engines of war destined to kill men. Now I will finish my letter, excuse me if it is too long. I have the honor to remain yours truly,

G. H.

If the conscientious objector helps produce food he gives life instead of taking it. He may even produce food for the army. He feels no ill will toward the soldier and can gladly labor to give him the necessities of his life, even if he cannot work in a munitions factory to give him the necessities of his trade.—GEORGE A. WALTON.

EDELWEISS.

This edelweiss I wear was not little mine:
I had it cheaply in the first town
Of one who from the mountains had come down;
A meek-eyed man, rough-clad, with many a sign
Of burning sun and of the tempest's frown.
Now through the valley, with its corn and wine,
His star-blooms badge the thronging tourists fine
Whose feet his toilsome path have never known.
O prophet souls, who with bruised feet have trod
The heaven-lit heights and thence to us have brought Your wider vision, your high-hearted faith,
Your hope for Man, your larger thought of God—
We wear your edelweiss; life's common lot
Ever to your high service witnesseth!

—FREDERICK L. HOSMER, in the Transcript.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTER OF J. HENRY SCATTERGOOD.

PARIS, Seventh Month 16, 1917.

Morris is working on a first draft of a report to the Red Cross Commission on the work of the English Friends, and he asks me to continue the narrative of our doings since his last letter describing the relief work at Troyes.

After no little difficulty and delay in getting the permits and an automobile for our trip to parts of the reconquered territory of the Aisne, Oise and Somme we at last got off on the 11th for two days and had a most enlightening and interesting trip. Our party consisted, besides ourselves, of Wilfred Shewell, Secretary, and Ralph Elliott, Treasurer of the Friends' Paris Committee, and an American-French young woman, named Casparis, who has volunteered her services to the "American Fund for the Relief of French Wounded." This is now being absorbed by the Red Cross, and through the latter, the use of their car was obtained. Our guide was a splendid driver and we were fortunate indeed.

The first day we left Paris at 2 p. m. and ran north by east for forty miles to Compiègne. The Germans occupied this old town for a few days in 1914, during their great sweep toward Paris. As you remember, they reached a point less than twenty miles away, when they were turned back at the Battle of the Marne. During this battle, Senlis, about twenty-five miles from Paris, was badly damaged by shells and resulting fires. Compiègne, however, was not at all destroyed, except its bridge across the Oise. We went that afternoon for a visit to the villages and trenches between Compiègne and Noyon along the old front which was held for two and one-half years. It was, of course, very depressing to see the terrible devastation caused by the shell-fire of both sides upon the villages in "no man's land," lying in the near vicinity of the old fronts. But many of these houses in these villages can be repaired, and comparatively few of them are completely demolished. In comparison, these villages are better off than those further north and east, which were deliberately dynamited and burnt by the Germans before their retirement in Fourth Month last. These latter in some cases are completely demolished with absolutely nothing to start on afresh except wreck and debris.

In this northern country, the type of construction has been much more substantial than in the Marne region. In the latter, frame buildings filled in with a loose type of thin wall of brick or stone, often of sticks and mud, were very common and only in the larger towns was the construction really solid; in the recently reconquered section, on the other hand, stone construction was very general, even in the small villages, and consequently the destruction of these houses is much more serious and the restoration will be far more expensive.

One hears so much and reads so much in the way of generalizations concerning the destruction in this section, that we feel that we must guard ourselves against falling into the same error, especially as we were able to visit only a fraction of the territory, no more than thirty-eight towns and villages out of about three hundred in that part held by the French line.

There is, in addition, about as much area reconquered lying behind the British line, but no information is yet obtainable about the condition of the towns in that part because the British do not allow any work (except the military) to be done in their sections. As far as one can study from prepared maps of the French line reconquered section, 107 towns or villages in it out of 295 are completely destroyed, 107 towns or villages partially destroyed (32 very badly but not completely), 81 towns or villages have not been injured.

In this whole district, in addition to this destruction of buildings, we are told that all the furniture, garden tools and agricultural implements were carried off by the Germans. Fortunately, in some parts of the section, the Germans planted crops before their retirement, and these crops will be gathered this season by the Army. Many trees have been cut down, in some cases no doubt for military uses, but in a great many, as in the case of fruit, garden and shade trees, for sheer vandalism. From our chance to see we should not say that this cutting of fruit trees was general, it appearing frequently but not invariably. But we did not have a chance to see the most Eastern villages, where the Germans seem to have made a cleaner sweep of destruction than elsewhere, and it may be that there the cutting down of trees was also general rather than exceptional. The destruction ranges all the way from slight damage in some places to absolute demolition in others—so complete in fact in some villages one could not find walls two feet high anywhere—just vast piles of brick and stone. At one point we saw a beet sugar refinery which had been dynamited and burnt and it would be impossible to imagine a worse wreck. It forms a mass of tangled junk 30 feet high and covering perhaps three-fourths of an acre. We are told that at Channy, which we did not have a chance to visit, there are several wrecked factories of various kinds, in addition to a total demolition of the houses. This was the largest town (10,000 population) which was destroyed. The other large towns in the section suffered less than the small ones and the country villages. One cannot fathom the why or wherefore of some being saved and others burned or why parts of a town were destroyed while other parts were saved. Perhaps there was not time for fuller destruction, perhaps the Germans left places to live in themselves until the final withdrawal, perhaps local favoritisms or whims of officers in charge may have been responsible. But in the aggregate, the amount of destruction, most of which was manifestly wilful, was immense and appalling. This is especially true of the eastern and northern parts, which lie nearest the Hindenberg line. Evidently the Germans wished to make sure that French troops could find no place to stay covered. No civilian is allowed to go back to his village unless he has a place to stay, and in the cases of total destruction, therefore, there are no civilians at all—only soldiers who are camped near by or who have built temporary huts or who are using partly built-up stables or sheds. These civilians in many cases are anxious to return, so as to start to work on their land, and are frequently living in the larger towns or cities, where shelter can be found, lying nearest to their homes. The first thing to do, therefore, is to provide a hut or temporary house to live in, and the Friends are just now at last able to start their house building in this section, after many weeks of waiting for the arrival of the built-up sections from the construction camp at Dole, and also of their permits. They have been assigned by the Minister of Interior, five villages northeast of Ham, in which to build houses, viz.: St. Limon, Tuguy and Bray-St. Christophe, all three of which were completely destroyed, and Aubigny and Villers-St. Christophe, which were partly destroyed.

To these five probably more will later be added when additional building facilities are provided. These villages are a few miles southwest of St. Quentin and cannonading is continually heard in them. Ham is the working center for supplies, etc. The first place they are starting in is at Tuguy, where they will build a hut for the Mayor, so that he will be allowed to return. He is a large landowner and can immediately give employment on his land to others of his townspeople, for whom also houses are to be built, and to this nucleus others will be added from time to time as provision can be made for them. Similar starts will be made at St. Limon and Bray-St. Christophe. At the partially destroyed towns much repairing and saving of walls by protecting their tops from winter moisture and frost will be possible in addition to the hut building. In the case of Villers-St. Christophe, the Mayor has now returned and is doing all he can to bring others back and to make provision for them. He is an old man, who was there all through the German occupation until Second Month 9th last, when he and all his fellow-citizens were forced to go together to some strange place, where they were crowded together, sixty in one house, and thirty children in one room. Here they stayed until the German evacuation, when they found their way home only to discover the terrible damage done in their absence. He told us that there had never been either fighting or bombardment there, and that all the destruction had been willfully wrought by dynamiting and burning. In this village all the trees had been cut down, including a beautiful grove of large shade trees in the public square. We saw the soldiers clearing out the dead tops of the fruit trees in the gardens. The Mayor also told us that wells had been filled with manure and bricks and that it would be necessary to dig new ones because already four cases of typhoid had developed since their return. It is interesting that in this village a young woman who was the first to work her way back, acted for two months in place of the Mayor until his return and managed things so well that the Sub-Prefect of the Department has sent materials for buildings and has erected a large hut to provide shelter for any old villagers who return to hunt up their old possessions. Many of them buried their money, and touching scenes are enacted when they are permitted to return to hunt for it.

The total area of the district evacuated by the Germans this Spring is much less than that of the ground over which they retreated during the Battle of the Marne in 1914. The total length of the liberated district is about 80 miles, its greatest depth about 25 miles, and its average depth 18 miles. Its area is roughly 1440 square miles.

At Tuguy we had unmistakable evidence of the way the destruction was wrought. In the old church there, the Germans had cut out holes in the walls inside and outside at intervals of 15 feet, into which dynamite was to be placed and all fuses set off together. Something must have happened to prevent the finishing of the work, for the church stands unharmed except for these holes and a few look-out openings which had been cut through the walls.

Our itinerary from Compiègne took us the first afternoon for several miles along the old fronts, and in addition to our observation of the damage done to the towns of Sersaise, Ollencourt, Tracy-la-Val and Bailly, we had a most interesting opportunity to go into the old trenches of both armies. The amount of work done was prodigious, in a perfect network of trenches and communicating trenches all seven feet deep at least. In many places elaborate underground houses of one room, two rooms and sometimes more had been made. Their roofs were arched with corrugated steel or with steel girders, over which there were several feet of earth. In some cases the floors and ceilings were of cement. In the case of the German dugouts and shelters, they were much more elaborate and comfortable than the French. We visited a group of such shelters built of huge logs with four feet of earth over them and the whole hidden in a thick wood behind high entrenchments. The Germans had electric lights in many places. They even had a bowling alley and little garden patches and flowers. So much grass had already grown up around these old trenches that the way is often hidden, and great care is needed in going about because of the danger of unexploded shells and grenades. The French are forcing German prisoners to clean up and take out the logs and iron, etc., which are worth saving, and we saw much material stored up which had been salvaged in this way from these old trenches. But where the land has been cut up by trenches and shelled, a great deal of filling in and leveling will have to be done before it can be used again for agricultural purposes. We suppose these belts of "no man's land," including these trenches and shelled fields will have to be left to the last in any case. Vast belts of barbed wire entanglements also stretch across the countryside in many places. These are perhaps thirty feet wide and the wires are supported on steel posts or "horses" about three feet from the ground. These belts are being left for the present, and in some places we saw the crops growing close up to both sides of them.

On this trip we saw large groups of German prisoners usually on the road always wearing a large "P. G." on their backs, meaning "prisoner de la guerre," and guarded by soldiers. They seemed well-cared-for, but unexpressive in feature. Many were very young.

We also saw a very large German grave-yard, now wired so that one cannot enter, the French desiring to prevent any disturbance even of enemy graves.

Our itinerary the second day took us through Tracy-Javal again, and Carlepont to Noyon. Here we met Captain Pellain, at the Army Headquarters. He is greatly interested in the reconstruction work of the Friends and is doing all he can to aid their work in his districts. We also met Dr. Killam, an American woman doctor, who has been doing fine work through the American Fund for French Wounded. As this is now being absorbed into the Red Cross, we hope the Friends' Committee can secure her, because of their great need for more women doctors. From Noyon we went direct to Ham via Griscard and to four smaller villages, in all of which only slight damage had been wrought. Along this main road many of the great trees had been cut down. The French are gathering the logs wherever possible, and are establishing portable saw mills and cutting some of the lumber there of which there is so much need. Ham was a town of 3,500 people (now about 1,500), but was not generally destroyed. The main cross streets in the centre had been mined to block the roads, the canal locks had been utterly destroyed, and the canal filled up with debris from the complete demolition of an historic old thirteenth century tower with a dungeon where Louis Napoleon was imprisoned for six years after the failure of his attempt at Boulogne in 1840. These walls were 35 feet thick and 110 feet high, and sufficient dynamite was used to completely overthrow it. We visited the Friends' new headquarters, which they call an "équipe." Some half dozen men will now begin the erection of the houses from this centre. From Ham we went eastward through several partly damaged villages to Annois, Flavy-le-Martel and Jussy, all absolutely ruined. At Flavy is located the wrecked sugar mill already referred to. At Jussy hardly one stone stands on another, except where soldiers have used the old bricks for making shelters. We were less than four miles from the German front at this point, and often Jussy is shelled now. St. Quentin is about seven-and-a-half miles northeast of this point. We were amused at a sign over a wire suspension bridge recently stretched across the ruined canal reading "Jussy's Brooklyn." The five Friends' villages lie northwest from Flavy, and after going through them in turn we passed through Douilly, Matigny, Villecourt and Bethencourt, all completely destroyed, and so on through other villages partially destroyed, to Nesle and then back to Ham, Noyon, Compiègne and finally Paris, where we arrived about 9.30 o'clock after a most interesting but sad day.

It is of interest to note that our guide through the neighborhood of the five villages assigned thus far to Friends was Richard Clements, a man of 27 or so, who had studied to be a Congregational minister. He had to go Woodbrooke, and is a conscientious objector, and had been at Dole for eight months making the huts. He has now been put in charge of the Ham "équipe" and the erection of the houses. He expects to join Friends after the war. He told us of this long period of training and of his hard work at Dole while we were having a picnic lunch in the flower garden of the Mayor of Tuguy, whose hut will be the first to be built by the Friends.

Nothing is left of the Mayor's house but the garden, and its trees had not been disturbed. The whole scene of destruction before us, with the booming of the guns easily heard, with occasional aeroplanes overhead and with no one except soldiers anywhere near us, brought vividly home to us the whole situation. Here manifestly much work of reconstruction has to be done, yet only the military authorities are there at all and they, of course, cannot at present take up the problems of rebuilding or of civilian life; no one can tell for whom huts would be desirable or who would like to have them built until some civil authority is re-established; the owners must be assured that some legal means of proving their losses are provided for before the debris can even be cleared away; in many cases there is no space for a temporary hut to be placed unless this debris is cleared away. Again it is a special favor granted by the Government at present only to a few workers to work in this military zone at all, and the Government itself has widely extended plans for rebuilding these destroyed villages when the conditions make it possible. To these legal and practical difficulties is added, there as everywhere, the difficulty of transportation. All the railroads in France are overtaxed, but especially so back of the lines, and of course preference is always given to military movements. Hence there is no certainty of delivery of the parts for the houses, even if everything should be previously arranged at the construction camps where the lumber is to be found. And yet there was Clements, with his maturity and his experience in the work and his excellent French, ready to help to mend the damage and put things right, and yet there were we, anxious to place a hundred keen American fellows in the same good work, but tied up so far as concerns the immediate possibility of putting so many of them to work at once. It seems a pity that these two sides cannot be brought together more promptly and on a large scale, but it is understandable when all the factors are taken into consideration.

One thing that seems perfectly clear is that the temporary house in selected cases is the first step. This is absolutely the plan the English Friends have followed. Those huts can usually be placed on some back corner or elsewhere so that they will not interfere either with the assessing of damages or with the ultimate permanent reconstruction, and yet they will furnish dwellings which will enable an early return of some of the people to the cultivation of the land. The French Minister of the Interior has formed a Department to direct this reconstruction work, and its head has already contracted for the delivery of 20,000 such "démontable houses" as the Friends have demonstrated to be so useful. But these contracts are not likely to be finished at an early date, and therefore, meanwhile there is opportunity for the Friends to do just as much as their building power makes possible, and as an outlet for this these five villages have been first assigned to them, and they believe that more will be open to them if they desire more. It is for this reason that we have felt that American Friends could most quickly get into this reconstruction work by building another construction camp for making the houses and working with the English Friends as soon as this is operating.

J. HENRY SCATTERGOOD.

THE RECIPE FOR HUMILITY.—It is not humble to be always thinking of how worthless we are. For it is easy to pass from that consciousness of our worthlessness to pride that we are so conscious of our worthlessness; and pride in our humility is as bad as any other kind of pride. The recipe for real humility is, not looking at what we are not, but looking at what God is; and seeing this by "looking unto Jesus." So it has been well said that "it is better to be thinking of what God is than what we are. . . . True humility does not so much consist in thinking badly of ourselves as in not thinking of ourselves at all." Self dies when we yield all to Christ and trust Him for all. Then He fills our vision and keeps it filled with Himself. That is as much better than trying to be humble as the living Christ is better than the dead self.—Sunday School Times.

YOUNGER FRIENDS.

A SURGEON OF THE WOODS.—This is not a story of the doctor who ran away from the city to the land where all the woods are green. My surgeon does not wear a great white apron, and have a long array of shining knives laid out in glittering glass cases. I do not believe that his diploma is recognized by the American Medical Society. But I am confident of one thing—if it were not for the services he performs for us, it would take far more doctors than we now have to keep us well, and all of them could not keep us comfortable.

Yet he is only a bird, not so big as my fist, and the only instrument he possesses is his stout, sharp bill. He is Dr. Woodpecker, the surgeon of the woods, one of our most useful and honorable citizens. Long ago, Nature gave him and other birds the task of watching over all the trees, and keeping them largely free from insect enemies, that not only would destroy them, but would make life very miserable for us.

As we look at the trees, they seem tremendously strong and able to take care of themselves. True, great winds sometimes overthrow them, and occasionally we find one that has been destroyed by the lightning's fiery blast. But the real foes of trees are not the winds nor the lightning, but the amazing multitude of insects, beetles, borers, moths, caterpillars, and the rest of the hungry tribes which are ever ready to assail them. These increase with amazing rapidity, and it is no easy task to fight against them. Were it not for the birds, not many years would pass before we should have a treeless land, and a land so uncomfortable to live in that you and I would want to find another for our home.

Many birds take part in the struggle to keep down this swarming insect life. But the part the woodpecker plays is just like the work the surgeon performs. The ordinary doctor takes care of our ordinary ills, but the surgeon must perform the operation that means a cutting within. So to the woodpecker is given the surgeon's task, and every year he performs many million cutting operations.

You know there are some insects which deposit their eggs and rear their young on the outer parts of the tree. Dr. Robin and his feathered brothers can take care of these. But there are other insects like the weevils, the beetles, and the borers, which live and lay their eggs in the tree itself. Protected by a heavy covering of bark and wood, they cannot be reached by the other birds. But Dr. Woodpecker can reach them. The bark flies under the stout blows of his sharp beak, and he reaches in and removes the borers which are destroying the tree's life; and with them he eats their eggs, the source of future trouble.

I have been just watching one at work beside my cottage. Early this morning I heard his tapping, tapping on the old willow that stands near the door. He has been at it ever since. Evidently he finds it in great need of his professional services. Poor old willow! It has stood there many years, and its limbs offer an easy field for insect foes. Dr. Woodpecker's beady little eyes scan every inch of its gnarled old bark, and his red, shining head turns quickly here and there as it delivers the blows of the sharp, strong beak. He picks up an egg cluster here, a spider there, and occasionally he finds a beetle. Now just where that limb juts out, he finds a place that seems to require an operation of more importance. He adjusts himself carefully, and then the blows begin to fall, one after another, minute after minute, until he has cut well into the bark. Now he has what he wants—a nest of grubs, ready to bore out the life of my old willow. Quickly they are devoured and he goes on with his survey of the tree. To such visits as these I owe the continued shade of my willow.

Now as this is only one morning's work, you can imagine how many professional visits he must make in the course of the long summer. One observer of birds and their habits tells of a day he spent following a woodpecker. He was at work in a forest of young and healthy trees, which harbored only a few insects. And in the course of this single day, he counted eight hundred and twenty-seven trees which this woodpecker inspected.

We are learning that the birds are not only beautiful, but exceedingly necessary to our comfort. For every quail the farmer's boy is allowed to shoot, the farmer will lose much the following summer, through insect enemies which that quail would have destroyed for him. But the boy, who to try his skill with a rifle, essays the shining red mark of Dr. Woodpecker's head, has committed a wrong against all the trees in the woods, and all the folk who love their shade.—WILLIAM E. BROOKS, in Forward.

GOOD ROADS.

Meeting an old man on the road some time ago, at a time when the condition of many of the highways was anything but good, we halted for a few minutes' conversation: it was natural that our remarks should drift towards the subject above named.

As we were parting, the octogenarian remarked in effect that his religion consisted in the advocacy of good roads. I at once felt a pang of regret that one whose life had been so extended was content to appraise this all important matter at such a low estimate. However, is not the casual remark of this individual worthy of second thought in a figurative sense?

In these days of rubber-tired vehicles, good, hard roads are more and more a necessity: they give better and more continuous service than those which we were formerly content to use.

Even the good roads are apt to wear into ruts if not given careful and prompt attention. As followers of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, we are vitally interested in good roads as leading to the Kingdom, not only on our own account, but for all other human beings.

What is our duty as channels (roads) in fitting, so far as is possible, others, with ourselves, for the future life which awaits the Christian believer? As is the case with the good roads, some of the best people have been known to get into ruts, and sometimes it has been a difficult matter to get out of them: perhaps the broad yearning love and desire for the salvation of souls in bondage to the lower powers is a help to extricate from these.

Comparatively few have the prophetic gift, a commission from the Head of the Church to minister by word of mouth to the needs of the people, but there are many other avenues for good, which, if prayerfully sought, can and will be made available for the winning of souls to Christ.

Many whose lives are circumscribed may seem to be but lanes, as it were, for the transmission of good, but, as they occupy the talents committed to them, they will experience a growth in power of service.

In the cross-roads of life, we are bound to meet discouragements and disappointments, and we may be besieged with worrying doubts: these, if submitted to in the right spirit, will but strengthen the inner life, fitting it for larger and better things.

The roads are at times washed and torn, or otherwise injured; sometimes they are blocked with drifted snow. The Christian traveler oftentimes receives serious jolts on the highway of life, and there are sometimes such formidable barriers in the way that a forward movement seems almost impossible, but when really reached, these are like the lions in the way of "Christian," mentioned in "Pilgrim's Progress."

And in the retrospect, as the milestones of life are passed, and with them, added experiences and responsibilities, it is well to remember that our lives should preach as loudly as the spoken word, and, while we want to advocate good roads, our religion will not stop there, but, putting first things first, the Christian traveler will do what he can, in every way he can, in forwarding peace, and in advancing the Kingdom of Jesus Christ on the earth.

WILLIAM B. HARVEY.

IMPRESSIONS OF KOREA.

GILBERT BOWLES.

On this bright morning, as I am nearing the Yalu River, the boundary between Korea and Manchuria, on the Korean Express, I am trying to organize mentally the impressions received from my six days on Korean soil.

On the morning of Fourth Month 1st I landed at Fusan, and after looking around the town for an hour, took the train for Seoul, reaching there at 9 p. m. After two full days in Seoul, I left for Ping Yang at 9.10 a. m. on the 7th, remaining in that city until 3.20 p. m. I spent last night at Sen Sen (Syen Chyun), taking the train at 8.10 this morning. I am due at 10.20 at Shingishu, the border town of Korea, where we cross the River Yalu and board the Manchurian train for Mukden. As each moment presents some new scene which is more attractive than writing what I saw and heard yesterday, it is difficult to keep up to date with any kind of notes. But what of Korea?

THE GOVERNMENT RÉGIME.—Everywhere the Japanese administration reaches to all details, of police supervision, elimination of robbers, control of courts, postal and railway systems, registration of property and incomes for taxation purposes, with encouraging efforts at road-building, forestation and agricultural development. There is evidence everywhere that it is a military government, though there is considerable pressure from Japan for a larger place for the strengthening of the civil administration, in proportion to military.

Under the Governor General at Seoul are department heads, with practical duties similar to cabinet ministers. Of the thirteen governors of provinces seven are Koreans. All of the country magistrates are Koreans, with Japanese secretaries.

THE COUNTRY.—The general impression which remains after having traveled the full length of the west coast of Korea, from Fusan in the south to Shingishu (New Wiju) in the north, is that it is a very hilly and mountainous country. The many valleys and small plains are cultivated, while the mountains and hills have been kept stripped of grass and trees, giving a general sense of desolation and sadness. It is no wonder that the chronicler of a Korean Embassy which went to Tokio (Yedo) some two hundred years ago to present congratulations to the Shogun should have noted by contrast the trees which cover the hills of Japan. The hills of the southern half, as far as Seoul, appeared more barren than those of the north. The soil formation of this region, which is largely decomposed granite, gives to the mountains a reddish white color, which is relieved in the north by a more general clay formation and a more frequent growth of groups of the pine shrubs into trees. It is said that in the northeastern part of Korea there are great primitive forests, such as ought now to cover all of the mountains of Korea. I supposed for several days that the only reason for the treeless hills of Korea was the pressure of poverty upon the people, driving them to cut the annual growth of pine twigs and leaves for fuel. I learn, however, that there was an additional reason which will be mentioned later.

THE KOREAN PEOPLE.—The Korean people are midway between the Japanese and Manchurians in size, comparing them with Manchurians I have seen to-day along the line of the South Manchuria Railway. As I write this there are three Koreans stretched out asleep on the neighboring seats. They seem like a farewell guard from Korea to see me safely into Mukden to-night. Dressed in the uniform of postmen or policemen, it is almost impossible to distinguish them from the Japanese, whom they resemble more closely than the Chinese. They lack the business instinct and the training of the Chinese and the initiative and push of the Japanese. But they have great possibilities when the power of personality is released. One old resident of Korea gives among the leading characteristics of the people, a sense of humor, procrastination and reliability.

THE LAW OF DIMINISHING RETURNS.—Economists tell us of the law of diminishing returns from land. In a conversation with Dr. James S. Gale, yesterday morning, he said that one of the principal reasons for the backwardness of Korea was the ancestor worship received with Confucianism. When Buddhism was dominant in Korea it gave a greater stimulus to civilization than has Confucianism in more modern times. Under the influence of Confucian ancestor worship, each succeeding son seems to have deemed it his duty to live in a little poorer house and to accomplish a little less than did his father. This custom has for generations effectually held in check a people who otherwise might have made substantial achievements.

THE FUTURE OF KOREANS.—I have met with opposing views as to the future of the Korean people. Some of the American and British residents and all of the Japanese with whom I have talked, have told me that the Koreans have a hopeful future. They point to improved educational advantages, to the success of Korean merchants in competition with Japanese, and to the possibilities of Korean agriculture and industry. Against this, the majority of the missionaries with whom I have talked say that the Koreans feel there is no future for them. They say, "What can we do? It is hardly worth while to study and prepare ourselves, for there is no outlook." Many of them are going into Manchuria, and buying or leasing land of the Chinese. They know how to grow rice, and it is said they do well at this. It seems to me that if the Koreans will go right ahead and develop themselves and their resources up to the limits of possibilities there will be a future for them.

CHRISTIANITY IN THE OLD CAPITAL OF KOREA.—Ping Yang (Heijo) is the oldest city in Korea. It was the first center of civilization in the old Korean Kingdom. Tradition says that in the twelfth century B. C., it was the seat of government for a kingdom founded by royal refugees from China. The tomb of the founder of this kingdom, the old castle walls, and other associations connected with the Chino-Japanese and Russo-Japanese wars give to the place rare historic interest. The old Korean town has a population of about 45,000, while the new Japanese town near the station has a population of 8,000.

Through the kindness of my friend, Dr. S. A. Moffitt, of the Northern Presbyterian Mission, I was given the rare privilege of seeing under most favorable circumstances the Christian work in this city on a First-day. Starting out at 9 a. m., we visited the vast system of adult Bible classes, in four out of seven of the Presbyterian churches in that city, besides having a half hour for the men's Bible class and the opening of the morning meeting for worship at the central Methodist church, which on First-days gathers the Christians from branch congregations in the city. Not only did we visit these churches once, but at least two of them twice. Beginning with a men's Bible class of 48 at the Central church, the mother church, we hurried to other men's and children's classes, then a little before twelve came back to the closing exercises of the children's School in the Central church and saw 305 little Korean boys and girls rise from their groups on the floor and pass out in order, given groups rising at successive taps of the bell to avoid confusion. Immediately after the children left the rooms, we saw 500 women come in and form in groups for their hour of Bible study. In the basement of this church there was, we saw, an intermediate class of 37 girls and in an adjoining building, a kindergarten school of about 60 little tots getting instructed in Bible study.

These Korean Christians of the Presbyterian churches give the whole of First-day forenoon to Bible study. The teaching is done in groups of from 6 to 12, the teachers having all been taught the lesson in normal classes on the previous day, following the international series. But this is only a part of a well-organized system of Bible study, linked up with local Bible study conferences for a week or more in all local churches, with a Bible training institute for leaders, lasting about a month, for the training of Bible teachers.

In the afternoon I saw two of the preaching services, where men were separated by a partition which divided the great congregations of 1000 or 1200. In the evening I went alone to one of the meetings. I was ushered up to the platform, guided by one of the elders who led me through the maze of men and boys seated on the straw mats spread on the floor. For the first time for many years I was led into deep sympathy with those who sit through Japanese sermons unable to follow what was said. The young preacher was eloquent, judging by the way the audience followed in closest attention.

This work has all grown up within the last twenty-three years, spreading into the surrounding country where there are about 250 churches connected with the Central Station at Ping Yang.

THE GOSPEL IN A TOWN OF 5000.—Last night I was given a cordial welcome to the home of the Presbyterian Missionaries, named Soltan, at San Sen (Syen Chyun), toward the northern part of Korea. Within eighteen years, 3000 out of a population of 5000 have become Christians. They belong to two churches, the town being divided into two parishes by the river which runs through the city. They also have a boys' academy and a school for widows. In the surrounding district there are about 150 churches. The Christians of this northern province are practically all self-supporting, besides supporting three missionaries amongst the Koreans who have gone north to Manchuria. A later note may touch on the reasons for the rapid spread of Christianity in Korea.

NOTES.—Alice C. Gifford, of the Friends' Mission in Tokio, Japan, who has been spending a year of furlough in this country, will sail on the S. S. Korea from San Francisco, on Eighth Month 22nd. Esther B. Rhoads, of Germantown, a member of the Young Women's Auxiliary, will sail on the same steamer. She plans to spend a year at the Friends' Mission as a teacher. Gilbert and Minnie P. Bowles have arrived in this country for their year of furlough. They will attend the Five Years' Meeting in Tenth Month, and visit in and near Philadelphia at a future date.

Alice G. Lewis writes that she expects to be in Karuizawa early in this month, attending the annual conference of the Foreign W. C. T. U. The rest of her vacation will be spent in Ninooka, near the base of Mt. Fuji.

The Binfords, Colemans and Edith F. Sharpless are in Karuizawa.

Toki Iwasawa is occupying Edith Sharpless's house in Mito, keeping house for her two brothers.

FOR "THE FRIEND,"

TRAVELS OF A TEACHER.

II—ACROSS CANADA AND THE CANADIAN MOUNTAINS.

WALTER W. HAVLAND.

Port Arthur and Fort William are the twin towns on the northwestern shore of Lake Superior, that together make the world's greatest grain port. As our steamer approached we were impressed with the beauty of the harbor, partially enclosed by rugged rock-crowned hills, whose basaltic columns give the effect of a series of ancient castles. The two towns, connected by an electric road on land, are virtually one, though Fort William is the eastern terminus of the Lake Superior branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which brings in wheat by the million bushels from the fertile plains of the northwest. Twenty-five large elevators have a total capacity of forty-three and a quarter million bushels, while there is an annual clearance from the port of more than a quarter of a billion bushels. It was a surprise to me to learn that of wheat, oats, barley and flax, as many as 428 separate grades are classified and shipped.

Between Fort William and Winnipeg the railway passed through a great deal of marshy country, with scant trees and pretty copses. The monotony of the journey was relieved by conversation with the genial and cultivated doctor from Edmonton, who, until my interruption, was reading from the Poems of Rupert Brooke, a diversion quite to the credit of any gentleman, whether from Edmonton or Westtown. The country improves from a farming standpoint as one approaches Winnipeg, and extensive stock-raising is in evidence. Winnipeg is a substantially built city, with a population of nearly 300,000, capital of the Province of Manitoba, and commercial centre of the interior. I should have brought away a different impression of the city, had my train's stop in it not been after dark and during a heavy thunder storm. As it was, I splashed around the streets a little, and was chiefly impressed by the lavish illumination of the business section of the city, and the imposing size and splendor of the "Royal Alexandra," one of the great chain of hotels for which the main line of the C. P. R. is famous.

The next morning I woke up in the Province of Saskatchewan, still aboard the "Imperial Limited," finest and proudest of Canadian trains. In the men's dressing-room we were greeted with the sign, which had been posted since the evening before: "Province of Saskatchewan, Public Drinking of Intoxicating Liquors on this Train is Prohibited by Law." Though a measure of prohibition is in force in Ontario, Saskatchewan and Alberta seemed "bone-dry." Numerous conversations with men from Canada and "the States" confirm the belief that universal prohibition is a thing of the near future. Right-minded men in all sections, who have been doubtful of its wisdom and may have voted against the law, have been "convinced" in large numbers by the working of the law, so there is little possibility of anything but a movement steadily forward of the prohibition forces.

In passing through this province such names as Regina, the provincial capital, and Yorkton, recalled the interests of the Doukhobors, and I wished that I had time and the right guide for a visit to them in their settlements. Surely their lot was cast in pleasant places, for the plains around Regina are abundantly fertile, the soil in some places being twenty feet and more deep, it is said. As we go west to Moose Jaw, the herds of cattle multiply, and evidences of prosperity abound.

Toward evening we reached Medicine Hat, the great and hopeful manufacturing town of western Canada. An abundant flow of natural gas makes heat, light and power cheap. They sell the gas at from five to thirteen and a half cents per thousand cubic feet. Street lights burn all day, because it is cheaper than to put them out and light them again!

In the night we passed through Calgary, the largest city in Alberta, where the lights gleamed brilliantly as we looked out. It seems a pity to miss a mile of this wonderful country, but one must sleep and even darkness has its bright side.

Early in the morning the train pulled in at Banff, the entrance station for the Canadian National Rocky Mountain Park and the gateway to that wonderful region. It may not be generally known that this park is the largest in the world, with its reservation of 5732 square miles, nearly half as large again as our Yellowstone Park.

Banff is a famous resort, with many cottages, boarding-houses and hotels, which are almost too populous for those who want a little rest from excessive human nature in the summer time. The C. P. R. "Banff Hot Springs Hotel" is worthy of a visit, since it is "the most beautifully situated and luxuriously comfortable mountain hotel in the world." Advertising aside, it does command a wonderful view of the mountains over the valley where the Bow and Spray Rivers join. The Bow Falls give a rhythmic roar, not unpleasant to the Quaker ear, and all the immediate surroundings of this great hotel are hard to surpass. Time did not avail for me to follow out any of the network of drives and trails, or to visit the Buffalo Park or Sulphur Springs, all of which have their real attractions.

"Stop at Banff, stay at Lake Louise and Glacier," is not a bad rule. An hour's railroad ride from Banff brings you to Lake Louise station, from which a gasoline driven car takes you up the three miles to the lake itself and "Château Lake Louise," as the fine C. P. R. hotel is called. The stories of the charm of situation and beauty of coloring of Lake Louise do not exaggerate. The Lake is as near perfection as a violet is near perfection,—or a forget-me-not. Its color, varying with the light from a very pale but bright blue to deepest indigo, makes the abiding impression. It lies at an altitude of about 5680 feet. It is nearly half a mile broad and a mile and a half long. It is flanked by beautiful mountains; at its head gleam two glaciers, Victoria and Lefroy.

There was time to walk around the trail that encircles the Lake before luncheon. I was fortunate in securing a delightful companion in the person of an Atlanta lawyer, who was president of the Senate of his State last year and has the distinction of having written the "bone-dry" prohibition law now so effectively in force in Georgia. He was good company, and we kept pretty close together until he had to go. Almost as charming a bit of color as the blue of the Lake itself is the mass of golden poppies planted on the banks between the hotel buildings and the Lake. I never saw such a blaze of glorious sunshine outside the sun itself.

In the afternoon the Senator and I took a carriage drive to Moraine Lake, in the Valley of the Ten Peaks, ten miles distant. As we approached the Valley, the "Ten Peaks" stood out as in crescent form against the sky, distinct, close-set, like saw-teeth, yet each with its own individuality and distinction. The first sight of this row of mountains, crowding so much of mountain grandeur and beauty into small space, suggested the impression made by the wonderful view of mountains at Garmisch, in the Bavarian Alps. In the hollow of this crescent of Ten Peaks nestles Moraine Lake, as beautifully green in coloring as Lake Louise is blue.

We were on the lookout for big game on this drive, but were rewarded only by the sight of a porcupine and numerous whistling marmots, much like our ground-hogs or woodchucks, whose call, so like a human whistle, sometimes makes one want to look back and see what is wanted. Our driver said bears could usually be found near the stables and the shacks where the guides and helpers sleep, but though we went with him to guide us and carefully searched, no bear deigned to show himself to us. Perhaps he couldn't bear to, as dear John Dillingham might have suggested.

After a good night's rest I started out for an early morning walk to the upper lakes, the "Lakes of the Clouds," Mirror Lake and Lake Agnes, which lie about an hour's walk up the mountain side. Lake Louise revealed a new charm that morning in the fine reflections of the mountains and trees along her shores, while Mirror Lake, famous for reflections, mirrored not a thing! Lake Agnes, up some 7000 feet, was practically covered with a sheet of ice, which all the suns of Sixth Month had only melted a little around the edges.

Feeling "fit," I undertook a bigger task that morning than the guide-books and hotel clerks advise. I wanted to set foot on that Victoria Glacier, which looked so alluring from Lake Louise. I therefore took the "Upper Glacier Trail" from Mirror Lake, without descending, and after brisk walking, with some gentle skipping down the easy slopes, I soon found myself on the lower part of the glacier. My energy had its special reward in witnessing what I wanted to see even more than bears,—i. e., avalanches. Two splendid avalanches, rivers of snow, poured down in plain view, from Mount Lefroy hundreds of feet to the glacier below. It was a thrilling spectacle, accompanied as it was by a continuous roar, like reverberations of mighty thunder, as the snow masses struck the solid ice beneath. I heard three or four more of these frozen water-falls, but they were not where I could see them.

(To be continued.)

NEWS ITEMS.

PHILADELPHIA QUARTERLY MEETING.—When absences from the city and the recent super-heated term were considered, the mid-summer attendance at Philadelphia Quarter was quite above average. A visiting minister of Concord Quarter had acceptable service during the hour of worship. In a joint business session resignations from the Representative Meeting were received from John B. Garrett and Benjamin Vail. Failing health and strength were given as the reason for retirement. The Meeting expressed liberal appreciation of the valuable and devoted services of the two Friends and appointed a Committee to make nominations for the vacancies to the next Meeting. The Committee now five or six years under appointment to visit the smaller meetings of the Quarter had been authorized to make a new nomination for the service. The list of names submitted was approved and the appointment was made for three years. A definite time for the appointment seemed justified, as the Committee has found some rather definite service that might suffer from interruption.

The Queries were considered with other routine business in separate session and the Meeting was brought into a happy unity of feeling and action. It was a time when nothing unusual happened, but the usual things were done in an unusual degree of interest and brotherly consideration.

The men of the Friends' Reconstruction Unit, now in training at Haverford, will need extra clothing for their work in Europe this coming winter, and it has been proposed that the women Friends see to fitting them out.

To that end measurements of every man enrolled have been taken, so as to give them garments they can wear.

As the men are divided into squads of eight we are asking the War Victims' Relief Committees each to fit out a squad. Hence this notice, which it is hoped will reach every meeting.

Each man is to be furnished with:

- 1 Coat sweater (some already have one).
- 1 Sleeveless jersey (directions for making will be sent).
- 2 Pairs mittens (directions for making will be sent).
- 3 Pairs socks (directions for making will be sent).
- 1 Scarf, and wristlets, if any one wants to add these last.

The work ought to be finished by cold weather, if possible, although things will be sent as soon as handed in.

The meetings which undertake the work will be expected to furnish their own materials, but measurements and directions can be had by communicating with Luise S. Sharpless, Rosemont, Pa.

The best collection of New England Quaker records, the minutes of the New England Yearly Meeting and of the Rhode Island Quarterly, are in the library of the Moses Brown School at Providence. Others may be found at the Newport Historical Society, the New Bedford Meeting House, and the Meeting House at Lynn. All have been used again and again for local and genealogical purposes, but rarely for any general study. In every case they show so close a connection between the Quakers of Massachusetts and those of England that the records of the London Yearly Meeting and the London Yearly Meeting for Sufferings are essential for a clear understanding of what the New England Quakers of the early eighteenth century were doing.—From Church and State in Massachusetts, 1691-1740, by Susan Martha Reed, Ph.D., 1914, quoted in the Journal of the Friends' Historical Society.

SIR OLIVER LODGE, the great scientist, has taken issue with the appeal of London Yearly Meeting to "Christians everywhere," in regard to efforts to end the war. Herbert G. Wood, of Woodbrooke, addressed a letter of reply to the Times. The letter did not appear. The following is a paragraph from it and indicates something of the temper of a public opinion that will decline to print it:

We may not share their confidence that other methods can at once be substituted for war, but "all Christians are bound to recognize the insufficiency of mere compulsion for overcoming evil and to place supreme reliance upon spiritual forces." Surely Christians must earnestly consider whether they are doing all that they might do to undermine Prussianism morally—the only way in which it can be undermined. Sir Oliver Lodge assures us that "the way of salvation now is by fierce and determined energy, not by miserable doubt and hesitation." Everyone will respect and probably share this sentiment. But it does not meet the question Friends have raised. More and more men are coming to see that fierce and determined energy by itself will not save us. If we emerge from this nightmare at all it will be, not indeed by miserable doubt and hesitation, but by hard thinking and by humbling ourselves to walk with God.

AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE.—Word has been received in this office from all the workers who have left for the field. The nine who went to France during the latter part of Sixth Month are now all at work. Douglas Waples and his wife have undertaken some service in the canteen work being undertaken by the Red Cross. The others are working under the War Victims' Relief Committee of English Friends, the women in nursing, the men in agriculture, or mechanical work. The six women on their way to South Russia cabled on the 6th inst. from Yokohama, Japan, where they are waiting until the Russian frontiers are opened again. The five men who left recently to work in the English Friends' mill at Dole landed on the 3rd inst. at a French port.

At Haverford, the routine work goes on regularly, though some slight interruption has been caused by absences due to the inoculations which all the men have received or to the examinations before the exemption boards. Several men have already been exempted or discharged, and no real difficulties have been experienced, except delay in getting permits for the men who were appointed for early departure to France. These cannot leave now before the 25th of this month. A course in masonry and bricklaying and an advanced course in carpentry have been added to the curriculum of training.

Three women have been appointed for positions as social workers offered by English Friends, Esther W. S. Brophy, Mary Ross Gannett and Eleanor Iredale. A number of other women have applied for service, but none with the training in medicine and nursing which is specially needed. It is hoped that Friends with this training can still be found.

Correspondence with the Red Cross in Washington has made more definite our relation to them. Our workers may wear their uniform and insignia, but they will not be members of the army or required to take the military oath. At the same time they can claim no exemption before the Local Boards on the basis of their enrollment in our unit.

AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE,

VINCENT D. NICHOLSON, Executive Secretary.

20 S. Tenth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

REPORT OF THE TREASURER OF THE AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE, FOR THE WEEK ENDING EIGHTH MONTH 13, 1917.—Total reported as having been received in contributions to the Committee last week was

Darby Monthly Meeting, by Walter Rhoads White S.	340.00
Salem, N. J., Monthly Meeting, by J. Bernard Hilliard	143.74
Richland Monthly Meeting, by M. Emma Shaw	136.50
Lansdowne Monthly Meeting, by C. C. Lippincott, Treasurer	136.00
Green Street Monthly Meeting, by A. S. Jenkins, Treasurer	122.00
War Service Committee, both Branches of Friends, Chicago, Ill.	100.00
Evesham Monthly Meeting, by Wm. E. Darnell	55.00
Contributions Received from Individuals	1,298.50
	$ 2,245.74

$138,163.56

CHARLES F. JENKINS, Treasurer.

THE Agricultural Camp under the direction of the Home Service Section of the Emergency Service Committee, which has been running the past seven weeks on the shore of the Westtown Lake, was closed last Seventh-day, the 11th. There were very few boys who could stay the remaining few weeks of the summer, and as the harvesting on the nearby farms was about finished, it seemed that the purpose of the Camp had been accomplished. Comparatively little labor will be needed before harvesting the one-tenth acre of onions and onion sets and the navy beans. It is planned to have the Westtown scholars do the work of harvesting after School opens.

There have been nearly twenty different boys at the Camp during periods of from one to seven weeks, mostly scholars, but a few were prospective scholars, and two or three who were not Friends. The Camp has been very well managed by Wilmer J. Young and Benjamin Thomas, who have given the boys good care, good food and enough discipline to make the Camp routine efficient. One evening in each week they have had an "assembly," with "talks" by interested men of our Yearly Meeting. One evening these "soldiers of the soil" were all presented with "service Testaments" from the Scripture Gift Mission.

They were well received and the exhortation to feed on them daily has been followed. The life in Camp has been well-balanced for body, mind and spirit, so that the boys may feel that it has been time well spent.

W. H. RICHIE, Secretary.

It is understood that our friend, Zebecle Haines, has the sanction of his Monthly Meeting in the prospect of attending the Yearly Meeting at Barnesville, Ohio.

RECEIPTS.

Unless otherwise specified, two dollars have been received from each person, paying for vol. 91.

Dr. J. R. Hedley, Mary W. Trimble, Robert W. Balderston, Elizabeth L. Thomas, William Trimble, Samuel W. Jones, Margaret J. Scott, Margaret Lownes, Elizabeth M. Wood, Edward A. Moore, Annie Martin, Thos. W. Downing, Anson B. Harvey, Dr. Levi Hoopes, Samuel McCarty, Sumner McCarty, Rudolph Chappell, Samuel Biddle, Annie Mickle, James F. Walker, Hannah P. Morris, Anna P. Chambers, Alfred Sharpless, J. Edwin James, Francis J. Stokes, Barclay R. Leeds, Sarah Tatum, Max I. Reich, Lydia Embree, Watson W. Dewees, William Bishop, Mary Ann Sharpless, Eleanor T. Evans, Wm. S. Yarnall, Anna Cresson, Alice P. Roberts, J. Morris Cope, Morris Longstreph, Mary E. Moore, all of Pa.; Hannah P. Rudolph, Cal.; Caroline Cope, Cal.; Wm. H. Leeds, Cal.; Sarah E. Jordan, Ind.; David Thomas, Ind.; Nathan Pearson, Ind.; Asa Pickett, Ind.; Anna M. Wood, Mass.; Annie D. Brown, Mass.; Samuel L. Gidley, Mass.; Ruth A. Palmer, Kan.; Cecil E. Haworth, Kan.; M. C. Cann, Col.; Elizabeth S. Brown, Col.; Henry B. Leeds, N. Y.; J. E. Johnson, Jr., N. Y.; Eliza Pickett, Eng.; Anne Gulbrandsen, Den.; T. Lee Haines, Paul C. Hessler, S. B. Gilby, John I. Bishop, Edward Bishop, Joseph S. Leeds, Warner P. Cooper, Paul M. Cope, Ruth L. Kennard, Elizabeth L. Davis, John B. Hutchinson, Ellwood Green, Albert M. Gillespie, Harvey Pharo, Charles Wright, Dr. Wm. Martin, Amos E. Kaighn, Frank S. L. Exton, Samuel Bucknell, W. Henry Jones, Mary D. Shotwell, Frank W. Wood, Albert L. Hoyle, Beniah M. Rhoads, Samuel N. Rhoads, Mary Allen, Casper T. Sharpless, Ephraim Tomlinson, Mary W. Haines, Samuel S. Haines, all of N. J.; Jesse Edgerton, Jon. K. Blackburn, Leonard Winder, Chas. P. Morlan, Gilbert Warrington, Edgar Warrington, Louis Woolman, Horace J. Edgerton, Wilson M. Hall, Robert Ellyson, Thomas Hartley, Robert H. Smith, Lindley M. Bracken, Debora Bundy, J. Rowland Haines, Jacob Manie, Oliver S. Negus, Lindley B. Steer, Nathan Steer, Emma Holloway, Abel Walker, Mary J. Conrow, George W. Stratton, Wm. L. Ashton, Edwin F. Holloway, Aaron Dewees, Sara T. Williams, Mary P. Doudna, Wilford T. Hall, Allen Bailey, Louis J. Taber, Wm. Brantingham, Dillwyn Stratton, Joshua Brantingham, Isaac Satterthwaite, Richard Haworth, Joseph C. Stratton, Walter G. Edgerton, Gilbert Warrington, all of Ohio; Chas. Y. Thomas, Md.; Richard Maris, Del.; David F. White, Fla.; Stanley A. Phillips, Ill.; Benjamin Johnson, Ind.; Susanna Ramsey, Iowa; Daniel W. Hampton, Iowa, Thomas Blackburn, Iowa; Catharine Hall, Ont., Can.; Joseph G. Pollard, Ont., Can.; George Pollard, Ont., Can.; Alice Trefrey, Ont., Can.; Henry S. Moore, Ont., Can.; A. M. Haight, Ont., Can.; Albert Pollard, Ont., Can.; Jane Montgomery, Ont., Can.; John Pollard, Ont., Can.; Geo. J. Foster, N. Dak.; Wm. T. Griffin, N. C.; M. C. Plummer, Va.; Wm. Bishop, Jr., Mass.; Francis Guindon, Vt.; Wm. G. Guindon, Vt.; Isaac Hicks, N. Y.; Elisha Cook, N. Y.; A. H. Batley, N. Y.; Anna C. W. King, Wash.

Reimbursements received after Second-day morning will not appear in receipts until the following week.

NOTICES.

MEETINGS from Eighth Month 19th to 25th:—

Western Quarterly Meeting, at West Grove, on Sixth-day, Eighth Month 24, at 10 A. M.

Philadelphia Monthly Meeting, Western District, Twelfth Street, below Market Street, Fourth-day, Eighth Month 22, at 10.30 A. M.

Muncy, at Muncy, Fourth-day, Eighth Month 22, at 10 A. M.

Frankford, Fourth-day, Eighth Month 22, at 7.15 P. M.

Haverford, Fifth-day, Eighth Month 23, at 5 P. M.

Germantown, Fifth-day, Eighth Month 23, at 10 A. M.

DEED. At Norwich, Ontario, Canada, Third Month 31, 1917, HANNAH STONON, widow of John Sutton, in the eightieth year of her age; a member of Norwich Monthly Meeting of Friends.

WISSAHICKON INN REDLANDS, CALIFORNIA.

THE WISSAHICKON INN is situated in an Orange Grove in Redlands, the most beautiful place in the San Bernardino Valley.

At the Wissahickon Inn, a family hotel of fifty rooms, you will find a homelike place, good food, and careful attention to your wants.

Rooms with private bath and plenty of public baths. One or two cottages on the grounds.

Near parks and golf course. Tennis court. Magnificent roads for motoring. For reservations and prices, address

A. B. JOHNSON.

Friends Arch St. Centre

304 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Provides comfortable accommodations for guests by the day or week. Meals at moderate prices.

AMELIA D. FEATHERSTONE, Matron.

PHONE—MARKET 1571.

H. G. CHALKLEY & SONS, LTD.

LONDON, ENGLAND LAKE CHARLES, LA
LAWRENCE, KANSAS

OFFER:—

First Lien Farm Mortgages, paying from 6% to 6½% net to the investor.

Not to exceed 40% of our own valuation loaned to the farmer.

Full particulars of mortgages on hand ranging from $500.00 to $5,000.00, given on application to:—

T. H. CHALKLEY, LAWRENCE, KANSAS.

Letchworth Cottage Spring Lake Beach, N. J.

Open for the Season 1917

A. C. & S. H. Letchworth

WALL PAPERS—All Grades
WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER
Custom of Friends Specially Selected

FRANK C. BUEHL

Successor to S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON

392 SPRING GARDEN ST. PHILADELPHIA
Opposite Spring Garden Station, Phila. & Reading R.R.
ESTABLISHED 1849 BELL 'PHONE

The stamp of quality on Plumbing Fixtures

The Hajoca trademark represents an experience of sixty years in making sanitary plumbing fixtures. It stands for a reputation earned by ever-increasing excellence of the product. It assures you of health-protecting designs, and guarantees Hajoca quality.

Phone Poplar 502 or Race 502 for our automobile. It is maintained especially to convey visitors to and from our Show-rooms. Write for Hajoca Book, free.

HAINES, JONES
& CADBURY CO.

1130-1144 Ridge Ave.

(at 12th and Spring Garden Sts.)

RESIDENCE: 254 S. 44th St. BELL 'PHONE: Biring 2054X

WILLIAM OAKES

Plumbing and Heating Contractor

ALSO LEAD BURNING

260 SOUTH TENTH STREET

PHILADELPHIA

BELL 'PHONE: Filbert 2600.

GLASLYN-CHATHAM

PARK PLACE

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

A Family House of Established Reputation,
Open Throughout the Year.

NATHAN L. JONES.

WILLIAM S. YARNALL MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

118 SOUTH FIFTEENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA

ALFRED C. HAINES

Building Glass and Paints

86 N. Front St., Philadelphia.

FOR RENT (FURNISHED)—A PLEASANT HOME
in Moorestown, N. J., on Main Street, overlooking the Valley; heated by hot water; lighted by electricity; near railroad station; trolleys passing the door; near Friends'
Meeting and school on same side of street; garage.

Apply to M. W. STRICKA,
166 E. Main St., Moorestown, N. J.

THE HOLMES PRESS Printers

J. L. Engle, Pres.

1336-40 CHERRY ST. PHILA.

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE
MATERIAL THAT WE SELL

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

THE LAKESIDE

EAGLES MERE, PA.

Unobstructed lake view; capacity 250.
Elevator steam heat, golf, tennis, boating
and bathing. Attractive motoring through the surrounding country.

GARAGE

J. S. KIRK & SON

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE
PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

GIRARD TRUST CO. BROAD and CHESTNUT STS.

CAPITAL
AND
SURPLUS } $10,000,000

Acts as Executor, Trustee, Guardian,
Administrator, Assignee and Receiver.
Safes to Rent in Burglar-proof Vaults.
Interest Allowed on Deposits. :: ::

E. B. MORRIS
PRESIDENT

OWNER OF 98 ACRE FARM WITH A $5000 NEW poultry plant wants to get in touch with a young married Friend with energy and scientific poultry and farm experience. Will consider taking right party into partnership if he has $2000 to $3000 to invest. Must be unquestionably honest and trustworthy. Real opportunity for right party; state just what you can do in first letter.
Address, "E"—"The Friend."

POCONO MANOR INN

OPEN ALL YEAR

Situated in the beautiful Pocono Mountains in northeastern Pennsylvania is most attractive year 'round.

Golf, Tennis, Bowling, Driving, Motoring, Swimming and Boating are but few of the recreations found at this popular resort.

J. W. HURLEY, Mgr., Pocono Manor, Pa.
(Pocono Summit Station, D., L. & W. R. R.)

WOOLMAN SCHOOL

A Friends' School for Social and Religious Education, Board of Managers from both branches of Friends. Courses in Old and New Testament, Church History, History and Principles of Friends, Missions, First-day School Organization, Social Betterment, International Organization, History of Religion, Comparative Religion, and Allied Subjects.

Instruction by scholarly experts from the Faculties of Swarthmore and Haverford Colleges, and from other Educational, Social and Religious Institutions of Philadelphia and vicinity.

Fall term opens Tenth Month 10, 1917.

ELBERT RUSSELL, Director
WOOLMAN SCHOOL :: SWARTHMORE, PA.

Philadelphia's
Representative Store

R. C. Ballinger Ernest R. Yarnall John A. Stratton
TELEPHONES

Bell—Filbert 26-15 - - Keystone—Race 637

R. C. BALLINGER & CO.

CONTRACTORS and BUILDERS

218 N. Thirteenth St. Philadelphia.

Attn: M. A. M. Soc. C. E. Bell 'Phone—Lombard 3417

EDWIN M. EVANS
CONTRACTOR & BUILDER

My jobbing department is well equipped,
prompt and efficient

321 S. LAWRENCE ST. :: PHILA.

ELKINS, MORRIS & CO.BANKERS

REPRESENTATIVES

WM. E. CADBURY
PAUL W. BROWN
JAMES P. MAGILL

LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

RAILROAD AND PUBLIC UTILITY BONDS

FOR

CONSERVATIVE INVESTMENT.

FULL PARTICULARS ON REQUEST

HARVEY T. WEBERTAILOR

207-208 HALE BLDG., 1326 CHESTNUT ST.

The custom of Friends specially solicited.

JOSEPH G. FOGG
FUNERAL DIRECTOR and EMBALMER

S. W. COR. 16TH AND RACE STREETS
Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals
BELL 'PHONE SPRUCE 1648

W. J. MACWATTERS

HARDWICK & MAGEE CO.

SUCCESSORS TO
IVINS, DIETZ & MAGEE

Let me help you in selecting your

Rugs and Carpets

Our new imports of Oriental Rugs
are of the highest merit

1220-22 MARKET ST. :: PHILA.

HARRY S. LEE

313 WALNUT STREET

PAINTER and GRAINER

ANTIQUE and OFFICE FURNITURE RESTORED
JOBGING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO
ESTIMATES

W. B. WEAVERUNDERTAKER and EMBALMER

550-552 N. 5TH ST., PHILA., PA.

Special Attention Given to Funerals
In and Out of this City. Also Chapel
Accommodations for Funerals.

BELL 'PHONE ESTABLISHED 1880

THE CHEYNEY SITUATION

Friends of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting have as a legacy of the efforts put forth in the 60's in the interest of training colored teachers a unique plant at Cheyney. The Cheyney Training School for Teachers appeals for help to the descendants of those who originated the idea. The School is doing a great work, but it is cramped in many ways by a lack of funds.

An efficient staff of teachers and a student body numbering 100 present an unusual opportunity for the wise expenditure of energy and money.

The Managers can do little more than administer the Trust and must look to Friends and others, who have the means, to supply what is essential for the proper advancement of the School's interest.

Lelie P. Hill, Principal, is always ready to offer timely suggestions to any who have it on their hearts to assist in the laudable work that is carried on at Cheyney.

Because of the conditions which must be met, if the School is to continue its good work, the Board of Managers feel free to request Friends to include Cheyney among the charities to which they contribute, and ask that checks shall be drawn in favor of and mailed to

WILLIAM BIDDLE, Treasurer,
119 S. Fourth Street, Philadelphia.

BACK LOG CAMP
INDIAN LAKE, N. Y.

In the Heart of the Adirondacks.

The name Back Log Camp means a great deal to many people. We shall be glad to send our booklet to any one who is interested in the latest development of the Back Log idea.

THOMAS K. BROWN
Westtown, Pa.

PUBLIC STENOGRAPHER

GEORGE B. COCK, Liberty Building

Established 1896. Experience 39 years; Medical 13

SEE WALKER & KEPLER

FOR

Good Electrical Work

531 CHESTNUT ST. - - PHILA.

TO ADVERTISERS.—THE FRIEND is now open for selected advertisements at the following rates: One inch, 50 cents, or 4 cents a line; no insertion for less than 25 cents. Long term rates given on application.

Friends having real estate to rent or sell, also those desiring board or rooms, should find THE FRIEND an excellent medium for reaching interested parties.

Standing business cards are also solicited.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 91.

FIFTH-DAY, EIGHTH MONTH 23, 1917.

No. 8.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price $2.00 a year in Advance.

Publisher, DAVIS H. FORSYTHE.

Editors { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
 { DAVIS H. FORSYTHE,
 { MARY WARD.

Make remittances payable to

THE FRIEND,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

UNITY.

In regular course the Monthly and Quarterly Meetings have been considering "the good degree of unity that prevails amongst us." This consideration may have been very formal in places with stereotyped answers to the query; in others there may have been undoubted reactions of life under a real conviction that we are actually "members one of another." It is the veriest commonplace of all these considerations to observe that the subject of unity is in no small degree the very heart of any organization of society, whether the unit of organization is as small as that of the home, or as large as that of the State.

An old and well-established Society like ours is subject to certain types of conventional unity that are often accepted as the best possible under the circumstances, but which actually have in them seeds of death rather than of life. The most common of these types of conventional unity may very properly claim our thought as the exercise of considering queries recurs. We Friends are at the best a small group of people. Our families have intermingled often for two hundred years. We know each other very well. Our faults and shortcomings are common property. It becomes, therefore, a matter of tremendous import whether we deal with one another from the point of view of these faults, or from a determined resolve to know and cultivate the gifts and virtues that are not lacking "even in the worst of us." How very easy and common it is to betake ourselves to the process that scientists call "inhibition." We shut out the realm of our dislikes; we say of this one he is self-seeking, we will leave him alone; of that one he is vindictive, we will not cross his path. So by this process we avoid differences, but have we not actually traveled away from unity? Is not the result more akin to intolerance than to love? In any event, a meeting of Friends constructed on this principle has little chance of life and growth. So it is quite clear that unity with each other needs to be tested by some "deep searchings of heart." It may really be best for us under some circumstances not to insist upon active social communion with certain types of character whom we irritate, but such cases should make us acutely sensible of our own limitations in the transformations of grace.

This personal question of "unity with each other" represents a very small portion of the actual territory of unity. Oftener than the repetition of the query we should be testing ourselves as to our "unity with truth." We may look upon truth as being a fixed matter—"the same in the first or the seventeenth century as now," but as a matter of fact, truth is an infinite thing, while we are rather pathetically finite. Our points of view are constantly changing, our opportunities are from time to time increased, our capacities should not cease to grow. Thus truth, if we really are having an experience of the "unity with truth," is a growing thing. It gets larger and deeper every day. We rejoice in its expansion, its increasing depth, its growing beauty. It brings us thus to what may be the final step in unity. For we shall find ourselves growing more and more in appreciation of "the larger Church of Christ." Essential unity can lead no other way. If it is real in a meeting it carries that meeting out of itself into the larger unity of which it is a part—into Quarterly and Yearly Meetings. But expansion cannot stop there. These small units exist for the sake of a much greater whole. What our forefathers called the Church is now further described as "the larger Church of Christ." Be the name what it may, it is the "general assembly of those whose names are written in heaven." So this familiar but heart-searching query has inexhaustible potency, as it draws us out of the littleness of self into the liberty of sonship and into the boundless freedom of unfeigned love.

J. H. B.

PERSONALITY.

History, whether sacred or profane, is essentially the record of the arising and achievements of personalities. The times have always been adapted to the leader and the leader to the times; and in this we can see the hand of God in the affairs of men.

The story of the development of the Kingdom of God is the story at each crisis of a man who was more than a personage—namely, a personality, a God-endowed, a God-commissioned individual. Even if we had not been told of the arising of such an one at this or that epoch-making change, the recognition of the laws which govern all human history require us to look for such a personality as the explanation of the trend of events on which the eye of the recorder is focused because they mark the close of one era and the beginning of a new. This is one of the most convincing proofs of the veracity of Holy Scripture as history. Such a personality as Abraham must have existed; or else how can we explain the phenomenon of Israel? There must have been such a leader as Moses; or else how account for the Exodus, and for the transformation of an undisciplined mob of slaves into a nation? The monarchy involves the personality of David; and the final triumph of monotheism in the conflict of religious and ethical tendencies, the Hebrew prophets—those unique personalities, like Amos, Isaiah and Jeremiah.

Perhaps no nation, according to its size, can show a richer birth-record of personalities than the nation of Israel; the nation which in the fulness of time brought forth into the world the greatest Personality of all, the One whose Name is destined to dominate humanity. Christianity can only be accounted for by the fact of Christ. The destiny for weal or woe of every one, be he Jew or Gentile, is determined by his relation to this Personality "with whom we have to do."

When our Divine Lord walked in Galilee His chief concern was the training of the twelve; so to impress Himself upon them that they too might become personalities. This did not appear to sight. There were really two concurrent ministries in operation—one public and in a way sensational, the other hidden and unassuming. But the public ministry led straight to Calvary; while the hidden training of the men of Galilee prepared them for Pentecost and their subsequent testimony. The first, spite of the enthusiasm it evoked during the year of popularity, seemed at the end to have been in vain. The quiet, patient, behind-the-scenes disciplining, was no failure—except in the case of one man, the Iscariot. Peter the rough fisherman, Matthew the "disreputable" tax-gatherer, Simon the fanatical tax-hater, and the others, whose natural limitations and slow apprehensions the record faithfully portrays, at the end, proved a credit to Jesus. He succeeded in making personalities of every one of them. With holy courage and splendid optimism He committed His cause into their hands; and He was not disappointed in them.

With this self-same heavenly Alchemist, transmusing ordinary human personages into God-baptized personalities, we still have to do to-day. If we would but bring to Him—spite of our ignorance, sins, difficult temperaments, and other handicaps—what the men of Galilee brought, similar results would accrue. They brought to Jesus the devotion of a whole heart. Jesus had many stupid-hearted hearers, many shallow-hearted, and alas! many who were double-hearted. But in the apostles He found a band of whole-hearted men. And this is enough for Him to work with. He supplies all the rest when He, His cause and kingdom, become the All of the soul. Such become personalities, representatives of Him who inspires and energizes them by His Spirit of truth and love.

Personality is the clamant need of the hour in Church and State. It is surprising how few outstanding personalities are turned out by our modern centres of learning! While the dull are often levelled up, the brilliant are levelled down, so that both can be more easily take on the shape of the common mould. The "schools of the prophets" certainly met a felt need in Israel; they kept the lamp of piety burning in days when things looked dark; but we hear of no prophetic personality graduating in them, one who left his mark on his day and generation.

When God would form the Society of Friends He put His chosen instruments through a similar process as He did the apostle Paul when He called him to lay the foundation of the Gentile Church. When George Fox and his associates caught a glimpse of the Divine good pleasure to reveal Christ in them, as well as to them and through them, immediately they did not confer with flesh and blood. The message that shook England they found in the desert, in the school of lonely exercise and deep silence in the presence of the Unutterable. They became inspired personalities.

We may rest assured that in the self-same school personalities are being formed to-day. For the Lord has yet a great work to perform in the earth. Some are learning to estimate the values of time in the light of eternity; to put God before gold, and spiritual power before earthly treasure. There are eyes that are being purged of the lust after the glamor of the visible, because they are attracted to the glory of the invisible. There are hearts in whom Christ is dwelling by faith, and surrendered earthen vessels who are being made willing to carry about the heavenly treasure. At the appointed time they will be hidden to come forth and demonstrate before a distracted world and a divided Christendom that Jesus Christ is still Lord of all.

M. I. REICH.

THE MEETING AT HARLEM SPRINGS.

[This report of a general meeting of Friends at Harlem Springs, Ohio, is taken from The Olney Current. The meeting was held Sixth Month 26th, and we hoped to have a first-hand account for our paper. This hope has been disappointed, but we are quite sure the following will be of interest. The coming together of Friends in the manner of this occasion is calculated to advance some of the best interests of Quakerism.—Eos.]

At the meeting of the Olney Alumni Association, held at the close of school, the President was authorized to appoint a committee of six to arrange, if way should open for it, for a general meeting of Friends at some central point. Edna M. Sears, George W. Stratton, James Steer, Joseph C. Stratton, Mary M. Haines and Edward F. Stratton were appointed to constitute such committee. After giving the matter careful consideration, the committee met at Harlem Springs, in Carroll County, and made arrangements to hold a meeting at the Harlem Springs Hotel on Third-day, the twenty-sixth of Sixth Month.

The hotel is the old Harlem Academy building, remodeled for a hostelry, and the management very kindly consented for Friends to use the dining-room, where they could bring their lunch baskets and serve lunch in whatever way they chose. Tea and coffee were furnished to those desiring it.

A folder, entitled "Where We Can Meet Each Other Half Way," was issued, giving a tentative program and closing with this paragraph: "It is the desire of the committee that this meeting shall be a strength to us all, and they hope that each one may feel he has a part in it. 'Come! Let us talk it all over together!'"

The day chosen was fine, and seventy-five autos conveyed a crowd of about 375 people to the old college grounds at Harlem Springs. The morning passed quickly and a basket dinner was enjoyed at the noon hour, after which a bell rang and all were directed to the auditorium, where an interesting meeting was held.

There were three papers read on the same theme, "The Present Needs and Opportunities of Our Society." The first was written by Debora Stratton and read by her brother, Barclay Stratton. In this paper a beautiful analogy was worked out between the Society of Friends and a California river. Everything needed for a beautiful river was there except the water. The banks were well formed and the channel deep, but no water occupied it. If we should dig into the bed of the stream we would find pure running water, but there was none at the surface. This living water must fill the channel to the brim if the river is to do its full share of work.

Next was a paper by Jesse Edgerton. He spoke of the advantages to be gained by working together. We have a common purpose and by working in unison we have greater opportunities. By older and younger mingling together all will be strengthened. Our greatest need, however, and the thing we should strive for, is a closer walk with our Heavenly Father.

The last of the three papers was written and read by Anna M. B. Holloway. She spoke largely of our opportunities, and especially in connection with the temperance cause. We have made the world feel our influence on many vital questions, but we have not as yet taken a very active part in temperance work. There were several ways suggested by which we might help. Distribution of temperance literature and writing to our congressmen were among the most practicable.

A very interesting discussion followed the reading of the papers.

The meeting was opened by a brief period of silence and closed in a similar manner.

The financial part of our meeting was very satisfactory. It was agreed to take a collection, and if there should be more than needed to meet expenses, that the surplus should be added to the library fund of the Boarding School.

There was a surplus of about thirty dollars.

The spirit of the meeting was one of earnestness, and there seemed to be a universal desire that we, through co-operation, might grow in strength and give to the bleeding world our message of love and good-will. All felt the truth taught by a little story contained in a letter from Edith Stratton and read at the meeting.

A young Friend objected to attending meeting on the ground that he could worship better alone, out in the fields. His father did not answer, but walked over to the scattered logs on the hearth. He placed them more closely together and the coals that had been only smoking burst into flames. A striking answer to the boy's objection.

Among those not on the program who spoke was Jacob Maule, who occupied a place on the platform. He entered into the spirit and objects of the meeting with such rare sympathy and feeling that we felt his address added much to the interest of the occasion. His remark intimating that the older Friends were there simply through tolerance, brought out some decided remonstrance in the audience, indicating that the young people want the help and co-operation of their older and more experienced Friends. To be most efficient all must work together, side by side, each one doing the part for which he is best fitted, but all working unitedly toward one great object.

Louis J. Taber, whose name was mentioned in the program, was not able to break his appointment for other speaking on that day and was not present. J. Wetherill Hutton read a letter from him which was appreciated.

It was proposed to hold another meeting at Yearly Meeting time and a motion was passed leaving the matter in the care of the same committee to do whatever should seem best.

There seemed to be a very general feeling that the meeting had been a success, and that the day thus spent had been both interesting and profitable.

LORD SHEFFIELD ON CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS.—To his mind, perhaps more important than the points he had mentioned was a serious danger which had arisen on account of the excitement and fervor and zeal which were being shown for the carrying on of the war and which had made some people lose sight of the fundamental principle of justice and fair play. We had put into an Act of Parliament a provision for the conscientious objector, Parliament recognizing that the ground of objection was justifiable. But the tribunals and the press had bullied these objectors as if they were criminals. Although a man might be out of harmony with the rest of his fellows—just as an anti-vaccinator was—although he might be a crank, yet he should not be refused his legal privileges. He was afraid the conscientious objectors did not get fair play. Tribunals had got their back up because a man was what the law said he had a right to be.—Manchester Guardian.

WHEN I AM OLD.

(One of our subscribers has forwarded this poem with the following comment:

"Some of us no longer young thought this might be suitable for 'Our Older Friends'—rather than for 'Our Younger Friends.'")

I hope when I am old
The children all
May laugh and sing,
And skate and run and play,
Without a fear
Of once disturbing me.

I hope when I am old
The shy, sweet maid
Will never hesitate
To come to me
And ask about the things
She fain would understand.

I hope when I am old
The youngest mother, frail and weak,
Will want to send for me
To visit with her quietly,
And talk of things
That make her strength return.

I hope when I am old
That other folks
As old as I
Recounting with me precious days
Long past
Will feel they're but a prelude to the future.

I hope when I am old
To be so much in love
With Nature's skies and birds, and trees,
And fragrant flowers,
That I will never spend
A lonely day—when I am old.

—LOUISE MAYERS MEREDITH, in The Mothers' Magazine.

LETTERS FROM MORRIS E. LEEDS.

UNIVERSITY ARMS HOTEL, Cambridge, Seventh Month 24, 1917.

I am starting a letter on this paper with no possibility of finishing it here, because I must leave for the train in a few minutes, but this is a delightful inn and I wish I were staying longer. If I remember rightly, I wrote last from Paris and just about a week ago. We had a most interesting stay of a day and a half with the Friends' Ambulance Unit at Dunkirk, and were most favorably impressed with the men and their work. They have attracted an abler and more aggressive lot of men from among the English Friends than have the War Victims' Relief. I shall not enlarge on their work as we hope to have a fairly full report of it, which like the other will be sent to you. On Fifth-day morning Captain Maxwell, of the F. A. M., brought us in his auto from Dunkirk, where we had a pleasant chat with the British Red Cross head, an Irish Earl and M. P., who spoke very highly of the work the Friends had done. We crossed over from there to Folkestone in quite a wind and a rougher channel than I have before seen, but neither of us was any the worse for that. Our boat was very well convoyed and only took about one and a half hours in crossing. Sixth-day morning we called on Ruth Fry, Secretary of the "Victims," and found that we were fortunate in the time of our visit as there was to be an Executive Committee Meeting that afternoon, which we were asked to attend. We had a long talk and lunch with her. At the Committee Meeting we listened to accounts of work in Holland and Russia, and then Henry gave a very good account of what we had seen, the situation of American Friends and their desire to get into the work, and the tentative plans which had been worked out by their Paris Committee, the Red Cross and ourselves. They asked us some questions, but purposely adjourned without taking action, as they are to have a general Committee Meeting and another Executive Committee Meeting to-morrow and the latter will probably pass on the plans. Seventh-day morning we again spent at their offices, selecting lantern slides, etc., and shortly after noon Henry left for York to visit the Rowntrees.

First-day morning, Wilbur Tierney called for me and motor-ed me out to his home, where I stayed over night, and needless to say had much talk, mostly about the war, but a lot of it about his American Friends, about whose doings and welfare he wanted to be informed. While I was there he received a long letter from Agnes through which I got quite a lot of interesting home news. This morning, after getting back from Cambridge, I met Henry at Sir George Newman's office. He is head of the F. A. U. and a most interesting man. Arnold Rowntree was also there and we had a good talk on ambulance work, Friends' relations to it and other forms of National Service, what the American Friends might do, etc. The subject is to be taken up again. The F. A. U. Ex. Com. meets to-morrow morning and we are asked to meet with it.

This evening we are, at T. Edmund Harvey's invitation, dining at the House of Commons, and shall, I suppose, look in on its proceedings later.

REGENT PALACE HOTEL, Piccadilly Circus, London, W. 1.

Seventh Month 28, 1917.

I have heard nothing from you or from America since my last, which was finished on the afternoon of the 24th. That evening we had dinner at the House of Commons with T. Edmund Harvey and his wife, who is a daughter of Sylvanus Thompson, both of them are very delightful people. (You will remember Harvey's little book, "The Wayfarer's Faith.") After dinner, coffee on the famous terrace overlooking the House, and while there John Burns joined the group and monopolized the conversation in a very interesting way. I should like to try to make a résumé of that talk, but shall reserve it until we meet.

Fourth-day morning—breakfast with Arnold Rowntree, and quite a long talk afterward; lunch with Wilbur Tierney and his friend, Albert Rickett; in the afternoon a long meeting with the general War Victims' Relief Committee, which approved the plans for co-operation worked out by the French Committee and ourselves. We had supper that night with Ruth Fry at her home. William Albright, Chairman of the Executive Committee, was also there. Ruth Fry is General Secretary of the War Victims' Relief work. She has quite a large office in London and works very hard.

Fifth-day morning we again had breakfast with Arnold Rowntree, preceded by a swim in a nearby natatorium. I took lunch with Philip Burt, who is a member of the War and Social Order Committee, and also the present chief owner and manager of Headley Brothers, the Friends' Publishing House. I was interested to find that the W. and S. O. Com. has quite a number of members who do not go along with the radicals, but the radicals write and talk the most and so from across the Atlantic one is likely to get a somewhat wrong impression of the present English Quaker thought on these subjects. In the afternoon I attended a meeting of the Ex. Com. of the War Victims' Relief Committee and later went to the House of Commons, where from the gallery I heard a most interesting debate on a resolution introduced by Ramsey McDonald, urging the government to take the opportunity presented by the recent Reichstag resolution, calling for a German policy of no conquest of territory and no indemnity, to have the Allies restate their peace terms in a more specific way and do what they could to get together with the apparently large but non-Government party in Germany, which is willing to make a reasonable peace. Trevelyan (brother of the writer of John Bright's life) and Lee Smith spoke very ably for the resolution, as well as its mover, and Asquith and Bonar Law against it.

REGENT PALACE HOTEL, Piccadilly Circus, London, W. 1.

Eighth Month 1, 1917.

We are just about to leave for Paris. I have forgotten just where my last narrative was broken off, but think I had described the happenings of Fifth-day, the 26th, on which we had a swim and breakfast with Arnold Rowntree. I met with the Executive Committee of the Victims in the afternoon and listened to the debate in the House of Commons in the evening. Henry went out of town that day to visit the Clarks at Street and came back the next afternoon.

Now on the boat at Southampton, about 7 p. m. Told that we shall lie here until 9.30 and then cross over; due at Havre very early in the morning. A rainy evening. It has been raining steadily for the last two days. To resume: On Sixth-day afternoon we went about twenty miles out into Essex to spend the night with Alfred Brooks and his wife, whose son Norman we had met very pleasantly at Dôle and in Paris. A. B. is a managing director of a very large cement combine and entertained us with much interesting talk about big business and other matters. His home is on a high point in a level country and commands a wonderful view, including a long reach of the lower Thames. Seventh-day afternoon Percy Bigland took us in his motor car out to a little summer home that he had near Jordans. The ride was through beautiful English country, in which there were quaint old villages, and his home is just the kind that an artist would pick out. It was the home of a miller and is a part of the mill building, a very old-fashioned mill, driven by an over-shot water-wheel and still operating. Right outside of the front door is the mill-race, which also runs through their secluded garden back of the mill. The inevitable afternoon tea was served in a little bower in this garden.

Climbing roses and other flowers were there in a sort of wild profusion and these, with the clear water in which there were large trout, and the picturesque old mill, made an ensemble that would delight the soul of any artist. Edith Bigland and their daughter joined us after tea and we had a long walk before supper, which was also served in the garden. Both P. and E. B. are keenly interested Friends, and the afternoon talk on the war and Friends' connection with it, was continued long into the night. They are particularly interested in the men in prison and P. B. visits them as a "Quaker chaplain." First-day was propitiously opened by a bath in the mill-race, followed by breakfast out of doors, and then an eight-mile drive to Jordans Meeting. The venerable house was well filled, as Jordans is now used as a training camp for the F. A. U. and there were some sixty men in training, as well as a number of visitors at the hostel. We had a good meeting. P. B. spoke among others. Afterward we walked about the grounds, looked at Penn's grave, and also at the recent one of Silvanus Thompson in a new burying ground. On the way back we paused to look at the modest cottage in which Milton lived while Elwood was his secretary. We all took dinner at Wm. Hanbury Aggs', a brother of Edith Bigland, and husband of one of Silvanus Thompson's daughters. H. and I hurried away immediately afterward to keep an appointment for supper with Henry Hodgkin. We found him pretty well bruised from an encounter with a mob, which had broken up a peace meeting that it was attempted to hold the previous day. Edith Ellis, a lady of thirty, perhaps, was also at H. H.'s home and had been very roughly handled by the mob, but was able to be about. It appears to have been a particularly violent gang of ruffians, and some of the attenders did not escape as fortunately as our Friends.

Second-day morning, after sundry visits to the American Embassy and the home office, we got permission to visit three C. O.'s in prison II, to visit Robert Mennell and Roderick Clark, who are at Maidstone, and I. Malcolm Sparks at Wandsworth. These permits did not come easily, and we were assured that we were granted a very unusual privilege. That afternoon we had a conference with Henrietta Thomas, of Baltimore, who transferred early in the war many German girls from England to their home and English girls from Germany to England, and later we attended a meeting of a committee, of which she is a member, which now interests itself particularly in the welfare of the C. O.'s who are in prison or in danger of getting there. That evening we took dinner on Joseph Allen Baker's invitation at the House of Parliament, and John Burns was the fourth at the table. J. B. monopolized the conversation to our entertainment and edification, though we should have liked a chance to learn more about what J. A. B. thinks of the situation.

Third-day morning we made our prison visits. I talked nearly an hour with M. S. about his scheme for reorganizing business on a basis that will do away with the causes of dispute between managers and laborers, and was very favorably impressed both with him and his plans. He is a builder and has been through serious labor troubles. His plan has been substantially embodied and recommended in a committee report to Parliament, and I understand is likely to be given a trial on a large scale. Henry's visit had a basis of personal friendship, and he had the satisfaction of having recently called on Robert Mennell's family, and of being the first person that he had seen who had visited his two months' old twin children.

Third-day afternoon and evening we attended a conference of about twenty Friends who are owners and managers of business. Arnold and Seeborn Rowntree were among those present. The others you would not know, I think, at any rate they were unknown to me prior to this visit. They came together with the same motives that caused the Y. M. to appoint the War and Social Order Com., but wished an opportunity to discuss the subject by themselves. This group of responsible business men discussed business reorganizations in a disinterested and radical way that was truly remarkable. This conference was the first of a series that are to be held, and they hope to get out a program or platform for their own guidance and that of other Friends and like-minded seekers of social welfare. I wish we could duplicate such a group at home. This morning we finished up various odds and ends of business. We hope to conclude our work in France in a week or ten days and sail for home about the middle of the month. It is now 9.20 and I am going to try to post this before we leave.

MORRIS E. LEEDS.

CALL FOR A CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIAN PACIFISTS IN CALIFORNIA, TENTH MONTH 1st AND 2nd, 1917, AT LONG BEACH.

[Two Friends, Septimus Marten and Ira S. Frame, are included in the sixteen names signed to this call.—E.S.]

The Conference of Christian Pacifists in California is called at the initiation of many Christian ministers and laymen, who notwithstanding their various religious and political beliefs, are united in open protest against the militaristic interpretation of Christianity. Grieved to note how the deep silence and confusion of the Church on this great moral issue is often broken by an open endorsement of war, they desire to meet for prayer and conference in open convention, wholly independent of denominational or political control, and eager only to seek and to do the whole will of God. In so gathering they desire to manifest the spirit of Christian love toward all who disagree with them, and ask of their Christian brethren and fellow-men that kindly tolerance which is the grace of the Church of Christ upon earth.

The Federal Council of Churches in America, representing eighteen million Christian Protestants, in its recent manifesto declares: "That mind (the mind of Christ), we do not all interpret alike. With sincere conviction some of us believe that it is forbidden the disciple of Christ to engage in war under any circumstance." The statement goes on to say that those holding such views in the church, are, however, in the minority. The Conference of Christian Pacifists in California seeks to faithfully represent that minority. As a protesting minority in a matter of Christian conscience we desire to prove worthy of that respectful consideration to which the great issue of our dissent entitles us.

While our bond of union is a unanimity of Christian practice and not of creed, we substantially agree to the following:

1. We define Christian ethics as the practice of Christian love toward all men.

2. We affirm that for all Christians the actual and commanding exhibit of such ethics is to be sought in the life and spirit of Jesus Christ.

3. Inasmuch as the teaching, life and spirit of Jesus Christ afford no justification for war, but constitute a supreme protest against its sinful tempers and fruits, we find ourselves unable to engage in it, and feel called upon to dedicate ourselves to a program of Christian service and good-will to all men.

4. We declare our disbelief in Non-resistance as commonly interpreted, and commit ourselves to the practice of endeavoring to overcome evil with good.

5. Our nation has expressed the desire to make the world safe for democracy. We as Christians are eager to make democracy safe for the world by Christianizing it.

6. We believe that it is incumbent upon the church to preach and practice Christian peace and good-will during war-time; and we fear that if the Church "waits until the war is over," she may forfeit her right to speak with authority and to lead the world toward Christian practice.

We are persuaded that these convictions do not arise from any arbitrary or private interpretation of Scripture, but that they constitute the ethics of the New Testament itself, enforced by the witness of the Holy Spirit within our hearts, and confirmed by the teaching and practice of the early Christian Church.

We therefore call upon all who are in sympathy or substantial agreement with us to meet in Conference at the time and place named above, that we may bear witness to our Christian faith and practice.

A VISIT OF FRIENDS TO PRESIDENT LINCOLN IN 1863.

Information was received in Philadelphia that five Friends from North Carolina were held as prisoners of war at Fort Delaware. They had been forced into the Rebel army, and four of them detained with it nearly nine months, the other about two months; enduring many privations and hardships, but steadily refusing to bear arms or to perform any service for the army. At the battle of Gettysburg, they were left by the Rebel army and taken prisoners by the Union scouts who were gathering up stragglers. Friends were sent from Philadelphia Meeting for Sufferings to intercede with Secretary Stanton at Washington, and he ordered their release immediately.

Samuel Hilles and Thomas Evans then asked to see the President that they might evince their regard for him. A message of loving sympathy and of religious interest in his heavy responsibilities caused him to bow his head.

When the speaking ceased, silence ensued for a few minutes, when he slowly drew down his hands, and, with eyes suffused with tears, said: "Gentlemen, I am truly glad and thankful for this opportunity, it is a comfort to me. I understand very well the position of your Society and do not at all doubt your loyalty. You cannot fight for the government, because your religious principles forbid it, but you can pray for it. I am thankful in believing that I have your prayers, the prayers of your religious Society, and the prayers of the God-fearing people throughout the land, and that I shall continue to have them. This, gentlemen, is what we must rely upon. If the Almighty be with us, we shall succeed, if He is against us, no human power can save us; but I cannot believe that He will suffer the enemies of our country to triumph, and the great Christian principles we are contending for, to fall to the ground and be trampled under foot. These principles are as dear to you as they are to us, though we differ as to the mode of supporting and asserting them."

The Friends soon rose to go, saying they feared they were occupying too much of his time amid his pressing engagements. "Not at all, gentlemen," he replied, "do not hurry yourselves. I am thankful for this opportunity and glad to see you." In parting, he took the hand of each of the Friends in both of his, and very kindly bade them farewell.—Furnished by H. P. MORRIS.

EARLY QUAKER WRITINGS ON PEACE AND WAR— 1654-1662.

[This carefully-prepared historical article by Margaret E. Hirst, contains matter of unusual service to Friends. We are re-printing it from The Friend [London] because we are sure the author and our friends who so ably conduct that paper, would wish its usefulness as widely extended as possible.—Eds.]

In considering the development among early Friends of what the Yearly Meeting Epistle of 1693 described as "our ancient testimony against wars and fighting," it is worth while to recall certain facts. The militia levies for the Battle of Worcester in 1651 were the immediate cause of Fox's well-known refusal to serve in the army. That battle shattered the Royalist forces and ended the Civil War. Henceforward the Parliamentary Government had to fear not open hostilities but plots against Cromwell's person, and weak and sporadic risings by loyalists or fanatics. Hence the necessary emphasis laid by early Friends on their abhorrence of conspiracy and rebellion. The Parliamentary Army, indeed, remained acting as a police force and becoming ultimately the instrument of Cromwell's government. But its fighting days at home were over, although troops were sent in 1657-58 to aid France in her war with Spain. A considerable number of soldiers became Friends, either after their discharge from the army or during their service. These latter, during the period 1654-1657, were mostly summarily discharged as their new convictions brought them into conflict with the authorities on various points; for example, the oath of allegiance to Cromwell and the observance of military discipline. Besse, in describing these difficulties among the soldiers in Ireland, adds, "divers of them as they became further enlightened, refused to bear arms any longer." ("Sufferings of the Quakers," II, Ireland, 1656.) These ex-soldiers and their Quaker friends addressed many exhortations to their old comrades, urging them to turn to the Light within and to be guided by that, exercising their powers in no spirit of persecution but in justice to all men. Apart from these appears a considerable number of tracts and epistles dealt with the Quakers' own attitude, some setting forth "the life and power that take away the occasion of wars," others vindicating Friends against misunderstanding or malice. In Fox's writings examples of each position are to be found.

In 1654, when Cromwell required a signed promise that Fox would not take up arms against the Government, he responded by a long and curious document (Cambridge Journal, I, pp. 161-5). For Cromwell the essential passage was that in which Fox proclaimed his mission "to stand a witness against all violence and against all the works of darkness, and turn people from the darkness to the light and from the occasion of the magistrate's sword. . . . With the carnal weapon I do not fight but am from those things dead." Here, as definitely as at Derby, Fox stated his abhorrence of all war and violence used for political or religious ends, but he now made the further claim that part of his mission was to bring others to the same peaceable state. He did, indeed, recognize, though within strict limits, the power of "the magistrate's sword" in preserving order within the State; and in this paper and in other addresses to the army he repeats to "soldiers that are put in that place" (of maintaining order) the advice of John the Baptist to the Roman soldiers in Palestine (v. Swarthmore MSS. I, 25 and 66). In 1657 he wrote, "All dwelling in the light that comes from Jesus, it leads out of wars, leads out of strife, leads out of the occasion of wars, and leads out of the earth up to God" (Epistles, p. 108).

In 1659, amid fears of a fresh civil war and the renewal of the militia levies, his advice was clear. "As for the rulers that are to keep the peace, for peace's sake and the advantage of truth, give them their tribute. But to bear and carry carnal weapons to fight with, the men of peace (which live in that which takes away the occasion of wars) they cannot act in such things, under the several powers, but have paid their tribute," and in so doing he adds, Friends may better claim their liberty (Epistles, p. 137). Again, "all such as pretend Christ Jesus, and confess Him, and yet run into the use of carnal weapons . . . throw away the spiritual weapons." Yet in the same year Edward Burrough, George Fox "the Younger" (an ex-soldier), Isaac Penington and an anonymous "F. G.," were writing tracts of advice to the army, addressing it as an instrument which had been used by God. Burrough and "F. G." even give it the further task of avenging the persecutions of the Church of Rome (see Works of George Fox the Younger, Burrough's Works, pp. 537-40, and for "F. G." Tract I. 96 in the Friends' Reference Library). "The blood of the just," writes Burrough to the soldiers at Dunkirk, "it cries through Italy and Spain, and the time is come that the Lord will search it and seek it out and repay it, and it would be to your honor to be made use of by the Lord in any degree." Yet he adds, "Your work hath been, and may be, honorable in its day and season, but He hath a work more honorable to work after you; that is, to destroy the kingdom of the devil and the ground of wars." In 1655 he had written to the soldiers in Ireland of the Light that "reproves you in secret of violence and will teach you not to make war, but to preserve peace on the earth." The F. G. Tract, which is attributed to Fox in the index of an old collection in the Reference Library, writes of Rome and Spain in strikingly similar terms, at the same time exhorting the soldiers to do violence to no man and to "stand in that in which there is peace, the seed Christ, which destroyeth the devil, the author of wars, strifes and confusion." Only one "out of truth" will persecute for religion.

If the arguments of these tracts are inconsistent, yet next year Burrough and Fox (in undoubted writings) stated the peace message with no lack of clearness. In "A Visitation of Love to the King and those called Royalists" Burrough readily admits that some Quakers were formerly soldiers in the Parliamentary army, "and that principle, which formerly led some in action to oppose oppression and seek after reformation we never have denied or shall deny, but that principle is still justified, though we are now better informed than once we were. For though we do now more than ever oppose oppression and seek after reformation, yet we do it not in that way of outward warring and fighting with carnal weapons and swords . . . never since we were a people." (Works, p. 671.) Fox, too, published in 1660 "A Word on Behalf of the King" (which he says in his Journal "did much affect soldiers and most people,") a pamphlet combining vehement denunciation of the sins of the day with a message of peace. "To love enemies, it is not to kill them and to destroy them, but to overcome them with the good. . . . So Christ ends that law of the Jews, which they thought they did God good service by when they put to death them that were contrary minded to them; for they could not love enemies that killed them, neither can they that love enemies now kill them. . . . And he broke down the partition wall which was between Jew and Gentile, who slew the enmity, and so of twain made one new man, and thereby came the love to enemies."

(To be continued.)

THE world delights in sunny people. The old are hungering for love more than for bread. The air of joy is very cheap; and if you can help the poor on with a garment of praise, it will be better for them than blankets.—HENRY DRUMMOND.

LINES.

Sent by A. H. C.

The cry of man's anguish went up unto God:
 "Lord, take away pain,
 The sorrow that darkens the world Thou hast made.
 The close-coiling chain
 That strangles the heart, the burden that weighs
 On the wings that would soar;
 Lord, take away pain from the world Thou hast made,
 That it love Thee the more."

Then answered the Lord to the cry of the world:
 "Shall I take away pain?
 And with it the power of the soul to endure,
 Made strong by the strain?
 Shall I take away pity that knits heart to heart,
 And sacrifice high?
 Will ye lose all your heroes that lift from the fire
 White brows to the sky?
 Shall I take away love that redeems with a price,
 And smiles at its loss?
 Can ye spare from your lives that would climb into mine
 The Christ on His cross?"

—LLOYD ACSTIN.

TRAVELS OF A TEACHER.

(Continued from page 93.)

Well satisfied, I tramped back to the hotel, by the "Lower Glacier Trail," and the shore of Lake Louise. Fifteen miles or so of wonderful mountain trails before breakfast! "Foolish man," I hear some one say.

It was a Dominion holiday, "Confederation Day," the fiftieth anniversary of provincial confederation, and excursionists were abroad, as I took the ten o'clock morning train to cross the "Great Divide," for Glacier, over four hours distant. I will not undertake to describe the wonders of this trip. Mt. Stephen, Mt. Field, the Yoho and Kicking Horse Valleys, the marvelous engineering feats by which mountains are spirally tunneled and river chasms bridged,—but by the time we have reached Glacier Station, we have passed by enough to interest and occupy us for years. Finally we pass through the Connaught Tunnel, 26,400 feet long, and find ourselves no more in the Rockies, but in the Selkirk Range at Glacier, the headquarters of many who love pure mountaineering. Mount Sir Donald, prince of peaks, the Matterhorn of America, dominates the vicinity.

The hotel is rather a long mile drive from the station, but its comfort and hospitality repay the discomfort of a bad road and poor conveyance. The name of Vaux is a word to conjure with at Glacier, since the late William S. Vaux and other members of the family have done valuable work here, in exploration and scientific study of glaciers. Two of the grandest glaciers in the country are in easy reach, the great Illecillewaet Glacier and the Asulkan. Though I did not go on them with guide, ice-axe and rope, I visited them both, and was impressed by their massive dignity and power. The forenoon's walk up the valley of the Asulkan Brook, which drains the glacier of that name, was the most delightful valley walk I ever took. Innumerable cascades pour over the great mountain sides—I counted seventeen in sight at once—dropping hundreds or thousands of feet down into the valley.

Such wild flowers I have rarely seen,—Indian paint-brush, violets, yellow and white and blue, glacier lilies, and other mountain flowers by the score. Most beautiful of them all were the bright yellow glacier lilies, which spring up in profusion along the edges of the snow banks as they melt and even through the snow, impatient to meet and reflect the sunshine. Next to these lilies for delight were the yellow violets. Strange that the three flowers of most charm in the Canadian Mountains at this early summer season—poppies, glacier lilies and violets—should all be yellow; but then yellow is the color of the sunshine, of gold, and of Woman Suffrage—why shouldn't the prettiest flowers be yellow?

My story is getting long, and I must hasten to Vancouver. The train ride all the way from Glacier is full of varied interest. I stopped at the C. P. R. hotel at Sicamons for the night, so as to have the whole journey by daylight.

We met train-load after train-load of Chinese laborers, who were being transported across the continent to be sent across a second ocean for reclamation work in the fields of France, where the German armies had been pressed back. We were told that in this one shipment 40,000 Chinamen were being sent across. Dressed exactly alike in dark blue, they looked for the most part happy and contented in their journey and prospect. It was interesting, too, to meet one of the famous trains, loaded entirely with silk from China, and bound for Montreal.

Having boarded the through train from Toronto at Sicamons on the morning of Seventh Month 4th, it was my good fortune to find on the observation platform at the rear of the train, as I sauntered back after breakfast, the six young women from Philadelphia, who were on the way to Russia for relief work under the care of the British Friends' War Victims' Relief Committee. It was good to find them in fine health and spirits, and to enjoy with them the beauties of the Cascade Range and the valley of the Fraser River, through which we passed on the way to Vancouver. The girls were scheduled to sail the next day on one of the giant steamers belonging to the Canadian Pacific, the Empress of Asia, and I appointed myself a committee to see them off.

(To be continued.)

YOUNGER FRIENDS.

"OLD JACK'S VICTORY."—Not many of those who have visited the McAuley Cremorne Mission during the past two years but will remember "old Jack" the janitor, and many there are to whom the news of "Jack's" death will come with a feeling of genuine sorrow and regret as the picture of the old man comes before their mind's eye faithfully testifying night after night, that God had saved him at 52 West Twenty-ninth Street (our old hall) and then would come in real rescue mission fashion the year, the months and the days that God kept him. And yet "Jack" was not so old as he looked. Fifty-eight years ago he was born in this city on the site now occupied by the Metropolitan Opera House. Found drunk on the street when he was six years of age, "Jack" was for over forty years a confirmed drunkard. A hard-working longshoreman, until drink had unfitted him for work or anything else, he had spent all that he could earn in an attempt to satisfy his awful craving for strong drink and had for many years slept in cheap lodging houses, in wagons and on the docks, wherever night found him and he was able to get in.

But two years ago "Jack," in a most deplorable condition, drifted into the Jerry McAuley Cremorne Mission and there met his Saviour. "Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new." (1 Cor. v. 17.)

Dear, faithful "old Jack," how we loved him! And how we miss him! Yet we can not but rejoice for God has graciously taken him from a life of suffering to be with Him "whom not having seen, he loved." "Jack" for many months had been afflicted with a fatal disease which at times caused him almost unendurable pain. In the old life, under like conditions, he would have resorted to whiskey. In the new life "Jack" had found something far better and his nightly request at the prayer service was: "Remember me in your prayers, that God will keep me faithful till He calls me home." Surely we can rejoice with "old Jack" in this his hour of glorious victory!—WILLIAM McQUEER, Superintendent of McAuley Cremorne Mission, in The Bible To-day.

PHYSICAL EFFECTS OF CIGARETTES ON BOYS.—"I have tabulated reports of the condition of nearly 2,500 cigarette-smoking school boys," says Wm. H. McKeever, Professor of Philosophy, Kansas State Agricultural College, "and in describing them physically my informants have repeatedly resorted to the use of such epithets as "sallow," "sore-eyed," "puny," "squeaky-voiced," "sickly," "short-winded," and "extremely nervous." Other reports show that twenty-five young college students, smokers, who average to begin at thirteen, had suffered as follows: Sore throat, 4; weak eyes, 10; pain in the chest, 8; short wind, 21; stomach trouble, 10; pain in heart, 9."

According to Dr. Sims Woodhead, Professor of Pathology in Cambridge University, cigarette smoking in the case of boys partly paralyzes the nerve cells at the base of the brain and thus interferes with the breathing and the heart action.

L. C. Todd, Master Mechanic, Fitchburg Division of Boston and Maine Railroad, says: "We refuse to hire men whose hands indicate that they are inveterate cigarette users. We find that they almost invariably fail to pass the eye test for perfect vision."

Dr. R. Martin says in the Lancet: "The fumes of burning tobacco dry and irritate the throat, exciting thirst, hence drinking and smoking generally are associated."

Connie Mack, manager of the Philadelphia Athletics, which have twice won the world championship, says: "Some baseball clubs have a rule prohibiting the players from smoking cigarettes. Others prefer to put the men on their honor. Most of the players realize that the use of cigarettes is very detrimental to their playing and therefore refrain from using them."

POCONO NOTES.

The solidarity of the campers around our Lake, with the character of our family group, numbering six hundred, was never more satisfactory than this season. For two months the daily showers have kept the ferns wonderfully green. Two Town Meetings, with an attendance of three hundred, have proved very uniting and entertaining—fulfilling the highest hopes of the pioneers of this Preserve. The First-day meetings have also maintained their former character. One mother said, "I am so thankful that my children have such a physical and spiritual atmosphere to grow up in, where the war is seldom mentioned."

One thing which interests and occupies us this summer is, not only to gather once a week to sew for the war victims, but to read letters and hear reports from the fifteen or more young people, former members of this community, who have gone to France and Russia for reconstruction and relief work.

As some of these letters from France have come to hand recently we make the following extracts from Mary E. Duguid's letter:

"It seemed best for me to come with a convoy to Entremont, to the new sanatorium that has just been opened. Such a trip down—twenty of us—two mothers with year-old babies, two families of three and then odd girls of all ages! I, of course, could not speak French and they could not speak English, not a word.

"The first day we spent thirteen hours in a train or trains, for twice we jumped out and rushed in the usual style into crowded, third-class carriages, finding little or no room, but in we had to go, on top if necessary. Then came a night in a very dirty hotel. The families all had brought food and ate out of bags, bread in great pieces wrapped in newspaper.

"The next day we rode about two hours, then waited for a train up the C — line. At 5.51 we again started and went to St. Pierre, where we were met. It is a three-hour drive from the station up a lovely valley with a rushing stream, amidst great mountains. Only a little snow remains on those we see from the house. It was a long journey, but we were glad of the warm welcome we received and a clean bed. I never was so glad to be able to talk without having to look up every word in a dictionary.

"There are people in towns that still are being shelled, these have to be taken away. There is a great effort to find homes near or in healthy places for the well ones. Certain southern cities or districts have offered to find homes for people from the shelled district. The well ones are passed on into these, there are, however, sick ones. For these the French have few places, so Samoëns has been started.

"It is a huge social service scheme, and they are doing the work very thoroughly. Of course there are great difficulties, especially working in a country where system is as neglected as it is overdone in Germany; also where there is endless red tape and a feeling that time is nothing. I am always surprised that things ever get done and very well done, when you naturally have thought that they had died on the way. One just has to allow twice as much time and bother for every detail.

"I am in a most beautiful spot, with a rushing river just across a road, and mountains rising just high enough for the tree line to have been passed. On the northern slopes there are tiny patches of snow. The slopes are beautifully cultivated and the houses seem to fit the scenery so wonderfully.

"My actual daily program until Edith Coale comes and takes some of it is, viz.: 6.30 rise; 7 to 7.30 wash and dress, with the help of their sisters, three children. One has running ears and all have noses that must have attention; 7.30 children's breakfast café au lait; 8 o'clock, off up the road; four children go to school and I serve the women's déjeuner, then take the temperature and dress the head of a little fellow. Eleven A. M. the children return and must be washed and put to bed. I have just done that. They are very dear and so far have been good. Just now one rather refused to take off her shoes, but did it after a little firm waiting on my part; 12 o'clock they get up; 12.15 dinner. The children go back to school, so I have an hour's French lesson. I am getting on quite well. Every day I want so many words to use that it is easy to remember them when I look them up. All the women are so very good in trying to understand and teaching. I think they that have quite a pride in my progress; 3 P. M. a walk or gym. class; 4 P. M. afternoon tea; 5 P. M. small English class; 6 P. M. children's supper; 7 P. M. supper for the women and then ours. After supper I give out remedies for sore legs and sore throats; 10 o'clock to bed. I have no modesty about making mistakes, so am having an extraordinary opportunity to learn French rapidly. I want to get so I can do simple social work and to do that one has to understand as well as talk.

"We, of course, are interested in what American Friends are going to do. It seems even more complicated, as one knows it. But I am sure Americans can live through these complications and once it is understood it does not seem so hard.

"I believe it would be well to send materials to be made up. The women are glad to make up things if they had the material. Children's clothes are most simple. As for food there is plenty of it apparently. Everybody, at least out of the war zone, is hampered by the price, which is about the same as at home a few months ago."

Another correspondent reports:

"We are still in Paris waiting for our carvets (red books containing papers necessary for travel in the war zone) to come. W. D. was sent down to Entremont with a Ford truck and I was sent with him as far as Dôle in the capacity of a "mechanician." We sallied forth, going about 95 miles from 2.30 to 7 o'clock, stopped for supper and then went to or 15 miles further on to the next town where we spent the night. We got off the next morning at 8.30. I drove all that morning, we ate our lunch by the roadside and then traveled on to a little town where there was a gasoline station. The people in charge of the station had probably never seen a foreigner before, and since we couldn't speak very fluent French and had red, white and black stars on our arms they took us for "Les Allemands" and wouldn't sell us any gas. Finally, after much arguing, we convinced them that we were not Germans and they sold us one "bidon" (which is the way they sell gas here, in cans of 5 liters each). By running up the hills, and shutting off the motor and coasting down, we were fortunate to reach Dijon (a moderate sized city) where we filled up. If it hadn't been that we hit a hill about 4 miles long down a mountainside, which we could coast, we might be out there yet!

"We got to Dôle, which is about 50 or 60 miles from the Jura Mountains, at about 5 P. M. It is within the most beautiful centers of France, an old city and one can see Mount Blanc on a clear day. Dôle is also the place where the English Friends have their camp for the fellows that make the portable houses. There are about 40 young English fellows there and I enjoyed my stay immensely. Many of them have been up before the English tribunals, and I count it a great privilege to have been able to see their work."

Isaac Sharp writes, under date Seventh Month 17, 1917, from London: "It is a time in which, more than ever, we should keep close to our Lord, not knowing from day to day what fresh sorrow or happening we may face. Amidst it all I believe it well for our own sake, and especially as a help to others, to live out our natural lives—not with undue gaiety or, on the other hand, not with fear and apprehension, but with quiet trust, that whatever may come, all will be well with us in that which really matters."

J. E.

POCONO LAKE, Eighth Month 13, 1917.

NEWS ITEMS.

PRESIDENT MAID M. EDWARDS has resigned his position as President of Penn College. He has accepted the presidency of Earlham College, at Richmond, Indiana, and will assume his duties there Ninth Month 1st.

ISAAC SHARP is anxious to secure for London Yearly Meeting Library a copy of the autobiography or reminiscences of Levi Coffin, a book which is out of print and the plates of which were destroyed by fire years ago.

THE HAVERFORD UNIT.

Under date of Eighth Month 13th we have the following:—
Surveying work began this week, when five men who have had some surveying experience were given a week's try-out. They were Chawner, Jenkins, Morrison, Mesner and Speer.

Another group of men who have shown special mechanical skill were assigned to the automobile squad; they were Balderston, S. F. Brown, Bruner, Carey, O. W. Carter, Collins, Hornbrook, Hussey, Lippincott, Laity, Metcalf, Parnell, Traviss, Vail, Webster and Wetherald. Still another group who handle tools well begins actual construction work this week: in this group are Cholerton, Darling, Hayes, Hobbs, Johnson, L. H. Marshall, Reynolds, R. P. Smith, Southworth, Titcomb, and Whitall. The other men are still at work mending roads, in the carpentry shop, and in the masonry squad.

A concrete foundation for a garage near the Haverford campus will be part of the work of the masonry group in the next two weeks. They have already learned to mix mortar and slake lime; and have laid a brick foundation for a portable house of the type being erected by the English Friends in France. Joseph Shuster, head of the Masonry Department at the Williamson Trade School, Williamson, Pa., is in charge of this work.

"French, French and more French," was the message sent back by the Friends in France when asked for recommendations as to training. And French, French, and more French the boys at Haverford are getting. Clarence Zantsinger paid them a second visit last week and talked entirely in French. Many of his audience understood little of what he said; but they became more accustomed to picking French words out of what at first sounded like an uninterrupted flow of meaningless mumbling. At supper-time now there is a ban on the use of English—if a man cannot talk French, he remains silent.

Charles J. Rhoads, Governor of the Philadelphia Federal Reserve Bank, entertained the men one evening last week at his Bryn Mawr home. He took them to the home of his neighbor, Henry Collins, to see Alfred Collins's great collection of animal heads, products of hunting trips in five continents.

Pending the formation of the District Boards, which alone have the power to grant young men permission to leave the country in war-time, the fourteen men selected as the vanguard of the American Friends' Reconstruction Unit No. 1 are held up. At least a part of the group will be sent over in the near future. When the Boards are finally organized, the granting of permits—to Friends, at least—will be a mere matter of routine.

The first issue of L'Equipe (French for Unit), the weekly paper to be published by the men of the Unit, appeared last week; and hereafter it will appear regularly every week until the men start for France. Charles F. Brown, the Business Manager, hopes to be able to buy a hand-press and continue publication in France. A résumé of Henry Scattergood's letter from the Somme region; an editorial by Robert G. Brown; a poem by Horace Davis; a column in French by Professor W. C. Titcomb, of the University of Illinois, a member of the Unit; and a story written in Biblical form retelling the perils of a night in camp, and the visitation by mosquitoes and wild horses which followed neglect to wash the dishes, fill most of the first issue.

It is eighteen miles from Haverford to Westtown, and it is eighteen miles back, and some members of the Unit were acutely aware of the fact that thirty-six miles is a long way to go before they returned to the green of Haverford Campus. The first eighteen-mile stretch to the Friends' school grounds was hiked before dinner; a baseball game, swimming and boating filled the afternoon; and after a short night beneath the stars, the company hiked back. A half hour's stop was made to hold First-day Meeting under the trees below Castle Rocks. Hollingsworth Wood, who has come to fill R. H. Gummer's place as one of the three Councilmen for the Unit; Carleton MacDowell, Carroll Binder, and V. D. Amick, all rose to tell simply but earnestly what the spiritual mission of the Unit had meant to them and might mean to others.

GEORGE GELLETT WHITNEY and JERET E. L. PAYNE were married at Jordans, on the 25th ult. It is announced that they intended to sail for America directly. George Whitney is the son of Dr. W. N. Whitney, late of Tokio. Janet Payne has been several times quoted in THE FRIEND during the past three or four years. She is a thoughtful writer of much clearness and force.

The Peace session of the recent World Conference of the Church of the Brethren (Dunkards), which was held in the Forum at Wichita, was attended by about 4,000 persons and was an occasion of great interest. Following the able addresses by Rogers Winger, of Indiana, and Professor W. J. Swiggart, of Juniata College, Pennsylvania, Dr. W. L. Pearson, of Friends' University, gave the closing address on "True Christian Peace," and particularly urged that the Brethren, the Mennonites and Friends should co-operate in teaching their common peace principles and in promoting peace on earth, as also in supporting one another in times of war. These three denominations, he said, had all suffered much persecution on account of their principles in the past, but none of them had ever yet persecuted anyone. The three branches of the Mennonites have recently united in showing their firm adherence to the principles of peace and in presenting their claims for exemption through a joint-committee at Washington.

CONCORD QUARTERLY MEETING.

A LARGE gathering of Friends—at this vacation month—attended Concord Quarterly Meeting on the 14th inst.

The thought of a willingness for service, and of the need of right preparation for it, was brought before us by the exercises of the Meeting for Worship.

A joint session opened the second meeting, in which two reports, that of the joint Committee appointed in Fifth Month to hold, if way opened, a meeting for those of our members and attenders who "are concerned for the upbuilding of the Kingdom of God,"—and that of the Conference Committee, were read and considered.

The first of these produced a sense of thankfulness that the concern of the Select Quarterly Meeting, which led to the appointment, had been so fully met, and the Committee was continued, for such service as might be shown to them, and to carry the concern to our Monthly Meetings.

Both their work and that of the Conference Committee were felt to have been helpful in building up and re-energizing a spirit of true Christian fellowship among our members.

At the Select Meeting, held the day before, the names of four women Friends who had been proposed for the station of Elder were confirmed by the Meeting, and one of these, Lydia S. Thomas, of Concord, was brought before the Meeting on Third-day, there being no Select Preparative Meeting at Concord. According to the new ruling of the Dis-ipline she was made a member of Chester Select Preparative Meeting, within the limits of which she now resides.

Annette G. Way, Rachel A. Carter and Sarah E. Garrett were appointed Elders from Lansdowne Meeting.

The joint session was followed by the usual business of the two Meetings.

When the time came for reading the extracts of minutes of our late Yearly Meeting, women Friends decided to read only the opening and closing minutes, and since these were unusually comprehensive, it was felt to be a satisfactory plan.

The number of young people in attendance was noted with pleasure.

F. T. R.

The following, under date of Seventh Month 25th, was written to our friend Hannah P. Morris:—

It will be of interest to thee to hear that on First-day last, the 22nd, I attended meeting at Rue du Théâtre 67, finding it little changed from my last visit there in 1910. Justine Delancourt is the same cheerful, courageous soul she has always been—a little older, of course, but as far as I know, with no thought of giving up her work. There were eight of her pupils present that day. The old visitors' book is still in use—it was begun in 1859, at the time of the exposition, and I was interested to turn back to the dates of my visits of seven years ago, especially to the day my grandfather, Edmund Welster—then aged eighty-one—was present with me.

The meeting last First-day was the last for this summer, Justine Delancourt planning to leave for the country as usual, to remain until the early part of Tenth Month. It was a simple little meeting—entirely after the manner we are used to, and two of the pupils appeared in earnest, tendering prayer. I was very glad I had come.

Paris is fascinating as ever, and even more interesting, though prices are sky-high. That and the dark streets constitute the only obvious evidences of the war—the French ability to preserve a cheerful exterior is nothing short of marvelous. Everything is obtainable, if you have the money to pay for it. This is quite different from what we have experienced elsewhere, where prices in general were not at all unreasonable if you could get the things at all. Our bare living expenses are $4.00 per day, and will be higher still before winter.

Very sincerely thy friend,

ALFRED LOWRY, JR.

REPORT OF THE TREASURER OF THE AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE, EIGHTH MONTH 20, 1917.

The total reported received last week as contributions to the American Friends' Service Committee was $138,163.56. The following contributions have been received since that time:

Amount reported last week	$138,163.56
Philadelphia Yearly Meeting's Peace Committee, Fourth and Arch Streets	3,095.00
Fellowship of Reconciliation	1,570.50
Various Meetings or Associations	6,887.39
	$149,716.45

CHARLES F. JENKINS, Treasurer.

LETTERS mailed from Tokio, Japan, inform that the Friends who volunteered for service in Russia had a reasonably smooth passage, but much fog and cold weather were encountered, the siren blowing every one-and-a-half minutes for periods of eight or nine hours.

The Empress of China is a luxuriously-appointed steamship, with open fire-places in writing-room and some state-rooms. A great variety of Japanese naples and evergreens are tastefully placed about the vessel. The service is entirely Chinese, the head-waiter dressed in a long blue gown, in color matching the china.

At eleven o'clock each week-day those of the party who were able assembled for a lesson in Russian.

The following telegram was forwarded to President Wilson by the Peace Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting:

"Woodrow Wilson, President, Washington, D. C.: We urge thee to embrace the great opportunity presented by the Pope's message. Although it does not attempt to set forth detailed and final terms, it at least affords a firm and hopeful basis, in harmony with thy address of First Month 22nd, for beginning negotiations leading to permanent peace. We firmly believe that the growing desire to punish Germany, born of a revengeful spirit, should be subordinated to the opportunity here offered to safeguard through liberalism the future peace of nations."

MINUTES OF CANADA YEARLY MEETING, held in the Sixth Month last, at Pickering, Ont., have been received. For the first time men and women met in joint sessions.

Anna L. Hall, from Ohio, and Solomon E. and Sybil J. Barker, from North Carolina, were acceptable visitors.

"As far as possible Friends are clear of complying with military requisitions, but are paying the tax imposed by the Government, as food, postal rates, travelers' tickets, etc."

The Minutes of the Representative Meeting state that a communication from the other body of Friends had been received requesting a meeting in conference on the military Service Bill, the latter having caused anxiety among Friends. A deputation of both branches of Friends met and it was thought best to prepare a paper explaining Friends' attitude on the military question. This paper was received and kindly acknowledged by Premier Borden. A memorial was read concerning our late beloved Friend, Eliza H. Varney.

RECEIPTS.

Unless otherwise specified, two dollars have been received from each person, paying for vol. 91.

Lloyd Balderston, Anna H. Brinton, Joseph T. Whitson, Chas. T. Moore, Beulah E. Cope, Rebecca C. Reeve, Benjamin Albertson, Elma Hayes, James H. Moon, Rachel T. Moon, Maria C. Scattergood, E. Dean Stanton, Margaret W. Haines, Sarah W. Heston, Mary A. L. Thomas, Dr. Chas. Williams, Edward B. Taylor, Edward B. Taylor, Jr., Sarah E. Satterthwaite, all of Pennsylvania; Catharine B. Swift, Sarah C. Blackburn, Hannah Blackburn, Rachel C. Llewellyn, Deborah C. Battey, J. Howard Edgerton, Elbert E. Cope, Lewis Hall, Sidney A. Fawcett, Walter J. Edgerton, Edwin Crew, all of Ohio; Anna T. Stokes, Edwin F. Ballinger, Herbert Jones, Mark B. Wills, Katharine W. Abbott, all of New Jersey; Nathan Barker, N. C.; Milton J. Shaw, Mary M. Edmundson, Henry S. Conard, Mary H. Ridgway, Jesse F. Standing, Joshua P. Smith, Robert W. Hampton, Ellis W. Stanley, Lewis B. Stanley, Thomas E. Stanley, all of Iowa; Nathan L. Hall, Cal.; Ira S. Frame, Cal.; Everett Moon, Minn.; Margaret I. Henton, N. Y.; Esther E. McGregor, N. H.; Joseph H. Clayton, Can.; William Hallam Can.

Remittances received after Second-day morning will not appear in receipts until the following week.

NOTICES.

MEETINGS from Eighth Month 26th to Ninth Month 1st:—
Burlington and Bucks Quarterly Meeting, at Burlington, Third-day, Eighth Month 28, at 10.30 A. M.
Gwynedd Monthly Meeting, at Norristown, First-day, Eighth Month 26, at 10.30 A. M.
Chester, at Media, Second-day, Eighth Month 27, at 7.30 P. M.
Concord, at Concordville, Third-day, Eighth Month 28, at 9.30 A. M.
Woodbury, Third-day, Eighth Month 28, at 8 P. M.
Abington, at Horsham, Fourth-day, Eighth Month 29, at 10.15 A. M.
Birmingham, at West Chester, Fourth-day, Eighth Month 29, at 10 A. M.
Salem, Fourth-day, Eighth Month 29, at 10.30 A. M.
Philadelphia, Fourth and Arch Streets, Fifth-day, Eighth Month 30, at 10.30 A. M.
Goshen, at Malvern, Fifth-day, Eighth Month 30, at 10 A. M.
Lansdowne, Fifth-day, Eighth Month 30, at 7.45 P. M.

MARRIED.—At Canton, China, on Sixth Month 29, 1917, in a meeting for worship appointed by New Garden Monthly Meeting of Friends of Pennsylvania, WILLIAM W. CAMBRIDGE and CATHERINE B. JONES.

DIED.—At her home near Norwich, Ontario, Canada, on Seventh Month 7, 1917, MARY J. POLLARD, wife of George Pollard, in her seventy-sixth year; a member and Elder of Norwich Monthly Meeting.

FOUNDED 1865.

THE PROVIDENT LIFE & TRUST CO.

OF PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Insures Lives Acts as Executor, Etc.
Accounts Solicited Deposit by Mail
Travelers' Cheques Monthly Statements by Mail

WRITE FOR LEAFLET.

Fourth and Chestnut Streets, Phila.

H. F. BRUNER

S. D. HALL

H. F. BRUNER & Co.

COAL

OFFICE AND YARD

16 N. TWENTY-FIRST STREET

PHILADELPHIA

TELEPHONES: Locust 243

Race 661

THE CHEYNEY SITUATION

Friends of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting have as a legacy of the efforts put forth in the 60's in the interest of training colored teachers a unique plant at Cheyney. The Cheyney Training School for Teachers appeals for help to the descendants of those who originated the idea. The School is doing a great work, but it is cramped in many ways by a lack of funds.

An efficient staff of teachers and a student body numbering 100 present an unusual opportunity for the wise expenditure of energy and money.

The Managers can do little more than administer the Trust and most look to Friends and others, who have the means, to supply what is essential for the proper advancement of the School's interest.

Leslie P. Hill, Principal, is always ready to offer timely suggestions to any who have it on their hearts to assist in the laudable work that is carried on at Cheyney.

Because of the conditions which must be met, if the School is to continue its good work, the Board of Managers feel free to request Friends to include Cheyney among the charities to which they contribute, and ask that checks shall be drawn in favor of and mailed to

WILLIAM BIDDLE, Treasurer,
119 S. Fourth Street, Philadelphia.

ALFRED C. HAINES

Building Glass and Paints
56 N. Front St., Philadelphia

WALL PAPERS—All Grades
WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER
Custom of Friends Specially Solicited

FRANK C. BUEHL

Successor to S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON

902 SPRING GARDEN ST. PHILADELPHIA

Opposite Spring Garden Station, Phila. & Reading R. R.

ESTABLISHED 1840. ERL PHONE.

POCONO MANOR INN

OPEN ALL YEAR

Situated in the beautiful Pocono Mountains in northeastern Pennsylvania is most attractive the year 'round.

Golf, Tennis, Bowling, Driving, Motoring, Swimming and Boating are but few of the recreations found at this popular resort.

J. W. HURLEY, Mgr., Pocono Manor, Pa.
(Pocono Summit Station, D., L. & W. R. R.)

WOOLMAN SCHOOL

A Friends' School for Social and Religious Education, Board of Managers from both branches of Friends. Courses in Old and New Testament, Church History, History and Principles of Friends, Missions, First-day School Organization, Social Betterment, International Organization, History of Religion, Comparative Religion, and Allied Subjects.

Instruction by scholarly experts from the Faculties of Swarthmore and Haverford Colleges, and from other Educational, Social and Religious Institutions of Philadelphia and vicinity.

Fall term opens Tenth Month 10, 1917.

ELBERT RUSSELL, Director
WOOLMAN SCHOOL :: SWARTHMORE, PA.

RESIDENCE: 254 S. 44th St. BELL PHONE: Baring 204X

WILLIAM OAKES

Plumbing and Heating Contractor

ALSO LEAD BURNING

260 SOUTH TENTH STREET

PHILADELPHIA

BELL PHONE: Filbert 2606.

GLASLYN-CHATHAM

PARK PLACE

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

A Family House of Established Reputation.
Open Throughout the Year.

NATHAN L. JONES.

WILLIAM S. YARNALL

MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

112 SOUTH FIFTEENTH STREET

PHILADELPHIA.

Letchworth Cottage

Spring Lake Beach, N. J.

Open for the Season 1917

A. C. & S. H. Letchworth

FOR RENT (FURNISHED)—A PLEASANT HOME in Moorestown, N. J., on Main Street, overlooking the Valley; heated by hot water; lighted by electricity; near railroad station; trolleys passing the door; near Friends' Meeting and school on same side of street; garage.
Apply to M. W. STOKES,
166 E. Main St., Moorestown, N. J.

THE HOLMES PRESS

Printers

J. L. Engle, Pres.

1336-40 CHERRY ST. PHILA.

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE MATERIAL THAT WE SELL

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY

MANUFACTURERS

PHILADELPHIA

THE LAKESIDE

EAGLES MERE, PA.

Unobstructed lake view; capacity 250.
Elevator steam heat, golf, tennis, bathing and bathing. Attractive motoring through the surrounding country.

GARAGE

J. S. KIRK & SON

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE

PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

GIRARD TRUST CO.

BROAD and CHESTNUT STS.

CAPITAL AND SURPLUS } $10,000,000

Acts as Executor, Trustee, Guardian, Administrator, Assignee and Receiver. Safes to Rent in Burglar-proof Vaults. Interest Allowed on Deposits. :: ::

E. B. MORRIS
PRESIDENT

OWNER OF 98 ACRE FARM WITH A $5000 NEW poultry plant wants to get in touch with a young married Friend with energy and scientific poultry and farm experience. Will consider taking right party into partnership if he has $2000 to $3000 to invest. Must be unquestionably honest and trustworthy. Real opportunity for right party; state just what you can do in first letter. Address: "H"—"THE FRIEND."

The drive pictured above is in our own factory. It is a hard one, not only because of the four pulley arrangement, but because of a fluctuating load.

Our Gilt Edge Belting stands up well to this work. It saves stops and trouble, and keeps the machine busy:

J. E. RHODS & SONS

PHILADELPHIA: 12 N. THIRD ST.
NEW YORK: 102 BEEKMAN ST.
CHICAGO: 322 W. RANDOLPH ST.
BALTIMORE: 37 S. CHARLES ST.
FACTORY AND TANNERY: WILMINGTON, DEL.

Philadelphia's
Representative Store

R. C. Ballinger Ernest R. Yarnall John A. Stratten
TELEPHONES
Bell—Fihbert 26-15 - - Keystone—Race 637
R. C. BALLINGER & CO.
CONTRACTORS and BUILDERS
218 N. Thirteenth St. Philadelphia.

ELKINS, MORRIS & CO.

BANKERS

REPRESENTATIVES
WM. E. CADBURY
PAUL W. BROWN
JAMES P. MAGILL

LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

RAILROAD AND PUBLIC UTILITY BONDS

FOR

CONSERVATIVE INVESTMENT.

FULL PARTICULARS ON REQUEST

We recommend the use of RAG FEATHERWEIGHT

(Antique Finish)

As the paper for high-grade Books and other Publications

JOSEPH G. FOGG FUNERAL DIRECTOR and EMBALMER

S. W. COR. 16TH AND RACE STREETS
Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals
BELL 'PHONE SPRUCE 1648

W. J. MacWatters
WITH

HARDWICK & GAGEE CO.

SUCCESSORS TO
IVINS, DIETZ & GAGEE
Let me help you in selecting your

Rugs and Carpets

Our new imports of Oriental Rugs
are of the highest merit

1220-22 MARKET ST. PHILA.

HARRY S. LEE

313 WALNUT STREET
PAINTER and GRAINER

ANTIQUE and OFFICE FURNITURE RESTORED
JOBGING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO
ESTIMATES

W. B. WEAVER UNDERTAKER and EMBALMER

550-552 N. 5TH ST., PHILA., PA.

Special Attention Given to Funerals
In and Out of the City, Also Chapels
Accommodations for Funerals.

BELL 'PHONE ESTABLISHED 1880

Friends Arch St. Centre

304 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Provides comfortable accommodations for guests by the day or week. Meals at moderate prices.

AMELIA D. FEATHERSTONE, Matron.
PHONE—MARKET 1571.

Assoc. M. Am. Soc. C. E. Bell 'Phone—Lombard 3412

EDWIN M. EVANS CONTRACTOR & BUILDER

My jobbing department is well equipped,
prompt and efficient

321 S. LAWRENCE ST. PHILA.

BACK LOG CAMP

INDIAN LAKE, N. Y.

In the Heart of the Adirondacks.

The name Back Log Camp means a great deal to many people. We shall be glad to send our booklet to any one who is interested in the latest development of the Back Log idea.

THOMAS K. BROWN
Westtown, Pa.

PUBLIC STENOGRAPHER
GEORGE B. COCK, Liberty Building
Established 1896. Experience 39 years; Medical 13

SEE WALKER & KEPLER

FOR

Good Electrical Work

531 CHESTNUT ST. PHILA.

FRIENDS' BIBLE ASSOCIATION
HAS ITS HEADQUARTERS AT

207 WALNUT PLACE : PHILA.

It is able to furnish Bibles and Testaments to Schools and Bible-classes and would be glad to have Friends everywhere acquaint themselves with the needs of their neighborhoods and allow the Bible Association to help them procure the books they may want. :

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 91.

FIFTH-DAY, NINTH MONTH 6, 1917.

No. 10.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price $2.00 a year in Advance.

Publisher, DAVIS H. FORSYTHE.

Editors { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
 { DAVIS H. FORSYTHE,
 { MARY WARD.

Make remittances payable to

THE FRIEND,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

"I have not a wish to be elevated one step above the condition of a true and sincere beggar at the footstool of Mercy and the throne of Grace. . . ."
—E. E., about 1860.

THE QUAKER WORLD.

It is not unusual to hear members of our Society speak reproachfully of our "little world," of its selfishly centered interests, its irresistibly narrowing influences. They must find avenues of escape from it or be suffocated. In opposition to such sentiment there are others, perhaps a much larger class, impressed all the while with our superiority, disposed to speak of "our principles" and "our practices" in terms that too often impress hearers with the repulsion of self-righteousness and exclusiveness. We surely have no patent right on Christianity!

These two contrasted points of view represent extremes that need to meet in a common understanding if we are determined to make the most of ourselves and the best of our religious Society. Put into somewhat scientific terms one point of view is centrifugal and the other centripetal, and the theorem to which we would wish to invite attention in this editorial is the common-place declaration that it is necessary to have a firm centre in order to draw a large circle. A very little knowledge of men and movements is required to convince us that the largest outlook, the broadest and most active sympathy with points of view not specifically our own, is compatible with family, or community or denominational loyalty. It was William Penn, if we need to establish this point historically, who exhorted us (his exhortations mostly apply to us if we will "suffer them") to cultivate the "universal spirit." None would dispute that he practiced this exhortation conspicuously. It was Robert Barclay, still the most invulnerable defender of Quakerism, who called "Christian fathers" and learned men of all creeds to attest his positions. Few of us, apparently, have the scholarship or the vision to be as broad as these ancient Friends were. All of us need to ponder the process that made them at once "consistent militant Friends," and Christians of world-wide sympathies. Much of the process evidently has to do with the illumination and the expansive power of first-hand experiences of Divine revelation. A part of it is much more common-place, altogether removed from the mystical, a plain field which we are most apt not to cultivate because there is no lure of adventure in it.

If there is an actual relationship between concentrated interest and broad sympathies we need, each of us, to establish such centre of stability and radiation in our own lives. In the plainest possible prose we need to know our own religious Society if we are to have the most effective knowledge of the religious world at large. Our own "little world," as we actually get acquainted with it, merges at one point and another into the great world of which it is perceived to be a part. But are we actually acquainted with our own little world? The late Allen Jay often pointed out that Philadelphia Yearly Meeting is the most homogenous Yearly Meeting in the world. He attributed this particularly to Westtown Boarding School. Amongst other contributory influences, the fixed habit in Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of reading THE FRIEND has been far from a negligible influence. So this homogenous character is based upon knowledge of one another. Isaac Sharpless recently called our attention to the fact that many years ago our little weekly was in the hands of a very liberal element amongst Friends. They were men with the largest aspirations for the privileges of education and culture. They accepted the special mission of holding the Society firmly to cardinal Christian doctrine, but they believed this end best accomplished by general liberalizing agencies. In some degree the paper has held to this course through all the vicissitudes of its ninety years. Our late friend, Joseph Walton, read rather faithfully the publications that come as exchanges from "bodies with whom we were not in accord," and those who knew him closely were not surprised upon his death at the testimonies to his broad sympathies from a great variety of Friends in all branches of the Society. Some of the spirit of that broad editorial reading got into THE FRIEND then. We trust not a little of it pervades our columns now. If we are to speak for the Quaker world with any measure of adequacy we must transmit, at least as news items, much that may not represent our own point of view. We must make some contribution toward a more general knowledge of our Quaker world.

Our young Friends seem to be teaching us an important lesson along this line. The new thing apparently that has happened to them is the ability to have sympathy and fellowship with those whose point of view does not accord with their own. It is only a step further to the discovery that this is after all a most effective way of making one's own point of view serviceable to those who have not had it. What if some of the fundamentals of Quakerism are to be restored to the Society by this process! We are well aware of the possibility of its working in the reverse direction, but conviction that has any power in it is ready for such ventures of faith.

Some one has counted up the periodicals that speak for our Quaker world. With the various meeting letters the number now is probably near two score. If one had any other occupation he could hardly read all of these thoroughly. The general tenor of the whole finds expression in notices and reprints in the half dozen or less that are most in circulation. A careful and regular reading of one of these is probably the best training for an understanding of them all. The Friend who merely occasionally looks over one or a dozen of them, does the Quaker world an injustice. He possibly speaks slightly of this world, but of course it is something of which he has inadequate knowledge. Much greater, however, than the injustice to the Quaker world on the part of such, is the injustice to one's self. Any claim for breadth of view, of liberality and understanding in religious matters, as we have attempted to show, must rest upon a measure of concentrated knowledge at the starting point of one's religious association and experience. We can best afford to trust the interests of Quakerism to those who know the Quaker world. This world is plainly beset with limitations, hampered perhaps by tradition, often self-centred, now lacking in courage, again in vision, but it has been held together most wonderfully during two hundred years with a minimum of machinery. It contains still a remarkable range of gifts. It develops a very high type of manhood and womanhood. We have it presented to us in great variety. (Is there any denomination two hundred years old of which this is not true?) We learn that no one type of meeting contains all the real Friends. At times separations have seemed to be unavoidable. They may yet serve some purpose in emphasizing the distinctiveness of some principle or in the maintenance of some cardinal doctrine. We are not called upon now to judge in that matter. This one point the present time of crises seems to disclose. The Quaker world, despite its smallness, has still enough common capital to be a real world-force, if this capital can be properly mobilized. A first step in this mobilization is a much more general and accurate knowledge of the extent as well as of the limitations of the world itself. We plead for that knowledge not in any spirit of compromise, but always in the remembrance of that prayer, "that they all may be one." We may find ourselves drawn by this knowledge even into closer fellowship with the unit to which we belong. If our fellowship is what it should be it will not surely be separation from those large issues for which all religious society is organized. We must not contribute further to the present apparent failure of Christianity by our isolation.

J. H. B.

THE SPIRIT OF THE UNIT.

To offer one's life to make an enterprise successful is like a guarantee of earnestness as is not often required of members of a non-military organization.

So in this Unit where the men have had to make sacrifices and give themselves for a service which may be hazardous and will certainly be strenuous in the extreme, some such offering of a life to a common purpose has been a prime factor.

A group of men who have looked the facts in the face and seriously determined to take an unpopular stand, one which will inevitably subject them to misunderstanding and perhaps ridicule and even harsher treatment, and yet are determined to pay the price for their conscience' sake, have made one of the supreme decisions which make men masters, make them realize their relationship to God. They have come into the great class of those who feel they owe the world a life and are determined to pay with a full, rich life, not a meagre one.

The volunteer for a high task of any kind in life sees in the toil and sweat and fatigue of preparation an inward meaning. He discovers in them steps toward his goal, and however trivial the processes, they are all shot through and made to glow with a mystic spirit which discloses to his eyes an inward joy even in what at other times would be irksome.

The glory of a service for humanity, the dignity of a position in the first unit under a branch of a national Government stretching out its hand to do reconstruction work in the territory of another nation is surely a lure the like of which has never before been held up to the eyes of our young men.

As we advance through the dust and fatigue of training toward the almost unendurable brightness of the prospect of the service which we long to perform, a kinship with the crusaders, with all the men of all time who have revolted against the established deadness and felt the promptings of life, seems to grip us, and we feel the joy of Paul pressing toward a mark for the prize of a high calling.

Humbled by such thoughts and opportunities, we test ourselves anew lest haply we be thinking not "soberly," but "more highly than we ought to think."—Editorial by L. H. W., in L'Equipe, Published at Haverford.

CEDAR LAKE CONFERENCE.

(SECOND REPORT.)

Well, the Cedar Lake Conference is over and it surely was a very great privilege to be able to attend. There were thirteen members of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting there for most of the time and an average attendance of about one hundred and twenty, representing fourteen Yearly Meetings. A very representative group of Young Friends of America, including some from Canada and one Japanese.

We had ten days of wonderfully inspiring association together, and I trust for most of us at least a fuller realization of our responsibility will send us back to our various duties, determined to make the very best use of our time in living out the Gospel of Good Will.

Our position as a religious denomination opposed to war was very largely dwelt upon through the whole Conference, and it is very evident that Friends are taking a distinctly positive attitude in regard to the position in which we find ourselves. The work of the American Friends' Service Committee was fully explained and Friends generally are supporting it. Much interest was shown in the Reconstruction Unit now training at Haverford, and a very interesting and instructive letter from them was much appreciated. Several groups reported organization for service of one kind or another, and many evidences of knitting on the part of the conferees showed a desire to make the best use of time even while on a vacation. Surely when all those energetic young people get back at work and tell those about them of the prospects, a great deal more will be done.

The classes in the morning in Bible School Methods, Quakerism, Missions, Story-telling, and Peace were all very interesting, the chief difficulty being that we had to choose between them, as there were three classes going on at the same time. Robert C. Root, of California, conducted the class on Peace and outlined for us a course of studies on the Development of the Peace Movement. He surely knows where to find the best that has been written, and gave us a list of books for reference which will no doubt prove useful to those of us who have time to study further, and for all of us he gave many useful arguments in support of our position. We cannot have too many at the present time. The other classes were all well attended and the teachers gave many very helpful suggestions. I think most of us went with the idea of getting something and I'm sure it was our own fault if we did not.

There was, however, a very strong feeling that we must give as well as get, and this was perhaps brought out as strongly in the Open Forum the last hour before dinner as at any other time. At this time questions of vital importance were brought up and discussed.

The afternoons were generally free for recreation and rest, and the splendid facilities in tennis courts, base ball diamond, quoits, croquet, and last but by no means least, the beautiful lake, afforded ample opportunity for healthy sports, all of which were much appreciated. Tennis tournaments were played off and three very thrilling games of baseball. Bathing was very much enjoyed and the boats always at our disposal gave us a chance for pleasant little trips in search of water lilies, which were quite plentiful. The chief difficulty was that we did not have time enough to do all the nice things.

Right after supper we met usually by the lakeside for the vesper service, at which times we enjoyed true communion together. Most of the time was spent very much as we would spend it if we were all Philadelphia Friends, just worshipping together. They were very much like the vesper services at the Westtown Conference.

After these we had a lecture of inspirational nature, and then a short social time before the lights went out at ten o'clock. On the first evening, the leaders for the devotional groups which met right after breakfast were chosen, four of the ten being from our group, which I think shows how much they appreciate having us come out to help them, and I hope they were not disappointed in us. We took up for discussion in the groups, from day to day, different thoughts on Citizenship in the Kingdom, the group leaders meeting before breakfast to go over the subject together, so that the various groups might take up somewhat the same things, although naturally the subjects discussed in the various groups varied. I think we all felt that we got closer together in those little groups than at any other time.

On the fourth evening of the Conference we had a social opportunity, following the lecture, the chief purpose being to get us better acquainted.

The meetings on First-day evenings were times of deep consecration, and I think we all felt that we were indeed baptized together.

BERTHA BALDERSTON.

COLORA, MD., Eighth Month 21, 1917.

SCHOOL DISCIPLINE.

CHARLES S. CARTER.

"I think I have read, at least it is said,

Boys are always in mischief unless they're in bed,

I put it to you, I don't say it is true,

Yet if I were asked for my own private view,

I should answer at once without further ado,

I don't think a boy can be trusted to keep

From mischief in bed, unless he's asleep."

These lines occur in a description, probably fanciful, by Mary Manners, of an incident in an English school. There is a difference, of course, between mischief due to exuberant spirits, and deliberate badness, but they sometimes shade into one another. My first teacher, the late Hannah Shipley Bean, was one of the loveliest and wisest women I ever knew. One day, in school, she said to a disorderly youngster: "Sammie, what should be done with a bird that can sing, and won't sing?" Reply from Sammie: "Feed it right well." "No," said our teacher. "It must be made to sing." And her methods produced the desired results. I have seen the mouth of a boy well washed out with soap-suds, by her direction, because he persisted in saying naughty words upon the playground; but all this happened sixty-five years ago.

In a long period of connection with the management of our public schools, I can remember teachers who preserved perfect order without apparent friction. This faculty or power, I can attribute only to the personality of the teacher. One such, a young woman, was a rather small person, but her eye "had a magic spell." The face of another seemed to wear a perennial smile; a natural one, not a smirk. I was once in a room where forty boys were making life miserable for a man-teacher, who happened to be of large size, physically. In the midst of the shuffling of feet, and accidental (?) dropping of desk-lids, another officer of the school, much slighter in person than the other, walked quietly in; he did not look around, nor did he say a word, but the hush that ensued was almost startling. (This did not happen at Westtown.)

At the present time, at Westtown School, the physical and educational conditions seem to be almost, if not quite, ideal; they have been enumerated over and over; a Westtown pupil remarked in my hearing, twenty years ago: "We are tired of being reminded of our advantages and privileges." Perhaps they do not talk that way now; yet there is reason to fear that, at least, by some, these advantages are not duly appreciated.

Can there be a deficiency in the training of some of our children, before they are sent to boarding school? An English Friend once said to me: "Dost thou not know, this is the land of obedient parents?" With the small child, prompt obedience should be exacted, at an early age; anything else is laying the foundation for future trouble. The parental control should be inspired by love, prudence, firmness and wisdom, and should be continued, as a matter of conscientious duty, until the child arrives at what are really years of discretion. Respect for authority should be carefully instilled. But, oh! the importance of the injunction "First be sure you are right," before going to extreme measures. To illustrate this point, two incidents are recalled. A farmer said to his fourteen-year-old son one day: "Jimmie, take this lurch to the harvesters; and here, better take the little jug along." The boy hesitated, and said: "Father, did thee ever know me to refuse to do anything thee told me to?" No, he didn't know that he did. The boy added: "My conscience will not let me take that liquor to the men, and if the jug goes to the field, they will have to take it thyself." The father was displeased; but when the mother appeared, and learned the cause of the trouble, she said: "I side with jimmie." That settled it, and the father never gave liquor to his men afterwards.

The parents of another boy, in his early teens, were atheists. One evening, by invitation, this boy attended a religious meeting. Upon his return, his mother wanted to know where he had been, and upon being told, remarked: "You have brought disgrace upon the family." She informed the father, who gave his son until the following day to decide whether he would give up his new-found interest, or leave. When asked next morning if he had made up his mind, John, for that was his name, replied: "Yes, and with God's help, I hope to save my soul." He went away, but grew to manhood, became a minister of the Gospel and was afterwards instrumental in causing both his parents to make an open profession of Christianity.

The first of these two "boys" is still living at an advanced age, and has grown up sons filling responsible positions. The other has passed to his reward; to be confessed, we may reverently believe, before our "Father and the holy angels."—From The Westonian.

AUTUMN PEACE.

Autumn—the very word holds cadence
Of soft, low winds that play o'er searing fields,
In that late burst of glory when the trees
Are robed in red-gold hues—when Nature wields
Her fairy wands to bring sleep to the year.

Autumn—it holds the warmth of eering fires,
The kettle steaming on a garnished hearth,
The gathering of loves, the twang of lyres
Accompanying the requiem of earth,
Who lays her down to rest without a fear.

Knowing full well renewal waits for her,
That resurrection's seeds are in her palm;
So sweetly sleeps with never restless stir,
Secure, at peace, the spirit's mighty elm
Unbroken by the falling of one year.

—FLORA SHUFFETT RIVOLA, in the Springfield Republican.

YANXTON, S. D.

EARLY QUAKER WRITINGS ON PEACE AND WAR— 1654-1662.

MARGARET E. HIBST, in The Friend (London).

(Continued from page 114.)

In the collected works of William Smith, of Beesthorp ("Balm in Gilead" 1675), are two definite pronouncements on peace. The first, "A Right Dividing and a True Discerning, Showing the use of the Sword, etc." (1659), develops the favorite thesis that the sword's only lawful use is in the repression of crime. But some have advanced further; to them "the use of a sword is not known . . . neither do we know a soldier's place, which is under the state of a man, violently to kill and destroy each other and know not wherefore . . . They return not to it again, they see a further thing, the end of that." In 1661, as a prisoner "in Worcester county jail for obedience to the command of Christ," he wrote a mystical treatise full of beauty and fervor. Its title describes its scope: "The Banner of Love under which the Royal Army is preserved and safely conducted. Being a clear and perfect way out of all wars and contentions; with a short testimony unto the Way of Peace. Given forth for the edification and comfort of all that truly fear God. Written by the hand of one who bears good-will to all men." It opens with a description of the love and mercy of God and the yearning of men's hearts towards Him.

"The light leads out of the earth and all earthly things and leads up to God, the fountain of eternal love, in whose pure presence the fullness of joy is found. . . . And of the immortal seed is the Royal Army born, and they are conquerors through him that loves them and spreads his banner over them, and their weapons are love and patience, by which they overcome; . . . and this is an Army that the Lord hath gathered and is gathering from amongst the earthly warriors, whose strength is in the horse and his rider, and the Lord God puts into their hands the spiritual weapon, and with it they go forth to battle, and they seek to save men's lives and not to destroy them. . . . And who need fear such an army, whose banner is love and their weapons good-will? They need no horsemen and strong armies to oppose them nor prisons to quiet them, for they are marching under the Banner of Love, and in love meet their enemies and quench their fury."

In time the army will grow to an overwhelming strength and "war will cease and cruelty come to an end, and love will abound." Those who (like the Fifth Monarchists) "by weapons of war fight for His kingdom" are warned that "wars and contentions are not the way in which Christ appears, nor the path in which He leads His Royal Army."

In conclusion, Wm. Smith breaks out in a rhythmic and passionate "Testimony to the Way of Peace."

"The Life of Christ is sweet, it is the substance of whatever can be spoken of; to inherit a measure of it is joy and peace, and the desire of the simple is abundantly satisfied therein. . . . There is no limitation of its breaking forth, but when and where and in whom it pleaseth; it prepares the vessel for its use and makes it honorable in its own holiness. It springs and fills according to its pleasure and the vessel must be new that doth contain it." Those touched by it are constrained "to behave themselves in love and tenderness to all people; . . . and they are His Royal Army, in whose Love and Life they stand in unity, and give up their bodies and spirits unto God, that His own will may be done, and the intents of His own Heart performed, and His own Name therein glorified."

The last pronouncement of this early period which calls for notice here is a plain statement of the Quaker position by William Bayly, a sea captain, in 1662. ("A Brief Declaration to all the world from the innocent people of God called Quakers, of our principles and belief concerning plottings and fightings with carnal weapons, against any people, men, or nations upon earth, etc.") Friends' principle of peace, he says, is everlasting and universal, founded on God Himself and "before death, hell, strife and wars."

"We bear good-will to all people upon earth, . . . we are all of one blood, all the workmanship of one Creator." This principle is not "an opinion or judgment which may fail us, or in which we may be mistaken or doubt, but it is the infallible ground and unchangeable nature of our religion (that is to say) Christ Jesus the Lord, that Spirit, Divine Nature, or Way of Life, which God hath raised and renewed in us, in which we walk and in whom we delight to dwell, and can not but worship and yield obedience to." Bayly ends by a solemn denial of any pseudo-Quakers "found in any plotting against any man or people whatsoever, to contrive mischief, danger or hurt either to body, soul or estate any way, on any pretence whatsoever." Such actions "our principle (the everlasting foundation of God) and our spirit have no fellowship or unity with." This may be compared with Francis Howgill's declaration at his trial a year later at Appley. (See Besse, Sufferings, vol. II.—Westmoreland.)

The foregoing are the chief links in the chain of early Quaker writings which connect Fox's declaration at Derby in 1651 with the assertion by Barclay in 1676 as a definite tenet of Friends that "it is not lawful for Christians to resist evil or to war or fight in any case." The existing governments, says Barclay, profess Christianity, but "they are far from the perfection of the Christian religion. Their spiritual state is nearer to that of the Old Testament and thus, "we shall not say that war undertaken upon a just occasion is altogether unlawful to them, but for such as Christ hath brought hither, it is not lawful to defend themselves by arms, but they ought over all to trust in the Lord." This is in answer to the argument that religion does not forbid "the use of arms for the defense of our country, body, wives, children and goods, when the magistrates command it."

II. IMPRESSIONS OF KOREA AND CHINA.

GILBERT BOWLES.

(Continued from page 115.)

Calling a carriage for the afternoon, Esther Butler and I had an interesting ride to the Ming Tombs, lying about a mile beyond the outer wall. We passed through the devastated Manchu section of the city, which was the scene of ruthless massacres at the time of the revolution of 1911, which overthrew the reigning Manchu dynasty. As all the people in this Manchu section had lived in idleness for nearly 300 years, supported by the toil of the Chinese, it was not strange that in the revolutionary outbreak, pent-up vengeance left the whole section of the city desolate. It was in the relief of wounded, desolate and dying Manchus in this section of the city that Dr. Gaylor of the Friends' Mission, gave her life. Passing beyond the outer wall of the city, a ride in the open country brought us to the approach to the Tombs, passing pairs of huge stone elephants, horses, soldiers and priests, who since the days of the Ming Dynasty (1368-1644) have guarded the approach to the imperial tombs. I was impressed with the resemblance of the stone images of soldiers to the old Assyrian warriors. Beyond the outer entrance gate and a garden-like approach, we passed the real entrance gate, a massive earth and brick structure, with an ascending approach under an archway, somewhat like the numerous gates which pierce a walled city. The tomb itself is an artificial hill or small mountain, with wooded sides and barren top. A brisk walk of about eight minutes brought me to the top, with its beautiful view over the valley and the city of Nankin, the houses of which can be seen with glasses. Our return home was by way of the old examination grounds. From the second story of a tower we looked out over these rows and rows of examination stalls—said to have been 30,000 at one time. Shut up in these low, tile-covered cells, some three by five feet, the applicants for official positions had their food brought to them as they worked over the classical subjects which were supposed to be a test of ability. Many of them repeated the test year by year, only to end in disappointment, as only a fraction of them could hope for appointments. Some of them died in the heat and exhaustion. The abandonment of this system was like an emancipation proclamation for China. A few years ago, one section of cells was torn down and the tiles and plaster taken off in wheel-barrows. The yellow flowers of growing rape marked this transformation. But the work was stopped for some unaccountable reason and so rows and rows of sheds still stand.

After our return to the Friends' Mission, the day was finished with Dr. De Vol, just arrived from Luho, who went with me in the carriage to visit the Seminary, conducted by the Northern and Southern Presbyterians. It is a beautiful compound, with a fresh grassy lawn. We saw the students gathering for their evening devotional meeting, which is voluntary and under their leadership. Dr. Price, of the Southern Presbyterian Mission, took us to the most famous Confucian temple of Nankin. As dusk was coming on, we made our way through gates and ascending steps and saw the inner temple, where Confucius is worshipped. The existence of the Confucian temples in many places of China marks the teachings of the Sage as more of a religion for China than it is in Japan.

VISIT TO THE FRIENDS' MISSION AT LUHO.—In making the journey of twenty-five miles from Nankin to Luho, Dr. George F. De Vol and I took jirikishas for the first hour, then the ferry across the Yangtze, then jirikishas for a half-hour, followed by a five-mile walk, much of the time along the river bank, while the longer end of the journey was made by taking turns at the so-called sedan chairs and walking. Our mid-day lunch was eaten at a tea house. The good woman offered us the steaming hot towels for hands and faces, but we hesitated and the onlookers crowded thick about us to contrast our clean towels which we carried with the public ones which serve all travelers.

In the brief visit at Luho, I had one night at the De Vols' with an evening social hour and conference with all the missionaries, a night with Walter and Myrtle Williams, with another hour with all missionaries for me to tell of missionary work in Korea, a peep at the close of the morning Bible School, attendance at the morning meeting for worship, a visit to Dr. De Vol's hospital and to three afternoon evangelistic meetings and Bible schools, a visit to the Boys' Academy, of which Walter Williams is Principal, and a short talk to the boys. It is a very encouraging and interesting work. The morning meeting for worship is attended by the girls and women from Margaret Holmes's School, the boys from the Academy and Christians and inquirers who have been reached through the hospital and general evangelistic work. The message which I gave in the morning, with Walter Williams as interpreter, was on the three phases of love, as given in 1st John.

(To be continued.)

AN INDIAN'S OPINION.—In his recently published volume, "From the Deep Woods to Civilization," Dr. Charles A. Eastman, of Amherst, Mass., tells of an old Indian in one of his Bible study classes who was asked to give his opinion as to the teaching he had been receiving.

"I have come to the conclusion," said the old man, "that this Jesus was an Indian. He was opposed to material acquisition and to great possessions. He was inclined to peace. He was as unpractical as any Indian, and set no price on His labors of love. These are not the principles on which the white man has founded his civilization."

"These words," comments Dr. Eastman, "put the spell of an uncomfortable silence upon our company, but it did not appear that the old man had intended any sarcasm or unkindness, for after a minute he added that he was glad we had selected such an unusual character for our model."—The Venture.

THE LITTLE LIGHTS ALONG THE SHORE.

"Brightly beams our Father's mercy
From His lighthouse evermore;
But to us He gives the keeping
Of the lights along the shore.

"Let the lower lights be burning!
Send a gleam across the wave!
Some poor, fainting, struggling seaman
You may rescue, you may save.

"Dark the night of sin has settled,
Loud the angry billows roar,
Eager eyes are watching, longing,
For the lights along the shore.

"Trim your feeble lamp, my brother,
Some poor seaman, tempest tost,
Trying now to make the harbor,
In the darkness may be lost."

Perhaps to no people in the world's history has the theme embodied in this little hymn been more applicable than to us of to-day.

After having repeatedly declared Himself to be the Light of the world, our Saviour, in His Sermon on the Mount, told His disciples that they too, were lights, or light-bearers. They became lights only as they followed Him, reflecting His light. "He that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." (John viii: 12.)

This is true as regards the faithful followers of Christ in every age of the world. They do shine forth as little lights along the shore.

To these, as well as to those disciples of old is the Master's command—"Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning." (Luke xii: 35), and again, "Let your lights so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in Heaven." (Matt. v: 16.)

Various are the natures of and demands for these lights; perhaps as diversified as are the individuals to whom they are intrusted and those whom they may help.

The Kingdom of Heaven which Christ came to establish upon earth was, by Him in His parables, likened unto various important objects of activity—the farmer, a tiny seed, a lump of leaven, a merchantman, a fishing net, the ten virgins and the talents—each and all performing their proper functions. Likewise, the Apostle Paul's description of the great diversity of the body of Christ—the Church—as chronicled in the twelfth chapter of 1st Corinthians:

"There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars: for one star differeth from another star in glory." (1 Cor. xvi: 41).

As in the physical so in the spiritual world, each little light has a glory all its own, each reflecting the light of its Creator!

There are thousands of hungry and thirsty souls up and down in the land to-day, longing and longing for some tiny ray of light to convince them that the religion of Jesus Christ has not failed!

In many instances these needy conditions are more easily reached and satisfied through some small service, such as the gift of a good book, the sending of a kind letter, the paying of a friendly visit, the rendering of a little hymn, or even the exercising of living patience, a sympathetic and understanding look or a warm grasp of the hand, than through deeds of a more conspicuous character.

Perhaps never more than to-day, when practically the whole world is in war's clutches, were these "little lights" more needed.

When honest people differ very materially, as to their duty in respect to our country's call, our young men especially can be loyal to God and man in standing firmly by their convictions, thus lending to the world their "little lights."

At all hazard, trust in Him, before whom all the warring nations of the world are but as a "drop of a bucket" and with whom rests all power and wisdom both in Heaven and in earth. He, "Who hath measured the waters in the hollow of His hand, and meted out Heaven with the span, and comprehended the dust of the earth in a measure, and weighed the mountains in scales, and the little hills in a balance." (Isa. xl: 12).

Yet, notwithstanding the infinitude of God's power and wisdom, He is in His providence ever present with tender, fatherly care for each of His children, the very hairs of whose head are all numbered.

While it is well to take counsel from those of deeper experience, especially those to whom has been intrusted the gift of teaching, one should guard against becoming unduly concerned about the opinions of others. "The light of many an honest heart has become blurred by listening to the dictation of man who, having allowed his zeal to take him beyond his knowledge, has set about to mark out the way for others. "It is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." (Jer. x: 23), then how those of another?

All through the web of Christendom, from the days of the apostles, when they condemned one for doing works in the name of the Master because he followed not with them (Luke ix: 49, 50), can be traced the marrring threads of "human judgment and imitation." Although Christ intrusted His disciples with different measures of the "light" we have no account where He ever so dealt out the "way." Man can only point to Christ, who alone is the way. "Jesus saith unto him, 'I am the way, and the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father but by Me.'" (John xiv: 6.)

That some at least who have received a light—and who has not—may be encouraged to greater faithfulness and that all may be encouraged to look to God alone who is able to keep us and to whom these "little lights" point, is the object of these lines:

"Let the lower lights be burning!
Send a gleam across the way!
Some poor, fainting, struggling seaman
You may rescue, you may save."

MARY J. PEELE.

RICH SQUARE, N. C.

YOUNGER FRIENDS.

A STORY WITH A MORAL.—A little story has recently come to our notice which very impressively teaches lessons that need constant repetition in these days of the reign of the Mammon. This is a story of John R. Mott. We have read several stories of tempting offers of various kinds having been made to J. R. Mott to undertake certain forms of Christian or other work. But the following, from the British Weekly, seems to be the latest:

A committee of wealthy, influential men in New York City called upon J. R. Mott, and offered him the presidency of a strong business corporation at a salary of one hundred thousand dollars a year. On hearing the proposition, J. R. Mott became thoughtful and serious. Then tears showed in his eyes. Observing his serious mood and tears, the committee, thinking he was troubled about what his decision should be, suggested that they did not wish him to take the matter of a decision so much to heart. J. R. Mott's reply was that he was not at all troubled about how to decide, and assured them that his decision was reached the moment the proposition was made. "What pains me," he said, "is that I should have so lived before you that it would come into your minds to come to me with such an offer."

THE LIFE-SAVING ST. BERNARD.—After visiting the famous Hospice of St. Bernard and observing how eager were those wonderful dogs to rescue the perishing out in those awful storms which sweep over the Alps, Russell H. Conwell, of Philadelphia, gives the following description:

"One morning after a storm, one of those great, honest creatures came struggling through the snow, hampered greatly in his exhausted condition. I waded deep in the drifts, following the floundering old fellow around the hospice to the kennel, which was a room of considerable size.

"When the door was opened to the wanderer, the other dogs within set up a chorus of barks and whines, and fell over one another as they crowded about him, and eagerly followed him around with wags of their tails and inquisitive looks in their eyes, which are just as intelligent questionings as so many interrogation points.

"But the crestfallen beast held his head and tail to the floor, and sneaked about from corner to corner, and finally lay down panting in a dark niche in the stone basement. He lay there with his eyes glancing out at the corners in a most shamefaced way.

"The young monk called the weary dog by name, and when the beast would not leave his shadowy retreat, the priest tried to induce him to come forth by showing him a dish containing scraps of meat. But, hungry as he was, he merely opened his eyes a little wider, rapped the floor once or twice lightly as he gave a feeble wag of his tail, and then shrank back, and seemed not to hear or see the invitation.

"The impatient keeper turned away with an angry gesture, and said that the dog would 'get over his sulks very soon' and that the creature probably felt ashamed that he had not found anyone.

"The thoughtless remark shot into my deepest soul with a thrill. That noble fellow seemed to have felt so bad, so ashamed, or so guilty because he had returned without saving anyone that he could not eat. It was not his fault that no benighted wanderer had been out benumbed and dying on the mountain road that awful night. He had grandly done his duty; but he was just dog enough not to reason so far, and just human enough to feel that it was his imperative duty to save some one.

"Grand old fellow! How he ought to put to shame many a human soul who knows there are travelers going down in the biting cold and the overwhelming storms on life's tumultuous highways, and yet who never saved even one such."

NEWS ITEMS.

HICKORY GROVE QUARTERLY MEETING, IOWA, has lately occurred. It was thought to be a time of favor, especially the public meeting following, the house being well filled. An English Friend was amongst those in attendance.

J. S. H.

VINCENT D. NICHOLSON spoke to a group of Wilmington Friends, at the Harrison Street Meeting-house, on Seventh-day evening, the 25th, on the aims and work of the American Friends' Service Committee, and the requirements for men and women who volunteer for foreign relief work. It was felt to be interesting and helpful; and we believe more of such gatherings might well be held, as Friends see a time for them; that the important work before this Committee can be centralized, and the need for such complete organization better understood.

[EDWARD BERNSTEIN, writing from the Woolmen Hostel, London, asks us for information in regard to the Russian sect known as the Molokani. Miss L. Reich has furnished the following. Perhaps others of our readers can supplement this information. Eas.]

The Molokani are a mystical community of the peasant class—some 500,000 of them, I am told, scattered through South Russia—many of them driven by persecution into the Caucasus. The name literally means "Milk-drinkers." A friend of mine, a missionary to the Jews of Russia, who visited them, and who also does not understand them really, says that this was a nickname because they abstained from vodka. It properly means that they seek not images, not sacraments, not the mere letter—but "the sincere milk of the Word."

The following is reprinted from The Friend (London), having been taken by them from a paper of established reputation:

On the third anniversary of the Great War an estimate of the cost to Europe in material, money and men is appropriate. In course of a careful and moderate computation, published in the Manchester Guardian of 4th ulto., the following figures were given—"necessarily speculative and doubtless inaccurate in detail, but in their totality authentic."

Number of men called to the colors	49,500,000
Number of men killed	9,750,000
Number of men wounded	23,500,000
(this figure may include some duplication)
Total loss of population	14,250,000
Number of men permanently disabled	12,000,000
Number of prisoners	4,250,000
Direct war expenditure	£21,500,000,000
Decay and devastation	£1,200,000,000
Tonnage destroyed	9,500,000
Tonnage compulsorily laid up	3,500,000

The following is taken from the Boston Transcript:

The Quakers of Maine, who have several societies in the southwestern part of the State, have probably lost their wealthiest member in the death of Charles M. Bailey, famous as an oilcloth manufacturer at Winthrop. The Springfield Republican says: "This picturesque man, who has died at the great age of ninety-seven, started his manufacturing career in an abandoned barn and left at his death a plant covering thirty-four acres of floor space. Religion was the chief interest of his life apart from business. His benefactions to the Moody Schools in this State and to the well-known Quaker school, Oak Grove Seminary, at Vassilboro, Me., were considerable, and for sixteen years he maintained Bailey's praying band, a group of evangelists who toured the State annually from Kittery to Caribou. Compared with many wealthy Quakers, particularly in England, who give freely of their wealth for well-known objects, he was content to remain a provincial figure, but he was true to his own interpretation of the 'inner light.'"

Our friend, Robert B. Haines, Jr., is much interested in the Scripture-Gift Mission. Through his interested instrumentality, a letter from President Wilson has been secured, commending the practice of regular Bible reading to the soldiers. It is announced that during the present war 20,000,000 Testaments and Gospel portions have been distributed. The President's letter is to appear on the front fly-leaf of an edition of 75,000 copies of the New Testament, intended especially for the men of the American army and navy. The following is a portion of the President's letter:

"The Bible is the word of life. I beg that you will read it and find this out for yourselves—read, not little snatches here and there, but long passages that will really be the road to the heart of it. You will find it full of real men and women not only, but also of the things you have wondered about and been troubled about all your life, as men have been always; and the more you read the more it will become plain to you what things are worth while and what are not, what things make men happy,—loyalty, right dealing, speaking the truth, readiness to give everything for what they think their duty, and, most of all, the wish that they may have the real approval of the Christ, who gave everything for them,—and the things that are guaranteed to make men unhappy,—selfishness, cowardice, greed, and everything that is low and mean."

This liberal distribution of the Bible should, under Divine favor, prove a great antidote to the war spirit and must also be welcomed on that ground.

The following items in regard to Haverford and Westtown appear in the educational number of The American Friend:

The resources of Haverford College at present, including the Graduate School, produce an income of about $120,000 annually.

The new Physics and Biology Laboratory of Haverford, to be named in honor of the retiring president, is in process of construction, and will be ready for classes in another year. This hall was raised by alumni subscription and the cost is estimated at $110,000.

A large increase is indicated in applications for the class of 1921 at Haverford. It is expected that the largest Freshman class in the history of the college will be on hand; larger by ten per cent. The Senior class will be cut in half by seniors, both military and non-military, rendered by its members. The Junior class will lose about one-third. The Sophomore, a very few. It is expected that academic and athletic conditions will be normal.

Several of the teachers of Westtown School have been doing advanced study this summer. Samuel H. Brown has been at Cornell University, Walter H. Magill at the University of Pennsylvania, E. Grant Spier at Columbia. Ellen Cope has been Supervisor of work in the playgrounds at West Chester, Pennsylvania.

Marian W. Masters and Ida L. DeLong have just returned home from a six weeks' trip to the Pacific Coast.

Frederick O. Tostenson and Walter H. Wood have been doing work at Wisconsin University during the summer. Thomas B. Barlow, of this year's graduating class, has also been studying there.

Owing to the resignation of Ruth McCollin as teacher of drawing and art work at Westtown, the place will be filled next year by Alice Easterling, of Washington, D. C. Helen South, of Philadelphia, will also be a new member of the Faculty.

Two out of the four Corporation Scholarships to Haverford College were won this year by two Westtown boys, J. Barclay Jones and Robert N. Wood. These scholarships are awarded to the four Freshmen having the highest averages in their entrance examination grades.

CO-OPERATION WITH THE AMERICAN FRIENDS. MINUTE OF FRENCH FIELD COMMITTEE.

We have considered the proposals for co-operation drafted by members of our Executive in conference with J. Henry Scattergood and Morris E. Leeds; we have made certain modifications and additions embodying the suggestions made by our équipes, and agree to send the proposals to London in the following form:—

1. It is understood that American Friends will work under the auspices of the American Red Cross Commission, who will be asked to assign to the Friends' Unit in France, workers selected by the American Friends' Service Committee for this purpose, from amongst men holding conscientious objections to all war and women in sympathy with such views. The Friends' Field Committee is to be the judge as to the number of such workers which it can usefully employ, subject to the approval of the London Committee.
2. The American Red Cross Commission shall be invited to appoint one of their number to attend meetings of the Friends' Field Committee in France.
3. American and English Friends in France shall unite their work in one organization, which shall be called—"Mission de la Société des Amis."
4. The American Friends' Service Committee shall be invited to send out two responsible Friends, a man and a woman, who shall be ultimately responsible to them and to the American Red Cross Commission for the welfare and conduct of American Friends sent to France. These two Friends shall be members of the French Field Committee.
5. The work in France shall be directed by the French Field Committee, subject to the control of the London Committee, and of the Friends' Service Committee in America, exercised through their representatives on the Field Committee. We suggest that the London Committee might invite a representative of the American Committee to join their number.
6. The details of co-operation shall be reconsidered, if it is desired, after some months' work.
7. We strongly urge our American Friends to adopt the grey uniform which is now so well known to the authorities and to the people amongst whom we work, and which is so definitely associated with the non-military character of our work. It is also felt that a marked distinction of uniform will seriously prejudice the unity of our organization.

REPORT OF THE TREASURER OF THE AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE, for the week ending Eighth Month, 27, 1917:

Amount reported last week as having been collected	$149,716.45
Amounts received from Meetings or Associations	2,038.05
Amount received from eight individuals	880.00

$152,634.50

CHARLES F. JENKINS, Treasurer.

THE FRIENDS' AMBULANCE UNIT (F. A. U.).

MORRIS E. LEEDS.

(Continued from page 118)

In Tenth Month, 1914, the first section of the F. A. U. started to France with forty men and eight ambulances, and was unexpectedly introduced to its mission of life-saving by the sinking, due to a torpedo, of the battleship Hermes near it in the Channel. The boys distinguished themselves by their bravery and success in rescuing the swimming sailors and by work for the exhausted and apparently drowned. Detained by this happening they landed late in the day in Boulogne to find an even more insistent demand on them.

"From a great and costly struggle at the front the French wounded were pouring back in thousands. In their slow and painful passage, by rail and ship, upon which the claims of the effective soldiers must always take precedence of those of the no longer serviceable, thousands were being blocked in the railway sheds, lying unattended until their turn came to be shipped further back to where they no longer encumbered the fighting zone, and where their wounds could be at last seen.

"It is impossible to describe the horrors of sight, of sound, of smell, with which our lads fresh from home began the struggle on this their first night, and without sleep. In half darkness, in the indescribable stench of old wounds, among always fresh hundreds of shattered remnants of human beings, heaped on the floor in delirium, coma and death, tirelessly they worked on, at first continuously, and then in shifts. A few suffered from actual physical nausea, but there was never a word that suggested anything but cheerful, quiet acceptance of the duty. Gradually the machinery of armies followed us up. The sheds were properly reorganized, the regular Service-people took our place."

They early adopted for their motto: "Search for work that no one is doing; take it; and regularize it later if you can."

From that strenuous beginning and working in the spirit of that motto, they have grown greatly and have accomplished an enormous amount of work of all kind as can be indicated here in the nearest outline.

There are now nearly 600 workers in France, of whom over 300 are Friends. About 80 are employed in the Queen Alexandra Hospital at Dunkirk, which is entirely managed by the F. A. U. It has 250 beds and has facilities for all necessary surgical operations. Five are on a barge hospital, attached as an auxiliary to a French Military Hospital which has 22 beds. Seven are in a search party attached to the mobile laboratory of the Second Army, used for searching out infectious diseases and general sanitary infection among the civilian inhabitants of the Belgian Area. Preparations are being made to quadruple the size of this section and suitable men are being trained.

Three are in a French and Belgian Civil Ambulance Section, which looks after the needs of children and civilian wounded in the danger zone.

Forty-three are employed in the headquarters Motors Department, which has 11 touring cars, 28 ambulances, 7 motorcycles and 17 trucks, and in addition to doing the ambulance work for the Queen Alexandra Hospital and the general hauling for the stores department, operates a good sized automobile repair shop.

One hundred and sixty-three form the staff of three Ambulance Convoys and two minor groupments. The convoys have 25 or 28 cars each. They are at present attached to the French army. In the Sixth Month, 1917, they traveled over 40,000 kilometers and carried over 2400 patients. They were engaged in the Champagne offensive and were awarded 14 Croix de Guerre.

About two hundred are orderlies on four Ambulance Trains, which are in the service of the British army, evacuating British sick and wounded from the various fronts to base hospitals. During periods of pressure they may carry seven or eight loads a week, each load consisting of some 700 patients.

Twenty-two operate three Recreation Huts at Dunkirk. Meals, concerts and recreation-rooms are provided at three centres for the use of men of the British army, dock laborers, sailors and men of the royal naval air service. The work entailed can be measured to some extent by the fact that the receipts at one hut in one day have amounted to as much as 1400 francs. The inspiration of this activity is the opportunity it affords for social work.

Some seventy men are employed in the Headquarters Staff, an instructional section and in the stores and Works Department.

In addition to the force in France, the F. A. U. has an almost equal number in England. The most of these are employed in the York Hospital, the King George Hospital and the Star and Garter Hospital. A considerable number are employed in agriculture and some fifty new recruits are training at Jordans.

At one time the F. A. U. did a large amount of work for the civil population of Belgium, which was only discontinued when the need passed, or it could be turned over to more permanent local organizations. Much of this work was done under the "Aide Civile Belge," an organization in which a Belgian Relief Society and the F. A. U. co-operated. Hospitals for the civil population were operated at Ypres (until repeatedly damaged by shells and rendered unsafe), at Poperinghe, and at Watten. The latter had in co-operation with it a barge hospital, bearing the name "Notre Dame de Perpétuel Secours." Civilian out-patient and visiting work was carried on at various centres.

The civil population of Ypres was inoculated for typhoid. This was an extensive piece of work, requiring 28,000 inoculations on 13,000 people. Water purification was done on quite a large scale.

In house to house searches for infectious diseases 24,000 persons were examined. In the administration of civil relief, operations were carried on in 155 towns and villages in Northern France and Belgium. One hundred and seventy-five thousand quarts of milk for babies was distributed in fourteen months, 75,000 articles of clothing were distributed and 15,000 refugees fed. Two orphanages and a school colony were established and carried on until turned over to civil authorities. A lace industry was carried on which at one time gave employment to 1400 women and girls.

Many men of the F. A. U. look back to this work for civilians with peculiar satisfaction and hope that similar work, should there be need for it, may fall to their lot in the future.

The spirit and purpose of the F. A. U. can be no better shown than in the following passages from an address to its members by its Chairman, Sir George Newman.*

THE CHARACTER OF THE UNIT.

"The Friends' Ambulance Unit is a unique institution which has opened a new chapter not only in Quaker history but in the history of Ambulance Service in war time. The character, organization and purposes of the Unit are still often misunderstood. It was established at the outbreak of war by members of the Society of Friends, is supported by Friends, and consists of Friends and others in close association with them. Each man must be ready and willing to sacrifice all—pleasure, leisure, money, profession, home, even life itself. He must pass through a course of training and must submit to regulations and discipline. This is no pieceniery, no easy-going expiation of fancy or adventure. It is a serious and strenuous undertaking involving long hours and an abundance of hard work."

"The Unit is a voluntary, unpaid, civil Unit of the Red Cross. From its commencement the Unit has been voluntary both in its freedom from military control and in its acceptance only of men who are willing to serve. The Unit has no judicial, statutory or compulsory powers, and has exercised none. Nor has it ever sought or desired such powers. Then again its members are unpaid, and in this way differ from ordinary members of the Red Cross."

"The members of the Unit do not belong to the army; they are not enlisted; they do not take the military oath; they do not bear arms; they are not directly under military control; and they do not undertake military duties, combatant or non-combatant."

"First, it stands for a definite form of national service—a trained and efficient service of ambulances, medical aid, relief, assistance, reconstruction, call it what you will, in aid of soldiers and civilians suffering on account of the war. Secondly, it stands for a particular type and form of freedom—a permission, opportunity and freedom to serve in the way which you honestly believe you have been called by your sense of duty. This type of freedom is represented in the Conscience Clause of the Military Service Act, a clause for which we desire to express our sincere appreciation to Parliament and to our fellow-citizens. We recognize that this liberty is not a license, that this privilege carries with it no immunity from public duty and no absolution from public service. We recognize too that the vast majority of our neighbors and friends in the present supreme crisis have deemed it equally their duty to take their place in the ranks of war, even as a faithful band of others have expressed their convictions by being willing to suffer in solemn and persistent protest, and even imprisonment. We honor all men who act in response to the highest dictates. We judge no man; let all do we condemn. We do not complain of criticism, which others have thought fit to make of our action. Let us bear no grudge and entertain no malice. Let us rather be deeply grateful that at this historic juncture we have been permitted this freedom of service. And let us strive daily to be worthy of it. We feel the immense debt we owe to the commonweal, and we desire to render it a full measure of devotion and loyalty.

*From "A Story of the Work of Friends' Ambulance Unit."

*From "After Two Years." Third Report of Friends' Ambulance Unit.

"There is one further word I should like to add in this relation. The question is sometimes asked whether in setting your hands to this task you have forsaken the faith of your fathers. There can be only one answer to that question. You have not forsaken anything worthy of your adherence if, first, you have set your hand to this task in obedience to the highest call, and secondly, that having undertaken it you have so conducted yourselves as to reveal and express that which is best in your Faith. It is not by religious talk that a Faith is practiced. It is by obedience, by clean living, by sobriety, by diligence, by good workmanship, by patience, courage and endurance, by devotion to duty, by faithfulness to the light you have, by compassion and reverence for human life, and by love of the brethren—these are fruits of an inward Faith. We desire that this Unit should stand, even amid the ranks of war, for all that; and let your service be rendered also with courtesy, kindness and chivalry. You are the bearers of a great name. Seek to be not unworthy of it, broad in sympathy, peaceful in temper, catholic in charity."

"Remember the immortal passage of Abraham Lincoln's Inaugural Address of 1865: 'With malice toward none; with charity for all; with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in; to bind up the nation's wounds, to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow and his orphan—to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves and with all nations.'"

TO ALL FRIENDS OF REGISTRATION AGE:

A recent Conference in Philadelphia of representatives of all sections of Friends in America authorized the issuance of this letter concerning the status of Friends under the Selective Service Law:

The Selective Service Law provides as follows:

"And nothing in the Act contained shall be construed to require or compel any person to serve in any of the forces herein provided for, who is found to be a member of any well-recognized religious sect or organization at present organized and existing and whose existing creed or principles forbid its members to participate in war in any form and whose religious convictions are against war or participation therein, in accordance with the creed or principles of said religious organization, but no person so exempted shall be exempted from service in any capacity that the President shall declare to be non-combatant."

The following official ruling of Provost Marshal General Crowder was issued Eighth Month 11th on the "drafting of religious sects:":

"Persons considered under paragraph (i) of Section 20 of the Regulations will be drafted, will be forwarded to a mobilization camp, will make part of the quota from the state and district from whence they come, and will be assigned to duty in a capacity declared by the President to be non-combatant."

The Mobilization Regulations prescribed by the President and published by the War Department under date of Eighth Month 8th, provides in Section 5:

"Either the posting at the office of the Local Board of notice of orders to report for military duty to the Local Board or the mailing of such notice as herein provided shall constitute the giving of notice that he is in the military service of the United States from the time specified for reporting to the Local Board for military duty."

STATEMENT OF FRIENDS' PRINCIPLES.

The effect of these two rulings has created a very grave situation for Friends. The ruling of the War Department is evidently based upon the assumption that our objection to war is merely against participation in the act of killing. On the contrary, it is much more fundamental than that. It is an objection to the whole military system as embodying a spirit which we feel is a denial of the way of life as presented by Jesus Christ. From our point of view there can be no division of "military service" into "combatant" and "non-combatant," but it is all combatant.

Even Hospital Service, so long as it is a corporate part of the army, is combatant, since the only purpose of an army is combatant and each part necessarily partakes of the purpose of the whole. The only non-combatant service which seems consistent with the principles of Friends is a service that is not a corporate part of the military organization.

WAR DEPARTMENT ASKED TO ALLOW FRIENDS TO SERVE UNDER AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE.

We have thus asked the War Department in a carefully prepared statement to allow Friends, so desiring, who are conscientiously unable to become a part of the military organization to be allowed to render service of national importance under the American Friends' Service Committee. Such service would possibly embrace Reconstruction Work in Europe, Army Y. M. C. A. work, and Social Service in this country in several forms of constructive activity. Such a course seems clearly within the spirit and letter of the exemption clause of the Law. It is the evident purpose of the Law to recognize the religious principles of Friends and to allow them to render service consistent with these principles. Furthermore, by the exact language of the Law, Friends are exempted from service, "in any of the forces (therein) provided" and by implication, "from participation in war in any form." Only if the non-combatant service to which Friends are liable is declared to be some other service than the military forces provided for in the act will the exemption clause be given the effect required by its language and by the principles which it seeks to recognize. The War Department itself issued the affidavit forms allowing men to voice their "religious convictions" against participation in any form, and the Department should naturally do nothing that would force men to violate the convictions allowed to be so expressed.

NO RULING UNTIL AFTER MOBILIZATION ORDERS.

We now have definite information that the War Department will not reconsider its ruling and that Friends with certificates of discharge on Form 174 will be ordered to report at mobilization camps. There will probably be no debarment of the forms of non-combatant service to which such Friends will be assigned until after mobilization and the number of religious objectors is determined.

YOU ARE NOW THE STANDARD BEARERS OF THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

We can only advise you to decide your own course before the high tribunal of your own conscience. This is the tribunal which the Government has recognized in its Law and in the affidavit forms of its Regulations, and obedience to the mandates of conscience is thus within the law as enacted and interpreted. You are peculiarly the standard bearers of the Society of Friends in this time of its greatest crisis during our generation. We hope that you are so deeply grounded in Christian principles as held by the Society of Friends that your consciences will lead you to act consistently with these principles. Just in proportion as this shall be the case will those principles command respect and gain influence. Only as our young men follow the historic ideals of Friends will our long-standing testimony be more than a meaningless mass of words. Only in this way shall we secure consideration for our convictions. The War Department will almost certainly judge of our principles by the action of the majority of our members. It is thus of supreme importance that those of our members who have made affidavits for discharge on the ground of being prevented by conscience from "participation in war in any form" seek very clear guidance in acting consistently with their affidavits.

APPEALS TO DISTRICT BOARDS.

All Friends whose applications for discharge on religious grounds have been denied by the Local Board should appeal their cases immediately. No discretion is vested in the Local Boards or District Boards, except to pass upon the truth of the affidavits, and certificates of discharge from combatant service on Form 174 should be issued as a matter of course upon filing the necessary papers. Only those Friends who have such certificates can come within any arrangement that may be made with the War Department for service under the American Friends' Service Committee.

SERVICE UNDER FRIENDS' COMMITTEE SHOULD BE REQUESTED OF ALL OFFICERS.

It is of the utmost importance that those who hold such certificates of discharge from combatant service or have applied for them, make known the fact to all officers and officials with whom they may have dealings. Success in obtaining satisfactory recognition of our principles will depend upon a proper showing of the objections of our membership to military service. We strongly advise you to ask very positively for service other than that which is a corporate part of the military organization. As explained above, it is the clear intent of the Law that Friends be allowed to render service that is not a part of the military forces, in accordance with their principles. We have reason to believe that Friends discharged from constant service will be allowed to serve under the American Friends' Service Committee if they request such service. However, it is of the utmost importance that a large number of Friends make such request from the very first in order to make possible such an arrangement.

It is of great importance that all Friends be properly conscious of our obligations to our country. None of us should desire exemption from all obligations of this crisis, but should be ready to render the sacrificial service which so many Friends, many of them above conscription age, are already rendering.

You may feel at all times the assurance of the very warm sympathy of the American Friends' Service Committee in the difficult problems you are facing. We strongly advise that no individual or local efforts be made to reach the War Department without consulting the above Committee.

This statement is issued in response to the urgent requests from all sections for information and advice. We realize that no statement can fully reach the deep waters through which you and our whole Society are passing. By following our vision of the truth as God reveals it to us, may we render full loyalty to the Kingdom of God by which alone can we be truly loyal to country and to every other lesser allegiance.

On behalf of the Conference, we are,

Very sincerely your friends,

Rufus M. Jones, Henry J. Cadbury, Charles F. Jenkins, Alfred C. Scattergood, C. Wilfred Conard, Joseph Rhoads, Vincent D. Nicholson, Henry Ferris.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Eighth Month 28, 1917.

We are unable to print in this number more than the following selection from a letter to the Secretary of War, signed on behalf of Friends in America.

NEWTON D. BAKER, Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.—

Dear Friend:—A few days ago a small delegation representing Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of the Religious Society of Friends presented the Secretary a brief statement with reference to the status of Friends under the Selective Service Law. Since that time there has been a conference representative of the whole of our Religious Society in America. This Conference authorized the submission to the Secretary of this memorandum dealing more broadly with the issues involved.

Our objection to war is fundamentally religious. We are opposed not only to the taking of human life, but to participation in any military service or incorporation in any military organization. It is the evident purpose of the provision of the Law to recognize the religious principles of bodies such as ours and to allow their members to render service consistent with their profound convictions. Our members are loyally ready to render a service in this world crisis commensurate with the tremendous needs of the time, but we can not be recant to the sacred ideals of our religious Society.

We therefore present a plan supported by precedent which offers a solution of our mutual problem. There has been formed a national committee, known as the American Friends' Service Committee, representing all Friends in the United States, for the purpose of finding fields of service for the members of our body. This Committee was formed several months ago without reference to the Selective Service Law, for the sole purpose of giving expression to the desire of our members (many of them above conscription age) to render service. We respectfully propose that this Committee be authorized to find service of national importance for all Friends so desiring who have obtained certificate of discharge under paragraph (i) of Section 20 of the Rules and Regulations prescribed by the President. This Committee pledges itself to find forms of service, to be approved by the President, for all such men.

A course exactly similar to the one here proposed has been taken by the British Government in the present war. At the suggestion of the War Office an arrangement was made whereby all Friends so desiring are given the privilege of accepting service under the Friends' Ambulance Committee or under the Friends' War Victims' Relief Committee and thereby of being excused from all military service.

During the Civil War Secretary Stanton requested Friends to hold a general conference to consider a proposition from him, whereby Friends' Committees should carry on extensive relief work for colored refugees with funds and labor contributed by Friends who had been drafted and who were thereby excused from military service. In response to this suggestion Friends later carried on an extensive work for Freedmen in much the same manner as we now propose to render various kinds of service in this country and abroad.

We respectfully request that a favorable ruling be made before the first order to mobilize, if possible, to relieve a very tense situation among our members, and to relieve many of them of the very difficult choice between disobedience of military orders and disloyalty to the principles of the Religious Society to which they belong.

With the most sincere purpose and with the deepest loyalty we urge that such a course be taken in order adequately to meet deep-seated convictions and to enable us to serve our country and our fellow-men without violating our consciences and our sacred faith.

(Signed),

Rufus M. Jones, Henry J. Cadbury, Walter C. Woodward, L. Hollingsworth Wood, Charles F. Jenkins, Paul J. Furnas, Morris E. Leeds, Vincent D. Nicholson.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Eighth Month 28, 1917.

At Philadelphia Monthly Meeting on the 30th, Joseph Elkinton was given a minute to accompany W. Blair Neatly as companion in his anticipated service in the Eastern and Central States.

In addition to the notes in regard to Canada Yearly Meeting, we are now informed that representatives were present from Scipio Quarterly Meeting, New York. This Quarterly Meeting has recently been united to Canada Yearly Meeting. The next session of Scipio Quarterly Meeting will be held near Jacksonville, N. Y., the last Seventh-day in Ninth Month; the meeting of Ministers and Elders the previous afternoon.

A SECTION of the Visitation Committee of Burlington and Bucks Quarterly Meeting is under appointment to be at Tuckerton Meeting, at 10.30 on the 9th, and to hold an appointed meeting at Barnegat at 3.30 that afternoon. The help of any other Friends drawn to the service will be acceptable.

NOTICES.

SOCIAL ORDER COMMITTEE.—A set of the books which the Social Order Committee recommends for reading has been placed in the Reading-room at Friends' Institute, 20 S. Twelfth Street, Philadelphia, where they are accessible for consultation and reading.

THE RELIGIOUS SERVICE COMMITTEE of Haddonfield and Salem Quarterly Meeting has appointed a Meeting for Worship, to be held on First-day, Ninth Month 9, 1917, at 3.30 P. M., in Friends' Meeting-house, Moorestown, N. J. An earnest invitation to be present is extended to Friends and all others who are interested.

The Meeting is appointed in response to a sincere concern, expressed in the Committee, for the deepening of our religious life.

On behalf of the Committee,

BENJAMIN S. DECOY, Clerk.

The Social Service Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting is calling the attention of Monthly Meetings to a list of books with the suggestion that a general reading of them by the membership will advance the interests for which the Committee is under appointment. Friends' Library, 142 N. Sixteenth Street, has duplicate sets of these books.

Friends who wish the books can borrow them for one week by parcel post if they will forward 10 cents to the Librarian to cover the expense of mailing.

LINDA MOORE,
Librarian.

FOUNDED 1865.

THE PROVIDENT LIFE & TRUST CO.
OF PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Insures Lives Acts as Executor, Etc.
Accounts Solicited Deposit by Mail
Travelers' Cheques Monthly Statements by Mail

WRITE FOR LEAFLET.

Fourth and Chestnut Streets, Phila.

H. F. BRUNER S. D. HALL

H. F. BRUNER & Co.
COAL

OFFICE AND YARD

16 N. TWENTY-FIRST STREET
PHILADELPHIA

TELEPHONES: LOcUSt 243
RACe 601

The Only Grand Prize
(Highest Award) given to Dictionaries at the Panama-Pacific Exposition was granted to WEBSTER'S NEW INTERNATIONAL

For Superiority of Educational Merit.

This new creation answers with final authority all kinds of puzzling questions such as "How is Præcipit pronounced?" "Where is Flinders?" "What is a conclusionis voyage?" "What is a bonifera?" "What is white coal?" and thousands of others.

More than 400,000 Vocabulary Terms. 30,000 Geographical Subjects. 12,000 Biographical Entries. Over 6000 Illustrations. 2700 Pages. The only dictionary with the divided page—a stroke of genius.

REGULAR and INDIA PAPER EDITIONS.

Write for specimen pages, illustrations, etc. Free, a set of Pocket Maps if you name this paper.

G. & C. MERRIAM CO., Springfield, Mass.

Letchworth Cottage
Spring Lake Beach, N. J.
Open for the Season 1917

A. C. & S. H. Letchworth

ALFRED C. HAINES
Building Glass and Paints
56 N. Front St., Philadelphia

POCONO MANOR INN
OPEN ALL YEAR

Situated in the beautiful Pocono Mountains in northeastern Pennsylvania is most attractive the year 'round.

Golf, Tennis, Bowling, Driving, Motoring, Swimming and Boating are but few of the recreations found at this popular resort.

J. W. HURLEY, Mgr., Pocono Manor, Pa.
(Pocono Summit Station, D., L. & W. K. R.)

WOOLMAN SCHOOL

A Friends' School for Social and Religious Education, Board of Managers from both branches of Friends. Courses in Old and New Testament, Church History, History and Principles of Friends, Missions, First-day School Organization, Social Betterment, International Organization, History of Religion, Comparative Religion, and Allied Subjects.

Instruction by scholarly experts from the Faculties of Swarthmore and Haverford Colleges, and from other Educational, Social and Religious Institutions of Philadelphia and vicinity.

Fall term opens Tenth Month 10, 1917.

ELBERT RUSSELL, Director
WOOLMAN SCHOOL :: SWARTHMORE, PA.

RESIDENCE: 254 S. 44th St. BELL PHONE: Baring 2084X

WILLIAM OAKES
Plumbing and Heating Contractor
ALSO LEAD BURNING
260 SOUTH TENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA
BELL PHONE: Filbert 2666.

GLASLYN-CHATHAM

PARK PLACE
ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

A Family House of Established Reputation.
Open Throughout the Year. NATHAN L. JONES.

WILLIAM S. YARNALL
MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN.

118 SOUTH FIFTEENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA.

WALL PAPERS—All Grades
WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER
Custom of Friends Specially Selected
FRANK C. BUEHL
Successor to S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON
902 SPRING GARDEN ST. :: PHILADELPHIA
Opposite Spring Garden Station, Phila. & Reading R. R.
ESTABLISHED 1840. BELL PHONE.

FOR RENT (FURNISHED)—A PLEASANT HOME in Moorestown, N. J., on Main Street, overlooking the Valley; heated by hot water; lighted by electricity; near railroad station; trolleys passing the door; near Friends' Meeting and school on same side of street; garage. Apply to M. W. STOKES, 166 E. Main St., Moorestown, N. J.

THE HOLMES PRESS
Printers
J. L. Engle, Pres.
1336-40 CHERRY ST. PHILA.

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE MATERIAL THAT WE SELL

CONSULT
YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

THE LAKESIDE

EAGLES MERE, PA.

Unobstructed lake view; capacity 250. Elevator steam heat, golf, tennis, boating and bathing. Attractive motoring through the surrounding country.

GARAGE

J. S. KIRK & SON

Premier Duplicating Co.

Micrographing, Multigraphing, Printing, Type-writing, Addressing, Mailing, etc.
630 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

GIRARD TRUST CO.
BROAD and CHESTNUT STS.

CAPITAL AND SURPLUS } $10,000,000

Acts as Executor, Trustee, Guardian, Administrator, Assignee and Receiver. Safes to Rent in Burglar-proof Vaults. Interest Allowed on Deposits. :: ::

E. B. MORRIS
PRESIDENT

FRIENDS OR OTHERS WHO ARE THINKING of attending Camp in the coming year will find comfortable rooms in a Friends' family, at reasonable prices, at 238 Linden Avenue, Ithaca, N. Y. Five minutes' walk from Campus. EDWARD WOOD.

MOTHER'S HELPER WANTED—A WOMAN UNDER 30 years for position, where she is treated as one of the family. Must be responsible and willing. Reference required. Apply "C", THE FRIEND.

WANTED—BY TWO FRIENDS, TWO OR THREE W. rooms and board in Christiana family in neighborhood of Coulter Street Meeting, Germantown, Pa. References exchanged. ANNE T. BAILY, 1115 W. State St., TREASURY, N. J.

Tannate Saves Trouble

HINTS ON LACING

TANNATE
LACE LEATHER
J. E. RHODES & SONS
 PHILADELPHIA 12 N. THIRD ST.
 NEW YORK 102 BEEKMAN ST.
 CHICAGO 522 W. RANDOLPH ST.
 FACTORY AND TANNERY, WILMINGTON, DEL.

Write for this Booklet

 Philadelphia's
 Representative Store

R. C. Ballinger Ernest R. Yarnall John A. Stratton

TELEPHONES

Bell—Filbert 26-15 - - Keystone—Race 637

R. C. BALLINGER & CO.

CONTRACTORS and BUILDERS

218 N. Thirteenth St.

Philadelphia

ELKINS, MORRIS & CO.

BANKERS

REPRESENTATIVES

WM. E. CADBURY

PAUL W. BROWN

JAMES P. MAGILL

LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.RAILROAD AND
PUBLIC UTILITY BONDS

FOR

CONSERVATIVE INVESTMENT.

FULL PARTICULARS ON REQUEST.

We recommend the use of

RAG FEATHERWEIGHT

(Antique Finish)

As the paper for high-grade Books and other Publications

JOSEPH G. FOGGFUNERAL DIRECTOR and EMBALMER

S. W. COR. 16TH and RACE STREETS

Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals

BELL 'PHONE SPRUCE 1646

W. J. MACWATTERS

WITH

HARDWICK & GAGEE CO.

SUCCESSORS TO

IVINS, DIETZ & GAGEE

Let me help you in selecting your

Rugs and CarpetsOur new imports of Oriental Rugs
are of the highest merit

1220-22 MARKET ST. PHILA.

HARRY S. LEE

313 WALNUT STREET

PAINTER AND GRAINER
 ANTIQUE and OFFICE FURNITURE RESTORED
 JOBBING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO
 ESTIMATES

W. B. WEAVER
UNDERTAKER and EMBALMER

550-552 N. 5TH ST., PHILA., PA.

 Special Attention Given to Funerals
 In and Out of the City. Also Chapel
 Accommodations for Funerals.

BELL 'PHONE

ESTABLISHED 1880

SEE WALKER & KEPLER

FOR

Good Electrical Work

531 CHESTNUT ST. PHILA.

Assoc. M. AM. Soc. C. E.

Bell 'Phone—Lombard 3412

EDWIN M. EVANSCONTRACTOR & BUILDERMy jobbing department is well equipped,
prompt and efficient

321 S. LAWRENCE ST.

PHILA.

WM. H. PILE'S SONSBOOK AND JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE

PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

PUBLIC STENOGRAPHERGEORGE B. COCK, Liberty Building

Established 1896. Experience 39 years; Medical 13

 THE following timely books, mostly of those recommended by the Social Service Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, are for sale at Friends' Book Store, 304
 Arch Street, Philadelphia.

"The Church and the Hour."	Vina D. Scudder,	$1.00
"The Social Problem."	J. H. Hollander,	1.25
"The Abolition of Poverty."	C. A. Ellwood,	1.50
"Christianizing the Social Order."	Walter Rauschenbusch,	7.50
"The Day of Our Visitation."	William Littleby,	50
"A Word of Remembrance and Caution to the Rich."	John Woolman,	95

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 91.

FIFTH-DAY, NINTH MONTH 13, 1917.

No. 11.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price $2.00 a year in Advance.

Publisher, DAVIS H. FORSYTHE.

Editors { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
 { DAVIS H. FORSYTHE,
 { MARY WARD.

Make remittances payable to

THE FRIEND,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

BURDEN-BEARERS.

We all are in some way or other bearers of burdens that at times seem too heavy to be borne. Some of us are weighed down with poverty, others with riches, some have the daily nagging duties that distress them, some endure ill-health, many suffer from temptations or loneliness. Burden-bearing is the common lot. The more conspicuous the position the heavier are the burdens often imposed upon men.

Even that marvelous and courageous leader, Moses, in a time of despair desired that God would take him out of life because of the burdens he had to carry. Listen to his prayer: "Wherefore have I not found favor in Thy sight that Thou layest the burden upon me?" . . . "If Thou deal thus with me, kill me, I pray Thee out of hand. . . and let me not see my wretchedness." If Moses who conversed with God thus suffered we must expect that others will have many similar hard experiences.

Materially favored Americans little understand how men and women of other lands carry huge weights on their backs whilst engaged in daily toil. These great loads are sustained for the most part uncomplainingly. The workers bear them alone, but sometimes divide with one another their crushing burdens. In non-Christian lands such pathetic sights are very common. There are, however, for most of us spiritual embarrassments as well as physical burdens to be endured.

Those who love Christ, the Saviour, and God, the pitying Father of all, frequently bear spiritual or material burdens to the very limit of human endurance. If we play the man's or woman's part we cannot escape them. But why should we desire to too easily cast them aside? Did not our Lord bear the heavy cross of wood to Calvary and almost sink beneath it? Did not His spiritual agony prove the most terrible of all? He cried, "My God, why hast Thou forsaken me?" He participated in the toil of the working-men and the sorrows of the rich. He invited all to come to Himself as the one source of strength and rest to all who labor or are heavy-laden. "Come unto me," He cried, "and I will give you rest." Do we thus go to Him?

Let us take Him at His word. Let us for a few minutes every day take our Bibles and commune with God and in prayer lay our burdens at His feet. This is one practical way of casting them upon Him. John Oxenham has beautifully written:

Burden-bearers are we all,
Great and small.
Burden-bearers be ye all,
Great and small!
Where another shares the load,
Two draw nearer God.
Yet there are burdens we can share with none,
Save God;
And paths remote where we must walk alone,
With God;
For lonely burden and for path apart—
Thank God!
If these but serve to bring the burdened heart
To God

SAN JOSÉ, Calif.

W. C. A.

ABSOLUTISTS.

Much of the service of Friends for civil and religious liberty in the past has been done by absolutists. Such have generally carried the Society as a corporate unit with them. This process in some cases has been slow, but a wise patience has won out, as in the notable instance of John Woolman's opposition to human slavery. So the absolutists' method has come to be identified in the public mind with Quakerism. As a Society we not only stand for certain principles, we also stand for a very certain way of expressing these principles.

At the present moment we are face to face with a new occasion for this old-time form of expression in the execution, by the military authorities, of the selective draft act. Apparently, no one seems able to answer positively whether our young Friends, who are involved, will become absolutists, or whether forms of so-called non-combatant service will satisfy their conscientious convictions. Their position is one that demands a very large measure of sympathy just because it is not as simple and easy of judgment as on some other occasions of military draft. The Congressional act, as well as the act of Parliament, has attempted to do justice to certain forms of conscientious objection to military service. The execution of both acts may prove very defective in this effort. Compliance with prescribed non-combatant duty may make one, after all, an actual soldier, although certain requirements of soldier-duty may be waived. Quite a number of young men in England, who had accepted alternative service, found themselves thus involved, and courageously, with expressions of much regret for seeming obstinacy, withstood orders and submitted to imprisonment. Although it seems probable, it does not follow that our government will make the same mistakes. Not a few of our young men may undertake the trial of co-operation with as determined intentions to stand by religious conviction, as others who immediately maintain the absolutist position. It seems impossible to say more to us than that they shall be entirely true to the highest sense of Divine requirement revealed to them.

THE FRIEND has said more than once editorially that government recognition of the conscientious objector marks a step forward in the progress of the world toward full religious liberty. The same acknowledgment has been liberally expressed in documents issued by Yearly Meetings, by Representative Meetings and by Peace Societies. This recognition carries with it a certain obligation of co-operation from us all. How can we wisely express this co-operation? Can we be absolutists, and express it?

It is well to remember that we can not isolate the acts of our lives. Our obligations are two-fold or many-fold. We owe allegiance to the State, but it is a qualified allegiance. We owe an unqualified allegiance to God. How are the two allegiances to be exercised so that both may be clearly expressed? Is it not largely a question of our manner, even in maintaining the higher loyalty? The young men in English prisons have given concrete answers to our questions. Their resistance has been notable, but their manner of resistance more so. It is recorded of many of them that they have won the respect and sympathy of those appointed to exact military duty of them. In some instances a very considerable field of service has been opened by "the better way" which they have illustrated. In the view of military authority the presence of such in army barracks has been an infection of pacifism quite unwholesome to military discipline. The militarists are concerned to know how to be rid of such invincible soldiers!

Absolutists are thus of two classes. We have heard one class described by saying of one of them: "He is looking for trouble." Belligerency seems innate in some natures. The great Author of Peace has a work to do for such. They know what is right. Let them seek to know how best to bring the right to pass. Up to a certain point our great Example was the most militant character in history. "He was brought as a lamb to the slaughter and as a sheep before his shearers is dumb, so He opened not His mouth." The whole essence of a winning peace is contained in this record. It must be principle by Christian method quite as surely as by Christian principle.

In the recent conference between Provost Marshal Crowder and two Friends in Washington, the general exclaimed, "You must remember, gentlemen, that other people have consciences besides yourselves." There was, of course, immediate assent, but an unexpected opportunity to point out that conscience illuminated by religious conviction is a different thing from the conscience of tradition and education and reason. A conscience shot through with "Thou shalt" and "Thou shalt not" of God, can readily submit itself to certain available tests (the corporate religious conscience, for instance), but it can not yield to an authority of government, even though that authority may seem to be backed by the power to take human life. No government misled into such a blunder could long survive. Even soldiers resent, finally, the persecution of a real Christian spirit.

And so as our young men face this crisis or go forward into it, we commend them most especially to this absolute Christian spirit. It is the absolutist's only safe armor. We know, something of the sense of being abashed before such an "ordal of fire." The shrinking of human nature, the conviction that our lives do not match the unusual claims we make, the sickening feeling that we are assuming superior righteousness—these and numerous other similar assaults weaken us. But in the fire, if we falter not, is the image of the Son of Man. He can save us, but He enables us to feel that our escape is of small moment. He can save the world—is saving the world—by this process. We are able to adopt the words, humbly, reverently, "Not I, but Christ."

J. H. B.

LETTER FROM BENJAMIN VAIL.

[The following letter, written to Edward G. Rhoads, will interest our readers. Benjamin Vail was long a faithful and interested manager of THE FRIEND, and we have printed more than one editorial from his hand.—Ems.]

Thy kindly and loving reference to me related to me by my dear wife has so touched me, I have taken the present occasion to write to thee.

I have had a dream in which I seemed to see thy late beloved father, Jonathan E. Rhoads, in his most remarkable fruitfulness, at home, by sea, and in perils by sea and land, even to unaccomplished service in old age, laying down his head in peace with the dear Lord Jesus and his fellow-men.

Although a dream, it left such a feeling of sweetness on my mind, I feel I cannot long forego the privilege of sharing it.

I seemed to see myself on thy brother George A. Rhoads's farm, in his broad wheat field. I found it had been reaped and I proceeded to measure that which was left in the uncut fence corners. Standing beside it, I found it was seven feet high. I thought of Boaz and his gleaners with freshness and life. There seemed to be one head of wheat of the bearded kind to eight times as many of the smooth kind, thus reminding of the abundant fruitfulness referred to. I also thought of our well-beloved Daniel Wheeler, that much of his work abroad resembled that of thy dear father, and the offering of a friend in a Meeting for Sufferings was brought to mind.

The oak has fallen,

Fallen while thy loins were girded still
 Thy feet with Zion's dew still wet
 And in thy hand retaining yet
 The pilgrim's staff and scallop-shell.

The fruitfulness of labors like thy father's is set forth in the Book of Revelation: "The tree of the rivers of the water of Life, clear as crystal, yielding her fruit every month, and even the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations."

I look back with love, which words cannot express, as mercies are remembered, and hopefully, trustfully forward. I feel the need of getting a little nearer those from whom I have been unavoidably separated, and I sigh for a place where "rumors of successful or unsuccessful wars, might never reach us more."

I may not be long with you, my heart overflows with love as I write it. The dear Lord's will be done.

When I began this letter I had thee especially on my mind, but my love extends to all my relatives and friends, and though I am no longer a contributor to THE FRIEND, if this effort should be approved I have thought with some omissions it might have a place in its columns.

BENJAMIN VAIL.

EIGHTH MONTH 10, 1917.

THE SAVOR OF LIFE.—As the flowing of the ocean doth fill every creek and branch thereof, and then retires again towards its own being and fulness, and leaves a savor behind it, so doth the life and virtue of God flow into every one of your hearts, whom he hath made partakers of his Divine nature; and when it withdraws but a little, it leaves a sweet savor behind it, that many can say they are made clean through the Word that he hath spoken to them; in which innocent condition you may see what you are in the presence of God, and what you are without Him.—WILLIAM LEDDRA.

MY PRAYER.

Selected by Alice Balderston.

And thou shalt be a blessing.—Gen. xii: 2.

Make me a blessing, Lord, to those I love,
To smooth and brighten their oft rugged way;
Give me Thy blessed comfort from above,
That I may comfort others, day by day.

Make me a blessing, Lord, to those I meet,
Even amid the hurrying eager throng;
Give me Thy Spirit, ever calm and sweet,
Thy Light to shine through me both clear and strong.

I am so weak I hardly dare to pray
That my small light may bless yet farther still;
That weary ones, the loved, the far away,
Even I may help to show Thy Love and Will.

And yet I know the weak are strong in Thee,
And knowing this, I would, in Thy Dear Name,
The greatest of all blessings that can be,
This precious gift, this crown of blessing claim.

To be a blessing in this world of woe—
"And thou shalt be a blessing"—'twas Thy word
This is the greatest gift Thou canst bestow
Give it I pray to me, even me, O Lord.

LETTER FROM JANE BALDERSTON.

The following welcome account indicates how vacation time is spent in China [Eds]:

ENROUTE CHENGTU TO MT. OMEI, Sixth Month 27, 1917.

Dear Family:—

We (Dr. and Margaret Stubbs, baby Ruth, three others and myself) left Chengtu on Second-day afternoon, about three o'clock. We had a most convenient time getting off, for the river runs within a stone's throw of the Stubbs's new home and we just piled ourselves and our things onto a boat there. We had to change to those we are now on a little farther down the river, however. We are now on three boats—three men on one, a cow on one, and three women and little Ruth on the third.

The boats are very nice, something like the ones we came up the Yangste on, only not that big. We have a regular Pullman sleeper in here—two beds along one side and one on the other, and a bath-room at one end, curtained off from the rest. Ruth's small bamboo basket bed goes on top of some one else's bed in the day time and at night goes on chairs in the aisle, so that if she falls out she falls onto another bed. We six foreigners all have our meals in here, my bed serving as table because the canvas stretches a little tighter than on the other beds. Over our head is bamboo matting and there are no windows, just the doors at either end. It is fortunate the weather is cool.

A little of the country we came through this morn made me think of the Hudson, the river not so very wide and beautiful high wooded hills on either side. Then the hills leveled down again and I had one glimpse which made me think of our own Octoraro. The landscape does not often remind me of home out here, the hills don't seem to be the same shape or put together in the same way. And we have nothing at home like the graceful bamboo which is a part of nearly every landscape out here. We cannot get off and walk as we are going down stream. The three rowers and the current keep us going at a goodly pace.

We have arrived (Fourth-day noon) at the place where we change to chairs, but we will probably stay on the boat till to-morrow morn, as it will take a good while to get men for all our loads, etc.

(The letter they had sent ahead, asking for men to carry them and their belongings, had not arrived, and as men were very scarce and hard to get, they had to go in smaller groups, the long day's journey, to the bungalow on the mountain side.

Jane did not get off until Seventh-day morn at 5.30, being the last of her party, and traveling in company with other missionaries going her way.)

Till three o'clock in the afternoon the country was quite level and the vegetation very luxuriant. It is farther south than either Chengtu or Tungshwan, so there are different flowers, and it all looks more tropical, the crops, chiefly rice, being very luxuriant. Though we were facing Mt. Omei all day we had no good view of it because of the mists that hung over it. They kept shifting continually, so that at times we saw nearly the whole of it, and the lower mountains on either side we saw quite clearly at times.

We began the climb about 3.30 and I wish I could tell you how glorious it was when we began to get into the mountain gorge. Giant trees and some beautiful flowers in tropical luxuriance all around and over one, and the trees were all damp and dripping, just as we read about in the tropics. The beautiful clear mountain streams dashed over the rocks and made graceful water-falls. We came to a place where the water from a spring trickled out and we could drink it just as it was without boiling. You don't know how much that means out here.

Soon after seven we reached our little bungalow up here among the clouds; I'm not saying that just to be poetical, for we really are among the clouds about half the time. And when we are not enveloped ourselves it is most interesting to watch them floating over the other mountains around us, unfolding first one and then another and then all together. The first night I was here it was clear—beautiful starlight, but an ocean of clouds just below in which a few mountain tops stood out like islands.

There are a good many foreigners up here in various bungalows scattered around. We cannot see any other house from here, though there are one or two not so very far away. Yesterday there was an English service at a small chapel, which has been built by the foreigners. There were many old friends to greet and some new ones to learn to know. Four of our last year's language class are here.

Our little Ruth passed her first milestone yesterday. She is a very active little puss, hardly still a minute, says "pretty," "daddy," etc.

MT. OMEI, Seventh Month 7, 1917.

Last Fifth-day we planned for a picnic to the "Flying Bridges." It was a glorious day after the storm of the night before, and such a wonderful place. Our party numbered six besides little Ruth, who was carried in a basket on a man's back. We had to climb down, down, from here, then up and across a ridge and then down some more. The last part of the time we were on the main road leading to the top—a road traveled every year by thousands of Buddhist pilgrims. We kept passing them all along the way, and we also passed, every mile or so, a big temple in which they were burning incense and going through all sorts of performances.

The "Flying Bridges," a pair of them, are just a stone's throw apart, and span a couple of narrow deep ravines, with roaring mountain torrents away down below. The two streams come together just below the bridges. I believe there used to be swinging bamboo bridges there once, to which the name was given, but now there are substantial stone ones. I'm sure if this place were in Switzerland, or any other place where tourists frequent, every one would have heard of "Flying Bridges." Either ravine in itself is wonderful in its beauty, but the two so close together and so much alike are certainly remarkable. We clambered down into one of the ravines and climbed and waded up-stream for quite a distance till we found a nice place for lunch. The peaks on either side and all around us rose almost perpendicularly and were so majestic. Even little Ruth tipped her little head away back as she gazed up to the top in awe and wonder and said "Pitty."

The flowers here on the mountains are surely wonderful. Down at "Flying Bridges" we found begonias very much like those we have at home, and every here and there we found great white Easter lilies. There are also orange tiger lilies.

Another form of diversion which is now on is tennis tournaments. There are three courts here which we take turns using, in the afternoons when it is not rainy. This week we start with women's doubles, then men's doubles and then mixed doubles. As we have several very good players it promises to be good fun.

SEVENTH MONTH 10, 1917.

I've waked up bright and early this morn, and the view out here in front of me is so inspiring that it makes me want, oh so much, to be able to tell you all about it. Besides the seven or eight ridges of hills which stretch dark and imposing, right in front of us here there are higher ones away to the north just dimly outlined against the blue sky. I'm sure there is some snow on one of them, but it may be freshly fallen—I think it is not quite high enough for perpetual snow. If I should go out a little way to the south I'm sure I could see the "Golden Summit" of this grand old mountain.

Our news from the outside world for the last few days has not been at all encouraging. There is fighting again in Chengtu, much worse they say than before. About one-eighth of the city has been burned. In two or three cases the fires have come right up to the compound, but have been put out there. The Canadian Methodist Hospital did catch fire, but it was put out. Our report is—all foreign property safe so far, though many of the houses are riddled with shot. There are only a few foreigners left in Chengtu, so far none of them have been hit by shot or shell, which seems most miraculous. The Davidsons, Silcocks and others like ourselves have taken to the hills for the summer and a change of climate, as they generally do in the summertime.

JANE C. BALDERSTON.

PORTIONS OF A LETTER FROM ALFRED LOWRY, JR.

Thes says thee hopes to hear how our plans develop, but that is difficult. As thee doubtless already knows, I am established here at Paris, the spider in the centre of the web, except that my flies are already prisoners. I find it exceedingly interesting and congenial work, and I am as far as I know the only person (in our work at least) who has been in prison-camp work both in Germany and France, though there is one who was in Austria before the "fuss." So far I have not been to a single camp, but am expecting to leave to-night for Aurillac, in the centre of France, nearly, to visit some detachments of Sleswigois (who, being Danes up till the time of the capture of Southern Jutland, are regarded much as the Alsations and enjoy a régime de faveur). It is on that account that I am allowed to visit them. The only other groups American secretaries are permitted to visit are the Poles and Czechs, who also have special privileges as being of those who are "agin the government" at home and therefore friendly to the Allies. For our other work we have to depend on French pastors and Swiss, and of course we do a good deal in the way of supplying wanted articles through correspondence.

I was bothered a little at first when I heard that all of us in Y. M. C. A. work were to be considered by the American Government as mobilized. But inasmuch as I had gone into the work long before such a thing was thought of and because I felt it right to do so, and inasmuch as the nature of the work has not changed any since, I feel now entirely satisfied and am glad if the government can see things so broadly. We shall stay on here quite indefinitely.

It has been good to have so many of our friends here this last month. Nearly all of them have gone now, except Agnes N.

It is of course interesting to be in Paris again. They still hang a triumphant sign out of the cafés "le téléphone fonctionne" and with good reason, too, for it often doesn't. Roses I saw being sold on the street by the kilo, the other day. In a taxi we just missed running a man down when going at high speed along the Champs-Élysées. So thee sees things haven't changed much. About ten days ago we had two air-raids on successive nights. Little or no damage was done, as far as I know. It was like the wailing of some terrified, defenseless creature to hear the sirens on the auto-fire-engines as they coursed through the darkened streets, giving the alarm, but the "breloque" or "All's well!" of the bugles, an hour or so later, enabled us to go back to bed and cheerfully to sleep. It is a wonderfully reassuring sound—you don't need at all to be told what it means when you hear it.

In nearly all my letters from here I've told of what a joy it is to be able to attend meeting again. T. Edmund Harvey, the M. P., and a recorded minister have been in France for a couple of weeks now and we have had the privilege of having him out to dinner, though we have to be more careful here than we should like, because prices are so high and it costs so much just for plain living.

Thy sincere friend,

A. L. Jr.

TEMPERANCE.

A department edited by BENJAMIN F. WHITSON, of Moylan, Pa., on behalf of the Friends' Temperance Association of Philadelphia.

BEER is a more dangerous enemy to Germany than all the armies of France.—VON MOLTKE.

WE are fighting Germany, Austria and Frink, and so far as I can see, the greatest of these deadly foes is Drink.—DAVID LLOYD-GEORGE.

THE Government of the United States is urging every housewife to use the utmost care in the selection and use of foodstuffs. On the other hand, the Government is allowing enough grain to go to waste in the manufacture of liquor to feed seven million people.—W. C. T. U.

THE American troops now in France are being served with the French army ration which includes a daily portion of wine.—J. FRANK HANLY.

"LAST year," says The Christian Advocate, "the United States exported 6,000,000 gallons of liquors, one-fifth of which went to Africa, to make the 'Dark Continent' darker, and another large fraction went to make matters worse in Mexico."

PORTO RICO VOTED DRY on Seventh Month 16th by a majority of more than three to two. The principal city on the island, San Juan, gave a majority of more than two to one for prohibition. Caguas, famous as a tobacco town, is reported to have given 3707 votes for prohibition and 202 against. It may be remembered that the proposal in Congress to stop the sale of liquors in Porto Rico by Federal law was stoutly opposed by the liquor men. They claimed it would be unjust to our island subjects to force prohibition upon them. Accordingly they asked that it be put to vote. The result is not what they anticipated, but it is none the less complimentary to Porto Rico.

Seventy per cent. of the registered voters of the island are illiterate, but not so illiterate that they did not know what they were voting for, inasmuch as it was agreed between the wets and dries that each side should adopt a symbol for the voters' guidance. The dries chose the cocoanut, because the half-ripe cocoanut contains about a pint of milk, which is declared to be the cheapest and most nourishing soft drink available in Porto Rico. The wets chose for their symbol the rum bottle. It was, therefore, a contest between cocoanut milk and rum, and the cocoanut won.

THE ZERO IN ARGUMENT.—The saloon is not doomed. No institution that has existed for thousands of years can be doomed. Wholesalers' and Retailers' Review.

BRITISH COLUMBIA WILL BE DRY after Tenth Month 1st, by act of Legislature, signed by the Lieut.-Governor. This is the re-enactment of a measure passed one year ago, but submitted to referendum. The vote of the province showed 5000 majority for prohibition, but the soldier-vote overseas was taken and, according to the records, overthrew the majority with 800 votes to spare. Later it was found that many soldiers voted wet two or three times, and that dead and missing men also were recorded as voting against the measure. The new law overcomes the fraud and sustains the will of the majority.

THE HONOR ROLL OF STATES that have placed the ban on the liquor business has become quite lengthy, but readers of THE FRIEND may enjoy reviewing it in order to keep informed to date and to teach it to the children.

Alabama	Kansas	Oregon
Alaska	Maine	Porto Rico
Arizona	Michigan	South Carolina
Arkansas	Mississippi	South Dakota
Colorado	Montana	Tennessee
Dist. of Columbia	Nebraska	Utah
Georgia	New Hampshire	Virginia
Idaho	North Carolina	Washington
Indiana	North Dakota	West Virginia
Iowa	Oklahoma

In four of these States the law has not yet become operative. The dates are as follows:—Indiana Fourth Month 3, 1918; Michigan Fourth Month 30, 1918; New Hampshire Fifth Month 1, 1918; Montana Twelfth Month 31, 1918.

MAILED LIQUOR ADVERTISEMENTS are barred from all these States, or will be on the dates above given, also from many cities, towns and political subdivisions elsewhere that have voted dry. The effect of enforcement of the so-called Reed Amendment will mean that practically every publication now carrying liquor ads will have to drop them, or, at least, get out separate editions, and this latter would not only be expensive, but uncertain.

THE UNITED STATES SENATE, on Eighth Month 1st, approved, by a vote of 65 to 20, the measure providing for the submission to the States of a constitutional amendment to prohibit the manufacture, sale, importation or exportation of alcoholic liquors. The bill carries with it an amendment limiting the time for its passage by the States to six years. This means that unless three-fourths of the State Legislatures (thirty-six States) approve it within the time limit, the Amendment will fail of adoption unless taken up again by Congress and re-submitted to the States.

Several Senators known for their anti-prohibition views voted for the Shepherd resolution. Included in this group were Knox of Pennsylvania; Frelinghuysen, of New Jersey; and Stone, of Missouri. Efforts of Senator Stone to provide for compensation of distillers and other liquor-dealers' property and of Senator Phelan, of California, to exempt beer and wines from the prohibition were defeated.

Senator Borah, of Idaho, a pronounced prohibitionist, insisted that Congress has no right nor power to limit the time for ratification of amendments to the Constitution.

Senator Stone's proposal for compensation to the manufacturers and dealers was defeated, 50 to 31. Senator Newlands, of Nevada, offered to make the constitutional amendment apply only to distilled liquors, but was defeated, 57 to 22. Senator Phelan's proposal was to submit two amendments, leaving to the States the choice between "bone-dry" prohibition and only the elimination of distilled spirits, but this was defeated, 55 to 26.

Opposition to the Resolution was led by Senator Penrose, who expressed "serious doubts as to whether any amendment to the Constitution may properly be placed in that instrument without the consent of all the States." The reader will bear in mind that the Constitution itself provides that it may be amended by a vote of three-fourths of the States, and that sixty odd years ago there was a conflict that people in general regarded as settling forever such "serious doubts" as the Pennsylvania Senator expresses. "Legislation of this character," he says, "ought to be of strictly State concern." But some of us are sadly aware of the fact that in the Senator's own State it has been strictly his concern to prevent local option or prohibition. The Shepherd resolution now goes to the House of Representatives. The friends of the measure believe the House will concur with the action of the Senate.

WHISKY MANUFACTURE must stop in the United States until the end of the war, but brewers may be allowed to continue making beer. Such, at least, is the present ruling of the Food Administration. The fact is freely admitted that more grain is consumed by the brewers than by the distillers—good authorities say more than twice as much. As a matter of food conservation, it is inconsistent, therefore, to stop one and not to stop the other also. But the plain truth seems to be that the brewers and their defenders are too powerful a combination for the Government at Washington to subordinate. On the other hand, public sentiment has become so intense in its demand that the waste and ruin of the liquor business be stopped, that something had to be done at once. So the distiller was declared to be the Jonah, and after Ninth Month 8th there is to be no importation or manufacture of distilled liquors until the war is over and the ruling changed. May the war be brief, but the ruling permanent! One nuisance suppressed is some gain. But it appears that dealers in distilled spirits may continue selling the same until the supply is exhausted or commandeered by the Government at a profit to the owner of ten per cent.

WAR PROHIBITION INCLUDING BEER as well as whisky, might have passed Congress if President Wilson had not interposed in order to rush some war-measures. The bill had passed the House and had been recommended favorably by the Senate Committee. The liquor men were in consternation. Senator Penrose is reported as saying he would "filibuster all summer" before he would allow such a measure to pass. At this juncture the President appealed to the Anti-Saloon League on patriotic grounds not to insist on the provision affecting beer and wine. The A. S. L. asked why the other side should not surrender as an act of patriotism, seeing that Congress and public sentiment to a large degree were both favorable to prohibition during the continuance of the war. But being informed that such an appeal to them would be useless, the officers of the League asked President Wilson to put his request in writing and to sign it. This was done and the League made reply that the wishes of the Chief Executive would, under the circumstances, be complied with. Some people—Ex-Governor Hanley for example—seem to feel that the A. S. L. made a serious mistake by this concession. Others regard it as an act of wisdom, likely to gain for the cause of prohibition added respect and support, while putting the opposition in greater reproach. The vote of the Senate for the Constitutional Amendment is regarded by the A. S. L. as indicating that the course taken was the wise one.

ONE-HALF the saloons in the United States are in four States, viz: New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois and New Jersey.

THERE are as many saloons in the city of New York as the total number of saloons in a certain thirty-six States.

ONE-FOURTH of all the saloons in the United States are in the six cities of New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, Cleveland and St. Louis.

We have had nation-wide prohibition in all the great American industries for nearly ten years. National prohibition itself should no longer be delayed.

II. IMPRESSIONS OF KOREA AND CHINA.

GILBERT BOWLES.

(Continued from page 125.)

The next morning, a little after seven o'clock, Fourth Month 23rd, Walter Williams and I started on an eight-mile journey by sedan chair, walking about half the time, for Gwapu, where we were to take the steam-boat for Nankin. The sights by the way were similar to what we had seen coming over two days before—though we took a different road. The land was everywhere thirsting for rain, and so it was no wonder that in the city of Luho the priests in the Mohammedan section of the city had been making much of their prayers for rain. The common occupation of children through all that region is watching the water buffaloes—the main domestic animal—while they pick the short grass on the narrow, raised pathways which surround each tiny field. Ofttimes boys or girls will be seen sitting on their backs or holding the rope fastened into the nose ring. Wheat is the principal crop and the buffaloes have to be carefully guarded lest they clip off the wheat just heading out. Before we reached the town of Gwapu, we were met by the teachers and pupils of both the boys and girls primary and intermediate schools, which are carried on as an essential part of the Mission work in the town. The head teacher in the boys' school is a graduate of the Friends' Academy of Luho. He seems devoted to his work. Not long ago he told Walter Williams that he would stand by the work, no matter what hardships he had to endure. His father is the resident evangelist who is giving his time to building up a group of Christians. As soon as we were taken into the home of the head-teacher in the boys' school his wife appeared with tea. She is a tiny woman, with feet bound when she was small, and though they were unbound when she became a Christian, she has difficulty in walking. Although we told them we had our lunch with us, she kept bringing on things to eat, saying that it was her joy and delight to cook for others, and her shining face was a sufficient proof that she spoke the truth. I have seen few women who gave clearer proof of a genuine love of serving others as a means of feeding her own soul and of showing her love for the Master. This was my first Chinese meal, and although it was only mid-forenoon, we keenly relished the hot cakes, the dish of water-chestnuts and chicken and the eggs. The half hour before our boat came we spent in the little meeting-house, where were gathered the teachers and pupils from both schools and a few Christians and inquirers. I spoke briefly on "Remember now thy Creator in the days of youth," passing to the older people with the assurance that if one thus lives the "evil days" will never come, for the pathway of the righteous is as a shining light, which grows brighter and brighter until the perfect day. Our boat ride to Nankin, much of the way on the big Son of the Ocean, gave us a chance to talk over many of the things which we have in common. If the steam-boats could be depended upon to go regularly, the Luho work would not seem so far from the Friends at Nankin, but floods or low water on the branch of the Yangste which runs up to Luho, or a sudden decision of the manager that more money can be made by another route, makes this means of conveyance uncertain. This practically cuts the Friends' work in two, as it is almost impossible for more than one or two to go over from Nankin to the "three semi-annual meetings" which they have each year at Luho.

On the morning before leaving Nankin for Shanghai, Fourth Month 24th, I spoke briefly to a meeting in the Hospital Chapel, attended by the pupils of the Girls' High School, the Hospital staff and a few other Christians. As I saw the opportunities which are brought to these girls and to others connected with the work, I felt it fitting to dwell upon Paul's words in Galatians: "I do not make void the grace of God," "Coming in from the outside for a brief time and seeing what is really being done by the missionaries and their co-workers, through the gifts and prayers of the people at home, makes one feel more keenly the great blessings and opportunities which come to these brought into Christian institutions in a land like China, where there are millions having no hope, and without God in the world.

The Friends of Ohio and New York may well be grateful for the work which their representatives in China are doing. They have a great field. I was glad to see their meeting-house in Nankin, and to meet Pastor Gao, and Dr. Esao, head of the hospital. I left Nankin feeling that I had really entered into the conditions, problems and needs of the work.

NANKIN TO SHANGHAI.—The journey of 193 miles from Nankin to Shanghai brought me out of the dry, dusty and barren region in which I had been since reaching Manchuria. This "region south of the River" is known as one of the richest of China. It is a level plain, through which passes the "grand Canal." The country seemed covered with green wheat and the rich yellow rape-flower, now in full bloom. Rape seed oil is one of the staple products of the region. This is also one of China's great rice-producing districts. We passed Lake Taihu, where there are many varieties of fish. The many mulberry trees witness that this is one of the great silk-producing districts of China. The trees grow much larger than in Japan, but do not produce nearly so many leaves for a given area.

At the Shanghai station I was glad to see my good friend, Isaac Mason, who soon put me into a jinrikisha and took me to their home on Dixwell Road, out on the edge of the city. I was glad to be located in my room, which was to be my headquarters until sailing for Japan.

(To be continued.)

AN ISLAND VACATION.

I do not remember ever to have read fish stories in THE FRIEND, but an account of a few days fishing for tuna off Block Island—a true fish story—may be of interest to devotees of Isaac Walton.

Reference to the geography will show that Block Island is about ten miles south of the southern coast of Rhode Island, separated from it by the waters of Block Island Sound.

The island is ten miles long and about a mile wide at its broadest point. It is favored with two harbors, the "Old Harbor" on its eastern side, formed by the throwing out of breakwaters, while on the western side and directly opposite to it, the large and spacious "New Harbor" has in recent years been made by the cutting away of a narrow rim of land which separated from the ocean the "Great Salt Pond," whose waters were sufficiently deep for all ordinary craft.

The surface of the land is rolling, abrupt bluffs rise at intervals along the coast, typical New England farm houses and fishermen's cottages dot the island and its shores, and even the characteristic stone walls marking off the fields and farms are not wanting. It is a picturesque isle and all its breezes are sea breezes, pleasant enough to the summer visitor, but doubtless often discomfiting to the fourteen hundred people, mostly farmers and fishermen, who make it their permanent home.

Its political name is New Shoreham, and it is one of the constituent towns of the State of Rhode Island.

To this alluring spot our little party sailed one balmy day from Watch Hill, the beautiful promontory which forms the extreme southwesterly corner of Rhode Island, and before dark we found ourselves safely at anchor in the "New Harbor," almost within the shadows of a dozen or so grimly painted war vessels which rendezvous there.

Arrangements were promptly made by our efficient "Captain" for the morrow's fishing, and at early morn we were aboard the fishing boat in the "Old Harbor," eager for what the day might bring forth.

A word as to equipment and method may be of interest.

While sail-boats and larger craft are used, the fishing is best done from a twenty-five foot motor-boat, open and clear of ropes and other paraphernalia, going at the speed of four or five miles an hour.

The tackle for the native fisherman, who is out for quantity, as there is a ready market for the fish, consists of four or more stout lines, reaching back about thirty feet from the stern of the boat, while the "lure" is nothing more than a huge fish hook protruding from the end of a stick of wood, usually red cedar or mahogany, about six inches long, an inch or an inch-and-a-quarter in diameter in the thickest part and gently tapering toward each end, the line end being weighted with lead. To this leaded end is attached a piece of ordinary piano wire, about five feet in length, as a leader, and to the wire, in turn, is attached the line. The "squid" or "jig," as the wooden lure is called, is usually painted aluminum color, though frequently the natural colored wood is used.

Exactly the same arrangement is used for the visiting fisherman, except that rod and reel and a line of liberal length take the place of the hand line. This equipment varies with the tastes of the individual fisherman, but of necessity, the rod and reel and line must be strong, for the quest is not after gentle fish.

Thus equipped we chugged out of the little stone-fringed harbor and headed for the open sea in the clouds and subsequent rain of a raw morning.

Most of the tunas taken in recent years in Atlantic waters have been caught about ten miles to the southeast of Block Island, although they are not confined to any particular spot. We heard of big ones off Point Judith; they are reported off Long Island and the northern coast of New Jersey, while they are most frequently, perhaps, associated with Saint Catalina Island, off the California coast, where angling for them with rod and reel was introduced some years ago by Charles Frederick Holder, a member of our Society.

We were fast approaching the "happy hunting grounds" when the senior member of our party and a mighty fisherman, who had before more than once sought in vain for tunas over these same waters, had his persistency rewarded and in a few minutes, under his skillful handling, our first tuna lay glistening and resplendent at our feet.

It should be said that when the fish is hooked, the boat is immediately slowed down and circled about the fish, so that every advantage may be taken of his strength and of his williness.

But even then he may come off conqueror, at least over the fisherman, as our next and almost immediate experience proved, for another one was soon hooked and there followed a memorable contest between fisherman, tuna and shark in which, after an hour and five minutes, the shark was the victor by taking the tuna, "squid," leader and some of the line, almost within hand's reach of the boat. It was one of the countless tragedies of the seas enacted before our eyes.

In turn, each member of our party was rewarded, and when at mid-day we returned to port we counted an even dozen of these splendid fellows. Their average weight was about twenty-two pounds each.

Successive days brought similar experiences, and yet a variety, for one never knows what the next happening may be in contending with these deep sea dwellers. On more than one occasion three or four fish were hooked at once, as the boat glided over a school of them, with resultant activities on the part of captain and fishermen; sharks took more than the fish already described, in plain sight of the boat, and many times did the tunas in one way and another win out, but we landed our fair share. They are resourceful and stubborn fighters and a broken rod or a bruised hand is not an infrequent incident, while the losing of one's entire outfit, or even of one's self overboard, is not at all an unknown occurrence.

But deep sea fishing (as well as other kinds of fishing) brings many pleasures besides the number of fish one can count at the end of the day. Verily "there are other things in fishing besides catching fish." To ride for hours on a staunch little motor-boat in the refreshing salt air, with chosen companions, brings an intimacy with the ocean not afforded by the statelyness of a Sound Line Steamer or the deck of an ocean liner; there is interest in watching the sturdy little fleet circling the fishing grounds with here and there, on calm days, a captain in his "pulpit" on the stern of his boat or perched on a seat on the mast, watching for sword fish, which are frequently harpooned in this locality; captains have many tales of big catches, and there is the possibility at any moment of the sing of the reel which means the bending of all of one's attention and energy to the matter in hand.

And so for an abrupt and thorough change from the daily routine and from the many problems which face us all in these dark and troubled days, there is none, perhaps, more complete or more fascinating than tuna fishing off Block Island.

JONATHAN M. STEERE.

HAVERTFORD, PA.

NEWS ITEMS.

REPORT OF THE TREASURER OF THE AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE, UP TO NINTH MONTH 10, 1917.

Amount reported to Eighth Month 27, 1917	$152,634.50
Additional to Ninth Month 3, 1917	5,715.52
Five Years' Meeting, by Walter Woodward	5,000.00
Other Meetings and Associations	682.77
Philadelphia Yearly Meeting Peace Committee, by Albert L. Baily, Jr.	3,127.50
Contributions from Nine Individuals	368.00
	<hr/> $167,528.29

TO ALL FRIENDS WHO HAVE APPLIED FOR EXEMPTION BECAUSE OF CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTION TO WAR.—

This letter is addressed only to the above class of persons, but it is sent to all Friends of registration age. It is intended to supplement a letter issued a few days ago.

In filing your claim for discharge and your supporting affidavit on the ground that your "religious convictions" forbid you to "participate in war in any form," you entered with high purpose upon a certain path of conduct. You are a member of a religious body which, throughout its entire history, by sacrifice and heroic suffering, has borne a testimony against war and has stood for a type of Christianity dedicated to loving service and human brotherhood. Its members have always endeavored to be loyal citizens to their nation, ready to serve their country in every way consistent with conscience. Acts involving participation in any form of war, or service under military direction, however, have seemed and still seem to those who share our faith a sharp violation of our religious principles.

This letter is intended to assist you in taking the steps that must be decided upon in the immediate future.

First—If you have not yet received your certificate of discharge from combatant service on Form 174 from your local board, you should immediately make all necessary effort to secure it. If your local board refuses to issue it, you should appeal to the district board. No discretion is vested in the local boards with respect to this claim except to pass upon the truth of the affidavits. Unless they think that you or the clerk or the minister of your meeting has committed perjury they should issue the certificate as a matter of course. If the local board has refused, the district board should order the issuance of the certificate.

The time for appeal expires in ten days from the mailing of the notice that your claim has been refused. However, it is provided in Section 26 of the Rules and Regulations of the President that the boards have authority to extend the time to appeal, and if the time has expired you should apply for such extension on the necessary papers to be secured from the local board.

It is imperative that you obtain this certificate on Form 174, since all your rights of exemption from army service will depend upon it. Do not allow any persons to discourage or intimidate you or lead you to believe that your right to the certificate has been annulled by any recent ruling, because you are entitled to this certificate as a matter of course.

If your district board refuses your claim upon appeal, notify the American Friends' Service Committee, 20 South Twelfth Street, Philadelphia, Pa., immediately, and you will be advised as to further action.

Second—You should clearly understand that the above mentioned discharge is from combatant service only. Friends are not only liable to some service, but are willing and anxious to serve in a manner allowed by their religious convictions. As stated in our letter, dated Eighth Month 28th, the Government itself has correctly interpreted the principles of Friends as against participation in war in any form. The correct interpretation of Form 174 seems clearly to be a discharge from all service as a part of the "military forces" provided for in the law. We have, therefore, asked the war department to allow Friends so desiring to serve under the American Friends' Service Committee in forms of service wholly apart from military control, to be approved by the President. We suggest that if you desire such service you fill out and return to the American Friends' Service Committee the enclosed enrollment blank. You can then state to all officials and officers with whom you may have dealings that you have applied for such service. You should arrange to keep the above committee informed of all developments with respect to your call for service.

The Government has not yet declared what forms of non-combatant service Friends will be assigned to and it now seems that the request of the American Friends' Service Committee will not be acted upon until after the period of mobilization.

Third—According to Government ruling you will be expected to mobilize before being assigned to non-combatant service. The following very grave difficulties, however, are presented in the mobilization regulations if these are intended to apply to persons holding discharges on Form 174. The line between military and non-military service (often difficult to draw), has been drawn by the government in the following sections of the regulations:

SECTION 5. "From the time specified for reporting to the local board for military duty each man in respect to whom notice to report has been posted or mailed shall be in the military service of the United States."

SECTION 9. "The men will be ordered to form a line and the local board shall instruct them as follows:

"1. That they must report in person at 5:30 p. m. to the local board for retreat roll call.

"2. That they are to report in person to the local board at a specified hour on the day of entrainment, which hour shall be fixed by the local board at least 45 minutes before train time, plus a sufficient time to reach the railroad station from the office of the local board.

"3. That they are now in the military service of the United States and that unpunctuality and failure to report are grave military offenses in time of war.

"4. That after they have been conducted to the assigned lodging houses they are at liberty until the hour of retreat roll call at 5:30 p. m., when all must be present at the office of the local board."

SECTION 11. "The local board will caution the men that the person designated is in command of the party, that it is their military duty to obey his orders and instructions, and that disobedience of orders is the most serious of all military crimes."

Since these regulations, if intended to apply to persons holding discharges on Form 174, require incorporation as part of the army from the time of reporting to the local boards, the following two courses seem open to a Friend who is unable to become a part of the army:

(A) He can write to the chairman of his local board or present a written statement in person and respectfully inform him that he has been exempted from military service and that he cannot obey mobilization orders, as this act (by definite statement of the mobilization regulations) puts him "under military service" from which under all reasonable interpretations of the selective service law, he has already been exempted. He should further inform his local board that he desires to perform non-combatant service if he can have it assigned to him without conditions which make him a corporate part of the military system, such, for example, as service under the American Friends' Service Committee, Army V. M. C. A., etc.

(B) The other consistent course for a conscientiously minded Friend would be for the individual to write the chairman of the local board or present a written statement in person that he cannot mobilize in the manner prescribed, since it puts him "under military service," but that he will report at once in person at the mobilization camp (providing his own transportation and paying his own traveling expenses to the place), and will there ask the proper officer to be assigned to a form of non-combatant service entirely free from the military system, such, for example, as service under the American Friends' Service Committee.

According to the mobilization regulations, in the section regarding absences, this information will be forwarded to the Adjutant General, which will enable the Government to open for the individual a field of service consistent with his conscience and satisfactory to the Government.

Any Friend who is not able to pay his own expenses to the camp should communicate with the American Friends' Service Committee. A fund will be raised to make reimbursement for these expenses.

Fourth—In attempting in all your later decisions to act consistently with the principles of Friends and to also conform to the selective service law which recognizes these principles, it seems that the following two criterions should govern your solution of all difficult problems that may arise: First, your inability to become a part of the army in any of its departments; second, your entire willingness to render service that is dissociated from army control.

May we conduct ourselves during these difficult times in a spirit of charity and goodwill toward all with whom we come in contact, and may we meet all situations with patience, forbearance, and courage for the right as we see it.

For the Conference held Eighth Month 24th,
Rufus M. Jones, Alfred G. Scattergood, Henry J. Cadbury, Charles F. Jenkins, J. Barnard Walton, Henry Ferris, Thomas E. Jones, Vincent D. Nicholson, Paul J. Furnas, L. Hollingsworth Wood, Walter C. Woodward.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Ninth Month 10, 1917.

AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE.

The following men have been accepted for the Reconstruction Unit: Edwin O. Baker, Orville E. Boone, Walter Gregory Bowerman, Kanagahed Garbed Boyajian, Walter Carrol Brinton, Russell L. Brown, Cecil Franklin Cloud, Daniel Arthur Compton, Harold H. Conrad, Charles Herbert Cox, Hallowell Davis, Henry Drinker Downing, Jr., George S. Dunn, Errol T. Elliott, Gurney F. Hanson, J. Hobart Hoskins, John Herschel Jessup, John Langdon Jones, James Eroyod Kimber, Warren R. Laity, Forrest Macy, James E. Maxwell, Wendell French Oliver, Walter Stanley Pedrick, Albert E. Pike, Alexander Read, Robert Everett Reed, Harold B. Rogers, I. Thomas Steere, Andrew William Stuart, Walter E. Wildman, A. R. Williams.

Those who have not been called in the first draft under the Selective Service Law will be sent over during the next two or three weeks as rapidly as they secure passports. They will be sent to a permanent training camp, the first established arrangements for which have been completed by J. Henry Scattergood. He has leased one of the absinthe factories which has been closed by the Government during the war, situated at Ormans Doubs which is seven miles from Dole, where the English Friends have their factory for building houses. We have sent over mill machinery to be installed in this factory for making portable houses. The permanent camp will be established at the point where all the workers from now on will receive much the same training as they received at Haverford. From this camp they will be sent out to the various forms of work. The camp will be in charge of Ralston Thomas, who rendered such admirable service in training the men at Haverford, and who has gone over as Dr. Babbitt's assistant.

The men who have been called in the first draft will have to await the decision of the War Department upon our request to have this work recognized as non-combatant service.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING will be held this year at Bear Creek at a new location two miles east of the old one. Meeting begins on Thursday with a public meeting Tenth Month 17th, at 10 o'clock a. m. Meeting for Ministers and Elders at 8 a. m. same day. Friends coming via Des Moines or Omaha over Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific R. R. leave train at Earlham, thirty miles west of Des Moines. Location of Meeting three miles directly north. Trains will be met at Earlham. Friends coming on Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul R. R. should leave train at Redfield. Trains will be met there on Thursday, the 16th; other times by giving previous notice to Abner Le Newlin or Alfred Standing, Earlham, Iowa.

LYDIA BALDERSTON has received the appointment of Professor of Leather Chemistry and Technology at Sapporo, Japan. Friends will remember that this is the college in which Dr. Inazo Nitobe taught for some years. L. B. and his wife Mary have engaged passage on the S. S. China, sailing from San Francisco Tenth Month 11th.

All Friends from Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, expecting to attend the Five Years' Meeting at Richmond, Ind., Tenth Month 16 to Tenth Month 23, 1917, will confer a favor upon the Young Friends' Executive Committee if they will kindly inform J. Passmore Elkinton, 121 S. Third Street, Philadelphia, of their intention. Boarding accommodations will be arranged by our Committee if desired.

A JOINT COMMITTEE of the two branches of Friends in Wilmington, Del., propose to celebrate on Seventh-day, Ninth Month 22nd, the one hundredth anniversary of the completion of the Meeting-house at Fourth and West Streets.

There will be two sessions; the afternoon one beginning at 2:30 o'clock, and the evening session at 7:30 o'clock, with intermission, during which supper will be served.

The capacity of the Meeting-house and grounds being limited, the Committee has confined the invitations largely to members of Concord Quarterly Meetings, but realizing that there are others who are particularly interested in the Wilmington Meetings and who would desire to participate in the celebration, the Committee takes this opportunity of extending to all such a cordial invitation to attend.

In order that the Entertainment Committee may adequately provide for their attendance on the day of the anniversary, Friends who contemplate coming are requested to notify Horace J. Tatnall, 101 W. Eighteenth Street, Wilmington, Del., by postal card not later than Ninth Month 15th of their intention.

At a Monomonic Conference the following was given as the advice of Secretary of War Baker, as written out by Bishop Klemmer:—

First. None of our brethren need serve in any capacity which violates creed and conscience.

Second. When they are called they should report at the place designated on their notice.

Third. From the place designated they should go with others who are drafted and called to the training camps.

Fourth. Report to the army officers the church to which they belong and their belief in its creed and principles.

Fifth. This unresistant position will place them in detention camps, where they will be properly fed and cared for.

Sixth. In these camps they will not be uniformed or drilled.

Seventh. A list of services considered non-combatant will be offered, but they need not accept any in violation of their consciences.

Eighth. Those who cannot accept any service, either combatant or non-combatant, will be assigned to some other service not under the military arm of the Government to be designated later by the President and the Secretary of War.

Ninth. Our ministers will be allowed to visit brothers at these camps and to keep in touch with them.

Tenth. Our ministers will be privileged to give this information to our brethren in private or in public meetings.

Deacon Moyer, commenting on the above, is reported as giving the following advice:—

"Those of our young men who are to be for the world the test of our faith in this dark hour must go forward with Christ in their hearts. For they will suffer persecution for the faith. Resist not. Should an unkind officer rebuke you when you decline to be mobilized as a soldier, answer him not unkindly. Be pleasant in your suffering for Christ. The finger of scorn shall be pointed at you by young men who cannot understand your faith. They will call you cutting names. Resist none of these things, for to do so will be inconsistent with your profession. Should you be thrown into the company of others do not fall into temptation. Do not engage in such frivolities as card playing. Those of you who are not called, but who are exempted, will receive a button with the word 'Exempt' upon it. Keep this button always with you. I would not wear it publicly, but I would keep it secretly in my pocket. However, I should never venture but without it in my possession."

LETTERS FROM FRANCE.

Under date of Eighth Month 5, 1917, Mary E. Duguid writes from Entremont, near Mont Blanc:—

"We only see and know the things that we see practically, so the news we get from you is very welcome. Here we have plenty to eat. The women can have a glass of milk at every meal, and as we give them no wine they are glad to have it. Fortunately, the head of the house is a strong temperance person. They have coffee, milk and bread for breakfast; soup, meat (eggs) and a good vegetable for dinner, with bread and milk; four o'clock, tea, coffee and bread and milk. Then at seven o'clock, soup, potato puree, with bread and milk, and fruit. If we have very much the same for ourselves with now and then an extra that is not in sufficient quantity for our household of forty.

"We do have very lively times here. Sometimes it is some one that has forgotten to do her work. We have a sewing machine and some of the women have done quite a lot of sewing. I think that material to make up would be useful.

"Another thing I did not say when writing is about furniture. You see, refugees often go to Stancous quite ill and when they are better come here for a few weeks and we try to get them back to a normal way of life as soon as possible. The shock and meagre food have often been enough to very much wear them down, and so it is a very nice matter to restore their strength and then give them spirit enough to start in suitable surroundings. Many of them are quite young. One woman we have here wandered for two months with two small children hanging to her and a baby in her arms. She did not know where she was going and just ate the food given to her by any one on the way. She is quite an ordinary woman, with quite an ability to make complaints, and the children are by nature thin. It is interesting to see how much very ordinary people can come through without any of the spirit of heroes. They just exist and come through, apparently without being changed from the beginning. Most of these people have lost all of their things, absolutely, and so have to gather all of their furniture again. As they generally have no money, and the husband often is a soldier, they simply cannot take an unfurnished house, if they are not given some money. A kitchen stove, kitchen table (unpainted, so it can be scrubbed), enough chairs for the family to sit on, one or two beds, covers, sheets, pillows and some kind of a bureau for clothes are the essentials. We have been wondering if some furniture person in America would not donate some simple outfits. The stove and kitchen utensils can best be gotten here, I suppose. The sheets should be large enough to roll round the bolster. The best of the people are very grateful. It is a simple and rather complete kind of gift to set up a family with these essentials. We have a very nice family who lived, with no protection, behind the German lines for two years after the war began. . . . At last the combination between the Belgians and Germans) was unbreakable, and she came round into France, leaving everything. Her family are soon to go out of the sanitarium. Her husband is in National work and hopes soon to be transferred to a place where he can live with his family. They are arranging to buy furniture, but I feel that they might receive it gratis, as they have lost theirs through no fault of their own in a great world calamity. . . .

"It is rather interesting now to see how everybody understands my French—if it is something pleasant, but find it very difficult if things are not to their minds. . . . Time matters but little here. The church bell seems to go off when the Curé feels inclined. We have, by the way, a very nice old church and a priest who seems to be a follower of St. Francis to a degree. He preaches very good sermons. It is a very old church and a great mixture of stone pipes and carved wood. I believe at one time there was a bishop here. Practically all of our people are Catholics, and, strange, to say, they have their two meatless days together at the beginning of the week. . . .

"There are advantages of beginning discipline early and being able to talk the same language. Childish prattle is as hard to understand in French as in English. . . . As long as the pleasure of gardening is denied, what better could happen than that we should come to this fairy land, with brooks and gardens and lovely rock gardens in every direction. The other day William and I took six of the girls up the valley. We climbed for about two hours. First, up to a very quaint village, then on by a rushing mountain stream, passed smaller groups of houses, to the high pasture lands, where they drive the cows in the summer to the grass that never grows long enough to eat. We stopped in the shade of the mountain and had what they call gouter of great slices of bread, small plums and raisins. They were easily carried and were very refreshing. After we had cooled a little we went on up to the small glacier which still remains. The river begins there and comes flowing out of the ice cave. We enjoyed the feel of the snow, threw a few balls and then turned back. It was such a charming sight, with a perfect carpet of Alpine flowers; we were only sorry that we had to come back home so quickly, as it is always time for another meal. One of my particular tasks is to serve the meals. There are four for the grown-ups and breakfast and supper separate for the twelve children. One of the most amusing things to me is our gym class. I have to give commands in French, and I am getting so I can snap out the commands in an assured tone of voice, so the class is real snappy. It is quite fun, and in another week I shall have them in quite good shape I hope. We are very well and all the exercise is making me very strong."

Wm. Duguid tells of 1000 returned French (Rapatriées) arriving each day at Geneva—to be distributed among their fellow countrymen, who have not been the victims of the offending armies. Some very capable women have had the job of assorting this continuous stream of homeless peasants and artisans. One of these ladies had been a Rapatriée herself, having come in from the north of France eight months since. Her father is a manufacturer of woolen goods and has a factory in the U. S. A. "She spoke very good English and told me about her two years behind the German lines and the longing they had that the French and British would attack and drive the Germans back. She worked in a hospital all the time, first, with French and British wounded, and later with German, till she could not stand it any longer, so got permission to travel with and look after the Grand Blessés that are being sent out of Germany (too much wounded to be able to fight again). They had a terrible time because of the helplessness of their charges. She is only about twenty-five and a most capable little person and knows her work well. I told her about the Friends' work and what American Friends were going to do probably and she and the others were much interested, as far as they could understand. . . . Most of the Rapatriées have had no word of husbands or brothers or fathers since the war began, so you can imagine what they feel like.

"There is a staff of fifty girls filing and card-indexing the letters that come in. . . . We saw a few dozen of the Rapatriées, mostly old men and women—one old lady, bent double almost, was leading about an equally aged one who was totally blind, but safe and strong on her legs. They had met on the road through Germany and were going on together, giving help when they could to each other. The refugees we see are generally cheerful, but nervous and worried always. They are country people or those in poor circumstances generally, but not by any means always. The Germans have taken the whole of the machinery from the Mathon works to Germany and nothing has been done since 1914. All the works are stripped in the North of France. One of the officials whom we saw was a cheerful looking man with one leg, who spoke good French to us to start with, but turned to me and spoke in best English, telling me he came from Edinburgh, where he was in charge of a branch of a French business till the war began, when he came to France and joined the army. He was wounded three times, the last time losing a leg. His home is in Verdun, but has been blown up with German shells and his mother and sister living somewhere else."

LETTERS FROM FRANCE.

Howard Elkinton writes under date of Eighth Month 3, 1917:—

"From the walls of Paris that guard the city to the east we were interested to see the remains of the trenches thrown up in 1914 by the defenders of the city. They were somewhat crumbled in, but still telling a tale. From where we stood we could overlook Saint Germain and the distant hills far beyond. Exactly the direction that the Germans were in, in those fateful days. When one realizes that Alfred and Grace saw soldiers who had seen the Eiffel Tower, one can appreciate the hazard of position that this city then had. We could even see where the bullets from the stout German guns lit, but as they were two years' old they had lost considerable of their heat. There are other sights that bring the war quite up-to-date. The other day we visited the Gare du Nord. Close to it we came upon a poor woman weeping copiously. By her side was a baby couch carrying a babe, upon which lay a bunch of roses for mother and child. The wife would not be comforted, though a group of sympathetic dames tried to coax her back to dry eyes. Again one too frequently sees a father walking out with wife and child, taking the spouse on his left arm, while the little girl holds on to his right sleeve—instinct taking her to where his hand should be. So it goes. But Paris is a bright place even in war time."

"For the present, E. L. B., G. D., and myself go to Sermains-on-the-Marne—a small village, about thirty miles distant. We are to be in the Department of Agricultural Machinery with the exception of E. B., who will be in the Transportation Department. G. D.'s and my work will consist, as far as we can make out, of first spending a certain time in the repair shop, where we can become acquainted with the types of machines and their internal parts. There will be a certain amount of driving of cars about, of delivering goods, of cutting crops, of negotiating among the farmers for the loan and co-operation of tools and labor. In short, anything may turn up for us to lay hands at—above all cheerfully. The work at Sermains is mostly done in some ways. For instance, the houses put up are temporary structures, put up only for those who have no other adequate shelter. The reason is this, that endless complications of litigation and the like would quickly arise if the Friends built many permanent dwellings. Further, the purpose of the Friends' work is not to bring the towns or villages back to complete restoration, but merely supply enough means—be it money, clothing, furniture, houses or the like—to bring the 'down and outs' back upon their feet. Or, as they themselves say, place a foot in the stirrup, so with the one lift they may mount and ride. It will be most interesting to get into the families as we shall have to do. The final reconstruction of these places is, of course, work of the French Government, to be properly attended to by them. Friends do not attempt it. When a village is so fixed or better when the people of a village are so fixed that no one has to live in cellars the Friends move on to some other place. If there are enough small houses visible in any of these reconstructed towns in the war zone, the Germans may send a shell or two and destroy them totally. It is well known that nothing occurs in Rheims but what is communicated to the Germans."

TUNESSASSA NOTES.—An unusual number of Friends have visited Tunessassa this year—nearly all of them for the first time.

Their company and services seem to have been very acceptable, although the addition of over twenty guests to a larger than usual vacation family necessarily added considerably to the care and work of the Superintendent and Matron and their willing helpers. They are always glad to welcome any Friends or others who have a sympathetic interest in the work to which they are giving themselves so freely.

May we not expect a deeper interest in Tunessassa in different parts of the Yearly Meeting as a result of the recent visits?

The additions to the farm buildings are about completed and the new cottage is well under way. The repairs and improvements to the main building have been delayed for various reasons, but it is expected that most of them will be finished before school opens on the 14th inst.

Indian workmen are proving quite satisfactory. Some of them are good carpenters.

The improvements authorized by the Committee were those that seemed to be most needed, but there are others that they would gladly make if they had the money. A fire-place in the family living-room is greatly desired. Mornings and evenings in that climate are often cool, in summer, and in winter the temperature is frequently below zero.

Another need is for running water in the dining-room, to save carrying water from the kitchen for dish-washing. Many of the girls are too small to lift the heavy pans.

The $5000 fund is still open for contributions. If any readers of THE FRIEND prefer to give for special purposes, a list of desirable additions to the equipment of the School will be furnished gladly by Wm. B. Rhoads, Superintendent, or by the writer.

Fruit is very scarce in western New York. The family will have to depend upon berries—principally huckleberries—unless Friends who have fruit send them some. Any gifts of fresh, dried or canned fruit that are sent will be welcome additions to their fare and will help solve the food problem, which our Superintendent finds to be a very real one under present conditions.

ANNA WALTON.

NOTICES.

THE Social Service Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting is calling the attention of Monthly Meetings to a list of books with the suggestion that a general reading of them by the membership will advance the interests for which the Committee is under appointment. Friends' Library, 112 N. Sixteenth Street, has duplicate sets of these books.

Friends who wish the books can borrow them for one week by parcel post if they will forward 10 cents to the Librarian to cover the expense of mailing. The Library is now open daily.

LINDA MOORE,
Librarian.

WISSAHICKON INN REDLANDS, CALIFORNIA.

THE WISSAHICKON INN is situated in an Orange Grove in Redlands, the most beautiful place in the San Bernardino Valley.

At the Wissahickon Inn, a family hotel of fifty rooms, you will find a homelike place, good food, and careful attention to your wants.

Rooms with private bath and plenty of public baths. One or two cottages on the grounds.

Near parks and golf course. Tennis court. Magnificent roads for motoring. For reservations and prices, address

A. B. JOHNSON.

Friends Arch St. Centre 304 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Provides comfortable accommodations for guests by the day or week. Meals at moderate prices.

AMELIA D. FEATHERSTONE, Matron.

PHONE—MARKET 1571.

The Only Grand Prize

(Highest Award) given to Dictionaries at the Panama-Pacific Exposition was granted to

WEBSTER'S NEW INTERNATIONAL

For Superiority of Educational Merit.

This new creation answers with final authority all kinds of puzzling questions such as "How is Przemol pronounced?" "Where is Flinders?" "What is continuous voyage?" "Was is a hawker?" "What is schic coat?" and thousands of others.

More than 400,000 Vocabulary Terms. 30,000 Geographical Subjects. 12,000 Biographical Entries. Over 6000 Illustrations. 2700 Pages. The only dictionary with the divided page—a stroke of genius.

REGULAR AND INDIA PAPER EDITIONS.

Write for specimen pages, illustrations, etc. Free, a set of Pocket Maps if you name this paper.

G. & C. MERRIAM CO., Springfield, Mass.

Hajoca porelain - enameled Bath

This newly designed Hajoca tiled-in Bath is a model whose simple, graceful lines and sanitary equipment foretell its wide popularity.

Our automobile is maintained especially for the conveyance of visitors to and from our Show rooms. Phone Poplar 502 or Race 502 and have it call for you. Write for the Hajoca Book, free.

HAINES, JONES & GADBURY CO.
1130-1144 Ridge Ave.
(at 12th and Spring Garden Sts.)

RESIDENCE: 254 S. 44th St. BELL 'PHONE: Baring 2984X

WILLIAM OAKES Plumbing and Heating Contractor

ALSO LEAD BURNING
260 SOUTH TENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA
BELL 'PHONE: Filbert 2666.

GLASLYN-CHATHAM

PARK PLACE
ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

A Family House of Established Reputation.
Open Throughout the Year.

NATHAN L. JONES.

WILLIAM S. YARNALL MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

118 SOUTH FIFTEENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA.

WALL PAPERS—All Grades WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER

Custom of Friends Specially Selected
FRANK C. BUEHL

Successor to S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON
302 SPRING GARDEN ST. PHILADELPHIA
Opposite Spring Garden Station. Phila. & Reading R.R.
ESTABLISHED 1849. BELL 'PHONE.

THE HOLMES PRESS Printers

J. L. Engle, Pres.
1336-40 CHERY ST. PHILA.

THE LAKESIDE

EAGLES MERE, PA.

Unobstructed lake view; capacity 250. Elevator steam heat, golf, tennis, boating and bathing. Attractive motoring through the surrounding country.

GARAGE

J. S. KIRK & SON

Premier Duplicating Co.

Mimeographing, Multigraphing, Printing, Typewriting, Addressing, Mailing, etc.

630 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

GIRARD TRUST CO. BROAD and CHESTNUT STS.

CAPITAL AND SURPLUS } $10,000,000

Acts as Executor, Trustee, Guardian, Administrator, Assignee and Receiver. Safes to Rent in Burglar-proof Vaults. Interest Allowed on Deposits. :: ::

E. B. MORRIS

PRESIDENT

FRIENDS OR OTHERS WHO ARE THINKING of attending Cornell the coming year will find comfortable rooms in a Friends' family at reasonable prices, at 238 Linden Avenue, Ithaca, N. Y. Five minutes' walk from Campus. EDWARD WOOD.

MOTHER'S HELPER WANTED—A WOMAN UNDER 30 years of position, who is treated as one of the family. Must be responsible and willing. Reference required. Apply "C", THE FRIEND.

WANTED—BY TWO FRIENDS; TWO OR THREE rooms and board in Christian family in neighborhood of Coulter Street. Meeting, Gettysburg, Pa. Reference exchanged. ANNE T. BAILY, 1115 W. State St., TRENTON, N. J.

WANTED—SALESMAN TO CANVAS RETAIL stores and institution trade for staple food product, "C." Care "THE FRIEND."

WANTED—A CARETAKER FOR THE INDIAN boys at Friends' School, Tusconna, N. Y.—Preferably one who can teach manual training. Applications for the position may be made to: Wm. B. RIGGOLD, Sup't., Tusconna, N. Y. HENRY HALL, Friends' Hospital, Frankford, Phila. ANNA WALTON, Moylan, Pa.

FOR RENT (FURNISHED)—A PLEASANT HOME in Moorestown, N. J., on Main Street, overlooking the Valley; heated by hot water; lighted by electricity; near railroad station; trolleys passing the door; near Friends' Meeting and school on same side of street; garage. Apply to M. W. STOKES, 166 E. Main St., Moorestown, N. J.

Letchworth Cottage Spring Lake Beach, N. J. Open for the Season 1917

A. C. & S. H. Letchworth

ALFRED C. HAINES
Building Glass and Paints
56 N. Front St., Philadelphia

WANTED—A MANAGING HOUSEKEEPER in small sanitarium in suburbs. State experience and references. Address, "E. P. M.", Care of THE FRIEND.

WANTED—BY A WIDOW WITH GIRL 9 YEARS—a position as housekeeper in a Christian home. Friend's family in N. J. preferred. Address N.M.B., THE FRIEND.

POCONO MANOR INN

OPEN ALL YEAR

Situated in the beautiful Pocono Mountains in northeastern Pennsylvania is most attractive the year 'round.

Golf, Tennis, Bowling, Driving, Motoring, Swimming and Boating are but few of the recreations found at this popular resort.

J. W. HURLEY, Mgr., Pocono Manor, Pa.
(Pocono Summit Station, D., L. & W. R. R.)

WOOLMAN SCHOOL

A Friends' School for Social and Religious Education, Board of Managers from both branches of Friends. Courses in Old and New Testament, Church History, History and Principles of Friends, Missions, First-day School Organization, Social Betterment, International Organization, History of Religion, Comparative Religion, and Allied Subjects.

Instruction by scholarly experts from the Faculties of Swarthmore and Haverford Colleges, and from other Educational, Social and Religious Institutions of Philadelphia and vicinity.

Fall term opens Tenth Month 10, 1917.

ELBERT RUSSELL, Director
WOOLMAN SCHOOL :: SWARTHMORE, PA.

Philadelphia's
Representative Store

R. C. Ballinger Ernest R. Yarnall John A. Stratton

TELEPHONES

Bel—Filbert 24-15 - - - - - Kojatone—Race 637

R. C. BALLINGER & CO.

CONTRACTORS and BUILDERS

218 N. Thirteenth St.

Philadelphia.

SEE WALKER & KEPLER

FOR

Good Electrical Work

531 CHESTNUT ST. - - - PHILA.

ELKINS, MORRIS & CO.

BANKERS

REPRESENTATIVES

WM. E. CADBURY

PAUL W. BROWN

JAMES P. MAGILL

LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

JOSEPH G. FOGG
FUNERAL DIRECTOR and EMBALMER

S. W. COR. 16TH and RACE STREETS
Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals

BELL 'PHONE

SPRUCE 1848

W. J. MacWaters

Let Me
Help You

In Selecting Your

RUGS AND CARPETS

Domestic - - - - - Oriental

ALL WEAVES

The Home of Bundhar Wilton

"DURABLE AS IRON"

HARDWICK & MAGEE CO.

1220 Market Street

HARRY S. LEE
313 WALNUT STREET
PAINTER and GRAINER

ANTIQUE and OFFICE FURNITURE RESTORED
JOBGING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO
ESTIMATES

W. B. WEAVER
UNDERTAKER and EMBALMER

550-552 N. 5TH ST., PHILA., PA.

Special Attention Given to Funerals
In and Out of the City. Also Chapel
Accommodations for Funerals. 2 2

BELL 'PHONE

ESTABLISHED 1886

HARVEY T. WEBER

TAILOR

207-208 HALE BLDG., 1326 CHESTNUT ST.

The custom of Friends specially solicited.

RAILROAD AND
PUBLIC UTILITY BONDS

FOR

CONSERVATIVE INVESTMENT.

FULL PARTICULARS ON REQUEST.

Assoc. M. A. M. Soc. C. E.

Bell 'Phone—Lombard 3412

EDWIN M. EVANS
CONTRACTOR & BUILDER

My jobbing department is well equipped,
prompt and efficient

321 S. LAWRENCE ST.

PHILA.

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE

PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

PUBLIC STENOGRAPHER

GEORGE B. COCK, Liberty Building

Established 1896. Experience 39 years; Medical 13

THE following timely books, mostly of those recommended by the Social Service Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, are for sale at Friends' Book Store, 304 Arch Street, Philadelphia.

"The Church and The Hour."	Vina D. Scudder,	$1.00
"The Social Problem."	J. H. Hollander,	1.25
"The Abolition of Poverty."	C. A. Ellwood,	75
"Christianizing the Social Order."	Walter Rauschenbusch,	1.50
"The Day of Our Visitation."	William Littleboy,	50
"A Word of Remembrance and Caution to the Rich."	John Woolman,	05

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE MATERIAL THAT WE SELL

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

TO ADVERTISERS.—THE FRIEND is now open for selected advertisements at the following rates: One inch, 50 cents, or 4 cents a line; no insertion for less than 25 cents. Long term rates given on application.

Friends having real estate to rent or sell, also those desiring board or rooms, should find THE FRIEND an excellent medium for reaching interested parties.

Standing business cards are also solicited.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 91.

FIFTH-DAY, NINTH MONTH 20, 1917.

No. 12.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price $2.00 a year in Advance.

Publisher, DAVIS H. FORSYTHE.

Editors { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
 { DAVIS H. FORSYTHE,
 { MARY WARD.

Make remittances payable to

THE FRIEND,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

ALONENESS AND FELLOWSHIP.

The unique feature of a true meeting for spiritual worship is that it affords opportunity for two apparently opposite experiences: the having to do with God in absolute aloneness, and the coming into spiritual relations with fellow-worshippers.

In a programmed meeting, presided over by one set apart for this function, and ministered to in man's time and will (though the Divine favor may condescend to bless honest and hungry souls even there), it is difficult to enter either into the sense of aloneness on the one hand or into the sense of fellowship on the other.

In the silence, each individual may feel after God for himself. The avenues of the carnal senses are closed to outward impressions, the faculties of the spiritual nature come into exercise, seeking communion with the unseen and eternal, so that the soul may receive inward impressions. Those impressions may be as varied as there are individuals thus assembled. The Spirit accommodates Himself to every temperament and speaks to every listening soul in his own tongue. The one passing through temptation and sore beset may require a very different word from God to the other sitting next to him. One may need a ministry of Divine sweetness to act as a cordial to a fainting spirit. The other the withholding of consolation to teach the soul the need of dependence moment by moment. Thus each one is open to God in his own individuality of need.

Yet is this sense of aloneness but a step to fellowship. And spiritual fellowship one with another is a very different thing to the pleasurable feeling of sociability. The first is found in the holiest; the second leaves us still in the outer court. In fellowship we know no man after the flesh. There is neither Jew nor Greek; neither bond nor free; neither male nor female. Under the anointing from on high all are one in Christ Jesus. And it is fellowship which commands the blessing. When "the trumpeters and the singers were as one, to make one sound to be heard in praising and thanking the Lord; then the house was filled with a cloud, even the house of the Lord; so that the priests could not stand to minister by reason of the cloud: for the glory of the Lord had filled the house of God." And as when "they were all with one accord in one place" there came upon them the promise of the Father, the endowment of power from on high, and their silent meeting became vocal "as the Spirit gave them utterance."

And it is in the sense of the fellowship that the Lord's table is reached. "The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ? The bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ? For we being many are one bread and one body; for we are all partakers of that one bread."

So as we individually come under the Lord's power there is a sharing out of spiritual goods, and a sitting together, and a partaking together, according to the capacity of each, of the table of the Lord, and nourishment is ministered from the Head to the members "by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working of the measure of every part, making increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love."

It is therefore with no mere denominational pride (which is a carnal thing), that we should uphold our meetings for worship, but rather as those persuaded that we would be spiritual losers without them, and that all "will worship" in Christendom must yet give place to that worship which is in Spirit and in Truth, in that day when the mountain of the Lord's house shall be exalted above every other mountain.

MAX I. REICH.

CONGRESS AND EXEMPTION.

The difficulty of making laws so that their meaning will be absolutely unmistakable is patent. Courts for the interpretation of laws are the ready evidence of this fact. There are two very evident reasons for this difficulty. The flexibility of our English language is well recognized; the effect of different points of view upon those who use language needs to be more widely recognized. Few are such masters of English, or have enough consideration for the other man's point of view to produce an absolutely transparent expression of a legal intention. It was noted in the report of the recent interview in Washington with General Crowder that he as Judge Advocate General had written the law which as Provost Marshal he is set to interpret and to execute. There was no question as to its meaning in his mind. It was drafted as a military measure, and all service possible under it—combative and non-combative—must be military service. These are almost exactly his words. He was told plainly that this interpretation is not that understood by conscientious objectors. Had it been there would certainly have been further protest before the act became law. His visitors did not know then that some days before their trip to Washington the General's interpretation had been challenged in Congress in a memorable speech by Representative Carl Hayden, of Arizona. The printed document from the government printing office has the title, "Conscientious Objections to Military Service." The occasion of the speech was the Rankin resolution in regard to copper production in Montana. Evidently Representative Hayden is not a pacifist. His plea is a patriotic effort to secure justice for classes in the community who can not fight, but who do desire most loyally to be good citizens. Friends should read the speech. Sooner, perhaps, than we think, the occasion may arise and the opportunity offer to deal with this subject through legislation. Is it not possible to mobilize all the interests concerned so this can be done with a good measure of intelligent effectiveness?

It is not easy to summarize Representative Hayden's speech, but some expressions in it may well be reprinted for their tempered wisdom, and some points indicated to show a little of the drift of his argument.

As to the war-time temper of the public mind this does not seem overdrawn: "the majority quickly becomes intolerant, and prompt and sometimes brutal punishment is visited upon the objectors."

The Christian basis of the testimony we are called upon to maintain is recited in this piece of history: "Notwithstanding every argument of a religious nature that can be made in favor of participation in this war, there will be those whose consciences will not allow them to perform military service. As 'Christians,' without any affiliations with any sect, they will take this course; and in doing so they can point to the pages of history for their justification. Gibbon tells of Maximilianus who, when presented as a recruit by his father, obstinately persisted that his Christian conscience would not permit him to become a soldier. This happened in North Africa over 1600 years ago. Another famous example is that of Marcellus, the Roman centurion. On the day of a public festival he threw away his arms and the insignia of his office, exclaiming with a loud voice that he would obey none but Jesus Christ, the eternal King, and that he renounced forever the use of carnal weapons and service of an idolatrous master. On his own confession he was convicted of the crime of desertion and beheaded. These examples of Christian martyrdom continue down through the ages, so that one who suffers death for conscience' sake well knows that he goes to join an illustrious company whose virtues have not been un-recorded."

That one congressman does not believe in multiplying this list of martyrs is clear from the concluding paragraphs of the speech: "Of course, the death penalty should not be invoked. The worst way to silence any agitation is to kill the agitator. The next worst method is to treat him with brutality while imprisoned. A just punishment should comprise nothing more than a fair equivalent for the service and sacrifice which the objector avoids by his failure to become a soldier."

"In arguing for comparative mildness in the punishment of conscientious objectors, I do so not so much for their sake as from a belief, that, in order not to sin against the principles of liberty those in authority should show a decent respect for an honest conviction, no matter how erroneous. It can be said with truth that it was only by firm and conscientious resistance to the will of the State that the political and religious freedom which we now enjoy was won. It is, therefore, the part of wisdom to recognize the larger expediency of tempering justice with mercy."

The three points proposed in the speech for the correction of fallible judgment "by the collective conscience of the community or the nation" are well made. To those at least with Quaker training the other step not indicated will be very clear, viz.: the correction of this collective or community conscience "by the voice of God in the soul, and in the Church." That this point is not made clear is rather because of the arrangement than the context of the argument. In defining conscience this discrimination does appear, and social and political objectors to war are put in a class by themselves.

The moot point as to whether conscientious objectors are subject to military or civil law provoked some interruption of the speech on the floor of the House. Perhaps the conclusion of this brief discussion was fairly expressed by Representative Hayden. "There is some confusion in the statute, which permits a part of these offenders to be punished in the Federal courts and the remainder to be tried by court-martial."

This question is asked on page 5: "Will any student of history say that the American and the French people, and all the world for that matter, would be as well off to-day if these conflicts (the two revolutions) had not taken place?" We are unable to forget that we have heard so able an authority as ex-President White, of Cornell University, make this very assertion and sustain it by as brilliant reasoning as any historian of our day has produced. It is that conviction that is an important part of our plea for peace. It is a better way!

Friends will understand the attitude of Representative Hayden toward our Society by the quotation with which we conclude this article. This quotation and the temper of the whole speech would indicate that genuine conscientious objectors may find Congress more ready than may appear to provide a way for them to express their loyalty in unstinted service that will not violate their consciences.

"The Society of Friends, commonly known as Quakers, is the sect that is primarily responsible for this admission that some men feel compelled to obey the indwelling voice of God in their souls. Whenever what they consider to be a Divine command has conflicted with the claims of the State and society, they have not hesitated to follow the higher authority. By the purity of their lives, their self-discipline, their willingness to submit unflinchingly to severe punishment and even death rather than take part in war, the members of this church have convinced the world that they are acting only from the highest motives and that their convictions are therefore worthy of respect."

J. H. B.

PARLIAMENT AND CONSCIENCE.

It was inevitable that the conscientious objector should be brought before the bar of parliament. A few years ago we should have said it was impossible for the case to appear in the form in which it has.

First parliament provides a definite exemption for conscientious objectors. Finally, after nearly three years of the "poisonous gas" of militarism in the English air this clause is inserted in a "Representation of the People Bill":

"A person shall not be entitled to be registered or to vote at a Parliamentary or local government election if he has been exempted on the ground of conscientious objection to military service from any form of military service for which, but for such objection, he would have been liable."

In other words, Parliament at first defines a legitimate ground of exemption, and is then asked to prescribe an extreme punishment for any who accept it! Could "the majesty of law" be more openly insulted?

Parliament has reacted against such manifest tyranny in a noble defense of real freedom quite worthy of the Earl of Chatham. Will our government find as noble voices in our extremity?

We are printing the extracts given in The Friend (London) from the speeches of Captain Gwynn, M. P., and of Lord Hugh Cecil. They are words that our children might do well to commit to memory. Can we and they in some way contribute to such an advance of real liberty that the occasion for such words may be forever past?—[EDS].

"These are people who are not a blight upon the community; they may very probably prove to be the very salt of the community. I am speaking now as one who has seen war. I think that everybody who has seen war has one governing desire, and that is to see war abolished from the world. I am not at all sure that these people, whom we propose to reject as the outcasts of the State, may not be the best people to help in the fight to make an end of war. There is one thing that nobody can deny them—I am speaking now, as the noble lord spoke, of the real conscientious objector, let us put the other people aside—and that is courage, the most difficult form of courage in the world, the courage of the individual against the crowd. That is a courage which every State would do well to protect and guard. That is the courage which, above all others, makes for freedom."—CAPTAIN GWYNN, M. P., in the House of Commons, 26th Sixth Month, 1917.

"First of all, I think he (Mr. McNeill) very much underrated the force of the consideration that what he is really proposing is to impose a retrospective penalty upon persons who have done nothing worse than avoid themselves of an exemption which Parliament themselves afforded them. Personally, I think Parliament did right; but whether Parliament did right or wrong, it is at any rate bound in honor by what it did. To go to people first of all and say, 'If you allege a conscientious objection, and the tribunals we have appointed find you are sincere, you shall be exempted,' and then to turn round on them after they have done what Parliament has offered and allowed them to do, and say, 'You have done this thing, you are the basest of mankind, and unfit for the franchise, —to do that without warning them beforehand would seem to me to transgress all the principles of legislation and national justice.'

"My honorable friend, in an extraordinarily interesting speech, tried to lay down—if I may say so, a very courageous enterprise—a basis on which the State ought to deal with questions of opinion, and he certainly laid down a basis which would have justified the persecution of the Christians in the first days of Christianity, and still more clearly of the Protestants of Holland. There were phrases in his speech which might have come without the alteration of a syllable from any distinguished prelate or judge in the reign of Richard II about Wycliffe and his followers. There is nothing, I think, which he says about conscientious objectors which such a man would not have said with equal sincerity and even greater passion. Nothing is more foolish than to underrate the virtue of persecutors. They are very sincere people. They thought, and quite correctly, that the institution which was to them much more valuable than life itself was threatened by those they persecuted. They thought, and often quite correctly, that the persons they were persecuting were a small minority, ignorant and defiled by many faults and infirmities. The error they fell into is much more obvious than the one often imputed to arrogance. The error they fell into was in assuming that human beings have the right to impose opinions upon one another. I am quite satisfied that the State can only act wisely in respect to opinions by not going into the reasonableness of any opinion whatever, but allowing liberty of opinion, because in the end it is in the interest of truth that liberty of opinion should be allowed. I am quite as certain as my honorable friend that the conscientious objectors are wrong, but I am also quite certain that, shall we say, Presbyterians are wrong. It is a question of opinion."

"I feel, however, that I should be doing wrong if I did not say that the reason I care about this and regard it as important does not arise simply out of my respect for the religious convictions of other people, but out of my own religious convictions. It certainly seems to me to be part of the Christian religion to say that if a person sincerely thinks a thing wrong, then to him it is wrong. That seems to be very plainly taught in St. Paul's Epistles, and to be quite an indispensable part of Christian belief. If that is so, though I deplore quite as much as my honorable friend that conscientious objectors should fall into the serious error they do, I think being in that error they would actually be doing a wicked thing if they fought in war. I want them not to fight in war, as I think it would be wickedness, holding their opinions, that they should fight in war. I do not want that my world, which I honor as much as any man, should be stained by the wickedness of forcing people to do what is wrong for them to do, or punishing them for what is wrong in that sense. That proposition is, I think, very little understood and appreciated. If people believe what they are doing is wrong, they are doing wrong. We recognize that about a great many people who are more conscientiously recognized than conscientious objectors. We hold it about Mohammedan subjects in India. Their religion is foolish, and, in some respects, positively childish, but we respect them for practising it, because they have the right to do so. If a Mohammedan does things which are wrong, it is for him wrong, because he believes them to be wrong. It would be shameful to force any conscientious objectors to do what they think would be wrong, because it would be wrong for them. So I dissent from this Amendment because I think the conscientious objector, holding things he thinks right is only doing right, and that is what I wish to point out in their refusal to go to war. I quite agree that they hold mistaken opinions, but the whole of our life is saturated with respect for sacred things. The honorable Member says that the census of opinion of the world is against them. So it is against other things on which we differ. You cannot fall back on the proposition that general consent justifies you. There would be no need of poor, petty persecutions if you could tolerate the opinions of people who have the right to follow their opinions. No more, indeed, is the impost of disability on people who are only doing what their sincere opinion requires of them, when the policy of the country is tolerating the opinion, and when it is part of our common religion that people should act in accordance with them."

"But I go further. I think a great many people have ceased to care about religion and care more profoundly about their country. They are already embarked upon the path down which Germany has gone. My honorable friend said that the safety of the public is the supreme law. It is profoundly untrue. If the safety of the public is the supreme law, the sinking of the Lusitania was right, and the bombing of towns and the killing of children would be right. The safety of the public is not the supreme law. The Divine will is the supreme law, and it is because the conscientious objector is mistakenly and perversely holding to that idea, that he is 'wrong.' To the credit of the country it is required of us, being conscientious men in favor of Christianity, that we should respect that conviction and support them in what they do. I know many persons claiming to be conscientious objectors mix up with their objection a great many things which I detest heartily. Many are rebels, not merely conscientious objectors. My honorable friend would deprive them of their personal rights because they hold an opinion which is unsound. I would rather on the contrary be recognized as a valuable part of national life those conscientious people, not indeed in the correctness of their judgment, but in the earnestness with which they carry it out, which is an example to all. It is quite true they are mistaken, but being mistaken they can voluntarily be reserved to the standard for use. I wish we could all say the same, I wish the country was attended with like particular devotion to the cause in which they believe. If it were so, the whole international life would be invigorated, and it would unfold a people who would be less intolerant in discussing these schemes. The franchise is given to all and sundry, persons convicted of crime who have been imprisoned for rebellion even during the course of the war, a rebellion against the authority of the British Crown. If the people I have been speaking about are not fit for the franchise, one knows not what they are fit for. Let us not give to the world the impression that what we care about is only the condition of the State, when we have at the back of our minds the sense of something higher than the good of the State to which people may appeal. Better that we should look to where the embodiment of all righteous action is than to pass on the way where we have seen Germans go before. I feel very strongly that in the years that are coming there will be two great principles leading the world. There will be the people who think of the country and of the State and all the great appeal that it makes to them; and there will be the people who say, 'There is something higher and more universal, and that is to be found in the religion we profess.' I am quite certain that there is no one who is saturated with devotion to that ideal and conception who will have any doubt whatever as to what is their duty towards the conscientious objectors. The mere fact that they appeal to a religious standard at once ensures our sympathy, and I very earnestly hope, not for the sake alone of the conscientious objectors, but for the sake of the honor and credit of this House, for the sake of the country of which we are citizens—because I would rather die than see it abandoned—the faith which I hold so dear—that this Amendment will be rejected in the division to be taken now and for ever. I earnestly hope that we will adhere to the old doctrine that, natch as we love our country, we love something better, and that when an appeal is made to that our answer is clear, firm and without hesitation."

THE QUESTION.

Is life worth living?—
That depends
On my ideals and my ends,
On what my spirit comprehends.

Is life worth living?—
Not if I
Seek nothing noble, nothing high,
Dwell on the worst, the best decay.

Is life worth living?—
Not unless
I seek its evils to redress,
And fight the fight of righteousness.

Is life worth living?—
Greatly worth,
While God's own kingdom starts on earth,
And love immortal here has birth.

Is life worth living?—
I must choose;
For good or ill, must win or lose,
Gain gifts of glory—or refuse?

—PRISCILLA LEONARD.

PART OF AN ADDRESS AT THE UNVEILING OF A TABLET
TO THE MEMORY OF FRIENDS ON THE MEETING-HOUSE GROUNDS ON TOWER HILL, SEVENTH MONTH
4, 1917.

*CAROLINE HAZARD.

As one stands on this beautiful spot of ground looking far over the sea and to the shining ponds of Point Judith, a little vantage point from which to survey the whole countryside, it is easy to have the past unroll before us. Here is the road over which Washington passed, over which Lafayette traveled, where some of Rochambeau's troops marched. Here is the road where in earlier times Indian sachems made the trail which is still called the Pequot trail. This was the road which the first footsteps of the white settlers in this new world trod. It was a road chosen for its vantage ground, from which one could look before and after, commanding views on either side, a road of safety and of light, as well as of progress.

And just here on the very crown of the hill, in the last days of the seventeenth century, Friends came and built their Meeting. George Fox himself had preached as early as 1672 in the village a little north of this spot, "where Friends never had any before," and, having concern of mind to go further, left the care of the newly planted seed to his companions, John Burnayate and John Cartwright, who "felt drawings thither and went to visit them." How it prospered was well known in the countryside, and in 1706, Samuel Sewall, journeying from Boston to survey his inheritance, records when he went "into the Quaker Meeting House, about thirty-five feet long, thirty feet wide on Hazard's ground, which was mine."⁶

It was a strange meeting of different minds to bring the stern Puritan of the Massachusetts Bay into this more liberal air of Southern Rhode Island, this home for all who were oppressed in conscience, where Roger Williams declared, "I desire not to sleep in securitie and dream of a rest which no hand can reach. I cannot but expect changes, and the change of the last enemie death, yet dare I not despise a libertie which the Lord seemeth to offer me if for mine own and others peace."⁷

His father-in-law, John Hull, the Mint Master, was one of the original Pettaquamscutt purchasers in 1756. After his death, Sewall inherited his share, and made many visits to the Narragansett country as far as the very point of Point Judith, which he declares was part of his possession. This land, "Hazard's ground, which was mine," was a part of the purchase made by Thomas Hazard in 1608. The South Kingstown records give the history, and tell us how it was transferred by Thomas Hazard for the sum of 40 shillings to Ebenezer Slocum, in 1710, who, in turn, the next day, transferred it to five members of the South Kingstown Meeting for the same consideration, these various transfers evidently having been made to make the record sure. "The bounds are given, easterly and southerly by the road, the rest by Hazard's land," being that parcel of land on which stands a certain Meeting House in which the people called Quakers usually meet."⁸

Here it is to this very day. The Meeting House is no longer standing, having been burned in 1790. No visible token remains of the occupation of Friends, but these few stones by unmarked graves. Some of the later ones have initials upon them, and even a few have inscriptions.

Why, then, should we come to this spot on the day which marks the independence of the United States, to this little "churchar'd," far removed from the press of the world and the activities of modern life?

Because here some of the movements which have made us what we are had their inception. When the Meeting House stood on this ground, "the detestable practice of enslaving mankind," as the old records put it, was a recognized form of industry. The slave trade in Newport was one of great profit. Some of our own Narragansett planters had a slave ship landing at South Ferry, and all the great planters used slave labor on the farms. Just now we are having a revival of the farming industry in this part of the world, and many a long neglected field has been put under the plow, but, in the old days, with the simple one-horse plow, or double ox teams, these broad acres were fruitful and tilled by slave labor. As early as 1743 one member of the Meeting, Thomas Hazard, son of Robert, as he signs himself, called College Tom, saw the iniquity of this practice, and, on coming of age, freed his own slaves. The old story is that this so angered his father that he threatened to disinherit him, though it is good to know that their reconciliation soon followed, and that the father was converted to the son's ideas.

Thomas Hazard did not cease to preach against slavery, and was constantly on committees of the Meeting to visit slave owners, and try to secure their emancipation. This was gradually accomplished until 1773, when the committee report that, "they do not find there is any held as slaves by Friends."

Thus the South Kingstown Meeting anticipated by nearly a hundred years the great struggle which came later, and Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation.

Here also all the educational forces of the country were fostered. Few books were printed in this country, but many came from England, and the Meeting subscribed for its share of the books that were published. It had a representative on a committee to found the Friends' school and, when, in 1794, there was a motion to found a college in the colony, Thomas Hazard was one of the incorporators and appointed one of the original Fellows.⁹

⁶ Documentary History of R. I. Chapin, p. 26.

⁷ South Kingstown Records, Vol. II.

⁸ R. I. C. R., Vol. VI, p. 386.

⁹ Sewall Papers, Vol. II, p. 168.

During the troublous times of the Revolution, the Meeting saw stirring days, and it was greatly concerned to keep itself clear from "carnal fightings," but, while it disapproved of war in general, it was very tender for the sufferings of those whom it had affected. From the early days of the Revolution, the Committee on Sufferings was appointed. Thomas Hazard was a member on this committee from the first, and was one of the signers of the address sent to both General Washington and General Howe—"As visiting the fatherless and widows," it reads, "and relieving the distress by feeding the hungry and clothing the naked is the subject of this address, we cannot doubt of thy attention to our representation, and request on their behalf." The Committee goes on to inform the generals that it has been entrusted with a sum of money from Friends in Pennsylvania and New Jersey, and asks permission to enter Boston and seek to relieve the sufferers.

Later Thomas Hazard, son of Robert, and Moses Brown, make report that the committee have distributed the donation to the sufferers in Boston and Charlestown and various towns in the neighborhood who are mentioned—"the number of necessitous families and single persons being 141, and the amount distributed at this time, £220 4s. 6p. per account."

In 1778, the Meeting was informed that the old meeting-house "has been lately occupied as a hospital for the sick lately landed out of the French fleet, and greatly damaged, and likewise the pale and board fence wholly destroyed," and a committee was appointed to see "the Barrack Master, (and others whose right and business it may be)" to request repARATION. This was duly made after some delay, for Rochambeau in Newport firmly impressed on his soldiers the duty of paying for everything they consumed, and of showing great respect to the inhabitants.

It is for us for us to commemorate a place where such deeds were done. Here many of the notable families of the neighborhood met for worship. The Robinsons, Champlins, Nichols, Mumfords and Hazards were some of the leading families of the meeting. Peckham, Congdon, Knowles, Green and Dyer are others whose names find a place in the records. Most of the South County people either are direct descendants of, or had collateral relations who belonged to this Meeting. Those who have gone before are bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh. As has been said on a greater occasion than this, "We cannot honor, we cannot consecrate" such ground as this. It is for us to live in the spirit of the lives of those who have gone, for us in this day and generation to be as faithful as they were in theirs.

III. IMPRESSIONS OF KOREA AND CHINA.

GILBERT BOWLES.

(Continued from page 138.)

IN THE CITY OF SHANGHAI.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION.—Before Shanghai was opened to foreign trade in 1842, following the Opium War with Great Britain, it was merely a place of anchorage for Chinese junks on the River Whangpoo, which flows into the Yangste thirteen miles below. The rapid growth of the city began with the coming of many wealthy Chinese from Hangchow and Soochow at the time of the devastation wrought by the Taiping Rebels, 1853 to 1864. The Chinese did not know that the waste mud-flats given for the French, British and American Concessions would, before 1917, become the centre of the greatest commercial centre of the Orient, giving to the whole city a population of more than one million. Unless, as some people believe, the opening of additional railway communications makes of Hankow the first commercial city of the world, Shanghai will continue to be the great strategic centre for the commerce of the Orient.

THE NIGHTLESS CITY.—My first view of Shanghai streets was under the guidance of Isaac Mason, who gave me a general introduction to the city by night. In connection with the social problems of the city he wished me to see Nankin Road—the great central artery for Shanghai life and trade. On one side of this road groups of Chinese women were seen at the head of nearly every alley leading into the busy street. Some of these were mere girls, and did not look to be more than twelve or fourteen. But they were presumably fifteen, for according to the municipal regulations girls under fifteen who are caught in this evil business are sent to the rescue home. We went into the Door of Hope Mission, which is the city mission hall and temporary receiving home for the Door of Hope Rescue, out in the edge of the city. The little Chinese woman in charge looked frail and worn, but Isaac Mason, who goes there regularly to help in the Gospel meetings, said she was thoroughly dependable, a real spiritual guide and mother to any girls who desire to leave their old haunts.

The next day I spent most of the forenoon in drawing money on my letter of credit, getting my return steamer ticket to Kobe, and calling at Japanese and American Consulates. Both of the Consul Generals were out, but I arranged to call at another time.

ISAAC MASON AND THE CHRISTIAN LITERATURE SOCIETY.—I was very glad to visit the China Christian Literature Society, which has a building of its own on North Szechwen Road, also a distributing agency in another part of the city. I met Dr. McGelvary, editor of the China Christian Year Book, and Dr. Hoplynn Rhees, the General Secretary. Dr. Rhees has taken the burden of management from the shoulders of Dr. Timothy Richards, now on furlough in Great Britain. We also saw the Library of the Christian Literature Society, which has a good general assortment of books, besides the Library on things Chinese. The Library is open to the public, though books cannot be taken out unless by very special permission. Isaac Mason's office is on the second floor, where he has one large room and a smaller one for Chinese helpers. Isaac Mason's first work with the Christian Literature Society was at the time of the Revolution in 1911-12, when he spent some months in volunteer work in Shanghai. Upon his return from furlough two years ago, he was definitely assigned for a time by the English Friends' Mission of West China to work with the Christian Literature Society. In addition to his work in translating such general works as "Bible Manners and Customs," "Christian Biographical Series," he has also found time to prepare and print for the Friends' Mission extracts from the Discipline of London Yearly Meeting, Richard Henry Thomas's booklet on Worship and other booklets. Into the revised series of Christian biographies he has introduced sketches of Elizabeth Fry, John Woolman and some other Friends. His translations of Dr. Trueblood's "Federation of the World," and an adaptation of Dymond's "Christianity and Government," were published by the Christian Literature Society. The selling agent of the Society also acts as agent for any peace literature which Isaac Mason prepares. The whole plan seems an excellent combination. It is also a good thing that the West China Friends' work to have a good representative at the Shanghai port and centre, where Chinese Christians from the West are often found. Isaac Mason is also proving very useful in general work, such as assisting in Y. M. C. A. meetings, encouraging Japanese Christian workers, keeping in touch with persons responsive to peace work. He and his wife have recently succeeded in getting together what foreign Friends can be found in Shanghai and starting a Monthly Meeting for worship. I met a few of these Irish and English Friends, but was sorry not to be able to attend a meeting.

CONTINUATION COMMITTEE HEADQUARTERS.—In order to secure a certificate for reduced fare from Shanghai to Hangchow for the Conference of the Continuation Committee, we visited the Committee's Headquarters and met Secretary Lobenstine. They are soon to have a permanent building to serve as headquarters for this and kindred organizations.

(To be continued.)

ONE must look downwards as well as upwards in human life. Though many have passed you in the race, there are many you have left behind.—SYDNEY SMITH.

CONCLUDING REPORT OF INVESTIGATIONS BY J. HENRY SCATTERGOOD AND MORRIS E. LEEDS FOR THE AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE.

Some personal letters (written with no thought of publication) have given readers of THE FRIEND a general view of our movements in London. The War Victims' Relief Committee formally approved the plans for co-operation in the work in France between English and American Friends, which was submitted by their committee in France. These have been published in THE FRIEND. The committee in charge of the Friends' Ambulance Unit investigated the possibility of having Americans serve with their Unit and found that this was at present made impossible by a Government decision that Americans volunteering for ambulance work would have to work under the American Red Cross. The committee thought that these limitations might later be removed and were most cordial in their expression of willingness to have American Friends serve with them.

We made a hasty call at the headquarters of the committee which is looking after the welfare of interned aliens and their families, and found their work to be very much larger than we had imagined. It ranges from systematic care of the families of those in prison to the organization of industry among the latter and the sale of their products. We also had an interesting session with the committee looking after the welfare of C. O.'s in prison, both Friends and others.

This contact with English Friends left on us a deep impression that their reactions to the war are affecting them so vitally and profoundly that out of it all there will come for them a new birth of Quakerism. It is unsafe to generalize on impressions gathered in a ten days' visit, however good one's opportunity for observation may have been, and this conclusion must be taken with due reservation on that account. When the war is over there will come into their councils great numbers of serious men and women of many different types of mind with their intellectual and spiritual horizons widened by a great variety of experience, who have worked and thought intensely over all the tremendous problems with which the war has faced them, and there will be few who have not been closely touched by them. In their regular meetings and in the many informal ones that are held spontaneously as a part of the Quaker method wherever their work calls them in groups, they earnestly and continuously seek Divine guidance. It seems to be their purpose to conserve and treasure all the wisdom that may be garnered from these multifarious experiences. Each will add his quota whether he be conscientious objector coming from long hours of solitary contemplation, relief worker busied with the problems of stricken peoples in France and Belgium, Serbia and Russia, man or woman of the ambulance who has done whatever possible to alleviate the sufferings of wounded soldiers of France and Italy, man of affairs giving his time and money to all these causes and at the same time seriously studying his own business to see how it may be reorganized to promote social justice, or finally one of that large group who has thought it right to join his country's army. None of the latter have been disowned and there seems to be a general opinion that none will be who after the war express unity with Friends' beliefs and a desire to retain their membership. There is a very general tolerance of differing view-points, however widely the opinions of these groups may vary. Our English Friends seem to combine in individuals and in groups that work together, devoutness with a broad-minded willingness to face and discuss all problems that affect them, be they theological or social, in a way that is much less usual among us.

ARRANGEMENTS WITH RED CROSS AND ENGLISH FRIENDS.

Promptly after our return to Paris we took up with Major Murphy, the head of the Red Cross there, the entire question of the conditions under which the American Friends' Reconstruction Unit should work. He entirely approved our suggestion that in so far as possible members of this Unit should be assigned to work with the English Friends. Subject to the approval of the American Friends' Service Committee we formally offered to the Red Cross the services of American Friends trained for civil relief work, to be known as the American Friends' Reconstruction Unit of the Red Cross, with the understanding that all people accepting service in this Unit and sent to France would be entirely under the control of the Red Cross, and might be assigned to any work to which Friends may be properly called.

The first hundred members of the Unit were offered with the understanding that their expenses would be entirely paid by the Service Committee. Major Murphy formally accepted this offer, saying it was his opinion that the most effective work could be done by combining our Friends with the English Friends, and that he would see that our Friends were assigned to this service whenever possible, and even in cases where they were temporarily assigned to other service, they would be transferred to that service as soon as there were openings.

Major Murphy very strongly urged it directly to us and by cable to the Service Committee in America, that additional men be recruited for the Unit as fast as possible because he felt that their services were very much needed by the Red Cross in France, with which opinion we fully agree, as we believe there is a great field of useful service open there. It may not be out of the way to make a brief resumé of the reasons which led to this triangular arrangement between the Red Cross, the English Friends and the American Friends, for although these have been previously given they are scattered through a number of reports.

First.—Our American Friends working in France should have the most intimate possible co-operation of the English Friends because their reconstruction, relief, and medical work is generally admitted to be the best work of its kind being done in France. In this opinion the expert relief workers of the Red Cross heartily concur, and it was one of the most gratifying incidents of our mission to introduce a number of the Red Cross commissioners to the English Friends, and to find out how thoroughly they respected their work, and to what a large extent the plans of the Red Cross for work of this character are now based on the experience and plans of the English Friends. A considerable number of the Red Cross commissioners are now constantly in communication with their leaders. Dr. Hilda Clark has accepted an appointment in the Red Cross as a tuberculosis expert, which will take a part of her time.

For the Red Cross and particularly for our American Friends not to make use of all this experience gathered through three years of persistent intelligent work would be a very serious neglect of opportunity. Furthermore, we feel that our work would have much to gain by coming in contact with the devoted spirit of service that characterizes our English Friends. Incidentally, it seemed to us that a beneficial reaction on Quaker thought might come from close co-operation in this work.

The above considerations might seem to point to the advisability of associating our work directly with the English Friends rather than through the Red Cross, but this is quite impossible because the English Friends are not backed by any large organization and have practically reached the limit of the amount of work which they will be allowed to do. Being a pacifist organization the French Government will not allow them to increase their numbers in any of the army zones, which practically cover the regions where relief work is to be done.

It is expected that the Red Cross because it is a large national organization and by reason of the intimate relations which it has established with the American and French armies, will be able to obtain permits for its workers to live in the army zones. It also has very large financial resources, a considerable part of which it proposes to spend by making appropriations to existing organizations, and accordingly there is an excellent possibility that this connection may financially support some of the work which we will do in France. In fact, it has already done so by making liberal purchases of machinery in America for our Unit.

From the standpoint of the Red Cross the arrangement is desirable because our Unit offers it the services of just the class of trained men that it now greatly needs, and has not as yet arranged to get from other sources. The commission was hastily formed early in the summer, and composed almost exclusively of men taken from large business positions, who were chosen to plan and organize the work. This has been an exceedingly difficult task on account of the complications of military conditions, and the fact that a very large number of volunteer societies are already operating in the field, and it was necessary to co-ordinate and strengthen their work—a very delicate undertaking. This preliminary work has been gone through, plans are rapidly maturing for large schemes of reconstruction and relief, and the organization is in need of the type of men and women that can be used in carrying out these schemes. These our Unit offers.

The correspondence between Major Murphy and ourselves has now been formally approved and accepted by the American Friends' Service Committee, and the arrangement accordingly is official. The spirit in which it is hoped and expected that the membership of our Unit will co-operate with the English Friends and the Red Cross is indicated by the following extract from our letter to Major Murphy:—

"We are particularly gratified with the cordial endorsement in the last paragraph of your letter of our conclusion, resulting from a month's investigation of the work of British Friends, that American Friends can be most effective by co-operating in the fullest possible measure with British Friends, so as to gain the advantages of their three years' experience, and so that our workers may be permeated with their splendid spirit of self-effacing but highly intelligent service to humanity. Your verbal statement that you would see that our workers, even if employed in other service under the Red Cross, should be transferred to service with the 'Mission de la Société des Amis,' is a most generous and convincing endorsement of this view. We understand, of course, this is subject to the work being satisfactory to the Red Cross."

"We know that the American Friends' Service Committee will recognize that the generous spirit in which you have accepted its offer of workers places it under a deep obligation to furnish the Red Cross men and women who will be thoroughly loyal to your organization, willing to accept, without self-seeking, any work to which Friends may properly be called, actuated by religious motives and high ideals of service."

"We append as a matter of record a copy of the arrangement, satisfactory to British Friends and ourselves, for American Friends to work in the joint organization, and again call your attention to their request that a member of your commission be delegated to meet with their Executive Committee."

A discussion of the detailed problems that would have to be worked out in order that our Unit when it arrived in France might start its work promptly made it clear that it would be highly advisable for one of us to remain until the Unit had come over and was established, and that the other should return to America and report conditions fully. J. Henry Scattergood consented to remain, although this kept him away from important matters at home very much longer than he had anticipated. He reports by cable that he has located at Ormans a satisfactory site for the American camp for building demountable houses, and is making arrangements for the men to go there directly from Bordeaux. Thirteen men sailed on the 28th and fifty-four on the 4th, and in all probability will be located in this camp shortly after this is printed.

Those who have watched the Unit at Haverford in training are convinced that the study there has been a very great advantage to the men, and feel that men who are sent over in the future should be given the same opportunities. It is, of course, impossible to have this training go on at Haverford, or any other educational institution, through the winter. Accordingly it has been decided to ask J. Henry Scattergood to locate a suitable place in France as a permanent training place for members of the Unit. Such a training camp would doubtless have advantages from the standpoint of study in French, would be as good as one located in this country for all other reasons, and would have the very great advantage that men could remain in the camp until definite work was assigned to them, and the necessary papers secured for them to engage in it.

MORRIS E. LEEDS.

LETTER FROM ANNA J. HAINES.

[The family of Anna Haines kindly permit us to print the following—Eds.]

EIGHTH MONTH 10, 1917.

You will probably be as surprised to receive this letter with the Japanese postmark at such a late date as we are to be sending it. By all schedule we should be about arriving in Bazuluk, instead of which we are actually housekeeping in Tsuruga, the little port town from which we eventually hope to sail for Russia. It all happened over night on our way down from Hakone which I told about in other letters. We had our state-rooms engaged on a boat leaving this place for Vladivostok a few hours after our train's arrival, but when we came to the dock we were informed that the Russian Government had put an embargo on all foreigners and returning Russian citizens; no one would be allowed to sail on the Russian boats or to land in Vladivostok! The news was a bit disconcerting—the more so as all our baggage had arrived here with us; the town is miles from any hill or seaside resort, has practically no foreign residents, hotels, &c.

The Russian Vice-consul, who is also in charge of the ship line for Vladivostok was most kind. He spoke English very well and advised us to the best of his ability, to the effect that (two) members of the party return (a fifteen hours trip) to Yokohama that night to get Cook's to refund our ticket money, both for the boat journey and the Siberian Railway, and to get new reservations for both, in the first boat leaving after the embargo is lifted, which everyone now supposes to be next Third-day night (the 14th), just two weeks after our expected departure.

The only hotel in the town had about two rooms arranged for foreigners, i. e., bed and chairs; the food, no matter what the meal, consists of about the same—cucumbers without dressing, shrimps (of uncertain age), soup of the dead bones of various animals, fish some days good—some days smelling from age and always served with the heads and tail attached—the eyes looking particularly pitiful, meat once a week on boat-landing days, and always peaches for dessert. As I read it off it sounds almost attractive, but after several meals one comes to loathe the sight of it. However, I am getting ahead of my story.

The Russian Vice-consul loaned us an English clerk in his office who speaks Japanese perfectly and who had instruction to help us select a house to rent and live in for those two weeks. In view of all things, that was decided to be the most economical, convenient and comfortable thing to do. After looking at several rooms, which for one reason or another were not desirable, we were offered the vacant half of a house occupied by a Russian clerk in the office of the Volunteer Fleet. And here we are now, not usually all six of us at once, as two were in Yokohama for three days and three have been sight-seeing in Kyoto for three days. But as for getting an idea of the Japanese manners of living, this housekeeping experiment has been for me a pronounced success.

We are situated exactly at the mouth of a river with windows (of their house) overlooking it across such a narrow little street that you can easily drop an apple-core into the river. There is also nothing but pebbly sand between the garden of Tenko-San (the name of our landlord) and the Bay of Tsuruga, where we go swimming every night. Pine trees, scraggy grass and some flowers on rocky little terraces flourish in Tenko-San's garden, which is walled in with stone up to the second story windows. . . . On the first floor of both houses there are no real living-rooms—only kitchen, storage bins, etc. Our front door is a massive wooden arrangement sliding in grooves and locking on the inside with a dropping beam. There are no signs of keys or regular bolts, but we found the existing conditions quite efficacious one night when we inadvertently slid the door too far on leaving for our supper—we had to come in via Tenko-San's. The houses are two-stories high, of rough unpainted wood, with wide overhanging tile roofs, the latter half plastered on with a reddish clay and wholly kept in place by an interlocking growth of lichens. Some of the houses are plastered and white-washed on the outside, giving them a dazzling appearance in the sun. Of the outside walls, about the entire space is taken up with sliding lattice-work windows, a little space being filled with glass, but mostly composed of heavy paper, pasted over the lattice. In the middle of the day it is blisteringly hot in the sun, but there is always a good breeze coming in one or more of the windows and the heavy tile roof doesn't get hot until evening, so we have a fairly even atmosphere. Our rooms are absolutely devoid of any furniture save for a little table about a foot high. We unpacked our army blankets and sleep on them, and under the most marvelous mosquito nettings that ever you saw, huge green canopies which hang from the ceiling like tents and entirely fill the room. One of ours is supposed to shelter six people, but we have never tried more than four under it. They are a very necessary piece of furniture, too, as the mosquitoes here are (very bad) with an angry buzz like an aeroplane. The flies are also very large but not numerous.

Our domestic arrangements are as simple as possible. We get our own breakfast and lunch and go to a hotel or native restaurant for dinner. I like the latter better, but the food there does not suit some of the girls so we mostly frequent the hotel, which is also, of course, run by Japanese, but after what they fondly hope is a foreign pattern. We borrowed a few cooking utensils from the Tenko's. Tenko is married to a Japanese woman and their household consists of a little girl about three years old, the Russian sister of Tenko, a middle-aged servant, who gets as wages $3.50 a month in addition to her "keep", and a little maid who takes care of the baby and runs errands for $2 per month. Our house, including the drinking water well, which is artesian (the water is very clear and cold), the food storage well, where we fondly imagine our fruit to be on ice, and the foot-washing pool, costs us $5 for the two weeks. We cook in the Tenko-San's kitchen, where the entire cooking for their household and ours is done on two little braziers about as big as a bread-box. We get rice from the family—we don't yet know how much it will cost us, but they claim very little. Then we have coffee and toast (the native bread is too soggy to suit most tastes) and fruit. Peaches here are good-looking, something like ours on the outside, but with a regular, deep red meat reaching to the stone. We got a box of about one hundred and fifteen peaches for one yen fifty sen, which would amount to about seventy-five cents at home. Each peach is carefully wrapped in newspaper and each layer covered with straw. We also have pears, apples, plums and a queer kind of melon which looks like a stemless Bartlett pear on the outside, but is hollow and full of seeds and tastes just like a very good cantaloupe. For lunch we have scrambled eggs or cheese or tomatoes and cucumbers, cold tea (no ice), sponge-cake, which they make very nicely, and more fruit.

Just keeping still is as much as you want to do, unless a sea-breeze is blowing. We are not even studying Russian as hard as we should as A. Farbyewski has gone to Kyoto sight-seeing. Two others have also gone, but the heat there was too uncomfortable for the rest of us. We are not allowed to wear any shoes upstairs, as the matting on the floors is kept immaculate. The Japanese, even the very well educated, go bare-footed themselves in the house.

The Russian girl and Tenko's wife are both anxious to learn English and know a few words, but it is difficult for any of us to make the others understand except by gestures. One day a man came to the house with goods to sell and Esther W. bought some silk which she is now making into a waist and I an obi scarf of most barbaric orange with yellow and blue flowers. We carried on our bargaining in the following way: Amelia F. was told by us in English what we wanted and what we would give for it. She in turn gave them to the Russian girl in Russian, who turned them into Japanese for her sister-in-law, who carried on the actual dealings with the merchant. As there is no particular reason why time should be saved, we do not object to squandering it in this way. The only difficulty is that we shall arrive in Russia later than we had expected and therefore will be later leaving. We are, however, having a very interesting trip.

All of us are more or less pronounced in our views about things, and occasionally we are reminded that the Japanese character for "Peace," when literally translated, means "one woman under a roof," when for the most part we cultivate love and unity.

I shall now stop for this letter, again mailing it on the eve of our supposed departure from Japan, but whether we will be held up longer we cannot say. It seems pretty lonely knowing that you are hearing from me only occasionally I'll admit, and that it may be a long time before I get any home letters.

NEWS ITEMS.

HELPERS IN RUSSIA.—A cablegram sent Eighth Month 30th informs that members of the Philadelphia volunteers for service in Russia had on that date safely reached their objective, Buzuluk, Russia, and that they were well.

LETTER FROM SOUTHERN QUARTERLY MEETING, N. C.

To the Drafted Young Men:—

As we have come under a deep concern for you, we wish to thus extend our sympathies in whatever trials may come upon you and express our desire that you may be Divinely helped through them all, and we pray you may be preserved from all the corrupting influences that may surround you, and led safely to the end of life, and be happy in eternity.

In a measure we feel and would have you feel the heavy responsibility which rests upon each of us in the present crisis of the world, and we would that all might realize their strict accountability to a supreme, almighty Ruler, whose authority and commands are to be obeyed above every other authority, who happily rewards for obedience, while the disobedient secure to themselves eternal punishment.

Seeing that we are immortal beings and feeling that the welfare or safety of the immortal part as far exceeds the safety of the body in importance as eternity exceeds time, it is for this that we feel and would have you feel the deepest concern.

None can realize how much more important the safety of the soul is than that of the body except through the light of the eternal spirit on the conscience, so it is to obedience to every check, reproof and striving of the Divine spirit that we would commend you as the only safe way through life, for all who overlook, reject or disobey the Divine influences on the mind yield themselves servants to the enemy of all true happiness who is seeking to devour every soul by leading into ruinous gratification, which so darkens the mind that such cannot realize their real condition until their doom is sealed.

As there is only One who can save from this destructive enemy, this evil spirit, and that one is our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, we would have you feel that you must obey every command of His, for He can lead through faith and repentance into amendment of life which all must know who would have true happiness.

If any of you must leave the dearest ties of home, father, mother and other dear relatives, and perhaps find a grave in a far-off land, we fervently desire that you may have this Saviour even "The Almighty God" for your guide, your support and refuge and that you fear and obey Him above all the fear of man. We know that He will keep very tender the tender-hearted among you, and that He may awaken some that are hardened and unconcerned about their true safety.

We would have you, our dear young friends, sincerely love your country and have its safety and welfare deeply at heart, and as it is righteousness alone that exalteth a nation and as there can be no righteousness without obedience to Him who is the source of all righteousness, even Christ the Lord, we believe those who serve and obey their Saviour best, serve their country best, for disobedience to Him has caused the downfall of every individual or nation that ever has fallen; so those who hear His sayings and do them are building on the only foundation that will stand, and are showing the highest type of patriotism.

Again expressing our sympathies and our earnest desires for your present and eternal well-being, we bid you a loving farewell, and will ever remain your friends.

Signed on behalf of Southern Quarterly Meeting of Conservative Friends, held at Holly Springs, in Randolph County, N. C., the twenty-eighth of Seventh Month, 1917, ANDERSON M. BARKER, } Clerks.

SYBIL E. COX, }

WHERE SHALL A CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTOR TO MILITARY SERVICE DRAW THE LINE?

VINCENT D. NICHOLSON

The above question has become of more than academic interest. For several hundred young Friends it is now the most vital question of their lives.

For a generation the testimony of the Society of Friends against war has been little more than an inherited theory. It has been a favorite theme for the Quaker tongue and pen. It has served to illustrate our conception of the meaning of Christian discipleship. We have had a profound belief, however, in the verity of this inherited body of principles. They have come to us through the fires of persecution and the testing pressure of social and political crises. We have felt in our own untroubled experience a response to the historic convictions of Friends, and nearly every official utterance of the Society has contained some such statement as the following, which appears in the Richmond Declaration of Faith and is a part of the Uniform Discipline:

"That conscience should be free and that in matters of religious doctrine and worship man is accountable only to God, are truths which are plainly declared in the New Testament; and which are confirmed by the whole scope of the Gospel, and by the example of our Lord and His disciples. To rule over the conscience, and to command the spiritual allegiance of His creature man, is the high and sacred prerogative of God alone. . . . We have ever maintained that it is the duty of Christians to obey the enactments of civil government, except those which interfere with our allegiance to God. We owe much to its blessings. Through it we enjoy liberty and protection in connection with law and order. . . . We feel bound explicitly to avow our unshaken persuasion that all war is utterly incompatible with the plain precepts of our Divine Lord and Law-giver, and the whole spirit of His Gospel, and that no plea of necessity or policy, however urgent or peculiar, can avail to release either individuals or nations from the paramount allegiance which they owe to Him who has said, 'Love your enemies.' In enjoining this love and the forgiveness of injuries, He who has brought us to Himself has not prescribed for man precepts which are incapable of being carried into practice, or of which the practice is to be postponed until all shall be persuaded to act upon them. . . . We would in humility, but in faithfulness to our Lord, express our firm persuasion that all exigencies of civil government and social order may be met under the banner of the Prince of Peace, in strict conformity with His commands."

Our traditional testimony against war is now in the crucible of our own experience. Its validity is being tried by the facts of war which have replaced the theories about war. Our carefully phrased statements have no meaning or purpose except as they are intended to be expressed in conduct when the situations with which they deal arise.

The events of the last few weeks have forced the question into the realm of conduct. Hundreds of young Friends have been called to military service. What Friends say has now become of very secondary importance to what Friends do. Upon the decisions of these men, upon whom has fallen this tremendous responsibility, hangs the issue of whether we shall preserve or cast aside the heritage of our fore-fathers.

The writer has no disposition to pass judgment upon those who are led by conscience to enter the army, nor to make an argument on behalf of conscientious objection to war. This statement deals merely with the fact that there are hundreds of Friends who have expressed by affidavit their inability because of religious conviction "to participate in war in any form." It seeks to throw some light upon the vital and difficult question of what constitutes participation in war.

The question appears to be (as Justice Holmes has said all questions are) one of degree. It seems impossible to have absolutely no connection with the military system. So long as the prosecution of the war is the dominant purpose of the national community of which we are a part, every productive expenditure of energy by each of us contributes to that purpose. We pay taxes, a portion of which is used for military purposes. The young men who are prevented by religious conviction from participating in war in any form have registered under a law entitled "An Act to Increase the Military Establishment of the United States," and have reported for physical examination to Boards controlled by the War Department.

Consistency pushed to the absolute extreme would require removal to a part of the world where all wars and rumors of wars are unknown. However, consistency is not the sum of all jewels. There are things lower in the scale of moral values than a certain form of inconsistency—namely, anarchy and a complete severing of all obligations to the community in which we find ourselves. We must draw the line, then, at some point in that wide field of degree stretching between a refusal to longer draw breath and labor in the country of our allegiance, and a refusal to participate very immediately in the act of taking life.

This does not involve any compromise of our principles. In determining the nature of our moral obligations, our obligations to society must be taken into account. We should continue as long as possible to be a part of society, even though we may be unable to join in the controlling spirit and purpose of that society, and we are thus morally bound to fulfill certain social obligations. The fundamental allegiance which we owe to the Kingdom of God must be worked out, not in a complete separation from human society, unless such a course becomes unavoidable, but in a proper balancing of the demands of society which we must accept in order to continue as an efficient member of society, and those which we must refuse. In seeking to avoid the Scylla of participating in a purpose that we believe to be wrong, we cannot ever too far or we may founder on the Charybdis of a complete break with the Society of which God intends us to be a part. We must recognize, however, the important truth that the conditions which Society imposes upon continued membership may become morally impossible, and men have suffered long imprisonment and have died rather than violate their convictions of the right.

In seeking to draw this line between acts connected with war which we can do and those which we cannot do, we should attempt to understand the nature of the Friends' opposition to war. It is much more fundamental than an objection to the act of killing. It is a conviction that the whole military system embodies a spirit which is a denial of the way of life presented by Jesus Christ.

It seems, therefore, that any activity that is wholly or chiefly dominated by the war purpose, even though not a corporate part of the army, is within a conscientious objection to war. It seems clear that a conscientious objector could no more engage in making munitions than he could engage in firing the munitions. There may be more difference of opinion as to the question of subscribing to war loans. Yet there seems to be a clear and vital distinction between these loans and the usual taxes, in that the only purpose of the loans is a military one. They peculiarly embody the war spirit. It is difficult to see how a person who could not furnish munitions nor the labor of his hands to carry on war, could furnish money to be used solely for the same purpose. Usual taxation, however, is an essential function of all government, and if the government wrongly uses the money provided, the responsibility is that of the government. There seems no more reason for refusing to pay taxes because a part will be used for military purposes than for refusing to pay taxes because they will be used in graft, or refusing to pay a debt to a person who would make a wrong use of the money.

Although it is difficult to draw the line as to activities not under military control, it seems fairly easy to draw a clearly defined line as to all activities that are a corporate part of the army. This is the problem that the young men now called under the Selective Service Law are facing. It seems clear that no Friend who holds the historic Friends' position can render service in any department of the army. The sole purpose of an army is combatant, and every part—even the hospital and supply departments—necessarily shares in the purpose of the whole. Hospital service in itself is of course compatible with Friends' principles, but when rendered as a corporate part of an army it is so stamped with the military purpose as to seem impossible for a conscientious objector to war.

A musician might be conscientiously unable to play his instrument in the employ of a saloon, although he could play to the same people in the same building if it were devoted to another purpose. A physician might be conscientiously unable to serve as one of the crew of a pirate ship in ministering to the wounded, although he could minister to the same people on the same ship if devoted to a different purpose. So it seems that a Friend who is conscientiously unable to participate in war in any form could not enter the hospital service of the army, although he could render the same service if it were dissociated from military control and the accompanying military purpose.

The question arises as to how a willingness to register under the Selective Service Law can be reconciled with a refusal to do hospital or commissary service under that law. The distinction seems perfectly clear, and logically and morally sound. The act of registering was wholly under the civil branch of the government, it was in obedience to a law that recognized religious conviction; and it was an expression of a proper willingness to co-operate with the government in finding some field of service consistent with our principles. When, however, we reach the point in this co-operation where the next step is incorporation into the army, we must halt. It makes no difference what work we may be asked to do on the other side of this clearly defined line between civil and military life. We would have to do it as a corporate part of an organization, the sole purpose of which clashes squarely with the essential principles of our religious faith. Once across this line, the decisions of conduct become confused by a perfect maze of difficult problems. The distinctions which we would make because of conscience must necessarily be entirely foreign to an organization dominated by a single purpose, every part of which must contribute to that purpose. To a person with a real conscientious objection to war there would come with increasing intensity the problem of what orders to obey and what not to obey. Such a situation could only end either in a betrayal of conscience or in a complete break with the organization, since unquestioning obedience to all orders is its fundamental law.

In the very nature of things it could not be expected that an army officer, in the strain and exigencies of active army life, could adequately meet the needs of a person who was conscientiously opposed to the dominant purpose of the officer's business. Many officers would never have heard of Certificate of Discharge from Combatant Service on form 174. Others, even with the highest motive, could not properly interpret the certificate in the light of its intent of recognizing religious principles against war, since naturally they could not understand those principles. English Friends have been able to do ambulance and hospital work for the army since they have been an absolutely independent Unit, able to do all of their work under the sole control of a humanitarian motive. They are in no danger of orders controlled by the combatant and destructive motive, which is necessarily the dominant motive of every army. The American Friends' Service Committee first attempted to organize ambulance Units, but was prevented by the fact that all such units in the United States were to be made a corporate part of the army.

The only possible solution of the problem from the standpoint of both the government and the conscientious objector is a service wholly dissociated both from the spirit of war and from military control. The President has not yet declared what forms of non-combatant service Friends, with certificates of discharge from combatant service, will be asked to render. We may hope (and with good reason for our hope) that the present tense situation will be cleared and that Friends will be allowed to serve, as is the case in England, in service of national and international importance under our own committees.

It is said that the line I have attempted to draw is arbitrary, it must be remembered that the same must necessarily be true of any line wherever drawn. We are forced to draw a line at some point. Wherever it may be, the situation closest to the line on either side will not be very far apart. The line I have drawn seems consistent with the principles of Friends, seems to be within the clear intent of the exemption clause of the Selective Service Law, and seems more free from a confusion of thought and conduct than any other possible line. I have merely attempted to contribute to the thought upon this problem, which deeply concerns ourselves and our government, the considerations that have seemed of importance to me. I would urge other Friends to make a similar contribution in order that as a group the thought and experience of each apprehending that of the others) we may ascertain more clearly the will of God.

N. J., was well attended on the women's side, while the men's benches were not so well filled.

The willingness of young men at the call of king or country to leave home and interests to face death in a far land was held up to us, who believe in a better way, that we may be willing to sacrifice what is called for in the service of the Best of Kings.

Anna Crawford (with a minute) and George L. Jones, of Westtown School, were present, with other acceptable visitors.

NOTICES.

FRIENDS' SELECT SCHOOL.—The School is expected to open for the coming year on Second-day, Ninth Month 24th. Those desiring to enter pupils should confer with the Principal in advance if possible.

WALTER W. HAVLAND,
Principal.

SIXTEENTH AND CHERRY STREETS, Philadelphia.

WESTTOWN BOARDING SCHOOL has on hand a considerable number of old books, not now in use, which may possibly be acceptable to some of our former pupils or to other Friends. Barclay's Catechism and "Views of Christian Doctrine" may be had for the asking if the persons desiring any of them will pay postage or express charges. There are also several copies of Clarkson's "Portraiture of Quakerism," which we are willing to dispose of at one dollar each. The books above named have been replaced by others for class use at Westtown. Address George L. Jones, Principal.

FRIENDS' LIBRARY, 142 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.—The following books were among those added to the Library during the Spring months:

Devine—Normal Life.

Emerson—Twelve Principles of Efficiency.

Hodgkin—Missionary Spirit and the Present Opportunity.

Howells—Years of My Youth.

Ingersoll—Open That Door.

McClure—Leadership of the New America.

Marden—Victorious Attitude.

Magnus—Russian Folk Tales.

Pearson—Reveries of a Schoolmaster.

Rose—Feeding the Family.

Sweetser—Book of Indian Braves.

Friends' Library is open from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M., and 2 to 5 P. M., Seventh-day, 9 A. M. to 1 P. M.

LANDA A. MOORE, Librarian.

MEETINGS from Ninth Month 23rd to 29th:—

Chester, Pa., Monthly Meeting, at Media, Second-day, Ninth Month 24th, at 7.30 P. M.

Concord, at Concordville, Third-day, Ninth Month 25th, at 9.30 A. M.

Woodbury, Third-day, Ninth Month 25th, at 8 P. M.

Abington, at Abington, Fourth-day, Ninth Month 26th, at 10.15 A. M.

Birmingham, at West Chester, Fourth-day, Ninth Month 26th, at 10 A. M.

Salem, Fourth-day, Ninth Month 26th, at 10.30 A. M.

Goshen, at Malvern, Fifth-day, Ninth Month 27th, at 10 A. M.

Philadelphia, Fourth and Arch Streets, Fifth-day, Ninth Month 27th, at 10.30 A. M.

Lansdowne, Fifth-day, Ninth Month 27th, at 7.45 P. M.

DEED. In Germantown, Philadelphia, Ninth Month 1, 1917, ELIZABETH TAYLOR, daughter of late Thomas B. and Mary Ann Taylor; a member of Birmingham Monthly Meeting of Friends, Pa.

—, Seventh Month 7, 1917, at Brightman's Pond, Westerly, R. I., RUTH KEIR HENDERSON, wife of T. Albert Henderson, aged forty-three years; a member of the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia.

—, at West Chester, Pa., on Second-day, Ninth Month 3, 1917, MARY DINGEE, in the eighty-ninth year of her age.

—, on Ninth Month 6th, at his late residence, 1247 Walnut Street, Philadelphia, EDWIN S. LOWRY, son of late John S. and Elizabeth C. Lowry, aged seventy-six; a member of the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia.

—, at her home near Chester, Pa., on Ninth Month 11, 1917, SUSAN H. SHARPLESS, widow of John Sharpless, Jr., aged ninety-two years; a member of Chester Monthly Meeting of Friends, Pa.

FOUNDED 1865.

THE PROVIDENT LIFE & TRUST CO.
OF PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Insures Lives Acts as Executor, Etc.
Accounts Solicited Deposit by Mail
Travelers' Cheques Monthly Statements by Mail

WRITE FOR LEAFLET.

Fourth and Chestnut Streets, Phila.

H. F. BRUNER

S. D. HALL

H. F. BRUNER & Co.

COAL

OFFICE AND YARD

16 N. TWENTY-FIRST STREET

PHILADELPHIA

TELEPHONES: LOCUST 241
RACK 661

The Only Grand Prize
(Highest Award) given to Dictionaries at the Panama-Pacific Exposition was granted to WEBSTER'S NEW INTERNATIONAL
For Superiority of Educational Merit.

This new creation answers with final authority all kinds of puzzling questions such as "How is Freemond pronounced?" "Where is Flinders?" "What is a continuous voyage?" "What is a kerfuffle?" "What is white collar?" and thousands of others.

More than 400,000 Vocabulary Terms. 30,000 Geographical Subjects, 12,000 Biographical Entries. Over 6000 Illustrations, 2700 Pages. The only dictionary with the divided page—a stroke of genius.

Write for specimen pages, illustrations, etc. Free, a set of Pocket Maps if you name this paper.

G. & C. MERIAM CO.,
Springfield, Mass.

Letchworth Cottage
Spring Lake Beach, N. J.

Open for the Season 1917

A. C. & S. H. Letchworth

ALFRED C. HAINES
Building Glass and Paints
56 N. Front St., Philadelphia

POCONO MANOR INN

OPEN ALL YEAR

Situated in the beautiful Pocono Mountains in northeastern Pennsylvania is most attractive the year 'round.

Golf, Tennis, Bowling, Driving, Motoring, Swimming and Boating are but few of the recreations found at this popular resort.

J. W. HURLEY, Mgr., Pocono Manor, Pa.
(Pocono Summit Station, D., L. & W. K. R.)

WOOLMAN SCHOOL
A FRIENDS' SCHOOL FOR SOCIAL AND RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.

COURSES OF STUDY, FALL TERM, 1917.

History of New Testament Times; Old Testament Literature; Literature and Principles of Friends, given by Elbert Russell; The Life of Paul, J. Henry Cadbury; Methods of Social Betterment, J. Byron Deacon; First-day School Methods, Annie Hillborn.

Intensive work in conversational French will be provided for students wishing to prepare for reconstruction work in France.

Fall Term begins Tenth Month 10.

For admission apply to

ELBERT RUSSELL, Director,
Woolman School, Swarthmore, Pa.

RESIDENCE: 254 S. 41st St. BELL 'PHONE: Baring 7984X

WILLIAM OAKES

Plumbing and Heating Contractor
ALSO LEAD BURNING
260 SOUTH TENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA

BELL 'PHONE: Filbert 2666.

GLASLYN-CHATHAM

PARK PLACE

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

A Family House of Established Reputation.

Open Throughout the Year.

NATHAN L. JONES.

WALL PAPERS—All Grades

WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER

Custom of Friends Specially Solicited

FRANK C. BUEHL

Successor to S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON

902 SPRING GARDEN ST. :: PHILADELPHIA
Opposite Spring Garden Station, Phila. & Reading R.R.
ESTABLISHED 1840. BELL 'PHONE.

WILLIAM S. YARNALL
MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

128 SOUTH SIXTEENTH STREET

PHILADELPHIA

WANTED—A CARETAKER FOR THE INDIAN boys at Friends' School, Tusconasa, N. Y.—Probably one who can teach manual training. Applicants for the position may be made to
W. B. BROAD, Supt., TUSCONASA, N. Y.
HENRY HALL, Friends' Hospital, Frankford, Phila.
ANNA WALTON, Moylan, Pa.

THE HOLMES PRESS

Printers

J. L. Engle, Pres.

1336-40 CHERRY ST. PHILA.

THE LAKESIDE

EAGLES MERE, PA.

Unobstructed lake view; capacity 250. Elevator steam heat, golf, tennis, boating and bathing. Attractive motoring through the surrounding country.

GARAGE

J. S. KIRK & SON

M. GATCHEL

126 N. 21st St., PHILA.

MILLINERY, PLAIN AND FANCY

'Phone, Spruce 3032

GIRARD TRUST CO.
BROAD and CHESTNUT STS.

CAPITAL AND SURPLUS } $10,000,000

Acts as Executor, Trustee, Guardian, Administrator, Assignee and Receiver. Safes to Rent in Burglar-proof Vaults. Interest Allowed on Deposits. :: ::

E. B. MORRIS

PRESIDENT

FRIENDS OR OTHERS WHO ARE THINKING of attending Cornell the coming year will find comfortable rooms in a Friends' family, at reasonable prices, at 235 Linden Avenue, Ithaca, N. Y. Five minutes' walk from Campus. EDWARD WOOD.

WANTED—BY TWO FRIENDS; TWO OR THREE rooms and board in Christian family in neighborhood of Coulter Street Meeting, Georgetown, Pa. References exchanged. ANNE T. BAILEY, 1115 W. State St., Trenton, N. J.

WANTED—SALESMAN TO CANVAS RETAIL store and institution trade for staple food product. "C." Care "THE FRIEND."

FOR RENT (FURNISHED)—A PLEASANT HOME in Moorestown, N. J., on Main Street, overlooking the Valley; heated by hot water; lighted by electricity; near railroad station; trolley passing the door; near friends' Meeting and school on same side of street; garage. Apply to M. W. STOKES, 166 E. Main St., Moorestown, N. J.

Tannate Saves Trouble

HINTS ON LACING

TANNATE
LACE LEATHER
J. E. RHOADS & SONS
 PHILADELPHIA 12 N. THIRD ST.
 NEW YORK 102 BEERMAN ST.
 CHICAGO 322 W. RANDOLPH ST.
 FACTORY AND TANNERY, WILMINGTON, DEL.

Write for this Booklet

 Philadelphia's
 Representative Store

 R. C. Ballinger Ernest R. Yerxa John A. Stratten
 TELEPHONES

BeB—Fihert 26-15 . . . Keystone—Race 637

R. C. BALLINGER & CO.
 CONTRACTORS and BUILDERS

216 N. Thirteenth St.

Philadelphia.

ELKINS, MORRIS & CO.

BANKERS

REPRESENTATIVES

WM. E. CADBURY

PAUL W. BROWN

JAMES P. MAGILL

 LAND TITLE BUILDING
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.

 RAILROAD AND
 PUBLIC UTILITY BONDS

FOR

CONSERVATIVE INVESTMENT.

FULL PARTICULARS ON REQUEST.

 We recommend the use of
RAG FEATHERWEIGHT

(Antique Finish)

As the paper for high-grade Books and other Publications

JOSEPH G. FOGG
FUNERAL DIRECTOR and EMBALMER
 S. W. COR. 16TH AND RACE STREETS
 Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals
 BELL 'PHONE SPRUCE 1648

W. J. MacWatters

 Let Me
 Help You

In Selecting Your

RUGS AND CARPETS

Domestic -- -- Oriental

ALL WEAVES

 The Home of Bundrah Wilton
 "DURABLE AS IRON"

HARDWICK & MAGEE CO.
 1220 Market Street

HARRY S. LEE
 313 WALNUT STREET
PAINTER AND GRAINER

 ANTIQUE and OFFICE FURNITURE RESTORED
 JOBBING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO
 ESTIMATES

W. B. WEAVER
UNDERTAKER and EMBALMER
 550-552 N. 5TH ST., PHILA., PA.

 Special Attention Given to Funerals
 In and Out of the City. Also Chapel
 Accommodations for Funerals.

BELL PHONE

ESTABLISHED 1862

Assoc. M. AM. Soc. C. E. Bell 'Phone—Lombard 3412

EDWIN M. EVANS
CONTRACTOR & BUILDER
 My jobbing department is well equipped,
 prompt and efficient

321 S. LAWRENCE ST. PHILA.

SEE WALKER & KEPLER
 FOR
Good Electrical Work

531 CHESTNUT ST. - PHILA.

PUBLIC STENOGRAPHER
GEORGE B. COCK, Liberty Building
 Established 1896. Experience 39 years; Medical 13

 THE following timely books, mostly of those recommended by the Social Service Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, are for sale at Friends' Book Store, 304
 Arch Street, Philadelphia.

"The Church and the Hour."	Vina D. Scudder, . . .	$1.00
"The Social Problem."	J. H. Hollander, . . .	1.25
"The Abolition of Poverty."	C. A. Ellwood, . . .	75
"Christianizing the Social Order."	Walter Rauschenbusch . . .	1.50
"The Day of Our Visitation."	William Littleboy, . . .	50
"A Word of Remembrance and Caution to the Rich."	John Woolman, . . .	05

Painting Problems Worked Out

 NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE MATERIAL THAT WE SELL

CONSUULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
 MANUFACTURERS
 PHILADELPHIA

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 91.

FIFTH-DAY, NINTH MONTH 27, 1917.

No. 13.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price $2.00 a year in Advance.

Publisher, DAVIS H. FORSYTHE.

Editors { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
 DAVIS H. FORSYTHE,
 MARY WARD.

Make remittances payable to

THE FRIEND,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

EDUCATION AND THE WAR

As will appear at a glance this is an Educational Number of THE FRIEND. We had the hope that thus for one week at least we might escape any reference to the heart-breaking war. Immediately, however, we attempt any appraisal of present educational forces it becomes clear that these have been most profoundly influenced by the world situation. Happily, the point that stands out in the limelight is one of astonishing hopefulness. Our sister country of Great Britain (we suppose this feminine designation is intended to obliterate thoughts even of past wars!) has entertained proposals in Parliament made by the Minister of Education, H. L. Fisher, for a very great extension of educational opportunity. The Minister has said "there is a growing sense, not only in England, but all through Europe, especially in France, that the industrial workers are entitled to be considered primarily as citizens, and as fit subjects for any form of education from which they are capable of profiting." So in the face of depleted treasuries, exhausted man-power, and crippled industries, it seems likely new burdens of taxation will be assumed for this astonishing venture of faith in education. We need not here linger over the details by which it is proposed to accomplish this happy end. The conclusion of the Minister's great speech in Parliament (which we copy from The Friend (London)) gives the spirit behind this great movement:

"We assume that education is one of the good things of life, which should be more widely shared than has hitherto been the case amongst the children and young persons of the country. We assume that education should be the education of the whole man, spiritually, intellectually, and physically; and it is not beyond the resources of civilization to devise a scheme of education, possessing certain common qualities, but admitting at the same time large variation, from which the whole population of the country, male and female, may derive benefit. We assume that the principles upon which well-to-do parents proceed in the education of their families are valid mutatis mutandis for the families of the poor, and that the State has need to secure for its juvenile population conditions under which mind, body, and character may be harmoniously developed. We feel also that, in existing circumstances, the life of the rising generation can only be protected against the injurious effects of industrial pressure by a further measure of State compulsion. But we argue that the compulsion proposed in this Bill will be no sterilizing restriction of wholesome liberty, but the essential condition of a large and more enlightened freedom. It will tend to stimulate the civic spirit, promote general culture and technical knowledge, and diffuse a steadier judgment and a better-informed opinion through the whole body of the community."

Can any effort be set in motion more calculated than this to make the world safe for Democracy?

This thinking of education in world-terms has two reflexes in our own country to which we must revert editorially. The first will be made clear, we think, by a brief quotation from a circular letter by the Massachusetts Commissioner of Education to all school superintendents in the State:

"Not only must the world be made safe for democracy, but democracy must be made safe for the world. The former end, it appears, must be achieved by force of arms. The latter end, that of making democracy a safe instrument in the hands of our future citizenship, must be achieved through the education of the youth. To this end the public school system of America is dedicated."

The other is a very different note from those so far quoted. It comes from the head-master of a noted private school. He is one who is classed as an educator, and his appeal (for it is that) is made to the educational world at large. After the statement that "this war will be won by the boys of America who are now in their early teens," he proceeds to show that the sine qua non of our situation is "the military state of mind." We are not succeeding in our military venture,—we can not succeed without this particular "state of mind." All preparedness without it is futile. So for success in the present and security in the future, school-masters must set themselves the task of producing "this state of mind." Such would-be leaders of public thought evidently do not pause at their own great inconsistency. In one breath they condemn Germany with its Treitschkean philosophies—point out that forty years of saturation of the Teutonic mind in such false ideals have ended in this present state of frightfulness. In the next breath they exhort educators to diligence in developing "the state of mind" that will make successful fighting possible.

The sober educational sense of the country revolts from such a program. But the poison will work insidiously with us as it did in Germany for forty years. The call of the higher patriotism is not alone to resist such evil inoculation, but to double diligence in cultivating the more rational "state of mind"—the state of mind that is world-embracing, social and Christian. The good women of the land have put temperance education into the schools and we are all greatly impressed with the outcome in the increase of dry territory. There will be a call now louder than ever to teach history and civics, in our schools, so that when a world Federation is a fact, it will be said, America taught the philosophy behind this great idea to the children, and they have made it ready for the world.

J. H. B.

UNDERSTANDING.

The twilight grieves alone beside
The evening's cottage door
In patience listening to hear
The thrush that sings no more.

And we who miss a voice that spilled
Its laughter down the years—
We wait with twilight in the dusk
That none may know our tears.

And yet there is a hope that knows
No touch that dims or mars—
The hope that love shall hear the voice
Though singing 'mid the stars!

—ARTHUR WALLACE PEACH, in The Springfield Republican.

GRACES FROM GRACE.

WM. BACON EVANS.

Among the many explanations of the developing process called Education, none is to be compared with that furnished by the saying of our Saviour, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." (John viii: 32.) When this knowledge is grasped, whether in the home or the kindergarten, in college or without the aid of these, may we not say that the essential of a good education is instilled?

"The Hebrew patriarchs," says the Autocrat,⁶⁶ had small libraries, I think, if any; yet they represent to our imaginations a very complete idea of manhood, and, I think, if we could ask Abraham to dine with us men of letters . . . we should feel honored by his company." George Fox, whose grammar is not always unimpeachable, was described by one, rarely qualified to judge, as "civil (i. e., courteous) beyond all rules of breeding."⁷

We do well to grant that a knowledge of the law of gravitation and of evolution, and that 2+2=4 are helpful in relating our thought to natural phenomena. But are not such concepts, which form the "body" of our Education, of but transitory value, compared with the "soul" of Education, which is spiritual?

It is to this spiritual side that educators will perhaps more and more direct attention. The main facts, as I grasp them, are these. The Truth is not so remote but that we may know it. The process (on our part) is one of attention. Where conviction is felt, there is the Convictor, who not only convicts, but as He sees fit, transforms.

How children (and older children) are to be brought to "know the Truth," is a question about which we doubtless have much to learn. We can, however, count on these helps. God himself enlightens them. The Holy Scriptures tell of it. Grace shines through good people and good books. We can also guard against crowding attention and time with material interests only, so that there is "no room in the inn."

FOUR DECADES OF EDUCATION.

ISAAC SHARPLESS.

In the year 1875, the Head Master of the Penn Charter School, the Principal of Westtown School, and the President of Haverford College began their official connections with their respective institutions. In 1917 they all ended their active work in connection with them. These forty-two years have shown a vast change in educational conditions not only in these three schools, but as a consequence in the whole attitude and development of Friendly ideas in these parts.

The Penn Charter School has grown from a score of boys to three or four hundred and now takes first rank among the college preparatory schools of Philadelphia. Westtown has added a new building, the gift of its friends, costing $300,000 or over, has greatly enlarged its endowment and has made numerous and in the main desirable changes in its internal conditions. Haverford has grown from forty-three to one hundred and ninety-five students, its endowment has increased from $200,000 to $2,500,000, its salary list has grown almost in the same proportion, and it stands well up among the small colleges of the country.

During the same time the system of primary schools of the Yearly Meeting has been organized and financed, and two of the other secondary schools have been greatly improved in efficiency and enlarged in numbers.

If the claims of those who assert so emphatically that education is a basis of all other beneficent things are correct, Philadelphia Yearly Meeting and those whom it influences should have shown a vast growth in power and prosperity during these four decades.

While this is not strikingly manifest on the surface, yet it is probably true that in certain respects some such improvement has resulted. The loss of membership has slowed down so that we are at least holding our own in this respect. We have not learned how to build up around our old meeting-houses any large number of attenders in many places. Changes resulting from movements of population to suburban districts have depleted both the city and the country meetings. These losses have not been compensated for by increased attendance of non-Friends. Where the meetings have grown there has also been a growth of attractive power for social as well as religious reasons which gives the impression and sometimes the reality of a real growth of strength from the outside. Indeed, we shall probably find that there is a possibility of having meetings too large, and that a division into two or three centers would bring more members into responsible usefulness and extend the area of Friendly influence. It is one of the problems of the future how to make a meeting of Friends in a new or decayed neighborhood a real effective influence for Christianity. As a social club our suburban meetings answer their purpose. As missionaries for Christ, they omit some desirable features, while certain attempts to build up progressive and living churches where there is not already a large number of Friends as a nucleus, show that we have much to learn. But regarding numbers alone things certainly look more hopeful than forty years ago.

Capacity to meet and solve new problems as they have arisen has grown to a much greater degree. Instead of falling back upon the statement of a seventeenth century Friend as once for all determining our duty in a given emergency, we face it openly as something to be thought out and solved by the new ideas and methods which modern minds have evolved. The simple appeal to the past does not always settle the question. The Yearly Meeting as a whole is quite willing to listen to, and if convinced, to adopt any change in our machinery or the adaptation of our principles to new conditions. The capacity for logical thinking and the courage to follow new paths have greatly grown. We touch our neighbor at vastly more points and join them in more radical movements than our fathers would have thought possible, and the reaction upon ourselves creates a sort of life and a variety of interests unknown to the past. In such an atmosphere almost any change is possible, and the problem of the day among us is not so much to create greater openness of mind as to steady the growth along lines in harmony with our fundamental ideas and habits of thinking so as not to break too radically with the past. Old prejudices and the play of partisan politics have largely gone. Old customs, once deemed vital, have disappeared and no serious danger has resulted. It requires the greatest wisdom to know when and how to stop a revolution and our ingrained conservatism, fortified by trained thinking intellects, will come to our rescue. From this point of view the outlook is also decidedly hopeful.

We have learned to give of our means in a way which would ⁶⁶The Autocrat of the Brick, Vol. 1, Table, O. W. Holmes, page 132.

⁷The Preface, George Fox's Journal, Wm. Penn, page xxxv.

⁸Heiss who died on the Cross have amazed our fathers. For a time it seemed that this might be too largely confined to our own institutions; that we would become denominationally selfish. But the recent great outflow of aid to Red Cross and other outside activities shows that a real spirit of bountiful generosity appears when a cause which meets our sympathies makes its appeal. With possibly no greater riches relatively to the community than in the past the willingness to give has grown in very large measure.

These matters are only types of the changes which the last forty years have seen. Whether the real spiritual power of individuals and of the Church has correspondingly grown may be answered differently by different people. To me it seems that it has, but a judgment of this sort is something about which one should not speak dogmatically. External evidences are not always conclusive, but that a large proportion of young people are seriously interested in the deeper experiences of the soul and have an outgrowth of better and broader interests in the religious life as affecting their duty to the Church and to humanity is a reasonable hope.

Can these changes be connected with our educational development? That, as John Dickinson told Friends when Westtown was under consideration, education and religion are not necessarily inimical at least seems to be established. But the most of us would probably go much further than this and say that it is impossible to sustain our Society in this community by an ignorant membership, and that the more of good education we have amongst us the brighter prospect the forward look will show. The money so liberally given, and the thought so lavishly expended upon our schools will prove to be, indeed have been proven to be, a great investment in spiritual power and moral efficiency.

But of course the schools of all grades must respond in harmony with the spirit, if not always the methods, of their founders. Once the idea of confining them strictly to Friends prevailed. Now except in one case this has disappeared. It might be an interesting investigation to ascertain whether the young men coming from this school show a larger proportion of interested and useful Friends than others. Other Friendly customs may be open to the same study. But in whatever way, old or new, the real knowledge of the best spirit and duty of Quakerism is inculcated, that way should be adopted. This is the sacred debt we owe to the past. Is it by exclusive contact with fellow-members, or by association with others that this is to be gained? by formal teaching or informal influence? by direct appeal or indirect presentation of the problems to thinking minds? by teaching specialties or the humanities? by much or little in the way of physical comforts or social opportunities or athletic encouragement? Then the school has a guide for its policy. We need not now express an opinion on any of these points, but we urge a careful study of them as determining the line of the most productive development of our school system in fulfillment of its obligations to the "dead hand" of the past and to the best aspirations for the future.

QUAKER EDUCATION AND MANNERS.

W. W. COMFORT.

One of the striking features of American Quakerism in the last half century has been its progressive interest in higher education. There were indeed certain earlier men of light a century ago who endowed and maintained seminaries of learning of more modest scope; but the intellectual enfranchisement of our Society is of recent date. We are now in a fair way to become a highly educated religious Society, nourished by a college-bred ministry.

This latter fact is of little significance unless it results in deepening the spiritual life and power of our membership and in multiplying our points of sympathetic contact with the world of intellectual people who surround us in every community. Education secured under proper conditions, pursued as a factor in a consecrated life rather than as a material asset in itself, need in no way kill the things of the spirit. Surely, no one would maintain to-day that the effect of higher education is inevitably reflected in pride of life and in arrogance of spirit. The child-like innocence to which Jesus called his disciples is quite compatible with the broadest intellectual grasp and understanding of the world's problems.

Our Friends' colleges should certainly seek in every way possible to foster the spiritual life of those who are committed to their charge. Trustees and professors cannot give better service than in seeking to answer the natural and inevitable problems which confront the spiritual life of students. By wise expenditures from certain foundations, by appointment of responsible and tactful men, steps may be taken to save many and lose few of those who come to us bearing their doubts and their questions. But we are thinking of another service which our colleges should render, and which in some measure they are rendering, for our membership. While fostering the deep and needed message of Quakerism, they should slough off the surface peculiarities and individual idiosyncrasies which cling to so many of us and render us of difficult commerce with our fellows. We were long a peculiar people, because of our dress, speech and manners. We see now that neither ourselves nor our Society will be saved by that sort of peculiarity. It is in our life point of view, in our emphasis upon certain spiritual essentials, that we must show our peculiarity, if such it be. Not in exclusiveness and in complacent calm must we rest upon our oars careless of the world's travail; but with a strong sweep we must push out upon the sea of troubles, and willing to sink self in service, we must help to keep the sea-lanes open for the Divine purposes as we understand them.

If we are to be of an agreeable commerce with those outside of our membership, who, like ourselves, are striving to bear a manly part in the tasks set before society, we must look more carefully after the manners of our youth. Perhaps there are few who would subscribe in its fulness to the Winchester motto that "Manners makyth man." Yet there is much ground for the contention that many men are unmade or rendered unfit by bad manners. An uncouth rusticity, rather than a pleasing urbanity, has been the badge of many American Friends down to quite recent times. In this respect we have had to pay the heavy penalty of our unworl'dliness. In college too many young Friends are guilty of a marked lack of consideration for the feelings and property of others, over whom they ride rough-shod; later, in the world, inbred narrowness will render them incapable of appreciating the virtues of other men and the amenities of social contact.

It is superfluous to point out that all courtness, brusqueness and lack of consideration have no part or parcel in the message of Quakerism. Honesty and sincerity do not require a cloke of rudeness, and no one is less effective because he shows consideration and regard in every word and act addressed to other men. We can all think of examples of the most exquisite courtesy within our Quaker acquaintance. There should be more such examples, until the exception becomes the rule and the stigma of being ill-bred is removed from our name.

It is precisely in this process of social training and education that our schools and colleges should play a greater part. Perhaps the process should be perfected in the family; but often it is not. Then it becomes the duty of our educational institutions, where others not of our membership are permitted to mingle with us, to build a structure of courtesy and politeness upon the indifferent foundations laid in many Quaker households. If we can accomplish this, we shall establish and maintain more of those points of contact where the oil of mutual appreciation is introduced into the complicated machinery of our lawful and necessary service with others. In these days when we heartily believe we have a more excellent way to show forth in our Gospel of Love, we cannot afford to nullify our influence by a repellent and ungracious bearing in society. It would be a strange irony if we should find our expression of fraternal love hampered by our lack of familiarity with the most elementary forms of polite courtesy and social tact. Our inspiration is hidden deep within, far from the touch of those about us; but our personal efficiency in helping to bring the Kingdom of God into the hearts of men is determined in no small manner by our observance of that conventional code of social relations which is binding upon all men without distinction of race, color or previous circumstance.

HAVERTFORD COLLEGE.

TWO MATTERS OF WESTTOWN INTEREST.

GEORGE L. JONES.

One who has been connected both with private and sectarian schools and with a city high-school system, ponders frequently over the question of the relative value of the two and whether in course of time the private school, especially the sectarian one, will not have pretty much disappeared. But those who have faith in the value of our private Friends' schools may find good justification for their faith in the strong position which the boys from our schools are taking in their attitude toward military service. In the midst of the frenzy of the early months of this year, the hurried and insistent call for volunteers, when schools and colleges were bringing their year's work to an early close, and uncertainty and unsettlement were rife, I was particularly impressed with the fact that our boys at Westtown remained level-headed and calm. They were tremendously interested in the development of events, loyal in their devotion to our country, responsive to the high call of sacrifice and service, and often disappointed that the minimum age limit of various forms of reconstructive work barred them out. But the school was practically solid in its attitude against bearing of arms and engagement in military service. The whole situation was a justifying evidence and result of the positive constructive training found in our Quaker homes and schools. And I found myself more than ever convinced of the important part schools of the type of Westtown play in the maintenance and development of our Quaker ideals.

One of Westtown's greatest assets is the fact that she has so large a number of supporters who have a clear sense of her mission and her task. They may differ in their interpretation of Quakerism; they may differ in their judgment of school policies; some lay emphasis on one particular plan and some on another. But all have faith in Westtown and believe in her work, and give generously in interest and thought and means that she may not be hampered in fulfilling her mission.

As with any institution or movement which has vitality and which faces forward, there are various problems of school policy and life—problems to be clearly faced and carefully worked over, and a course of action decided on which shall then be carried out steadily, conscientiously and with open mind. On two of these problems I wish to speak in this article. The first deals with our material equipment.

For two or three years there has been much thought and some public discussion as to the living arrangements at Westtown. To many of us, both in and out of the school, it seems that the time has come to make rather extensive changes and necessary additions, that our boys and girls may live in quarters more nearly approximating the conveniences of the average home. Had this building been erected ten years later than it was, it is pretty certain that the theory of its living arrangements would have been quite different. It would have embodied more of the ideas of the now well-tested and satisfactory small-group system as distinguished from the older system of herding en masse. The pupils' rooms would not have been planned as were bed-rooms, so designed as regards size, furnishings and heat as to preclude comfortable living, writing and studying.

The system as adopted has now been in use over thirty years and we are able to judge pretty accurately as to results.

We who are closely connected with the dormitory life believe that the present method of living makes for disorder and misconduct on the boys' side, and tension and nervous strain on the girls' side. In the odd times, such as after meals and on First-days, the children are of necessity herded in large groups on the lower floor in the collecting-rooms, corridor or parlor, and the mob-spirit too easily becomes evident. The girls especially need to withdraw from this congested and tense life, but through the winter especially their rooms can offer but little refuge.

I feel also very strongly that our present arrangement fails to develop self-control, dignity and maturity in our older boys and girls. The grouping of the ages of thirteen to twenty under nearly the same method of living, subject to practically the same rules and type of discipline, either opens up too much liberty to the younger child or unduly restricts the older. It makes more difficult the closer, careful oversight of the fourth class, and the advisory and suggestive method one likes to follow with Seniors, who, about to enter college, must gain self-reliance, control, responsibility and initiative.

In all of this I am not pleading for more comfort for the child for comfort's sake, but rather a more normal, sane, homelike kind of living, where our large family of two hundred, instead of flocking boisterously and purposelessly into a few congested groups, scatter quietly in two's or three's or sixes to many different centers of occupation or pleasure.

The secret of individual good health is to keep the system physically fit by proper food, sleep, and exercise, and especially to be able to recognize the earliest symptoms of disease and ward off its attack.

Of community health (variously termed "excellent discipline," "fine school loyalty," and the like) the secret is the same—by a well-planned daily régime to keep the community industrious and contented, and to anticipate and forestall as much as possible the elements and conditions which tend to disorder.

I have understood that patients who suffer from certain mental disorders and are excitable and uneasy when kept in a room with glaring lights and red wall paper and hangings, become calm and rational when placed in a room with soft green furnishings and subdued light. My observation has found striking parallels in school life. This particular problem, then, is to take our present dormitory equipment, and, with no thought of luxuriousness or extravagance, remodel it to give homelike, usable quarters, conducive to good order, contentment and industry.

The second matter I have in mind is not so much a problem as an earnest desire, first, that our whole Westtown body may be influenced and actuated by a warm Christian spirit; secondly, that Westtown may be a centre of Quakerism, both pure and applied. We are, and wish to remain, a Quaker school for Quaker boys and girls. And if I have any leanings toward greater liberty to those who are on the fringe of our membership, it comes from the belief that a Quakerism worth possessing is worth extending, and that our Society will be distinctly strengthened, to some extent immediately and certainly finally, by the inclusion in our privilege or our membership of those who from inheritance are so open to our influence.

To keep before our widely-gathered student body the purity and strength of constructive Quakerism, to appreciate its sweet restraining influences in our lives without falling into narrowness, and to allow our spirits to open out with all its expansive agencies of unselfishness and brotherhood, to share, back here at school, the quickening baptism of consecration of those whom we have sent out from us to their reconstructive tasks in the mission fields of Asia or to the battlefields of France, to develop and maintain at Westtown a living Quakerism that shall enthuse and possess our boys and girls and fit them for the great Christian duties which life offers, this is at once Westtown's mission and opportunity.

The ethical and religious criteria of the boy of fifteen are different from those of nineteen even, and quite different from what he will apply as a man of thirty-five. To appreciate this younger viewpoint, sympathize with it and yet guide it, to insist that a straightforward and conscientious daily life is the necessary outgrowth of genuine Christian experience and yet to offer for these fine inner impulses opportunities for outward expression which are appealing and tangible, is the delicate and noble task of the educator, and above all to possess and exhibit one's self, a genuine Christian life, above reproach.

This is the spirit, I believe, which has dominated Westworn's religious life in the past, and will, I trust, continue to do so in the future.

SUGGESTED IDEALS FOR FRIENDS' SCHOOLS OF THE FUTURE.

WALTER W. HAVILAND.

The great argument for our schools will continue to be the opportunity they afford for open and positive teaching of the Christian way of life. In these days when the secular spirit is fastening itself, to the exclusion of the thought of God, upon education, family and social life, business interests and even upon methods of social service, there is a loud call for a type of school which will emphasize the truth that life is more than vocation. We must stand out resolutely against the tendency to praise that sort of education which aims chiefly to pan out immediate material results. The young mind must not be allowed to get the impression that the emphasis is on making a living rather than on making a life worth the living.

The best modern philosophers of education have much to teach us. We may follow them in seeking a type of education that will lead a child up to appreciation and appropriation of all the resources of his natural endowments and his social inheritance; that will teach him to appreciate, interpret and utilize human resources; that will train him for production, not only of commodities but of service. This involves both liberal and vocational elements. It is something better than mere going to work for a wage.

We shall be neither "faddists" nor "fogies," committed neither to gas balloons nor rats. We shall mingle Matthew Arnold's sweetness and light with Dr. Flexner's utilitarianism.

Shall we not aim less at a "guarded education," to keep our children away from harmful associations and influences, and more at an education which will enable them to meet, overcome and transform the evil conditions around them? The coming type will be less negative, more positive; less timid, more courageous; less secretive, more open; less individual and selfish, more social and generous; less doubtful and suspicious, more full of faith.

To carry out such aims our schools will need better organization. We must consider how to federate, coordinate, centralize, standardize. There might be some general supervisory committee with authority over all the Friends' schools in our section. With them might be associated some consulting body of educational experts, outside our Society, and a superintendent, who should serve as executive head of the whole system, from kindergarten to college.

Adequate physical equipment will also be essential. There are at least four needs which make a substantial permanent endowment desirable, at least as a safeguard: (1) the payment of running expenses in times of emergency; (2) the aid of needy pupils; (3) the encouragement of teachers by good salaries; (4) increasing the usefulness and beauty of the schools. The amount of endowment to be aimed at might be one that will yield an income for each school equal to about one-fourth of the fees due from the pupils at the school's maximum capacity.

The course of study will be directed less to the mastery of books and ability to pass college entrance examinations and more to the "conscious cultivation of human habits, traits and tendencies," to quote Associate Superintendent William McAndrew, of New York City, whose list of characteristics which the schools should develop in their pupils is worthy of close study by every teacher. (This will be reprinted, I hope, in a subsequent issue of THE FRIEND.) The two great words for every curriculum are "elimination" and "enrichment." We must put out everything that does not "serve a worthy purpose," and put in whatever best serves the highest ends.

School work which is now too individualistic must be "socialized." "Helping one another," which is now a school vice, must somehow be given a chance to develop as a habit of life. The pupil's originality, initiative, power of adaptation, personal responsibility, ability to weigh and judge values, perspective—all these will be planned for. The curriculum will recognize the varied interests and activities of actual life, and education will be regarded as itself a life process and not merely a preparation for future life. In the children and not in the teacher nor in the subject will be found the centre of gravity of the class-room.

The teachers will add to technical efficiency and great wealth of information, a deep background of knowledge and experience and culture. They will be eager for improvement; there won't be any hopelessly self-satisfied ones, who don't realize that they ought to be always asking, "What lack I yet?" Furthermore, our ideal teachers will be radiant with positive spiritual influence and be inspiring Christian teachers, with convictions that the greatest things in life are kindness, sympathy, helpfulness and love. They will have perspective and a sense of proportion; they will "keep big things big" and let little ones go. They will cultivate optimism, belief in children, vision, courage and faith in God. "Great beliefs are not promoted by unbelievers."

Right standards of physical health and strength will be promoted. Let us hope that home conditions in the future will not so often as now "culminate in collapse," while "depleted constitutions result from careless holidays," to adopt the phrasing of a great headmaster.

No doubt our schools will have something to do in the way of "vocational guidance." School atmosphere, plus the inspiration and suggestion of teachers, will not only establish abiding cultural interests, appreciations, tastes, enthusiasms—even hobbies—but will lead to choices of life work, which will be suited to the individual's powers and serve only worthy, unselfish, social ends.

The guiding impulse in Quaker education of the future, so far as it is ideal, will be the spirit of the Great Master, whose character and way of living we shall frankly seek to reproduce in the lives of the boys and girls entrusted to our care.

PSYCHOLOGY AND THE EDUCATION OF FRIENDS.

THOMAS H. HAINES.

Psychology being the science of mental processes or the knowledge of what our minds are and how they work, there is no question as to its intimate relations with education. For education is the training process to which we submit the minds and characters of the young. We seek to modify the environment of the child for two principal ends. We want the child to learn of the world in which he lives, both physical and social, by a rapid absorption of the results of the experience of others, so he will be prepared to advance further and higher than he would if he had himself to gain all his information by first-hand experience. We also want to supervise and guide the formation of his personality or self which is so definitely sensitive to and dependent upon the social elements surrounding the child—the personalities with whom he grows up. We do not want to limit his possibilities. We want rather to place him in the way of developing his most precious potentialities to the fullest extent.

Since therefore education aims to facilitate the growth of mind and character, there needs no argument to establish its dependence upon psychology. In order to guide effectively any natural process, one must understand the laws and principles of that process. One must know how the mind grows in order to render any effective service in helping it grow.

In laying down such a fundamental and deep-lying dependence of education upon psychology it must be borne in mind we are speaking of a psychology which has not yet come into being. The psychology which is so to guide education is no mere psychology of sensation, perception, conception, attention, association and reasoning. It is no mere psychology of the knowing and learning side of life. It is a psychology which sets forth the principles of the growth of personality. It has to do with the organizing of processes within, which we call character-formation. It begins with instincts and reflexes and simple emotional responses, and comes forward to the principles of the birth and organization of ideals. It is not simply the science of learning facts. It is the science of the process of learning how to live and to be the most serviceable and complete example of human nature possible. It is the science of human nature in the broadest sense. The Greek root in psychology, as used by Aristotle, means the principle of life. It is the animus or spirit of the being in question which psychology undertakes to know about. The natural history of this spirit or inner principle of life in the human being is the subject of human psychology. And all of this field is the field of human psychology.

Such an organization of knowledge of human nature—what it is and how it develops, will have, when it comes into being, all the business of training children and youth quite tributary to itself. This training for life, which we call education, will be simply the practical work of facilitating and guiding the natural development which psychology shall have made her own.

The use of psychology in the education of Friends will be different from its use in any other education only as the training of Friends is guided by a truer and more germane conception of the organization of society. In so far as this truer and more natural conception of the inherently social structure of the individual life prevails, this truer and more comprehensive science of human nature will be its guide. The doctrine of the inner light—the direct guidance of the individual by “the light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world,” and the belief in the fellowship which all who seek it may have with the Divine spirit, indicate the deep and fundamental faith of Friends in the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. It is a part of the underlying metaphysics of Friends that we are members one of another and that no life is a good life which is not thoroughly integrated in society. The mystic conception of the Divine Spirit, which is of us and yet above us, is a most vital principle in the preaching of George Fox and it has continued through the history of the Society.

Friends have never conceived that they could force the kingdom of God either through preaching or education, but it has always been their hope that a religiously-guarded education would make for the spread of the kingdom of God—that this view of the truth, the right conception of life and of the relation of the individual to others and to the Holy Spirit, would be helped to spread and prevail by properly conducted schools. That is the reason for the separate schools we maintain now in a nation where the public schools aim primarily to prepare citizens for service. It is because we believe we have a yet more serviceable view of service that we maintain separate schools. It is because we think we can make children better men and women and therefore better citizens than can the public schools that we spend the large sums we do for our own schools. These schools are not primarily to make of our children a peculiar people, but more useful and therefore happier persons.

If this belief in ourselves as educators is justified we must be using a truer psychology than others. If we are to maintain a place of priority in education we must be utilizing all that is known of the laws of the development of human nature, the organization of character, and of the blossoming and fruition of the human spirit in its unfolding of ideals and its service to society.

In Friends' schools a good psychology has led the way. A better and fuller psychology is necessary to keep them in the front rank and to push forward the fundamental Christian conceptions, for which Friends stand, to the place they should occupy in the world to-day. It is through its schools that the Society of Friends can best advance to world service its fundamental ideals which are so seriously needed in our international relations at this moment. We must know human nature most thoroughly in order to make this advance and to render this service.

COLUMBES, O., Ninth Month 16, 1917.

“THE FUTURE OF QUAKER EDUCATION.”

[Jon. Edward Hodgkin has a thoughtful article in the Seventh Month Examiner with this caption. Much that he says does not apply directly to our Friends' system of schools. Strangely enough we are not as haphazard as our English cousins. The spirit of his constructive criticisms are, however, calculated to be very helpful on both sides of the Atlantic as will appear from the three concluding paragraphs of his article.—Eds.]

The essential difference between the present haphazard collection of school units up and down the country, and the ideal system we have attempted to discuss, would be this. We should stress the wider loyalty and devotion to Friends' model educational system, rather than the somewhat parochial enthusiasms that move us to-day. There would be nothing to prevent the staff and scholars in any of the schools from emulating the successes—on different lines presumably—of any other. But for staff and scholars alike would be made more possible a realization of the Bootham motto, Membra sumus corporis magni.

In international affairs this is exactly the ideal we seek to inculcate in ourselves and others,—the spirit that would comprehend and further the universal interests of the race. Must we confess that in this little world of our educational system we are so tied by tradition or prejudice or mere inertia that we cannot bear to face the possibility of changes that seem revolutionary? We have outgrown the fashions of our grandparents in dress, speech and manner of life; but we cling to their undemocratic and irrational school “system,” as if it were disloyalty to their memory, instead of its truest monument, to build on their foundations for the needs of to-day.

Let us think on this matter not as Quakers with a glorious past, but with the wide outlook of future-builders—internationally, racially, Christianly. Surely the time has fully come to entrust some of our well qualified teachers and educationists with the task of devising, with the ample material at hand, a reconstruction scheme for our school system as a whole that will rouse and maintain our enthusiasm, and secure, for the next generation at least, advantages correspondingly great to those enjoyed by our grandparents under what was their pioneer system and is our venerated relic.

TRAINING FOR SOCIAL SERVICE.

A SCHOOL EXPERIMENT.

The royal road along which to train boys at school for social service has not yet been found; it probably does not exist. All our schools are making experiments and are finding new life for themselves in their efforts. One belief that is gaining ground is that the village community, rather than a more congested area or a town slum, is the right unit of study for boys and girls. The following is an account of work congenial to all boys of a school, which could be co-ordinated and shown in its relation to the daily life of the people of a village. The account is written by a visitor to the exhibition at the end of the week and naturally covers only a part of the activities; the chief omission is that mention is not made of attention given to new developments in housing and a consequent digression on the planning of model villages. Several boys knew the village beforehand from the point of view of voluntary workers on a farm in it. The school is Leighton Park.

“At the close of the examinations, the school was faced with a week of rather aimless work before the holidays. The headmaster therefore wisely decided to break away from the ordinary routine and devote this time to a special study of the country parish of Shinfield, on the borders of which the school is situated. Two or three lectures to the whole school were given in the history and geology of the district, and then the school divided itself into three parties to study the parish from the historical, geographical and biological aspects. Each party was under a leader who distributed the work to be done among groups of his associates. For instance, one small group studied the manorial system and visited the remains and ruins of the old manors of which there appear to have been several. Another devoted itself to the housing question, another to wages and employment. One group studied the river Loddon and determined the daily discharge of water, another the drainage system and water supply, while others, under guidance, carried out a careful vegetation survey, marking on a six-inch ordnance map the various crops, grasslands, commons, wastes, etc. Others again devoted themselves to pond life or to making lists of birds, etc.

"The evening of the last day was given over to a meeting of the whole school in the Peckover Hall, at which the three leaders, Redmayne (historical), Braithwaite (geographical), and Gillett (biological) most interestingly summed up the work done. Questions and discussion followed, and then for all too short a time it was possible for the visitors to examine the exhibits. One was struck by the great variety and the large amount of good work done and the interest aroused. Among the exhibits were a very good relief map, some charming sketches of old cottages, the vegetation map already mentioned and numerous well-illustrated diaries.

"We could not help feeling that the week's work had gone beyond the mere collection of facts and observation of phenomena. It had taken the boys beyond the rather artificial problems of the class-room and the laboratory, and had brought them face to face with facts, not as they appear in the text-book but in nature, and had widened their outlook on life.—A. W."—The Friend (London).

IV. IMPRESSIONS OF KOREA AND CHINA.

GILBERT BOWLES.

(Concluded from page 149.)

JAPANESE SCHOOL.—To provide for the children of the resident Japanese, estimated at 8000 (by some at 10,000 or 15,000), the Japanese have recently completed a beautiful school building for the lower and higher primary grades. There are said to be 800 children in the school. When I looked into the grounds at recess time, the teachers were playing with the boys and girls, who were grouped around the teachers, showing more heart and even affection than is common in the mechanical calisthenic drills of the schools in Japan.

CARRIAGE DRIVE IN AFTERNOON.—In the afternoon, Isaac and Esther Mason and I took a carriage for a drive about the city. We called at the rooms of the Royal Asiatic Society, of which Isaac Mason is Secretary, and saw their Library and Museum. The Library resembles our Library of the Asiatic Society in Tokio, but the Museum was new. The collections of many varieties of Chinese birds, woods, minerals and historic relics seemed distinctly worth while. After I had been persuaded to sit down in a huge wooden chair, resembling in shape the thrones seen in the Mukden and Pekin Imperial Palaces, I was told that I was sitting in the throne chair of the leader of the Taiping Rebellion—the "Great Peace King," as the leader of that rebellion, which at one time held the allegiance of several provinces, chose to call himself.

The Mission Book-rooms are the sales-rooms of the Methodist and Presbyterian Mission Presses. In addition to stocks of Christian books, they handle general literature and stationery, resembling the Methodist Publishing House of Tokio, but the rooms were dark and unattractive, except for the realization of the work that was there being done.

Our great ride for the afternoon was out on "Bubbling Well Road," five miles to St. John's University. We passed many large fine houses, mostly residences of foreign business men, who seem to live like small monarchs. The numerous autos whizzing over the suburban crushed stone roads made it seem unlike a Chinese city—with its creaky wheelbarrows slowly moving through narrow, crowded, dirty streets. The only disappointing thing was the "bubbling well" itself, which was only a stone enclosure at the bottom of which dirty, greasy water was seen to be slowly moving. But that does not matter if it serves to induce people to take this drive. The campus of St. John's (American Episcopal) University is wide and beautiful. One of the most interesting trees I have ever seen was a huge camphor tree in the midst of this lawn, with long, heavily leaved limbs branching out from the ground. The only thing about the place which made me sad was to see the boys who are here for their Christian training lined up for military drill.

LUNCH WITH THE CHINESE SECRETARY OF THE Y. M. C. A.—As the head of the Friends' Hospital in Nankin, with whom I got acquainted, is a brother of the Head Chinese Secretary of the Y. M. C. A., I sought an interview with him. I accepted his invitation to noon-day luncheon, and had a most interesting conversation. He speaks English almost as if it were his native tongue and is evidently a man of judgment and executive ability. I learn that he is to be made General Secretary. This is in line with the general policy of putting responsibilities upon the Chinese.

THE DOOR OF HOPE.—Though going beyond my attendance at the Hangchow Conference, I complete now my notes on Shanghai. I visited, in company with Isaac Mason, the "Door of Hope," which is a rescue home for Chinese girls who are sent on from the temporary receiving home in the "Nankin Road" district which I visited a few days before. The home is similar in purpose and general management to "Jiaikan" in Tokio, though the Tokio institution is under the management of the Foreign Auxiliary of the W. C. T. U., while the Shanghai home is supervised by a private committee. The present head of the home is an English woman, though the founder was an American. The former is a little body, with a small margin of strength, but she is evidently capable of managing the workers and the girls and keeping up a spirit of industry and hope. Although it was past the hour, some of the girls who, for personal gain or for special reason, are allowed to work over time for a limited number of hours, were busy with their embroidery—which seems to be the principal industry. The Home is divided into two departments—the receiving department, where they are kept for the first year of trial—or if necessary for a longer period—and the regular department, where they stay until graduation, which usually means until they are well married or prepared to honestly earn their own living. A regular Bible class in Chinese is held with a group of these women, and Isaac Mason sometimes speaks to the entire body in their Gospel meetings.

EXTRACT FROM A LETTER IN "THE FRIEND" (LONDON)

Friends may sympathize with, and even help others, whose opposition to war is social, political or humanitarian, but, if they get no further than this, they fall short of the true Christian position. Christianity involves a great deal more than a protest against war. Our chief aim should be to present the truth as it is in Jesus; and, in the proportion that men and nations accept the truth, and come under the dominion of Christ, in that proportion war will be eliminated. There will always be more or less of it until that glorious prediction is fulfilled—"The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ, and He shall reign for ever and ever." In the meantime we who belong to His Kingdom and have accepted Him as our leader must be true to His command, "Put up thy sword into its sheath."

Thine truly,

DEWSBURY, Fourth Month 29, 1917.

SAMUEL GILL.

YOUNGER FRIENDS.

EXTRACTS FROM THE GOLDEN CLEW (CHAPTER X)—THE CHRISTIAN'S DAILY LIFE.—Marion and Dorothy had been away for a few days to see some relations. They found the life very different from their quiet home, and had come back full of questions. They did not find much opportunity for talking it over, but one cold day they induced mother to join their party on the ice.

Marion did not skate, having sprained her ankle a few months before; so she and her mother set off for a brisk walk under the naked elm trees, which made a stately circle around the water.

"It is really too bad, mother," she said, "to begin to talk of tiresome things in this beautiful spot, but I feel I must not lose my chance, and Dorothy and I have been wanting to talk to thee ever since we came back from Kensington. Of course, the life there is very different from this. So many things are going on, and there is so much always to see and do, and people in and out all day long."

"Yes," said mother, "I feared you would find it distracting. But we thought you had better go."

"O, we enjoyed it immensely, though it was very trying! The part that was distracting was that the inside life seemed different, too. I got quite puzzled with myself. I did not know what I thought about things, and it worried me."

"What things?" asked mother.

"Well, they planned at once for us to go to several concerts. Then they admired Dorothy's voice, and gave her some songs that just suited it, they said—songs with very silly words. I am sure thou wilt not care to hear them."

"I prefer nice words, certainly," said mother.

"It was so kind of them, and I know they did it just to make us happy. Then there was dancing one night, and one night they all went out to the opera. We did not go to that. Then the wine; that was on the table every day, of course, and though they were very good about it, I could see they thought it very absurd of us not to take it. And the odd part of it was, that it seemed quite natural to do these things there. Here, at home, it would never come into one's head. Then, Cousin Harry is in the army. The night they danced he had on his uniform, and everyone seemed to think him the hero of the evening. And somehow it seemed very grand for him to be giving up his life to the service of his country."

"Well, was there anything else?" asked mother.

"Several things. Aunt Lucy says she gets tired and worried, and finds that the only thing that rests her brain is reading novels, and I must say they do read a great many. And I hope it is not unkind to say it, but Adela does spend a great deal of time over dress. But she is pretty, I suppose it is natural."

"I think Edith is quite as pretty," said mother, "and Edith spends very little time on her dress, but she always looks nice."

"Yes, she does," assented Marion; "she does not spend much money, either, but I know she takes pains to have things tasteful and neat."

"She is quite right," said mother. "We are very much influenced by our dress and surroundings, and that is one thing that may help or hinder us in our way. It is a mistake to think it is of no consequence. But when it takes an undue share of time or money, it is another thing, and we must not let it do that."

"Poor Adela finds her things very troublesome," said Marion. "She and Aunt Lucy spend hours with the dress-makers. I felt quite sorry for them, so much seems to depend on it."

"So much does depend on it, I suppose," said mother.

"Yes, that is the strange thing! The important things there seemed quite different from ours, and our important things seemed nothing to them."

"Yes," said mother, "as thou said just now, the inner life was different—the spring that made the whole move."

"I don't think there was much time at Kensington," said

Marion. "The days seemed to go by in a strain to keep up with things."

"And what is the result, after all?" asked mother.

"Well, I think a great deal of it is worry," said Marion.

"I liked it very much while we were in it, but, as we came home, Dorothy and I said we would not be Adela for anything."

"O, you came to that conclusion," said mother.

"Yes, we like our way best. There seemed nothing to show for the other—nothing to work up to, nothing to work for, no use in it."

"It's pleasant at the time," said mother.

"It's very pleasant, but if we get tired of it, it's a failure, because we do it to please ourselves."

"Now we've come to the truth," said mother.

"It's a failure because one does it all to please oneself; that never succeeds, that always leaves a restless, unsatisfied feeling; we were made for something different."

"To please others, and to please God," said Marion.

"Yes, we read: 'Even Christ pleased not Himself.' And what was the result of His work? He was to see the travail of His soul, and be satisfied. He was satisfied, because He did not please Himself, but did His Father's will. We are to be like Him in that, and we, too, shall be satisfied. People who please themselves never are satisfied."

"There are two reasons why we do not go to balls and operas and the theatre; one of them is that many of the people, I do not say all, are those who really live the selfish life we were speaking of just now, who do not care for religion, and who do not talk or live as we want to live ourselves. If we went, we should find it hard to help them, even if we dared to try, and most likely we should find that being with them did not help us at all. Then there are many others, who have not been taught as we have been. They are looking to us to see what we do; they copy us, and think that what we do is right for them to do. If we go to places where nothing but worldly pleasure is thought of, they will do the same, and perhaps the thing that might not hurt us very much, may be the ruin of our weaker brother, and his ruin lies at our door, because our example led him to go. This is, to my mind, the strongest reason for us, who have made up our minds to live for others."

It is the reason why we have given up our wine, and one reason why we try to dress plainly and simply, and why I have no dinner-parties, as Aunt Lucy does, and live altogether in a plainer and quieter way. We want to show other people that we do not think much of these things; we have other and better things to live for, and to encourage them to do the same. We want to save our money and our thoughts for these other duties, because we feel that just as we have given our lives to the Lord, we have given our time and money, too, they belong to Him, and we must not spend them needlessly on ourselves. We want to think every day, 'I am the Lord's.' When we open our purses to spend our money, the thought should come: 'It is the Lord's.' When we are asked to go to some pleasant place, we should ask ourselves: 'Would He like me to go?' We are not our own, we are the Lord's, and a servant of others for His sake.

"If this thought goes deep into our hearts, it will make others plain. We will not want to spend money on ourselves. We will want it too much for other people. We will not have time to spend on dancing, and things of that kind; we will often find, too, that the people who do so are not those we enjoy being with. It is always difficult to decide for others, when they ask us what is right and what is wrong for them in these things. I feel they have begun at the wrong end. If their first thoughts were how to please the Lord, these things would just fall into their right places, instead of as is sometimes the case, getting an uppermost place, and being hard to set down. But if they want to start afresh to please the Lord, and find they must give them up for His sake, they will have their reward."

They stopped talking, for at that moment the skaters came running toward them. Kenneth had found some little friends on the ice, and he was now among a merry group, who were wending their way homeward. The ice was rapidly clearing, and the banks were crowded with animated groups, who would soon pass away into the woods, and leave the silent pond deserted under the wintry sky.

QUOTATION FROM RICHARD SHACKELTON'S LETTER TO HIS DAUGHTER SARAH, FOURTH MONTH, 1786.

"I know it is the fashion with many, who do not mean to send their sons to universities, to explode and decry Latin as an useless acquisition; it may, perhaps, be unprofitable in this sense, that it may bring them in no money; the concerns of civil life may be transacted quite as well without it; the finest productions in that language are translated into the mother tongue. French is more essential to accomplish the gentleman, to accommodate the traveler, and is the most universal vehicle of verbal communication; but Latin has been for ages past, and I believe will be for ages to come (if the world stand), the ground-work of the literary part of liberal education. It is like the root of all the most refined living languages; and when a foundation is laid in this, the rest is readily learned. In our own tongue, so many thousand words branch out from the Latin, so many Latin words are adopted into our language, and become a part of it, and so many familiar Latin phrases and expressions are constantly used in speaking and writing, that an ignorance of Latin leaves us much in the dark, and, like bad spelling, betrays an original defect in one's tuition. An adept in Latin knows, as it were by intuition, the powers and fitness of words derived from that fountain, and uses them accordingly; he has opportunity of reading historians, moralists, poets and orators, in a language which no translation does anything like justice to; translations, compared with such originals, are like shadows compared with substances, and like unanimated, compared with animated nature. . . . When stripped of all the Latin scholar can say: "Omnia mea mecum porto."

NEWS ITEMS.

L. LYNDON HOBBS, who served North Carolina Yearly Meeting acceptably as Clerk since 1876, was physically unequal to the task this year. He was able to attend the Yearly Meeting and is reported as "rapidly gaining strength."

FROM the Barnesville Enterprise we learn that Ohio Yearly Meeting, which assembled on the 8th inst., was of about the usual size, the smallness of the number from Iowa being compensated for by increased attendance from other quarters. Among the visiting ministers present were Silyl Barker, from North Carolina; Mary Henderson, from Iowa, and Samuel W. Jones, from Pennsylvania.

A proposition (which has long been seriously considered) to attach the members of Hickory Grove Quarterly Meeting, Iowa, to Iowa Yearly Meeting, was approved. The Meetings for Worship on First-day were well attended.

Among the items of interest taken up later in the week, was the work of the schools. Children of school age were reported to number 426. One new school is to be started at Coleman, with Eva Hartley as teacher. [We hope later to publish a further account of the Yearly Meeting.—EBS.]

[On account of its interest we include the following report which we would gladly have shared last week had space permitted.—EBS.]

AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE

The latest news with reference to the work of our Committee has to do with an improvement of our organization and an enlargement of our executive force. This has been made necessary by the rapid growth of the scope of our work.

Charles Evans, of Riverton, N. J., has been appointed as our Representative in France, to have entire control of all of our interests there. He has already sailed to assume charge of the work so ably started by J. Henry Scattergood and Morris E. Leeds. Dr. Babbitt will have the immediate direction of our men workers in France, with L. Ralston Thomas as his assistant. The chief duties of L. Ralston Thomas will be as director of the training camp at Ormans.

Samuel Bunting and Rebecca Carter have accepted appointments to assist the Executive Secretary in the office at 20 S. Twelfth Street, and will devote practically their entire time to the work. Samuel Bunting has charge of the work connected with the Reconstruction Unit, his principal duties being in connection with the arduous task of getting our second Unit off to France. Rebecca Carter has charge of Women's Work Department, and will work with Lucy Biddle Lewis in connection with sending women to Russia and France, and with Mary Whitson in connection with the work of Sewing and Knitting for home and foreign relief.

The General Committee has authorized the appointment of an Executive Committee with power to act on all matters except a change of fundamental policy, and a purchasing agent. These appointments will be acted upon at the next meeting of the Committee.

There are now eighty persons in France working under our Committee, and twenty-two more have sailed. Fifty others have been selected to sail as soon as passports are secured.

VINCENT D. NICHOLSON,
Executive Secretary.

JOHN H. JOHNSON has kindly sent the following notice:

All persons expecting to attend the Five Years' Meeting, beginning on the 16th prox., and who decide to secure lodging in advance, should write to John H. Johnson, Harry C. Doan or Henry S. Roberts, of the Entertainment Committee, address, Richmond, Indiana.

If hotel accommodations are wanted reservations should be made soon. Westcott Hotel, American plan only, $2.50 and $3.00 per day without bath, for one person, $5.00 for two persons; $3.50 and $4.00 per day with bath, for one person, for two persons $6.00 and $7.00. Arlington Hotel, European plan, $1.00 without bath, for one person, $1.50 for two persons; with bath, for one person, $1.50 and $2.00, two persons $2.00 and $2.50.

Rooms can also be had in private houses at reasonable rates. Meals will be served in the basement of the Yearly Meeting House.

FRIENDS' SELECT SCHOOL NOTES.

THE prospect at the beginning of the year for Friends' Select School is very favorable. A large number of new pupils are enrolled and nearly all of last year's pupils are back in their places, except of course the members of the graduating class. Many of these have entered college; two have gone to Westtown for additional courses; and one is at the Philadelphia Normal School for Girls. Of those going to college, two have enrolled at Haverford, one at State College, one at Drexel Institute, one at the University of Pennsylvania, three at Swarthmore, one at Goucher, one at Temple, and two at the Women's College of Delaware.

Several of the pupils will not be able to return until after the first of Tenth Month, and new pupils are likely to be coming in all through the month.

Several of our teachers were in attendance at various summer schools during the vacation. Walter W. Haviland attended the convention of the National Education Association at Portland, Oregon, early in the Seventh Month and then went to the annual Summer conference of the California High School Teachers' Association, held at Berkeley, in connection with the summer school of the University of California.

Anna Yarnall, Florence A. Elliott and Margaret S. James enjoyed work at Chautauqua, N. Y. Anne Balderston studied at a school of art, held at East Gloucester, Mass. Caroline E. De Greene and Alice O. Albekert were in Vermont at the Middlebury College Summer School of Languages. Nollie J. Davis took courses at Cornell University. Mary E. Austin, Mary A. Doan and Walter C. Crouch, three new teachers, were at the University of Chicago, the University of Wisconsin and Columbia University, respectively.

Gertrude Roberts Sherer has been released from her engagement to return this year, on account of an appointment, which is honor both to herself and to the School, to substitute for a member of the faculty in the English Department at Leland Stanford University, Cal., who has leave of absence.

Esther M. White was also released for the coming year from her position as History teacher, in order that she might be free to undertake work in Russia, under the British Friends' War Victims' Relief Committee.

Gertrude Sherer's place will be taken by Mary Althea Doan, of Indianapolis, Indiana, a graduate of Guilford College, N. C., who has taken a year of post-graduate study at Bryn Mawr and special courses at the University of Wisconsin. She taught last year at the Randolph-Macon Academy, Danville, Va.

Estler White's work will be carried on by Dessa Ebbert Lawrie, a graduate of Ursinus College, with the degree of M. A. from the University of Pennsylvania. She has already taught as a substitute in our School with much acceptability.

Mary E. Austin, of Wilmington, Ohio, a graduate of Wilmington College, who has studied at the University of Chicago and Columbia, will teach Arithmetic and Algebra in place of Mary A. Wickersham, who has been granted leave of absence for a year's travel and study in California.

THE JOHN WOOLMAN ASSOCIATION.—The Annual Meeting will be held at 99 Branch Street, Mount Holly, N. J., Tenth Month 13th, at 3 P. M., to elect officers, adopt a constitution, and consider whether the Association owes any social service to our new neighbors at Camp Div. We are greatly in need of funds.

For the Trustees,
AMELIA M. GUMMERE,
President.

AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE.

The pendulum of our work in France is swinging toward opportunities that far exceed any of our expectations. The letters from J. Henry Scattergood are now as encouraging as they were at first discouraging. The Red Cross was necessarily slow in making its very thorough survey and laying its broad-based plans. It has decided to work very largely through existing agencies at present, correlating them and standardizing their work as much as possible.

The organization which seems to have commended itself most highly to the Red Cross Commission is the Mission de la Société des Amis (Mission of the Society of Friends). As has been stated before in THE FRIEND our work has now been merged with this very efficient and well-established work of English Friends. This is the first great achievement of Morris E. Leeds and J. Henry Scattergood and constitutes one of the two great doors that have opened to us. Our workers, however, will retain their Red Cross character, will obtain permits from the Red Cross, and will have the invaluable support of that large and influential organization. This is the second great achievement of our commissioners and constitutes the other door without which we could not enter the field.

The following cablegram has just been received from Dr. Bablitt, director of our Unit:

"PARIS, Ninth Month 18, 1917.

"Unit called Paris direct finding J. Henry Scattergood and Margery Fry here co-operating splendidly. And Anglo-American amalgamation complete. Unexpectedly rapid assignment. Work (in) different districts all previously arranged. Everybody well (and) happy. Cable sailings incoming groups. Rush machinery and trucks, etc., advise. Prospect exceeds expectations."

The men not immediately assigned (note the welcome news in the cable of rapid assignments) have gone to Ormans, where we have leased a planning mill for the manufacture of portable houses. It will employ 50 to 75 workers and will have a capacity of ten houses per week, or double that of the factory at Dole.

We are peculiarly fortunate in securing such an admirable location, with such adequate floor space, electric and water supply and good living conditions. There are two shops on either side of a small stream, there is a store, a two-story building, with 7000 feet of floor space and machinery driven by water power. The other is a brick one-floor building, with about 7000 feet floor space and machinery driven by an electric motor with current brought from the town.

A neighboring absentee factory (closed by the government) has been leased as a hostel for the men to live in. It will house 125 to 150 men. The men to be sent in the future will go to this place to be trained before being sent into the field. It will also be our permanent headquarters to which men can return when on leave.

Ormans is a charming village in the Jura Mountains and the beauty and variety of the surroundings will offset the rather monotonous nature of the work. We are in need of more applicants of proper qualifications to supply the call from France. It is a service that should appeal to every member of the Society of Friends who is not prevented from going by obligations in this country. More men should be willing to break the pleasant bonds that tie them here and make the sacrifices involved. Millions of persons are making extreme sacrifices, are looking far into the depths of life, are battling in the surging tide of this world crisis. When it is all over and the days of world reconstruction begin there is grave danger that most men will say to the Society of Friends, "You stood apart when the crisis was on; you have had no experience in the world affairs of the time; you are not qualified now to speak." However, if we now pour our resources of personal service and money into the great international work that has opened for us we shall not only be playing our proper part now, but we shall preserve our influence for the future.

VINCENT D. NICHOLSON,
Executive Secretary.

WESTTOWN NOTES.—On returning to Westtown after the long vacations, teachers and old students look for changes and improvements which have been made in their absence. This year we find that the Boys' Parlor has undergone a great transformation. The walls and woodwork have been refinished in an attractive combination of grey and black and the new furniture, which has replaced the old, helps to make the room most attractive.

The antique furniture which has been collecting at Westtown through its long history is being refinished and assembled in the Central Hall. While the work is as yet incomplete, the changes already made give promise of much in the future.

The boys and girls are making but few plans for tennis this fall, but are concentrating their attention largely upon soccer and hockey. These games will probably be in full swing by the time this reaches our readers. Eleven Yearly Meetings are represented by 65 new boys and girls. Of these 39 are from Philadelphia, 6 from Baltimore, 3 from Western, 3 from Kansas, and 3 from Indiana. Other Yearly Meetings represented are Iowa, North Carolina, New York, 3 in Ohio (Barnevilles).

A number of the members of the American Friends' Reconstruction Unit No. 1 have failed as yet to secure passports on account of difficulties with the draft. They are rendering valuable service at Westtown, some by helping Albert Forsythe fill his silos, while others are helping James Walker take care of his large crop of peaches on Walnut Hill.

NOTICES.

FRIENDS' SELECT SCHOOL.—The School opened for the current year on Second-day, Ninth Month 24th. Those desiring to enter pupils should confer with the Principal.

WALTER W. HAYLAND,
Principal.

SIXTEENTH AND CHERRY STREETS, Philadelphia.

MEETINGS FROM NINTH MONTH 30th TO TENTH MONTH 6th:—

Gwynedd Monthly Meeting, at Norristown, First-day, Ninth Month 20th, at 10.30 A. M.

Kennet, at Kennet Square, Third-day, Tenth Month 2nd, at 10 A. M. Chesterfield, at Crosswicks, Third-day, Tenth Month 2nd, at 10 A. M. Chester, N. J., at Moorestown, Third-day, Tenth Month 2nd, at 7.30 P. M.

Bradford, at Catesville, Fourth-day, Tenth Month 3rd, at 10 A. M. New Garden, at Westgrove, Fourth-day, Tenth Month 3rd, at 10 A. M. Upper Springfield, at Mansfield, Fourth-day, Tenth Month 3rd, at 10 A. M.

Haddonfield, Fourth-day, Tenth Month 3rd, at 7.30 P. M.

Wilmington, Fifth-day, Tenth Month 4th, at 7.30 P. M. Uxehlan, at Downingtown, Fifth-day, Tenth Month 4th, at 10.30 A. M.

Longlovene, Fifth-day, Tenth Month 4th, at 10 A. M. Burlington, Fifth-day, Tenth Month 4th, at 10.30 A. M.

Falls, at Fallington, Fifth-day, Tenth Month 4th, at 10 A. M. Evesham, at Mt. Laurel, Fifth-day, Tenth Month 4th, at 10 A. M. Upper Evesham, at Medford, Seventh-day, Tenth Month 6th, at 10 A. M.

DEED.—Ninth Month 10, 1917, at the residence of her brother-in-law, Thomas C. Peck, Rich Square, N. C., JERUVANNA PECKE HARVEY, widow of the late Cyrus W. Harvey, in the sixty-seventh year of her age; a minister of Rich Square Monthly Meeting of Friends, North Carolina.

WILLIAM H. PALE'S SONS, PRINTERS,
422 Walnut Street, Phila., Pa.

WISSAHICKON INN
REDLANDS,
CALIFORNIA.

THE WISSAHICKON INN is situated in an Orange Grove in Redlands, the most beautiful place in the San Bernardino Valley.

At the Wissahickon Inn, a family hotel of fifty rooms, you will find a homelike place, good food, and careful attention to your wants.

Rooms with private bath and plenty of public baths. One or two cottages on the grounds. Near parks and golf course. Tennis court. Magnificent roads for motoring. For reservations and prices, address

A. B. JOHNSON.

Friends Arch St. Centre
304 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Provides comfortable accommodations for guests by the day or week. Meals at moderate prices.

AMELIA D. FEATHERSTONE, Matron.

PHONE—MARKET 1571.

The Only Grand Prize

(Highest Award) given to Dictionaries at the Panama-Pacific Exposition was granted to

WEBSTER'S NEW INTERNATIONAL

For Superiority of Educational Merit.

This new creation answers with final authority all kinds of puzzling questions such as "How is Freemasonry pronounced?" "What is Flanders?" "What is confutissimus togas?" "What is a houster?" "What is white coal?" and thousands of others.

More than 400,000 Vocabulary Terms, 30,000 Geographical Subjects, 12,000 Biographical Entries, Over 6000 Illustrations, 2700 Pages. The only dictionary with a divided page—a stroke of genius.

REGULAR and INDIA-PAPER EDITIONS.

Write for specimen pages, illustrations, etc. Free, a set of Pocket Maps if you name this paper.

G. & C. MERRIAM CO., Springfield, Mass.

Letchworth Cottage
Spring Lake Beach, N. J.

Open for the Season 1917

A. C. & S. H. Letchworth

ALFRED C. HAINES

Building Glass and Paints

56 N. Front St., Philadelphia

PUBLIC STENOGRAPHER

GEORGE B. COCK, Liberty Building

Established 1896. Experience 39 years; Medical 13

Hajoca
extra-deep Sink

Prevents overflow of water from dishpan to floor. Equipped with Hajoca Quick Faucets, which save time and prevent splashing. Inspect it at our show-rooms, and see all the latest designs of Hajoca Bathroom Fixtures. Write for Hajoca Book, free.

HAINES, JONES & CADBURY CO.
1130-1144 Ridge Ave.
(at 12th and Spring Garden Sts.)

RESIDENCE: 204 S. 44th St. BELL PHONE: Baring 2084X

WILLIAM OAKES

Plumbing and Heating Contractor

ALSO LEAD BURNING

260 SOUTH TENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA

BELL PHONE: Filbert 2666.

GLASLYN-CHATHAM

PARK PLACE

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

A Family House of Established Reputation.

Open Throughout the Year.

NATHAN L. JONES.

WALL PAPERS—All Grades

WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER

Custom of Friends Specially Solicited

FRANK C. BUEHL

Successor to S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON

902 SPRING GARDEN ST. PHILADELPHIA

Opposite Spring Garden Station, Phila. & Reading R.R.

ESTABLISHED 1849. BELL PHONE.

WILLIAM S. YARNALL

MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

128 SOUTH SIXTEENTH STREET

PHILADELPHIA

WANTED—SALESMAN TO CANVAS RETA L store and institution trade for staple food product. "C." Case "Las Palmas."

THE HOLMES PRESS

Printers

J. L. Engle, Pres.

1336-40 CHERRY ST. PHILA.

THE LAKESIDE

EAGLES MERE, PA.

Unobstructed lake view; capacity 250. Elevator steam heat, golf, tennis, boating and bathing. Attractive motoring through the surrounding country.

GARAGE

J. S. KIRK & SON

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGUES

GIRARD TRUST CO.
BROAD and CHESTNUT STS.

CAPITAL AND SURPLUS } $10,000,000

Acts as Executor, Trustee, Guardian, Administrator, Assignee and Receiver. Safes to Rent in Burglar-proof Vaults. Interest Allowed on Deposits. :: ::

E. B. MORRIS

PRESIDENT

FRIENDS OR OTHERS WHO ARE THINKING of attending Cornell the coming year will find comfortable rooms in a Friends' family, at reasonable prices, at 238 Linden Avenue, Ithaca, N. Y. Five minutes' walk from Campus. EDWARD WOOD.

FOR RENT (FURNISHED)—A PLEASANT HOME in Moorestown, N. J., on Main Street, overlooking the Valley; heated by hot water; lighted by electricity; near railroad station; trailers passing the door; near Friends' Meeting and school on same side of street; garage. Apply to M. W. STOKES, 166 E. Main St., Moorestown, N. J.

WANTED—A CARETAKER FOR THE INDIAN boys at Friends' School, Tusconess, N. Y.—Familiar one who can teach manual training. Applications for the position may be made to WM. B. HEDGECOCK, SUPERVISOR, Friends' Hospital, Frankford, Phila. ANNA WALTON, Moylan, Pa.

FOR SALE—AT THE OFFICE OF "THE FRIEND," a new latest edition Webster's Unabridged Dictionary.

POCONO MANOR INN

OPEN ALL YEAR

Situated in the beautiful Pocono Mountains in northeastern Pennsylvania is most attractive the year 'round.

Golf, Tennis, Bowling, Driving, Motoring, Swimming and Boating are but few of the recreations found at this popular resort.

J. W. HURLEY, Mgr., Pocono Manor, Pa. (Pocono Summit Station, D., L. & W. R. R.)

WOOLMAN SCHOOL

A FRIENDS' SCHOOL FOR SOCIAL AND RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.

COURSES OF STUDY, FALL TERM, 1917.

History of New Testament Times; Old Testament Literature; Literature and Principles of Friends, given by Elbert Russell; The Life of Paul, J. Henry Cadbury; Methods of Social Betterment, J. Byron Deacon; First-day School Methods, Annie Hillborn.

Intensive work in conversational French will be provided for students wishing to prepare for reconstruction work in France.

Fall Term begins Tenth Month 10.

For admission apply to

ELBERT RUSSELL, Director, Woolman School, Swarthmore, Pa.

SEE WALKER & KEPLER

FOR

Good Electrical Work

531 CHESNUT ST. -:- PHILA.

R. C. Ballinger Ernest R. Yarnall John A. Stratton
TELEPHONES

Bell—Fibert 26-15 - - Keystone—Race 637

R. C. BALLINGER & CO.

CONTRACTORS and BUILDERS

218 N. Thirteenth St. Philadelphia.

Philadelphia's
Representative Store

ELKINS, MORRIS & CO.

BANKERS

REPRESENTATIVES

WM. E. CADBURY PAUL W. BROWN
JAMES P. MAGILL

LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

RAILROAD AND PUBLIC UTILITY BONDS

FOR

CONSERVATIVE INVESTMENT.

FULL PARTICULARS ON REQUEST

Assoc. M. Am. Soc. C. E. Bell 'Phone—Lombard 3412

EDWIN M. EVANS
CONTRACTOR & BUILDER

My jobbing department is well equipped, prompt and efficient

321 S. LAWRENCE ST. :: PHILA.

THE following timely books, mostly of those recommended by the Social Order Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, are for sale at Friends' Book Store, No. 304 Arch Street, Philadelphia.

- "The Church and The Hour," Vina D. Scudder, . . . $1.00
- "The Social Problem," C. A. Ellwood, . . . 1.25
- "The Abolition of Poverty," J. H. Hollander, . . . 75
- "Christianizing the Social Order," Walter Rauschenbusch, . . . 1.50
- "The Day of Our Visitation," William Littleboy, . . . 50
- "A Word of Remembrance and Caution to the Rich," John Woolman, . . . 65

HARVEY T. WEBER

TAILOR

207-208 HALE BLDG., 1326 CHESTNUT ST.

The custom of Friends specially solicited.

FRIENDS' BIBLE ASSOCIATION

HAS ITS HEADQUARTERS AT

207 WALNUT PLACE : PHILA.

It is able to furnish Bibles and Testaments to Schools and Bible-classes and would be glad to have Friends everywhere acquaint themselves with the needs of their neighborhoods and allow the Bible Association to help them procure the books they may want.

Premier Duplicating Co.

Mimeographing, Multigraphing, Printing, Type-writing, Addressing, Mailing, etc.

630 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

TO ADVERTISERS.—THE FRIEND is now open for selected advertisements at the following rates: One inch, 56 cents, or 4 cents a line; no insertion for less than 25 cents. Long term rates given on application.

Friends having real estate to rent or sell, also those desiring board or rooms, should find THE FRIEND an excellent medium for reaching interested parties.

Standing business cards are also solicited.

JOSEPH G. FOGG
FUNERAL DIRECTOR and EMBALMER
S. W. COR. 16TH and RACE STREETS
Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals
BELL 'PHONE SPRUCE 1840

W. J. MacWatters

Let Me
Help You

In Selecting Your

RUGS AND CARPETS

Domestic -- -- Oriental

ALL WEAVES

The Home of Bundhar Wilton

"DURABLE AS IRON"

HARDWICK & MAGEE CO.

1220 Market Street

HARRY S. LEE

313 WALNUT STREET

PAINTER AND GRAINER

ANTIQUE and OFFICE FURNITURE RESTORED
JOBGING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO
ESTIMATES

W. B. WEAVER
UNDERTAKER and EMBALMER

550-552 N. 5TH ST., PHILA., PA.

Special Attention Given to Funerals
In and Out of the City. Also Chapel
Accommodations for Funerals.

BELL 'PHONE ESTABLISHED 1880

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE MATERIAL THAT WE SELL

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY

MANUFACTURERS

PHILADELPHIA

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 91.

FIFTH-DAY, TENTH MONTH 4, 1917.

No. 14.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price $2.00 a year in Advance.

Publisher, DAVIS H. FORSTHEE.

Editors { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
DAVIS H. FORSTHEE,
MARY WARD.

Make remittances payable to

THE FRIEND,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

A PRAYER FOR GERMANY.

[We are indebted to Sarah Dunn Wood for the following, which she found in the Philadelphia Record. Bishop Gore, of Oxford, is the writer, but the aspiration is one in which Christians everywhere might unite. —Eds.]

Give Thy blessing, O Father, to the people of that great and fair land, with whose rulers we are at war. Strengthen the hands of the wise and just, who follow charity and look for justice and freedom, among them as among us. Drive away the evil passions of hatred, suspicion and the fever of war, among them as among us. Relieve and comfort the anxious, the bereaved, the sick and tormented, and all the pale host of sufferers, among them as among us. Reward the patience, industry, loving-kindness and simplicity of the common people and all the men of good heart, among them as among us. Forgive the cruelty, the ambition, the foolish pride, the heartless schemes, of which the world's rulers have been guilty. Teach us everywhere to repent and to amend. Help us so to use our present afflictions, which come from us and not from Thee, that we may build on the ruins of our evil past a firm and lasting peace. Grant that, united in a good understanding with these who are now become our enemies, though they are our brethren in Christ, they and we may establish a new order, wherein the nations may live together in trust and fellowship, in the emulation of great achievements and the rivalry of good deeds, truthful, honest and just in our dealings one with another, and following in all things the standard of the Son of Man, whom we have denied, and put to shame, and crucified afresh upon the Calvary of our battle-ground. Amen.

HEART WORSHIP.

Our Lord defined worship as an act to be consummated "in spirit and in truth." In other words, it is an exercise of the spiritual faculties and must be sincere:

Though they may crowd

Rite upon rite, and mystic song on song;

Though the deep organ loud

Through the long nave reverberate full and strong;

Though the weird priest

Whom rolling cloud of incense half conceals,

By gilded robes increased,

Mutter and sign and proudly prostrate kneel;

Not pomp, nor song, nor bended knee

Shall bring them any nearer Thee.

So sang Lewis Morris. No doubt he intended to convey the thought that such worship—whilst it may be acceptable to God if accompanied with a reverent outreach of the soul—cannot consist in the exteriors of ritual alone. I think most Christians of all creeds believe this. How important then that we go to the house of worship with hearts uplifted to God and with a veneration that no "thin soaring tone of the keen organ" can substitute.

Worship is union of the soul with God. It inspires the awe of those who sincerely engage in it. It soothes the restless body and mind. It inspires trust in the ceaseless superintendence of Providence in the affairs of men. It leads to a reliance on the simplest teachings of the Gospel. It steadies the wayward affections. It enlarges our sympathy for the whole creation. It breathes upon us the benediction of God's forgiveness and makes us willing to forgive others. It carries us into the Divine presence. How can men and women pass one hour in that hallowed presence and not be moved thereby?

Some enter the house of prayer that they may listen to a favorite minister, to enjoy the sweet swelling of sacred music, or because of social ties. Those who go to simply worship God secure the richest rewards. The recital of a creed, the voice of the orator, the anthems or organ fail to satisfy their deeper needs. These aspirants for contact with God positively find Him. Strong men and noble women thus like little children prostrate themselves at His feet. The New Testament teaching as to the visitations of the Holy Spirit is no mystery to them. Their hearts actually become temples of that Holy Spirit. Every hour in which they so enjoy Him becomes a tonic, comfort and joy. Who would not desire to thus worship God?

All may stretch out their hands to the Infinite from a room of pain, from the bare hillside, in the crowded street, the rude chapel or stately minster:

On these shall come to fall

A golden ray of consecrated Light,

And Thou, within the midst, shalt there

Invisible receive the prayer.

SAN JOSE, California.

W. C. A.

OHIO YEARLY MEETING.

Ohio Yearly Meeting of Friends was held at Barnesville, Ohio, as usual, beginning with the Meeting for Ministers and Elders on the seventh of Ninth Month and ending the thirteenth of same. There was about the usual attendance, with perhaps not so many from other Yearly Meetings as sometimes. Samuel W. Jones and wife of Philadelphia, Solomon Barker and Sybil J. Barker of North Carolina, were very acceptably in attendance with several others also. The world situation overshadowed us from the start and our meetings seemed to many unusually solemn and valuable. Early in the session a Committee who had the matter under consideration for a year reported that Hickory Grove Quarterly Meeting, Iowa, should in their judgment now be attached to Iowa Yearly Meeting (Conservative), within whose borders they were. This subject has been before our Yearly Meeting off and on for many years, and it was under a very solemn covering that the report of the Committee was adopted. It means for Ohio the cutting off from her numbers one of her largest Quarters, including a Monthly Meeting at Pasadena, California. But many believe it is for the good of our beloved Society and the advance of the Truth, and we were willing the sacrifice be made. Epistles were received from the Yearly Meetings with which we correspond and one was read to our satisfaction from Friends at Fritchley, England. The usual Committee was appointed to prepare answers to these meetings with which we correspond, and the Clerk was directed to reply to the letter from Fritchley.

66 CYRUS COOPER
R. F. D. NO. 2

We correspond now with New England, Canada, Western Iowa, Kansas and North Carolina Yearly Meetings (Conservative), and this correspondence seems to many as very helpful and encouraging, especially in these trying times. The Queries and Answers were read as usual, the discussion on the state of Society being very earnest and helpful. One new meeting was reported as being set up at Fairhope, Alabama, to be known as Fairhope Preparative Meeting and attached to Stillwater Monthly Meeting, Barnesville, Ohio. It is held the Fourth-day after the first Seventh-day in each month at eleven o'clock. There is now quite a large group of Friends settled here and they have an interesting meeting and school. Most of these Friends moved here from Iowa and Kansas Yearly Meetings, Conservative, although several are from other Yearly Meetings. Fairhope is on Mobile Bay, not far from Mobile, Alabama, and any Friends visiting the South will be welcomed there. This meeting has been attached to Stillwater Monthly Meeting because that Meeting is the most convenient to them.

An interesting report was received from the Boarding School at Barnesville. The unusual high cost of coal and provisions made the School go some behind for the first time in many years. The increase in the size of the coal bill alone nearly making the difference.

The moral tone of the School at present seems to be very good, which is a matter of encouragement to all interested Friends. A new cottage has been built on the grounds for the Principal and his family, which adds much to the beauty of the grounds and the equipment of the School. It is situated on the walk not far from the Girls' Dormitory on the west side. The money for its construction was contributed by interested Friends of the School. Reference was made in the report of the School to the bequest of $5,000 of our friend, George J. Scattergood, which is much appreciated. Also to the gifts to the School of different classes during the year gone by. The Meeting for Sufferings made a more than usual interesting report on account of the present situation. Their special committee have during the year tried to keep in touch with our young men that are drafted and give them what advice and encouragement seemed best. They have had several meetings, and members have visited Washington, written letters to different officials, had conferences with Local and District Boards, and done all that way seemed to open to make our position known to the authorities and give advice to our membership of draft age. Carl Patterson, a member of the Yearly Meeting's standing Committee of the Meeting for Sufferings and also Clerk of the Yearly Meeting, and Joseph C. Stratton, a member of the same Committee, were delegated near the close of Yearly Meeting week to go to Washington and endeavor to get an interview with the officials there and deliver a message of the Meeting for Sufferings, as regards the present situation here in Ohio. The result of this trip will perhaps be known before this is in print. During Yearly Meeting week a meeting was held at the School for young men between the ages of seventeen and forty, for the purpose of discussing the situation and their relation to it. Members of the Meeting for Sufferings were present and also fathers of the boys and others. The meeting was felt to be a favored time and brought all sides together better than before. The young men have to face the issue and the Meeting for Sufferings has not felt at liberty to lay down any hard and fast rules for them to follow, as no one knows the things they will have to meet. We only hope and trust they are sufficiently grounded in the principles for which we stand as to be able to bear a faithful and consistent testimony against war. We feel they are our standard bearers and that we will have to trust them to bear what comes upon them to the praise and honor of the Great Captain of Souls.

The usual collections for Bible reading were held at the School during the week, at which much valuable advice was given, we hope to the honor of truth. The meeting closed with open shutters, the result of a concern of our beloved aged Friend, David Holloway, and was felt by many to be a favored time. The meetings on First-day were very largely attended, and there seemed an earnestness about the crowd more than at some other times. Following the regular meeting for worship on Fourth-day morning, at the request of Joshua P. Smith of Iowa, a special meeting for worship was held in the afternoon, which was well attended.

One of the changed conditions of the time was shown in the fact that while in former times the boarding school barn was filled with horses of Friends from a distance, this year there was scarcely a horse fed there, but the barn floor had been cleaned out and was filled with autos, as many as twenty-five or thirty being on the grounds at one time. Many are using the auto in place of the railroad these days when traffic seems so troubled. We feel we have had a favored Yearly Meeting, and going home to our usual duties we trust we may meet the issues that will present with more courage and patience for our having been together here at Yearly Meeting time.

OHIO YEARLY MEETING.

JOSEPH J. WALTON.

The long-established custom of Friends of meeting together once in each year is largely responsible for the unity of thought and action which is characteristic of our Society and by which, though small in number, we have been able to exert widespread influence. Younger and older meeting together are enabled to discuss questions of vital interest and determine the best course of action as new problems arise.

The recent Ohio Yearly Meeting, held near Barnesville, was well attended and although each year some of the older faces are absent there was an exceptionally large attendance of young Friends. This was especially encouraging, as in the past the tendency has been to let too much of the burden of the meeting rest on the Friends in the gallery rather than be accepted by each individual member.

The most important thing accomplished in an official capacity was the decision of the meeting to allow Hickory Grove Quarterly Meeting, which is held near West Branch, Iowa, to be joined to Iowa Yearly Meeting, held at the same place. While these Friends have been valuable members in this Yearly Meeting, yet their situation within the limits of another conservative Yearly Meeting made it seem best to join their meeting to it.

The meetings held at the Boarding School in the evenings add greatly to the interest and profit gained from Yearly Meeting week. On one evening a letter from Alfred Lowry, Jr., to Ohio Friends was read. Another evening a very instructive paper was read on the subject, "Some Social Aspects of Friends in the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries," by Alice Mendenhall. It was a scholarly and authoritative treatise concerning the many forms of modern social service in which early Friends were pioneers.

The situation of Friends in respect to the present world crisis was naturally the subject of much thought and discussion both in meeting and outside. Although the meeting declined to take any official action toward recognizing any relief organizations to which Friends might contribute their services and financial support there was a deep concern that Friends should not turn a deaf ear to the cries of a suffering world, but should endeavor to find ways by which aid can be conscientiously extended. A special Committee of the Meeting for Sufferings has done much good work during the summer and still is giving advice and assistance to young men of draft age. While it is realized that each young man must make his individual stand, based on his own conscientious conviction against war, they are urged not to accept any form of alternative service, as this will compromise the ancient stand of Friends against participation in war or anything connected with it. From the expressions in a meeting held especially for the young men who have registered, it was very evident that the young Friends of Ohio have the same desire as those elsewhere, to make sacrifices to the principles of peace proportionate to those which so many others are making to the principle of war. The call for service for the cause of humanity seemed to be strongly felt.

Although Ohio Yearly Meeting may not seem to have accomplished as much as some others, yet it is not because of any lack of desire to go forward in the various lines of modern Friendly activity as fast as is right, but rather from a fear that by becoming too active we may drift away from those fundamental and stabilizing principles and practices on which the Society of Friends was founded. It desires that the traditions of the past instead of holding us back, may be stepping-stones, on which Friends may ascend to higher fields of usefulness and service.

BARNESVILLE, Ohio, Ninth Month 24, 1917.

EDITORIAL NOTE.

Some weeks ago we printed an editorial review of William Littleboy's Swarthmore Lecture. It had the title "The Day of our Visitation." The first edition of the little book was at once exhausted, but a second edition is now on sale. We commended the treatment and conclusions of this lecture to our readers. It seemed to us the most practical possible application of the Gospel to the present world need. The mysterious prophecies of our Lord's "coming again" are given the interpretation by William Littleboy which a spiritual understanding of Him and of His mission seems to require. Whether there is ground in scholarship to translate the Syriac word Maran-atha, "He is here," we are not competent to say. That apostles and saints have lived in that understanding we are quite sure. Nor can we imagine any better preparation for another outward (personal) manifestation than for us all to re-echo by our daily lives our own belief that He is actually here.

Some devout Friends and not a few devout Christians—some of them the most militant Christians we know—feel they can not understand Scripture to mean anything but a definite doctrine of a second coming. Since our editorial we have received a statement made for such by our friend, William H. Richie. Usually we have resisted the effort to make THE FRIEND an open Forum, but in this case it seems proper to us to print his article. Save as Friends may wish to communicate with him we do not intend to pursue the subject further. The service of our paper is definitely for the spiritual interpretation and application of Truth. In this case the two interpretations do not seem to be much in conflict. The one, as we have noted above, might easily include the other.

J. H. B.

"Be content to wade through the waters betwixt you and glory with Him, holding His hand fast; for He knoweth all the fords. Be like one of another country; home and stay not; for the sun is fallen low, and nigh the tops of the mountains, and the shadows are stretched out in great length."—RUTHERFORD.

MATTHEW X: 29.

Men send their ships, those eager things,
To try their luck at sea,
And none can tell, by note or count,
How many there may be.
One turneth north, another south;
They come not back again;
And then we know they must have sunk,
But neither how nor when.

God sends His little birds abroad;
They're less than ships say we;
No moment passes but He knows
How many there should be.
One buildeth high, another low,
With just a bird's light care;
If only one perchance doth fall,
He knoweth when and where.

SOME SAYINGS OF BARCLAY AND FOX CONSIDERED.

WM. BACON EVANS.

" . . . We do distinguish (says R. Barclay) betwixt the certain knowledge of God and the uncertain; betwixt the spiritual knowledge and the literal; the saving heart knowledge and soaring, airy, head knowledge. . . ." (Works, p. 270). Again in recommending care as to how we hear, he elsewhere says, ". . . he that miseth his road from the beginning of his journey, and is deceived at his first setting forth; the greater his mistake is; the more difficult will be his entrance into the right way." (Works, p. 267.)

"I had great openings (says G. Fox) concerning the things written in the Revelations, and when I spoke of them, the priests and the professors would say that it was a sealed book and would have kept me out of it. But I told them Christ could open seals, and they were the nearest things to us, for the epistles were written to the saints that lived in former ages, but the Revelations were written of things to come." (Journal, p. 6).

As regards the meaning of mysterious passages of the Holy Scriptures, it is not sufficient that we are familiar with them and have prayerfully studied them. Only when we have received from God their true meaning, are we capable of explaining them.

While the Holy Scriptures may rightly be styled a "Guide Book," and while they tell truly of what was, what is, and is to be, yet their great value lies in this, that they direct us to Christ, with Whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, and Who opens as He sees meet.

And Christ is not separate from His Spirit, but where His Spirit is, there Christ is.

THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST: IS IT SPIRITUAL OR PERSONAL?

WILLIAM H. RICHIE.

The second "Coming of Christ" may not seem at first thought to be of practical importance or of much concern to readers of THE FRIEND, when its pages are well filled with the "outward expression of an inward life," and most of us are busy trying to do God's will right now, day by day. But I believe a knowledge thereof is of great practical value to every Christian, because whether we believe it is Spiritual or is to be Personal, a fuller knowledge of this "blessed Hope" will prove to be a great asset to our Faith, and a deepening of our love for our Lord.

To many Christians this seems to be of remote importance, and any doctrine concerning God's plans for the future of the world seems of no practical value to everyday life. After a careful study of the Scriptures the past three years, not as a scholar but as a humble seeker for the truth, the writer's prejudice against has changed to a conviction for the doctrine of the Pre-Millennial Personal coming of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. Because this study has resulted in a deepening of faith and has been of practical value in understanding modern problems, he writes on this subject with the hope that others will take time to study and see for themselves "if these things are so."

At the close of His ministry, Jesus called His disciples His "friends," because He had told them His plans, and had given them example and instruction as to how the Father's work was to be carried on. "To swing the world back to God" could not be entrusted to "servants," or "strangers," for "the servant knoweth not what His Lord doeth," so He is counting on us, His "friends" to follow Him closely and work just according to the directions of His "Guide Book." We are to draw from Him all the faith, all the hope and all the love, to meet the spiritual needs of the world.

The recent book by William Littlebooy of England, "The Day of Our Visitation," is one that is likely to command considerable attention, especially at the present time, and the review of it in THE FRIEND has doubtless brought its clear and forceful exhortations before a still larger public. The author's ringing call and challenge for Friends everywhere to be willing to lay aside the "traditions of the Elders," and seek diligently to know God's will in this crisis, to do His bidding joyfully and follow His leading fearlessly, cannot fail to stir within us a desire to be brought into communion and fellowship with Him, that He may have His way with us, and work His power through us. The author's exposition of Christ's command to "watch and pray" and his exhortation for us to be ever ready for "His appearing" is timely. At no period like the present have Christians been more concerned for the practical application of this command; and to know just what the "Coming of Christ" may mean. They wish to know how to best be prepared for the "Coming"—whether it is of a spiritual or to be of a personal nature.

There are two very distinct interpretations of the prophetic utterances concerning the character and close of this age. Practically all Christians will agree that the Bible records a great deal in the way of prophecy concerning the Jews' sojourn in Egypt, in the Promised Land, and in captivity, which has already been literally and completely fulfilled, and the events recorded are now accepted as a matter of history. Passage after passage has been "reduced from foresight to fact, from prediction to history." These were not intended to be understood in an allegorical or a spiritual manner, but simply meant exactly what they said. Furthermore, there are many other events concerning the Jews which are to be fulfilled before the final judgment. Most of the inspired writers of the Scriptures looked forward, in the spirit, to a time of peace, "when each man will seek another's good," and "all the earth will be filled with a knowledge of the Lord." This period is called the Millennium, or the thousand years of Christ's reign over the earth. The point of difference is whether Christ will continue, as He does now, to reign spiritually in the hearts of men during the Millennium and then come to earth in glory at the close—or whether He comes again in His Resurrection Body in judgment and power to institute a supernatural reign over the earth upon the throne of His Father, David, in the Millennium.

The general principle of understanding Scripture holds good, especially for prophecy, that no isolated Scripture contains its own interpretation (II Peter i:20), but all other Scripture which relates to it must throw light upon it and make its truth more clear. So in the right understanding of God's plans for the world, we must not only study Isaiah, Daniel and the other Old Testament prophets, but also Christ's own statements in corroboration of them. His words of prophecy, His parables concerning the Kingdom of Heaven, and finally the revelations of the spirit to Paul, Peter and later to John. They must all agree, or else they are not according to the will of God. Now the Pre-Millennial Coming of Christ is believed by many of the best students of the Bible to be according to the harmonizing of all these prophecies; whereas, the "evolutionary" theory of a spiritual process to usher in the Millennium does violence to many of the parables and direct prophecies.

Let us examine with open minds and hearts this "traditional" view of the subjects which Friends and many other Christians have held; and which is presented in the early part of William Littlebooy's lecture, "Christ comes," it is said, "when the broken and contrite heart" accepts Him as Saviour and enthrones Him in the heart as Lord and Master. Thus He is continually coming to many different people, "spiritually." Perhaps it may be that the "Parousia" or second appearing, or "Rapture of Christ receiving His followers," is to be by a sudden awakening to the reality of His presence here among us, fulfilling His desire to "come in to us and sup with us." Yes, He is among us, for He said, "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." But this spiritual manifestation in the heart of the Believer, which we all should experience, when fulfilling His conditions, does not seem to harmonize with Christ's words concerning His sudden coming, "as a snare" (Luke xi: 35), or "as a thief in the night" (Matt. xxiv: 42-44); or as the "bridegroom at midnight" (Matt. xxv: 1-13). Nor does this interpretation accept Paul's testimony concerning "that day" "when the Lord Himself (not His Spirit) shall descend from Heaven." (I Thes. iv: 13-18), and (II Thes. ii: 1-4) or Peter's words written years later confirming "brother Paul's epistles," "speaking in them of these things" in II Peter iii: 10-17. The apostles experienced His Presence too, and yet looked for His personal return in the first century, and it was their "glorious hope" and the impelling motive of their missionary zeal. And this has been the case with all great missionaries of recent times. But because He did not come in the first century is no argument for His not coming at any moment now. As Peter foretells, there shall be those "in the last days" who will say, "Where is the promise of His coming? for since the fathers fell asleep all things continue as they were from the beginning of the 'Creation.'" (II Peter iii: 4). But as he says, "One day is with the Lord as a thousand years and a thousand years as one day," and "the Lord is not slack concerning His promise," "But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night," (II Peter iii: 10). Without any effort at interpreting, this seems to indicate there is promised by the Lord an event, which will be denied, and will be unwelcome and unlooked for by many.

The "Parousia" has always been imminent, "at a time that ye think not"; therefore, we are given the exhortation that we are to "watch and pray" and be so in line with His will, that "we shall not be ashamed at His coming." (I John ii: 28). If it is a "spiritual process," or a sought-for blessing, no such warning would be needed, and yet the warning for the event is given unmistakably in three gospels and many epistles.

It is stated that the Jews as a nation, during the first century, fell into error because they were so intent on their "Messianic Hope" and all the literal fulfillment of Christ's reign on the throne of David, that "a blindness, beginning in criticism and ending in rejection and the cross," proved that they were wrong to expect any such fulfillment. The trouble was not in their "literalism," but in their sin, their unbelief and their "traditions" which kept them from an understanding of God's plans. Had they "searched the Scriptures" more faithfully, they would have realized that there were two distinct phases of the Messiah's work on earth, and that He was literally fulfilling, right before their eyes, all the first part of the prophecies which were concerning "Jehovah's Suffering Servant" (Is. 53). We, too, are in danger of Christ's reproach, "O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken."

When Jesus went to the synagogue at Nazareth (Luke iv: 16-21) and read from the 61st chapter of Isaiah concerning Himself—He stopped short at a comma in the middle of the second verse and closed the book. Why? Because He had come to preach the "acceptable year of the Lord," thus beginning the dispensation of Grace, and this was as far as

He could go. With His return to the earth will come the fulfillment of the rest of the verse, "the day of the vengeance of our God," the judgment of the Gentile nations and the institution of the Millennial reign and the Kingdom blessings described in the rest of that chapter. He testified that the first part of the Scriptures was that day fulfilled, not spiritually, but literally.

We indeed believe that Christ was born in the manner, the time and place, He was raised, taught and worked miracles, suffered, died and rose again from among the dead, "literally," as was prophesied hundreds of years before He came, by the many writers who were inspired by the Holy Ghost. Now the crux of the whole matter is here: How can we consistently, in the light of all this literal fulfillment of the first part of Messianic prophecy, say that the second part of the prophecies concerning Christ and the Jews as a nation will not be literally accomplished when the "times of the Gentiles be fulfilled."

It has been said that John, who probably wrote the last of the Scriptures about 90 A. D., settled the matter of a "personal return of Christ" by "spiritualizing" the prophecies and calling attention to His imminent Presence, and the example of His appearances during the forty days before His ascension. Christ did on certain occasions after the resurrection appear to His disciples, but these appearances were for the purpose of giving evidence of His actual bodily resurrection (John xx: 19-29), and for final instructions and exhortations. (John 21). And again, on the way to Emaus, before "their eyes were opened," "beginning at Moses and all the prophets, He expounded to them in all the Scriptures the things concerning Himself," which were so far literally fulfilled. (Luke xxiv: 25-27). But these incidents in no way whatsoever satisfied the conception of Christ's coming to receive His disciples; as He said to them, "If I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto Myself, that where I am, there ye may be also." (John xiv: 3). When at last, He ascended up into Heaven, the promise was given that He "shall so come again, in like manner." (Acts i: 11).

The final revelation of the Spirit to St. John tells of His coming as a King to judge the nations and rule the earth for a thousand years. The Book of Revelation was written about twenty years after the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, which event fulfilled Christ's prophecies as recorded by Luke, chapter xxi:20-24, and Jerusalem has been "trodden down of the Gentiles" ever since; but in the eighteenth chapter of Revelations, we find that John's prophecy agrees with that of Christ as recorded in Matthew xxiv and xxv and Luke xxi: 25-36, concerning the final siege of Jerusalem, the judgment of the nations and the return of the Jews, which were not accomplished in the year 70 A. D. Again there is agreement between Daniel and Christ (Matt. xxiv: 14-15) and Paul in II Thes., as regards the situation at Jerusalem, when these things shall come to pass. All the second part of the many Messianic prophecies are, we believe, yet to be fulfilled literally; and do we not "wrest" the Scriptures if we try to spiritualize or ignore them? Let us beware, for if we start leaving out verses here and there, or if we tear out pages of our "Guide Book," "in which are things hard to be understood," we do so unto our "own destruction." (II Peter iii: 16). "My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are my ways your ways, saith the Lord," therefore, we can believe in faith what we may not entirely understand in all details.

Another section of Scripture must be considered to make clear God's plan of the world if we are to understand His will and know how He expects our co-operation. Many of Christ's parables about the Kingdom of Heaven which is now "within us" as a spiritual factor in the world preparatory to the Millennial Kingdom of God, make clear that the world is to be "evangelized" but not "Christianized." It is to have the Gospel preached, the "wheat" sown, but it will not be universally accepted. Only a part of the seed will take root and bring forth fruit. (Matt. xiii: 3-23.)

Within the Kingdom of professing Christians will be many who may accept His teachings intellectually, but in their hearts really know not the living Christ. He foresaw this characteristic of this age very clearly, and so tells us that the "wheat field" is to be filled with "tares" until the harvest. (Matt. xiii: 24-30.) The Kingdom net is to be full of many bad fish which are to be cast away, but only the good fish are saved. (Matt. xiii: 47-50). These parables show us that all the nations are now being sifted, and at Christ's personal coming, "one shall be taken and the other left," and even within this "spiritual kingdom" are many who are to be rejected because they are counterfeit, they have "no oil in their lamps" (The Holy Spirit); their wills are not "reborn" to do God's will as little children: they are "tares" rather than wheat. "Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh." (Matt. xxv: 13).

So it seems clear that God's plan for this "age of grace" or the "Church Age," is "to visit the Gentiles and take out of them a people for His name" (Acts xv: 14), who, with the remnant of the Jews will inherit God's promises. (Rom. xi: 11-25). It is the first duty of the Church, the "ecclesia" or "called-out ones," therefore, to "go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." (Mark xvi: 15) for the regeneration of men, to complete the "Body of Christ." The apostles while watching and waiting for their Lord did just the work that He commissioned them to do—brought men into personal knowledge of the risen Christ as Saviour and Lord. (Acts ii: 32-30). They occasionally healed and relieved suffering, but this was not their primary mission; nor should it be ours to-day.

But unfortunately, the facts reveal that "the church" has "lost its first love," and as prophesied, has become lukewarm, "apostate," and of a "Laodicean" character (Rev. iii: 14-19). It has not met the spiritual needs of a sinful world; because the world does not want to listen. For the "prince of this world" is still in control of more men than are ruled by the will of God, and too many men give Him too little time in their lives; and so God's love and grace are hindered. If it is God's plan to gradually develop a universal spiritual Kingdom in this age, how do we account for the decrease of spiritual power, and brotherly love in the general mass of professing Christians; how do we explain the increasing lack of "Sunday" observance? Is not the increasing apostasy of these times, the lack of faith in God's promises and power according to the prophecies of the apostles? (Tim. iv: 3-5) (II Peter ii: 1-22) (Jude). By a process of "evolution," how do we account for the shift from black African slavery of sixty years ago to the white mill-owner's slavery of to-day, or the economic oppression of one class over another? Why is temperance reform coming by economic necessity because it is "good business" rather than by a religious conviction because alcohol defiles the temple of God, whose temples we are? If the nations of the world are not "ripening for judgment," how do we explain the jealousies of well-educated business men who change their "duelling with swords" to cut-throat business competition? Is not this past three years of world war the final answer of God to the man who thinks by education and culture he can reform the world; without any need of a Saviour?

There is only one cure for sin and human selfishness according to God's guide book, and that is the super-human regenerating power of Christ; so therefore, according to this understanding of Scripture, there is only one cure for this old world, and that is, the supernatural personal return of Christ.

This faith in the personal coming of Christ opens all the Scriptures as well as many modern problems so much more fully to our understanding, and makes the "watching" a glorious, joyful incentive to holy living (I John iii: 2). The quality of a man's "hope" is a strong factor in building his character. Let that be the "blessed hope" for the fulfillment of God's plans, and what a power he may be for God. It is a very practical incentive to prayer and service, and more effectively calls the sinner to repentance than any spiritual interpretation. This faith inspired the lives of men like Wesley, Whitefield, George Mueller, Spurgeon, Moody and Pierson who have done so much to build up the "invisible church." Realizing that the "church" can not do in this age what is to be done by Christ in the Kingdom age, it puts the emphasis primarily upon faith and salvation and not upon works and rewards which are secondary. It places emphasis upon the regeneration of individuals, who then, because of it, will naturally reconstruct their lives and do their share in bringing others up to the same standards. Friends have always been clear as regards these matters relating to social work; and urged that no one should "run" without being "sent;" that "entering" and serving acceptably in the Kingdom depends upon a "rebirth." May we be likewise consistent in interpreting God's will!

Yes, "Jesus is coming" and all's well with the world. The future is as bright as God's promises, and I would that we all might watch and pray, night and day, and so "abide in Him that when He shall appear we may have confidence, and not be ashamed at His coming."

NINTH MONTH 16, 1917.

DEAR FRIEND:—

Speaking broadly, should we not aim to make THE FRIEND a vehicle for conveying the views and convictions of our members in good standing, although at times they may represent only a small minority of the body?

Is it not better to do this even at the cost of some criticism rather than to adopt repressive measures at the risk of quenching the Spirit? Honest discussion and interchange of thought is constructive, unifying and the means of "expounding the way of God more perfectly."

The paper obviously has been prepared after earnest reflection and with sincerity of purpose. In this connection, reference might be made to closing paragraphs of an article by Edward Grubb, on "The Baptism of John," in The Friend (London), No. 34, Eighth Month 24th.

Sincerely,

WALTER T. MOORE.

There are many to-day, among us and around us, who are in a position akin to that of Apollus. They believe that the Kingdom of God is at hand, and they understand the need for a corporate repentance and change of heart if we are to enter into it. Some of them call themselves Socialists and Agnostics, but their sincerity puts many of us to shame. They have the deepest reverence for Jesus Christ as the Teacher of the "way of life." If they mistake and reject our highest belief about Him, it is largely because they do not see evidences of its fruitfulness in our lives. Shall we draw about us the robes of a superior purity, and shun them as unorthodox and unclean? Or shall we rather, like Priscilla and her husband, "take them unto us," and "exound unto them the way of God more carefully?" If we will follow the example, we may find among them many an Apollus, who will "help much those who have believed through grace."

EDWARD GRUBB.

THERE IS ROOM.

In the midst of the changes that have been and still are taking place among us as a people, departures from ancient faith and simplicity that is in Christ, it lives in my heart to say: there is room and there is still need for implicitly and in sincerity following the spirit of truth even though it lead by the way of the cross. There is still need of advocates of the truth as it is in Jesus and of following the truth as our forefathers followed it and as we in faithfulness to our convictions feel called in the same way. If this called, we cannot serve our Heavenly Father in any other way. The Foxes and Barclays, Penns and Woolmans are lauded for their faithfulness, but no doubt they felt opposition as much as any who are to-day as faithful in following the same spirit.

The true Church, the Lamb's Bride, is still made up of those who are united to Christ, who are faithful to Him, who do not choose their own ways or seek to please themselves.

There is need of being true to the kind (the species), and when the kind becomes rare and is likely to disappear, may the seed be preserved. It is precious to believe there is still seed preserved in the land, and for the encouragement of such I feel a word to go forth. I believe in primitive Christianity and in its ancient simplicity, or if it may be so termed, old-fashioned Quakerism. For this there is still a place as it is preserved in the Life. May none be discouraged, may none be tempted to part with their inheritance. Such need to be constant, need to seek to be alive and to be kept faithful in their day and active in the way and the degree in which they are truly called. None are more active than those in error, those in the Truth should keep their places, "not by might nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord."

There is a strong tower that it is the privilege of the little ones to run into and find safety. To walk in the narrow way may seem foolish to others, yet if it is the way God calls us into, it is the only way in which He can and will fully witness for us and we cannot tell what may result from our faithfulness.

Perhaps it may not be ours so much to dwell upon the conditions to-day as so to live as to secure the answer "Well done." It is not so much for us to reason about the situation we find ourselves in or to grieve over our surroundings, as it is our duty to yield ourselves unto the Lord and to find the place He would choose for us.

Divine Wisdom should permeate all. This Wisdom works in all the Lord's creation and makes no mistake and it should be allowed to work through man, the noblest of all.

Let us think twice before we speak. "Be still and know that I am God." "Stand still and see the salvation of the Lord."

I am persuaded there is need of the real Friend, the plain Friend, and conviction is waiting to lead us as it did the learned and cultured Isaac Penington. Such are needed to-day as much as ever they were. May we not say they are needed as never before in this day of extravagance and display when the exertion and the application needed to obtain these often detracts from the faithful seeking the one thing needful.

I do not want to judge any, but I do desire to encourage that faithfulness into which we will feel called as we strive to come near to our Heavenly Father and to wait upon Him to know His will and to seek for ability to do it.

May the true seed be preserved and may there be a rich harvest in His own good time, as I believe there will be, and may He have all the praise unto Whom it belongs.

MIDDLETON, OHIO.

C. C.

Selected by R. E.

FROM BENJAMIN JOWETT.

"The later years of life appear to me from a certain point of view to be the best. They are less disturbed by care and the world. We begin to understand that things never did really matter so much as we supposed, and we are able to see them more in the true proportion, instead of being overwhelmed by them. We are more resigned to the will of God, neither afraid to depart nor over-anxious to stay. There are some things which, perhaps, we can set right because we are no longer actors in them. We cannot see into another life, but we believe with an inextinguishable hope that there is something still reserved for us. We are able also to regard not in a temper of alarm the changes of opinion which we see going on around us, and which have been greater in our time than in any other, and to know that they are a part of natural growth or change which it would be childish to complain of."

GIDEON BIRDSALL COUTANT.

The senior (nonagenarian) class of old scholars of Westtown School has been depleted by the death of Gideon B. Coutant, Seventh Month 12th, at Cadiz, Ohio, aged ninety-eight years. Few old scholars of that early or of later date could rival him for loyalty to the old School. During the last weeks of his life, although memory of other matters was impaired, he reverted affectionately to his school experiences and associations. His nearly one hundred years (his mother lived to be more than a hundred) had covered great changes of practice in the Society of Friends. He knew the extremes of eastern conservatism and the consuming ardency of the "modern movement" in the West. Several of the meetings of his early days in New York and Pennsylvania passed from the map during his life. He saw a like fate overtake the modernized meeting at Greenwich, Ohio, where the largest portion of his life was spent.

He was not alone in thinking that over-active radicalism might have been tempered from both the extremes of conservatism and of liberalism, by the multiplication of centres like Westtown School. The effect of our cherished institution in contributing to a homogeneous body, is doubtless exaggerated in this thought, but the thought itself is not merely the devouted feeling of loyal old scholars.

We are indebted to one who with her husband maintained a warm friendship with the Coutant family from the time they were visitors from their mountain home to the meeting at Stroudsburg, for the following very suitable account of our friend:

"Gideon B. Coutant was born in Ulster Co., New York, and removed, when a boy, with his parents, Jasper and Phebe Coutant, to the mountain region of Pennsylvania. As the oldest of eleven children, the responsibilities of life were assumed by him with great ability and untiring good nature. After helping his parents reclaim a rocky sterile farm he with a younger brother set out in a small carriage for Ohio. Here he became attached to his more gentle surroundings and acquired sufficient property to be comfortable—a genial neighbor and faithful friend. He was a consistent member of the Society of Friends.

"His death was peaceful, and those who have known him best feel the force of his cheerful and beautiful example through the various vicissitudes of life."

CONDITIONS IN PALESTINE.

[The following picture is drawn by A. Edward and Marion E. Kelsey, from the report of three American women of the Missionary Alliance, who arrived in New York on Eighth Month 22nd.—EWS.]

As to the condition of the people the ladies report very serious economic conditions facing those remaining. The ports continue to be closed to importations, the latter rains were very scanty and the seed short so that this year's harvest was very light. There will be great suffering the coming winter unless some way is found to get food to them. All pack animals have been taken by the government, so that in the interior, off the railroad and caravan routes, there is bound to be famine.

Of course the armies must be fed and the government must get it from the people largely. The able-bodied men are gone and there are few tillers of the soil. The money has depreciated in value while the prices have quadrupled. From mal-nutrition rather than from actual starvation many have succumbed to fever, malaria, typhus, typhoid and smallpox, and perhaps a little cholera in Jerusalem.

The fruit has not been abundant during the past season and the army has required a great deal. The locusts have not been a scourge since 1915, but a few passed over this spring.

The spiritual and moral conditions of the people is more to be deplored than their economic condition, bad as that is. It is said that wickedness has increased 100 per cent. each year since the war was declared. It is almost impossible for a young man to pass through the streets of Jerusalem without encountering temptation. One of the highest officials of the Greek Church at length committed suicide when the magnitude of his sins overwhelmed him. Many of the priests have been forced to shave and enter the army. Many churches are completely abandoned; people have stopped going. However, there are bright spots of loyalty and faith, and many a Christian has been strengthened and exhibits courage and trust against the blackness of despair and despondency. One old serving woman in Jerusalem who was preparing to go with her entire family to the east of Jordan where food is a little cheaper, was heard to say: "Let us pray that we may not lose our faith." And many have become a strength to those about them for "Perfect love casteth out fear" and "His grace is sufficient."

When the break in diplomatic relations with America came the leaders of the American colony went to Dimal Pasha and asked him if he would provide a building and let them conduct a hospital in Jerusalem. They were cordially received and appreciated and given the Grand New Hotel. They fitted it up comfortably and are furnishing nurses and food for the patients. They went about to the buildings of departing Americans and secured beds, bedding and other supplies to use in the conduct of this hospital. The colony people have distributed large sums sent through the Christian Herald and other sources. They have employed many women and girls at making lace, thereby allowing them a livelihood. It is said that they will have very much lace to export when commerce once more is open. One of our teachers, Wadeah Metri, has been employed by them at times since our work was interrupted.

In spite of many unfriendly acts from the Turks the German orphanage conducted by Pastor Schneller has continued with nearly a hundred boys and girls under its care. Money has come hard and living has been difficult, but Pastor Schneller's sweet spirit and indomitable courage and faith has kept the institution open and helpful to many.

Money is being drained out of the country and little comes in. There is no coal to run the trains, so the government demanded one of every ten trees from the people. Two subsequent calls took each time a tenth of the remaining ones. Will any be left the poor people? And then no olives nor figs.

With industrial and commercial activities at a standstill and all materials and equipment consumed, it seems that our work will be at first reconstructive and with the great number of homeless children, orphanage work will be the great need, but before all this there is great need of relief and we are hoping and praying that a channel for funds may be opened into Palestine. W. W. Peet, formerly of Constantinople, as Treasurer of the American Board interests, now of Switzerland, is working hard on this problem also.

The non-Mohammedan men taken into the army (and they are calling all above seventeen) are not sent to the fighting line. If they hold diplomas from institutions of learning they are used as officers' attendants or secretaries. If without diplomas they are employed in making roads and digging ditches. Those who can read music are put into a military band.

The Turkish government has established an orphanage, where already five or six hundred children have been gathered in one of the convents in Jerusalem. They are being taught by teachers of the Christian faith since there are no others capable.

We who are living in comfortable, luxurious America have a great responsibility as children of the Heavenly King to look to the welfare of others of His children who are in need. They have no powerful and friendly ally, as a nation. They are dependent upon their Christian brethren to help them in this time of necessity. Put yourselves in their places. "Whatever ye would that men should do to you do ye even so to them."

Especially pray for those who are left in that land that they may be faithful and trusting, courageous and helpful in His strength. We who are strong must do our utmost to help in every way we can.

In closing, we would again commend to our friends the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief as the best agency through which to meet the fearful need of the Near East. As fast as the country is opened they are entering with efficient agencies for distribution.

The prayer life is the happy life.

THE NEW RÉGIME IN RUSSIA.

One of the workers of the War Victims' Committee in Russia writing previously to the present troubles in Petrograd, says:

"As regards my work here, I am firmly convinced that the value of it lies not in the primary things at all, not in the relief to suffering (which phrase is in people's minds and mouths), but in the experience we are gaining of seeing a people, simple in habit and 'stupid to the point of sanctity' in mind, growing to a self-realization owing to the greatest event in the history of the world, greater far than the war, the bloodless revolution.

"Cobden said that the existence of America was in a way a check on the reactionary influences in Europe; people could not be outrageously oppressed if there was a chance to go to a free country; the degree of oppression could only be as strong as the love of country and the natural inertia of the people, else they would now emigrate. On somewhat similar lines one agrees that, as the door of Liberalism is always open now that America has for the last century been a free country, so the door of oppression is closing with the fall of the power of the Tsar in Russia; no monarchy, no Government can tyrannize with safety now because the great moral support has been withdrawn, Russia is democratic. The handful of men now ruling Russia—by influence, not by force—have created a new standard of political living, have given life to every Liberal in Europe, and are successful.

"In the meantime, in the villages, the outlook is very calm. Without vodka there is no incentive to be unreasonable; everything is reasonable; at times a man thinks he will take the law into his own hands, and occasionally does so, but no less than the squires and farmers did in England fifty years ago. A few fools think there is no law, but they do little or no damage. A riot here or there is usually the result of a discovered cellar or a broken wine shop. Do you realize that of the hundred millions in Russia, there are fewer drunk to-day than there are in London? Russia is a dry State. We have revolutions so slowly in England, they are debated so many centuries beforehand, that the Englishman is inclined to get out of reckoning; but I believe this revolution has been less riot making in the middle of the war than a General Election would have been at home. It is not the result of rigid self-control—that is foreign to the Russian temperament—it is the result of a peaceable disposition (capable of being roused more to excitement than violence), to an infinite capacity for letting things take their own course, to abysmal ignorance, and to the wonderful lead given by the heads of the new Government and army.

"In the last few years in England, Liberalism has been dying a slow death, due to the fact that it had so nearly worked out its programme and had ceased to receive new ideas. Now that stagnation is swept up in the great clear stream of Liberalism that has its fountain head in the great people in Petrograd. Not a Liberal in Europe can be unmoved. We are all young again; if not, we cease to exist in the new world of political reality. There may be counter revolutions and revolts, but that is of no great moment; the few founders and builders of Christianity all died by violence, but a new, vigorous truth was born. The founders of this new political faith are too numerous and have too many friends; they came in the right generation and at the right time, and they and their work will live on. The opening up of America and the opening out of Russia are the two biggest events in the history of modern Europe; we have enough to do now to last for generations."

It is not wisdom, nor knowledge, nor learning which fits a man for God's service, but a contrite heart, a pure mind, a humble spirit, a lively faith, and a devout charity.

"The burden that cannot be borne is borne by the Spirit of God."

CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS AT CAMP MEADE, MARYLAND.

[The following undated letter was received on the 28th ult.—Eds.]
DEAR FRIENDS:—

After several very long days of uncertainty, feeling altogether out of harmony with all about me, and absolutely unable to stop the machine, I've been transferred to quarters with the other C. O.'s. Evidently mere possession of No. 174 counts for nothing, we are to be worked into the military machine unless we object. This I did on the evening of arrival, stating my position to the Captain in charge of barracks, to which I'd been assigned. He said it meant going to 23rd Engineers and being put at hard labor with pick and shovel, and advised that I stay with him. To another C. O., an ethical culture man in same barracks, he practically offered the company clerkship. But I asked him to report me for 23rd Engineers. On First-day I refused to be measured for uniform and on Third-day when drilling commenced I fell out of line, telling the Lieutenant that I could not drill. Shortly thereafter I was brought over to a barracks of the 23rd Engineers, via their Colonel's office. He asked what my church membership was; what I thought about the German bombing of London and sinking of ships; whether I was born in this country and if it was worth serving; whether I'd a mother, how about the other fellows in camp who were having to fight for us. My answers were such as to make him remark that I must have been mixed up with some Germans, which I denied. Finally he gave me up for hopeless.

No one understands our position, of course. It was very good to get in with the other C. O.'s. Two Friends from Fifteenth and Race, a Socialist, an Ethical Culturalist, a "Church of God" man, four or five Dunkards and about fifteen Mennonites make up the crowd. Most of us unite on a platform of no work under War or Navy Departments, nor in munition making, i. e., no participation in war and we're going to stand by it. To date we've been well treated. We do not leave barracks, 'tis true, without a soldier, but when we are on hikes we stop at P. O. store and Y. M. C. A. There are two hikes daily through the dust, wending our way over stumps and logs or through old strawberry patches, dodging trenches and squads of men drilling to the drill-master's sharp "one, two, three, four." We wash clothes, read, talk and write all the rest of the day. Last evening the Mennonite men started a song service in the twilight, which had a splendid tonic effect. They are very devout and some of them splendid fellows.

Joshua L. Baily, Jr., is here. We look daily, almost hourly, for new arrivals. If this should be of any use to others, will thee pass the information on?

Sincerely thine,

HAROLD M. LANE.

CARE 23RD ENGINEERS, Barracks DIS, Camp Meade, Maryland.

NEWS ITEMS.

As we go to press it is reported that all Friends who sailed for France in connection with relief work have safely landed.

The number of men arrested for refusing military service to Eighth Month 17th was 4,191. Of these, 2,639 have been court-martialed once, 793 twice, 289 three times and 15 four times. One thousand nine hundred and twenty have accepted work under the Home Office.—The Friend (London).

The Notes and Queries documents from Poole Monthly Meeting in 1789 relative to the first Aekworth scholars.—Barton and Ann Gates, indicate that these children were not actually members of the Society of Friends; their father had been a Friend, but had entered the army and had married out.—The Friend (London).

The following item of news from the American Friend in regard to Alaska will surprise some Friends:

There are four organized Monthly Meetings on the field: Kotzebue,

Selwick, Nootak and Noorvik, with work maintained at Shaugnak, Buckland and Kivalina. The largest meeting is at Noorvik with a membership of 311.

REPORT OF TREASURER OF THE AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE.

Amount reported Ninth Month 13, 1917	$167,924.29
Amounts contributed by various associations or meetings (three weeks)	16,143.34
Amounts contributed by thirty-two individuals (three weeks)	3,450.82
	$187,518.45

CHARLES F. JENKINS, 1917, Treasurer.

The following item is from The Friend (London):—

We understand that typhus fever is raging in Syria and that medicines are unobtainable. We reported the death at Brumana, from typhus fever, of the eldest son of the late Theophilus Waldmeier, believed to be due to the lack of medicines. Dr. Boshara Mannasseh was, at the same time and place, reported seriously ill of the same complaint; no further news of him is yet to hand.

GEORGE L. JONES, Principal of Westtown School, reports a very pleasant opening, with a fine spirit.

Boys, Old	54	Girls, Old	67
New	30	New	35
	84		102
Total 186

THE JOHN WOOLMAN MEMORIAL ASSOCIATION.—The Annual Meeting will be held at 99 Branch Street, Mount Holly, N. J., Tenth Month 13th, at 3 P. M., to elect officers, adopt a constitution, and consider whether the Association owns any social service to our new neighbors at Camp Dix. We are greatly in need of funds.

Commissioner Hoover has discouraged "afternoon tea" as an institution, and our patronage has fallen off; although we have had more visitors, we have had fewer paying guests. Mount Holly has a serious problem socially in the presence of the camp at Wrightstown. If in any way our little house can aid in the work done there by the Y. M. C. A., as a rest house or for committee-rooms, we should like to place ourselves at its disposal. In order to do so, adequate heating facilities and a small expenditure for other conveniences as well, will be required. The Association has no endowment, and must depend on interested friends for support.

Very truly your friend,

AMELIA M. GUMMERE, President.

PICTURES OF THE MEETING-HOUSES BUILT AT FOURTH AND WEST STREETS, WILMINGTON, DEL.—The Committee in charge of the One Hundredth Anniversary of the building of the meeting-house at Fourth and West Streets, Wilmington, Del., still have a large quantity of the photographs and post cards, such as were sold at the meeting, held on the 22nd ult. These can be obtained at any time by sending orders with remittances to Wm. Eves, Jr., 2302 Monroe Street, Wilmington, Del.

Sets of post cards showing the following at 10 cents a set, 3 sets for 25 cents, or individual cards at 3 cents each, 2 for 5 cents.

1. First Meeting-house, Built 1738.
2. Second Meeting-house, Built 1748.
3. Present Meeting-house, Completed 1817.
4. Present Meeting-house, Interior.

Photographs, 8x10, of the interior and the exterior of the present meeting-house, mounted, 50 cents each; unmounted, 45 cents each. Add 1 cent for each set of post cards and 5 cents for each order of photographs (any number) for packing and mailing.

WM. EVES, 3RD,

On behalf of the Joint Committee of the Wilmington Monthly Meetings.

JOHN FREDERICK HANSON.—[The following is gleaned from a memorial read at the late session of Oregon Yearly Meeting. Many Friends will remember J. F. H. as an acceptable visitor at Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, some three years ago.—Eds.]

John Frederick Hanson, born Eighth Month 8, 1841, was a native of Stavanger, Norway. His early education was received in the public schools of his native country, which were under the control of the established church. In the year 1856, with his parents, he came to America, and settled in the State of Iowa, where the privations and hardships incident to pioneer life were experienced.

In the year 1868, the church recognized his gift and call, and recorded him a minister of the Gospel, in which capacity he rendered efficient service for one-half of a century.

The reforms of his day had a warm place in his heart. The temperance cause owes much to his untiring and courageous zeal. The organization of this work in Denmark was largely due to his effort.

In addition to his faithful services in America, his adopted country, he made five journeys to his native land, where he found an open door and responsive auditors to his messages.

After reaching home from his last visit, he was able but little active service. For more than twelve years, his residence was in Portland, Oregon, where after a long illness he peacefully passed away, Third Month 30, 1917.

CANADA YEARLY MEETING has been celebrating its fiftieth anniversary. One of the features was the reading of letters from those who attended the first session. The following is a portion of the letter from Alma G. Dole, written from Suffolk, Eng. It is taken from The Canadian Friend.

"But what shall I say of the First-day morning meeting? Filled to overflowing from doors to galleries it was a sight never to be forgotten, but what most impressed me was the ministers' gallery. I could not see the men's gallery very well, but had a clear view of the women's side. It simply fascinated me and my eyes went along each row of seats and then slowly back and forth again and again, and I sat spellbound. The plain Quaker bonnets shading the sweet peaceful faces, the grey and dove-colored dresses with the spotless muslin fronts, the white silk shawls, made a picture modern times cannot produce, it lives in the memory never to be effaced. Yet I was not held by the sweetness of the Quaker dress so much as by the faces under the plain bonnets, so calm, so restful that my girlish heart longed to know which was the most beautiful.

"Not a sound was heard within the building, for the spirit of silent worship had settled over the people and the sweet faces grew sweeter with every tick of the clock. Long and earnestly I looked, but it was hard to decide, for even the plainest seemed, like Moses on the Mount, to have caught the glory of God while they reverently waited and worshipped in the sanctuary.

"First one face and then another appealed to me, and again and again I had almost decided, but always my eyes came to my mother's face and with a queer little lump in my throat (I've got it now as I write) I decided mother was the sweetest and most beautiful woman in the gallery that First-day morning, Sixth Month, 1867."

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.—It is said the college garden at Vassar, tilled by twelve students, has supplied enough food-stuffs to carry the 1100 students, the faculty and livestock over until another year's harvest. In the yield are 4000 bushels of potatoes, six acres of white beans, four acres of soy beans, four greenhouses of lettuce, 600 bushels of tomatoes, eight acres of sweet corn, for drying; four acres of asparagus, ten acres of field corn and a quantity of carrots, egg-plant, turnips and other garden truck.

Official announcement has been made that duly qualified women registered at Radcliffe College will be admitted to the Harvard Medical School this year. The requirements for admission will be the same as for men. The Council of Radcliffe College will confer the degree of doctor of medicine on women candidates who perform the required work, after they have been recommended by the faculty of medicine of Harvard University.

After 106 years as an institution for men only, the College of Physicians and Surgeons, the Medical Department of Columbia University, has decided to admit women on an equal standing with men, it was announced. This departure is made possible by a gift of $50,000 from George W. Breckinridge, of San Antonio, Tex.

Further enlargement of the Department of Religious Education of Boston University is announced. Two new professors and four instructors have been added to the faculty. One of the professors is Edward P. St. John, formerly of Hartford School of Religious Pedagogy and a leader in the Congregational Church, who will receive a hearty welcome by a multitude of friends in Greater Boston. His books—"Child Nature and Child Nurture" and "Stories and Story Telling"—are widely studied and his mature experience in the classroom and on the lecture platform have won a large and influential following.

TUNESASSA NOTES.—[The following is part of a minute adopted at a meeting of the Indian Committee, held Ninth Month 18, 1917.—EBS.]

Harvest was late and the grain somewhat damaged by wet weather, but the hay crop was good. An addition to the horse barn has doubled its capacity, the lower part being for vehicles, and the upper floor for hay and grain. A new hog house, 30 by 50 feet, and 12 feet high, is now in use, has the floor and side walls part way up being of concrete. The old wagon shed has been straightened and re-roofed, and new roofs have also been placed on the workshop, tool house and chicken house. A number of much needed improvements in the building have been made. Included in these, or nearly finished, are a second bath-room for the use of the family, other needed plumbing additions in the boys' play-room, lockers for the boys, and boxed seats with hinged lids, around the walls of both the boys' and girls' sitting-rooms. The tenant house was removed about 1,000 feet, to a point north of and nearly opposite the barn, and running water has been introduced by connecting with the pipes supplying the latter.

The new cottage is now being erected on the former site of the tenant house, and it is likely that it will be well enclosed in the course of the next few weeks.

During the summer a number of Friends have spent some days at the Institution, several of whom were Committee members. The Superintendent mentions the material assistance rendered by them, both indoors and out, as well as the satisfaction received from their company. The report concludes with the statement, that the most cheering feature of the year's work as they look back upon it, is a letter from one of last summer's graduates, in which she expresses gratitude for what the School has done for her, and says, "I long for the quiet little meetings we used to have on First and Fifth-days."

Sympathy and encouragement for our Superintendent and Matron were expressed in the Committee, it being felt that their labors the past summer had been unusually arduous, owing to the repairs and building that have been going on.

W. C. C.

On the morning of the twelfth of Eighth Month, 1917, Samuel W. Jones and John Way attended Buckingham First-day School and Meeting, where their company and service were very acceptable—a large number having assembled. The necessity and benefit of waiting reverently upon the Source of all Light and Life for guidance in all the affairs of life, spiritual and temporal, were plainly and earnestly brought to view in the injunction "Be still and know that I am God," and all were encouraged to keep close to the feet of Him who was lifted up that all men might be drawn unto Him. A petition to the Throne of Grace was offered on behalf of the varied conditions that all might be brought to the true place of waiting, and each one enabled to perform his allotted mission of service.

A meeting had been appointed in the afternoon at Carversville, where an interesting and interested company met in quiet waiting, to whom a clear and convincing explanation of the views of the Society of Friends on true spiritual worship was given early in the meeting. A message of loving entreaty and encouragement in every good word and work was left with them and the necessity pressed closely home of an early consecration of all to the Master's service. The Father of all sure mercies was entreated to take and keep the earnest wrestling souls under the shadow of His wing that not one might be missing in the final day of account.

The smallness of the beginning of the Kingdom of Heaven in the heart was exemplified in the parable of the grain of mustard seed and its gradual growth and encouragement given to a faithful obedience to the little manifestations of duty.

Nathaniel B. Jones and Walter L. Moore had joined the company at this meeting and their presence and Gospel labors were very acceptable. The ministers of both of the congregations of the village were present, and one of them acknowledged the felt presence of the Minister of the Sanctuary and expressed unity with the messages brought to them.

The day being a very pleasant one, very many who had expected to attend this meeting were prevented by visitors—yet this disappointment has not been without good fruitage with not a few, and wishes expressed that similar opportunities may be yet afforded them. The loving prayerful service of this occasion may, under the Master's blessing, yield a fruitful harvest in His own time and way.

E. T.

DOYLESTOWN, Pa.

NOTICES.

THE CORPORATION OF HAVERFORD COLLEGE.—The Annual Meeting will be held in the Committee-room of Arch Street Meeting-house, Philadelphia, on Third-day, Tenth Month 9, 1917, at 3 o'clock p. m.

J. STODDELL STOKES, Secretary.

MERCHANTVILLE MEETING.—Interested Friends are asked to bear in mind that the next meeting at Merchantville is to be held on the 7th inst., at 3 P. M.

FRIENDS' SELECT SCHOOL.—The School opened for the current year on Second-day, Ninth Month 24th. Those desiring to enter pupils should confer with the Principal.

WALTER W. HAVILAND,
Principal.

SIXTEENTH AND CHERRY STREETS, Philadelphia.

WESTERN DISTRICT MONTHLY MEETING.—After Tenth Month 1st, mid-week meetings will be at "Twelfth Street," in accordance with the winter schedule, on Fourth-days at 12 o'clock, noon, with the exception of Monthly Meeting days, when they will be held at 5 P. M.

The attendance of Friends generally is cordially invited at these noon-day meetings, and especially of those engaged in business in the vicinity.

WILLIAM S. YARNALL.

WESTTOWN BOARDING SCHOOL.—The stage will meet at Westtown Station trains leaving Broad Street (Penna. R. R.), Phila., at 6.30, 8.21 A. M., 2.41 and 4.30 P. M.; other trains will be met on request. Stage fare twenty-five cents each way. To reach the School by telegraph, address West Chester, Bell Telephone, 1016.

E. DEAN STANTON,
Business Manager.

THE CLOTHING DEPARTMENT of the American Friends' Service Committee is now prepared to supply patterns of foreign garments to any individuals or Monthly Meetings that wish to do relief sewing. Our patterns have been made according to directions received from English Friends by the Home Pattern Co., of New York. They represent the most accurate form of instructions for making foreign garments which we have been able to obtain. They may be had from Anne G. Walton, 304 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

WESTTOWN BOARDING SCHOOL has on hand a considerable number of old books, not now in use, which may possibly be acceptable to some of our former pupils or to other Friends. Barclay's Catechism and "Views of Christian Doctrine" may be had for the asking if the persons desiring any of them will pay postage or express charges. There are also several copies of Clarkson's "Portraiture of Quakerism," which we are willing to dispose of at one dollar each. The books above named have been replaced by others for class use at Westtown. Address George L. Jones, Principal.

MEETINGS from Tenth Month 4th to 20th:—

Philadelphia Monthly Meeting, Western District, Twelfth below Market Street, Fourth-day, Tenth Month 17th, at 5 P. M. Business session 7 P. M.

Haverford, Fifth-day, Tenth Month 18th, at 7.30 P. M.

DIED.—On the seventh of Ninth Month, ANNA JANE BELL, wife of Henry T. Bell, of Waterford, Ireland.

—, at his home in Germantown, Pa., on Fifth-day, the twentieth of Ninth Month, 1917, ANTHONY M. KIMBER, aged ninety-three years.

WILLIAM H. PILE'S SONS, PRINTERS,
422 Walnut Street, Phila., Pa.

FOUNDED 1865.

THE PROVIDENT LIFE & TRUST CO.

OF PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Insures Lives Acts as Executor, Etc.
Accounts Solicited Deposit by Mail
Travelers' Cheques Monthly Statements by Mail

WRITE FOR LEAFLET.

Fourth and Chestnut Streets, Phila.

H. F. BRUNER

S. D. HALL

H. F. BRUNER & Co.

COAL

OFFICE AND YARD

16 N. TWENTY-FIRST STREET
PHILADELPHIA

TELEPHONES: L 6521 241
R 661 661

The Only Grand Prize

(Highest Award) given to Dictionaries at the Panama-
Pacific Exposition was granted to

WEBSTER'S NEW INTERNATIONAL

For Superiority of Educational Merit.

This new creation answers with final authority all kinds of puzzling questions such as "How is Pyrethrum pronounced?" "Where is Flindersia?" "What is continuarious conjugate?" "What is a hoisette?" "What is whife coal?" and thousands of others.

More than 400,000 Vocabulary Terms. 30,000 Geographical Subjects. 12,000 Biographical Entries. Over 6000 Illustrations. 2700 Pages. The only dictionary with the divided page—a stroke of genius.

REGULAR AND INDIA-PAPER
EDITIONS.
Write for specimen pages, illustrations, etc.
Free, a set of Pocket Maps if you name this paper.
G. & C.
MERRIAM CO.,
Springfield, Mass.

Letchworth Cottage

Spring Lake Beach, N. J.

Open for the Season 1917

A. C. & S. H. Letchworth

ALFRED C. HAINES
Building Glass and Paints
56 N. Front St., Philadelphia

PUBLIC STENOGRAPHER
GEORGE B. COCK, Liberty Building

Established 1886. Experience 39 years; Medical 13

POCONO MANOR INN

OPEN ALL YEAR

Situated in the beautiful Pocono Mountains in northeastern Pennsylvania is most attractive the year 'round.

Golf, Tennis, Bowling, Driving, Motoring, Swimming and Boating are but few of the recreations found at this popular resort.

J. W. HURLEY, Mgr., Pocono Manor, Pa.
(Pocono Summit Station, D., L. & W. K. R.)

WOOLMAN SCHOOL

A FRIENDS' SCHOOL FOR SOCIAL
AND RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.

COURSES OF STUDY, FALL TERM, 1917.

History of New Testament Times; Old Testament Literature; Literature and Principles of Friends, given by Elbert Russell; The Life of Paul, J. Henry Cadbury; Methods of Social Betterment, J. Byron Deacon; First-day School Methods, Annie Hillborn.

Intensive work in conversational French will be provided for students wishing to prepare for reconstruction work in France.

Fall Term begins Tenth Month 10.

For admission apply to

ELBERT RUSSELL, Director,
Woolman School, Swarthmore, Pa.

RESIDENCE: 254 S. 44th St. BELL 'PHONE: Baring 2084X

WILLIAM OAKES

Plumbing and Heating Contractor

ALSO LEAD BURNING

260 SOUTH TENTH STREET

PHILADELPHIA

BELL 'PHONE: Filbert 2660.

GLASLYN-CHATHAM

PARK PLACE

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

A Family House of Established Reputation.
Open Throughout the Year.

NATHAN L. JONES.

WALL PAPERS—All Grades

WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER

Custom of Friends Specially Satisfied

FRANK C. BUEHL

Successor to S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON

902 SPRING GARDEN ST. PHILADELPHIA

Opposite Spring Garden Station, Phila. & Reading R.R.

ESTABLISHED 1849. BELL 'PHONE.

WILLIAM S. YARNALL MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

128 SOUTH SIXTEENTH STREET

PHILADELPHIA

WANTED—SALESMAN TO CANVAS RETAIL store and institution trade for staple food product. "C." Care "THE FRIEND."

WANTED—A YOUNG WOMAN FRIEND TO ASSIST in the Business Manager's Office at Westtown School. Apply to
E. DEAN STANTON,
Westtown, Pa.

THE HOLMES PRESS

Printers

J. L. Engle, Pres.

1336-40 CHERRY ST. PHILA.

PHILADELPHIA FRIENDS' PARTY TO FIVE YEARS' MEETING.

Arrangements have been made for Friends desiring to travel together to Richmond, as follows:

Train (No. 7), via Pennsylvania Railroad, leaves Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, Second-day, Tenth Month 15, 1917, at 8:05 P. M.

Special fare tickets and Pullman reservations with the party may be secured by application in advance from J. Passmore Elkinton, 121 South Third Street, Phila.
Regular fare, one way $16.33
Special fare with party 14.70
Pullman reservation, lower berth 4.00
" " upper " 3.20

It is expected that Baltimore Friends' car will join the train at Harrisburg. If Friends will inform Albert H. Votaw, at Richmond, as to their plans for returning, it may be possible to secure special fares on the return trip. Kindly pass this information on to any interested Friends.

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

522 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE

PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

GIRARD TRUST CO.

BROAD AND CHESTNUT STS.

CAPITAL
AND
SURPLUS } $10,000,000

Acts as Executor, Trustee, Guardian, Administrator, Assignee and Receiver. Safes to Rent in Burglar-proof Vaults. Interest Allowed on Deposits. :: ::

E. B. MORRIS
PRESIDENT

FRIENDS OR OTHERS WHO ARE THINKING of attending Cornell the coming year will find comfortable rooms in a Friends' family, at reasonable prices, at 238 Linden Avenue, Ithaca, N. Y. Five minutes' walk from Campus. EDWARD WOOD.

WANTED—A CARETAKER FOR THE INDIAN boys at Friends' School, Tuscarora, N. Y.—Foster-ably one who can teach manual training. Applications for the position may be made to
W. B. BRADSHAW, Supt., TUSCARORA, N. Y.
HENRY HALL, Friends' Hospital, Frankford, Phila.
ANNA WALTON, Moylan, Pa.

The drive pictured above is in our own factory. It is a hard one, not only because of the four pulley arrangement, but because of a fluctuating load.

Our Gilt Edge Belting stands up well to this work. It saves stops and trouble, and keeps the machine busy.

J. E. RHODS & SONS
 PHILADELPHIA: 12 N. THIRD ST.
 NEW YORK: 102 BEEKMAN ST.
 CHICAGO: 322 W. RANDOLPH ST.
 BALTIMORE: 37 S CHARLES ST.
 FACTORY AND TANNERY: WILMINGTON, DEL.

W. B. WEAVER
UNDERTAKER and EMBALMER
 550-552 N. 5TH ST., PHILA., PA.
*Special Attention Given to Funerals
 In and Out of the City. Also Chapel
 Accommodations for Funerals.*
 BELL 'PHONE : ESTABLISHED 1880

Philadelphia's
 Representative Store

ELKINS, MORRIS & CO.
BANKERS
 REPRESENTATIVES
 WM. E. CADBURY
 PAUL W. BROWN
 JAMES P. MAGILL
 LAND TITLE BUILDING
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.

RAILROAD AND PUBLIC UTILITY BONDS
 FOR
CONSERVATIVE INVESTMENT.
FULL PARTICULARS ON REQUEST.

We recommend the use of
RAG FEATHERWEIGHT
 (Antique Finish)
 As the paper for high-grade Books and other Publications

JOSEPH G. FOGG
FUNERAL DIRECTOR and EMBALMER
 S. W. COR. 16TH and RACE STREETS
Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals
 BELL 'PHONE SPRUCE 1848

Assoc. M. AM. Soc. C. E. Bell 'Phone—Lombard 3412
EDWIN M. EVANS
CONTRACTOR & BUILDER
 My jobbing department is well equipped,
 prompt and efficient
 321 S. LAWRENCE ST. :: PHILA.

HARRY S. LEE
 313 WALNUT STREET
PAINTER and GRAINER
ANTIQUE and OFFICE FURNITURE RESTORED
JOBGING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO
 ESTIMATES

SEE WALKER & KEPLER
 FOR
Good Electrical Work
 531 CHESNUT ST. -- PHILA.

W. J. MacWatters

Let Me
 Help You

In Selecting Your
RUGS AND CARPETS

Domestic -- -- Oriental

ALL WEAVES

The Home of Bundhart Wilton
 "DURABLE AS IRON"

HARDWICK & MAGEE CO.
 1220 Market Street

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE MATERIAL THAT WE SELL

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
 MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

R. C. Ballinger Ernest R. Yarnall John A. Stratton
 TELEPHONES
 Bell—Fiberl 26-15 - - Keystone—Race 637
R. C. BALLINGER & CO.
 CONTRACTORS and BUILDERS
 218 N. Thirteenth St. Philadelphia.

THE following timely books, mostly of those recommended by the Social Order Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, are for sale at Friends' Book Store, No. 304 Arch Street, Philadelphia.

- "The Church and The Hour," Vina D. Scudder, . . . $1.00
- "The Social Problem," . . . 1.25
- "The Abolition of Poverty," J. H. Hollander, . . . 75
- "Christianizing the Social Order," Walter Rauschenbusch, . . . 1.50
- "The Day of Our Visitation," William Littleboy, . . . 50
- "A Word of Remembrance and Caution to the Rich," John Woolman, . . . 05

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use
PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BREAD
 made from the entire wheat grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator. Sold by all good grocers in Philadelphia.

Write for particulars to
PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.
 10th & Susquehanna Ave., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 91.

FIFTH-DAY, TENTH MONTH 11, 1917.

No. 15.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price $2.00 a year in Advance.

Publisher, DAVIS H. FORSTYHE.

Editors
(J. HENRY BARTLETT,
DAVIS H. FORSTYHE,
MARY WARD.

Make remittances payable to

THE FRIEND,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

THE FIVE YEARS' MEETING.

This is a difficult subject to treat helpfully in the pages of THE FRIEND. Most of us who read the paper have a wholly outside view of the Five Years' Meeting. We are not inclined in its organization. A good deal of our feeling toward it is of protest. We regard it as an effort to make general, in Quakerism, views and practices that we may consider un-Quakerly. These difficulties should not deter us, however, if there is a called-for service, in presenting some aspects of the subject for consideration. To avoid controversy by escaping from the field is wholly different from avoiding it by sympathy and understanding. It is at least sympathy and understanding that we shall seek. Nor may it be out of order to remind ourselves that we are face to face in the world crisis with times and situations of difficulty. We may very particularly need training in this exercise of our feelings and judgment on matters that we have heretofore avoided. A great publicist of the day has pointed out that democracy is without doubt the most difficult form of government. The whole world apparently is entering the field of democracy, and unless at every hand these difficulties thus referred to are met valiantly, one can read nothing but disaster in the signs of the times. This thought has a positive reflex in the religious world. We have perhaps too long gone round our difficulties. Indeed, we have often magnified them and multiplied them by not facing them fairly.

Probably few human characteristics are more general than that of thinking in terms of the past. Religious Councils have been common since the early stages of organized Christianity. They have mostly originated in efforts to suppress heresy or to fix creeds and the observances of sacraments so as to make it at least easy to detect heresies. This matter of creeds and confessions of faith has descended upon Councils as their special prerogative. We should not wish to belittle either, but certainly a great deal of religious energy has been wasted in such efforts. Human language is too imperfect an instrument to set forth the infinite truth of God so that it can be applied to measure all the varieties of religious experience and faith. Happily there is One that judgeth, and He is above all earthly tribunals. It is possible to have such a relationship with Him that will make our creed or our confession of faith a personal matter. In this sense faith is living and has a service in self-discovery and self-discipline. We would not deprecate of course all general statements of principle and profession, but to us this has plainly been the field of tremendous waste in religious energy by Councils and Synods. Another has phrased this by saying, "The old controversies have become unmeaning, and Christians have found it possible to be gathered, in spite of differences of outlook, into a higher unity." The tragic feature of the situation thus noted is the fact that all the while, from the very earliest centuries onward, great matters of religious interest and activity have been submerged in these discussions of refinements of doctrine and personal differences of expression in ritual and sacrament. Now we have come upon a time when the whole world of political and social life seems to be thrilled with the possibilities of co-operation. It is as though some magic pass key had been found to a new civilization, and politician and scientist combine in reproaching the religious world with its failure, long ago to have disclosed co-operation in practice as the real method of Christianity. Christians can respond that they have been working on federation and unity for more than a decade past. But how this work has been hampered is indicated by the fact that one who is sometimes called "the leading layman of our time" has insisted that no basis of unity is possible apart from agreement upon some outward observance of "the sacrament of holy communion." Is this other than what we have called "thinking in terms of the past?"

But what connection, if any, have these considerations with the Five Years' Meeting? Speaking as outsiders we need to proceed with much reserve. We have followed the discussions that preceded and finally resulted in organizing the Five Years' Meeting. The printed proceedings of its several sessions have had our closest attention. In addition, the re-actions of the sessions upon a far-away meeting like London have interested us greatly.

Out of this somewhat limited evidence some conclusions have been formed which we venture to believe may not do the motive and purpose of the organization an injustice.

First, then, it seems clear that the dominating motive in setting up an additional meeting in the Quaker system was this very co-operation which is now so widely proclaimed to contain the solution of the world tangle. Diversity of practice, and of profession, too, had become so great in the Society of Friends twenty-five years ago as to threaten in places extinction of the very fundamentals that gave it birth. The effect of this upon conservatism (a word in better repute now than then) was to force it apart and too much out of wholesome relationship with the ardent enthusiasms of new life. If in this diverse mass some common ground of co-operative

66
OVERS
COOP
FR
P. O. 2

effort were possible, a tendency toward greater (restored) unity might be established. This we have no question was the foundation motive of the Five Years' Meeting. Once established and free for action, the meeting has not failed to illustrate the tendencies common to such organizations. It has essayed to fix beliefs and prescribe methods of expression. But the emphasis of its work, in direction at least, has been to determine fields of activity in which diverse points of view could unite for a common approved purpose. The chief of these fields has been connected naturally with educational work. The schools and colleges of the Society, and the schools, colleges and hospitals of home and foreign mission fields, have made the widest appeal. The most interesting point for us to note is that this appeal has not been confined to the membership of the Five Years' Meeting. A great deal of co-operation in money and in personal response has come from the ranks of the so-called conservatives. A college president from the far west told us within the year that Philadelphia was counted as one of their best assets. Were all such co-operation disclosed we have the opinion that it would prove to be a very considerable body of testimony.

"Co-operative association" then is believed by some to contain the solution of "industrial reconstruction," as well as of the "new international society."

We have noted in this article that many believe the religious world at fault that it has not long ago been more successful in teaching this co-operation. May it not be possible yet for the Society of Friends to take a lead in this matter? It can not be done by an organization that even seems to require a compromise of principle. The Quaker heredity is too strong for that. But it is unbelievable that real Christians have not common ground enough—have not genius of leadership enough—have not faith in the great Leader enough to make a present organization serve this high purpose or to let the pressure of these unprecedented times bring into existence a new organization that will be something larger and in a sense more free. This is evidently in the minds of Friends. Thus we quote Horace G. Alexander in The Friend (London): "Is it Utopian to look forward to a time, perhaps to be initiated by the post-war, pan-Quaker Peace Conference, when International Quaker Conferences will supersede the American Five Years' Meeting, and agree to conventions likely to promote the good of the whole community, for ratification by each separate Yearly Meeting, binding upon and between all who ratify?" The high purpose of Christianity, our Lord's aspiration that we all shall be one—let us hope it shall not be frustrated through us.

J. H. B.

SOME OBSERVATIONS OF OHIO YEARLY MEETING.

SAMUEL W. JONES.

I have been asked to give "some observations of Ohio Yearly Meeting from the standpoint of a visitor." Having felt a concern for several months to visit Ohio Yearly Meeting, I left home in company with my wife on the morning of Ninth Month 5th, reaching Pittsburgh that night, where we remained until 1.30 p. m. the following day, when we left for Barnesville, O., arriving at the School about 8 p. m.

We were greeted very cordially by Edmund S. and Eliza Smith, who are serving the Friends' School very acceptably as Superintendent and Matron, and although we were strangers among them, the true hospitality of Ohio Friends was soon felt and we were at once taken into their fold and made to feel very much at home.

A number of Friends from a distance arrived Fifth-day evening and others the following morning in time to attend the meeting of Ministers and Elders, which convened Sixth-day morning. The reading of the minutes from subordinate meetings; the answering of the Queries addressed to that meeting; and the reading of minutes of visiting Ministers comprised most of the business that came before the two sittings.

The Yearly Meeting at large convened on Seventh-day, and was held by adjournments until Fifth-day, inclusive. Two meetings for worship were held on First and Fourth-days.

The daily average attendance at the business sessions was about five hundred persons. The attendance on First-day was about twice that number in the meeting-house, and a large company gathered on the grounds for the purpose of meeting one another socially; this has been the custom for several years of those not Friends, many coming from neighborhoods several miles distant.

Carl Patterson served the men's meeting as Clerk and W. Millfin Hall as Assistant Clerk.

During the consideration of the state of Society, constructive and loving counsel was given.

The minutes of the Meeting for Sufferings were interesting, showing care and labor on behalf of those involved in the draft in the present war.

The educational report, also the report of the Committee having charge of the Boarding School near Barnesville, were interesting and encouraging.

The Yearly Meeting adopted a uniform plan for keeping a record of its membership.

Concerns of Jesse Edgerton and James Henderson to visit women's meeting were united with and they were both much favored in giving counsel and loving sympathy to those of all ages present.

The epistles received from the Yearly Meetings with which Ohio corresponds and the answers prepared to be sent in reply were of such a loving and constructive nature as to be very helpful and encouraging for those to whom they are sent, thus binding together the members of these Yearly Meetings more closely than they would otherwise be.

The deliberate manner in which the business was carefully and weightily conducted, and the opportunity afforded for right expression were very impressive and helpful to the best life of the meeting.

David Holloway's concern to have the Yearly Meeting close in joint session was granted and it was felt to be an edifying occasion.

The life at Barnesville School, where the greater part of the Yearly Meeting spent the week, was indeed a pleasing feature, both in a social and religious way; the building is a very comfortable one, and with the adjacent dormitories made accommodations for about two hundred and fifty persons. Some of the members of the Meeting for Sufferings met the young men of draft age one evening at the School, and the exchange of thought and opinions brought all very closely together with an increased desire to maintain the peace principles for which our Society has always stood.

The Aid Association held its annual meeting at the School; one of the objects of the Association is to provide means for those in need of assistance to obtain an education to fit them for the duties of life.

Alice Mendenhall read a very helpful paper before the Educational Association, entitled "George Fox and Other Friends in the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries," which is to be printed and we hope to have a few copies soon.

The evening collections held at the School were very helpful; many Friends from the neighborhood gathering into the quiet with those at the School for Bible reading; the exercises which followed were lively and a beautiful spirit of harmony and good feeling was felt toward all.

We much enjoyed visiting Friends' families in the neighborhood and thus becoming acquainted with them. We stopped at Wm. Hoyle's, Cambridge, Fifth-day night on our way to Damascus and Salem, where we visited several families, attending Salem Meeting on First-day, where we found a large and interesting gathering.

The attendance of young Friends at this and other meetings was very helpful and encouraging, as the weight of the present time rests heavily upon young Friends everywhere who are the testimony-bearers of the Society of Friends of to-day. The future of our Society depends very much upon them.

We left Salem First-day evening, arriving home the following morning, feeling thankful for the blessings and opportunities experienced during our twelve days' visit.

LANSDOWNE, Pa., Ninth Month 30, 1917.

A SABBATH DAY'S JOURNEY.

WALTER L. MOORE.

First, let it be understood that the day in question was the first of the week, and that the journey, not being conditioned by Hebrew usage, was lengthened out from the stipulated one mile (c. f. Dr. A. Clark) to nearly one hundred.

A telephone call, the recognition of a familiar voice, an invitation, its acceptance, breakfast, preparation, a few miles by trolley, all within less than an hour, and the writer was seated in the car of a friend, making with the wife and son of the latter a little company of four about to enter upon a day expectant of Christian service, with the prospect of joining a relative from a neighboring State likewise so engaged; our common interest centering at Carversville, Bucks County, Pa.

With an assurance born of inventive genius applied to modern methods of travel, which involves good roads and the perfected automobile car, long distances may be covered and timed with comforting security. The Friends' meeting on Mercer Street, Trenton, N. J., convenes at 10.30 o'clock. Within the quiet precincts of the trim kept premises the appointed hour found us seated ready to share with the little company accustomed to assemble there their "fellowship of silence," or, if privileged, receive the spoken word. The situation of this little group of Friends in worship is most strongly emphasized, for, during the while, there come to them from places of similar purpose in the immediate neighborhood, the sound of tolling bells and the mingled strains of vocal and instrumental music. And yet, we thought, how sweetly fell the Spirit's blessing on that little group.

"He asks no taper lights, on high surrounding
The priestly altar and the saintly grave,
No dolorous chant nor organ music sounding,
Nor incense clouding up the twilight nave.

"For he whom Jesus loved hath truly spoken:
The holier worship which he deigns to bless
Restores the lost, and binds the spirit broken,
And feeds the widow and the fatherless."

Declining the kindly invitation to dine with Friends belonging to the meeting, we hastened on our way out of the city, the while coursing along the Delaware, until, reaching the vicinity of Washington's Crossing, we sought and had granted the privilege of partaking of our basket luncheon on a shady knoll in full view of an artistically arranged pond, whereon, as for our delectation, moved two swan with all the grace of their species. The great river nearby seemed to flow with scarce a ripple; the sheen of its surface as it lay beneath the noon-day sun seeming somehow to enforce the dreamy stillness till broken by the shrill whistle of a train approaching the great high viaduct across the stream. Verdure bathed in the warm light of summer, the drowsy whir of the cicada in neighboring trees, conspired to invite peace to the soul awakened into responsiveness. How different, we thought, the scene all hereabouts near a century and a half ago, that winter night, when, Washington having stealthily crossed the river above, led his troops to surprise the English at Trenton. Those who grant that under certain conditions war is justifiable, are drawn into sympathy with the soul of the great commander, and readily admire a military achievement, with which the painter's brush has so familiarized us.

Still following the course of the river, with its varied and ever-pleasing scenery, we reach the long, picturesque, old covered bridge at Stockton, where we pass to the Pennsylvania side. For some miles the road, for summer traveling at least, is most inviting. The trees arching overhead, the almost continuous bank of rhododendron skirting our left, while to the right, gleaming through the trees and underwood the quiet waters of the Pennsylvania Canal, are features that adhere in memory. At length reaching Lambertville—a name suggestive of a great industry that for more than a generation held sway in this formerly well-wooded country—we strike back from the river until, nestled among its hills, the little village of Carversville comes into view. Clean, quiet, unobtrusive, as if made ready for Sabbath rest, the presence of our car seemed almost to violate its sanctity. But, upon recalling the object of our visit, we make bold to enter its streets, pause for direction most courteously given, and proceed to one of the two places of worship in the town. Here in true Christian spirit is shared whatever there may be of religious attachment among the professors of the vicinity. Though no Friends' meeting is known to have ever existed here, the neighborhood is adjacent to that of Buckingham, once so thickly populated with Friends; and their influence, social and residential, has filtered across to Carversville.

The two houses of worship mentioned are, respectively, the Presbyterian and the Christian; to the latter our course was bent, and within its cool and spacious walls that sultry afternoon soon gathered those who for the day were lending themselves to the Quaker way of worship. Some two months previous, through the concern of a minister of Concord Quarter, aided by a Friend living in the neighborhood, a meeting was held here, which elicited so much interest and warmth of welcome that an invitation for its repetition met with a cordial response in the heart of the minister above and drew to his side a few other Friends kindred in their desire to be helpful in the project. When the congregation was assembled and one beheld the look of quiet, earnest expectancy on many countenances, it was felt that all questioning must soon quickly run into the one common mould of reverential waiting and Christian fellowship. A few well-chosen words at the beginning expressed clearly Friends' views as to worship, after which a good meeting followed, wherein a lively testimony was born to the goodness of God and his fatherly care over all who seek to do His will as made known to the individual conscience. When a sense of this really enters the soul of the believer barriers raised by sect are removed and God's love flows in free course from soul to soul. The heart is thereby tendered and the worshipper brought to exclaim with the Psalmist:

"What shall I render unto the Lord for all His benefits towards me? I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord."

The close of the meeting was marked with kindly and appreciative greeting, intermingled with what is so often a common experience upon such occasions, and that is the surprising number of those present who by descent or otherwise claimed connection with Friends.

The Christians, it may be worth while to mention, are a religious denomination founded in 1810 from three-fold sources—Baptist, Methodist and Presbyterian. The members discard creeds and adhere closely to Bible terminology in stating their views.

"No thought of ours is insignificant if we cradle it in the thought of God."

THE only helpless people in the world are the lazy.—
GENERAL ARMSTRONG.

POCONO NOTES.

JOSEPH ELKINTON.

When the sun set in the mountains,
And the twilight held its sway,
All the hills were full of glory,
But the lower vales were grey.

In the valley are the meadows,
And a sleepy little town;
On the mountains goats are grazing,
As the glorious sun goes down.

In the valley soft-lipped Quakers,
Clothed in peaceful garb of grey—
On the mountain bearded herdsmen—
Watched the softly-closing day.

All is peace and all is quiet
As the shepherds homeward turn,
While the herds upon the mountains
For their native hill-tops yearn.

In the valleys all was shadow—
While the hill-tops all were bright;
Now both mountain-top and valley
Are hid alike by deepening night.

—ETHEL C. S. THOMPSON, in Book News.

These lines were particularly descriptive of the scenery from Big Pocono to Moylan, as we motored via the Wind Gap, Nazareth, Bethlehem, Norristown and the Montgomery Pike, this evening—a perfect day with autumnal tints all the way.

Two auto rides across the mountains to Elklands and Catawissa, earlier in the summer, had impressed us profoundly with the beauty of our State, through its eastern and central sections, just as the trip to Pittsburgh revealed the picturesque of its western mountains; yet we always came back to Pocono Lake with a real relish. Surely the moonlight on its waters this week had unwonted charms.

The appointed meeting held at Catawissa on the 10th inst., in the log meeting-house, built in 1775-76, by two or three Friends, was attended by four of our campers—and fifty others—to great satisfaction. None the less was this true of the gathering at Elklands a month before and also in the Methodist chapel at Blakeslee on Pocono Plateau.

A very happy and reciprocal feeling has resulted from our intercourse with these mountain people during the past decade, especially through our neighborhood Improvement Association.

Twenty-five hundred dollars have been raised between the Pocono Lake and The Manor to support a district nurse during the next year, with other improvements. A new library has been opened in the village at the head of our Lake, and prizes offered for the best-kept gardens—some of which were pronounced most creditable by an expert from State College. Wm. B. Bell was selected to be President of the Native Association, as he has taken a very active interest in supplying suitable entertainment, and valuable suggestions about improving the milk supply.

Charles F. Jenkins introduced Ayrshire cows at Buck Hill because they are so much better adapted to mountain-pastures than other breeds. He is deeply interested to bring about the same improvement on the mountain as has been effected in the vicinity of Buck Hill, and for this purpose he proposes to hold a conference of farmers the coming month in the neighborhood of Pocono Lake. These prospective changes give hope to those who have labored for the welfare of those who have contributed so much to our comfort from summer to summer. The writer can only wish that our late beloved friend, George Abbott, might have lived to see put into effect what he so much desired to promote.

There has been a beautiful spirit of co-operation and appreciation prevailing among the campers at the Lake. This has found expression at our Town Meetings—never more interesting or better attended—as also in the social gatherings on Fourth-day afternoon, when the War Victims' Relief work drew us together. On these latter occasions we always had an address, with discussion following it. John T. Emlen presented the Negro employment problem very clearly at the last of these gatherings.

The migration of large numbers of Negroes from the South has greatly embarrassed their best friends both North and South and the outlook is not promising, as we know from the recent race riots.

On one fair evening we had a boat pageant, which did great credit to the ingenuity of the group. Dr. Andrew Woods, of the Canton Christian College, was given the prize for representing the Chinese nation by a sampan, in which all of his family were included, most effectively, but with the utmost simplicity of equipment. The effect of being torpedoes at sea was vividly portrayed—with the extra fun of another plunge into the Lake. The Tunkhannock Camp boys also had a winning float representing a Christmas scene of "Ye Olden Time in the Fatherland." These annual exhibits display much initiative, which was also in evidence one evening at our Superintendent's house, when the children of the Preserve personified in costume and character the various nations of the world engaged in the war.

But nothing has left a deeper impression upon old and young than the peaceful solemnity of our First-day meetings in the grove. "Hace faith in God," during all these testing times, has been the keynote of these assemblies—in which many not accustomed to our form of worship have from time to time expressed heart-felt thanksgiving.

The fringed gentian gave us all the greatest pleasure in its exquisite beauty and also the suggestion of how an all-wise and gracious Heavenly Father has reserved His best flowers and fruits for those whose locks have been silvered o'er by the frosts of life.

While we were looking at these lovely flowers, and earnestly wishing that they might unfold before our eyes, lo! the miracle was wrought—and it is not so or, at least, would it not be so sometimes—if we looked more sympathetically and hopefully at the best in our every heart?

"Thou waitest late and com'st alone
When woods are bare and birds are flown,
And frosts and shortening days portend
The aged year is near his end.
Then doth thy sweet and quiet eye
Look through its fringes to the sky,
Blue—blue—as if that sky let fall
A flower from its cerulean wall.
I would that thus, when I shall see
The hour of death draw near to me,
Hope, blossoming within my heart,
May look to heaven as I depart."

NINTH MONTH 27, 1917.

A TRIBUTE.

MARY WARD.

The passing away of Anna Jane Bell, late of Waterford, Ireland, removes from the delightful and hospitable home at "Summerville" a presence that had long been a spring of helpfulness and fine companionship. Her social gifts were uncommon; her spirit was generous, her hospitality cordial. A woman of solid understanding and discernment, as well as of strong individuality, she also represented in large measure the beauty of the "Quaker" life and spirit; and many of those who are acquainted with this in such wise as to value it truly, and who saw it exemplified in the character of this dear Friend, will feel that her memory is precious, and that they can join, in spirit, with those who have the nearest right to "arise up and call her blessed."

There are Friends in America, younger as well as older, whose hearts will be touched by the tidings of this removal, and whose sympathy will go out to the bereaved family and friends in Ireland. It is hoped that a larger memorial will sometime be available for the columns of THE FRIEND.

IN THAT DARK HOUR.

In that dark hour before the dawn
When all the earth is hushed in sleep,
And stars and moon alike are hid,
And silence hovers black and deep.

Between the unseen and the seen
The veil is thinnest, I perceive,
And we the pattern half discern
That in their house the sisters weave!

And then it is that many souls,
Forsaking all things seen and known,
Draw back the curtain of their fears,
And face the future vague alone!

And I, myself, have sometimes felt
Upon my soul the mystic spell
Of those who, wakeful in the night,
Partake of things invisible.

—ARTHUR GOODENOUGH, in the Springfield Republican.

JULIANNA PEELE HARVEY.

[The following account is taken from a testimonial prepared by the nieces and nephews of J. P. H.—Eds.]

She was the youngest of the six children of John and Elizabeth Peele, Rich Square, N. C., and was born Tenth Month 20, 1850.

To each of us Aunt Julianna had not only been a fond and loving aunt, but a precious "Mother in Israel" as well. She was so kind and gentle, so unselfish and appreciative, and these beautiful attributes of her character remained intact so long as she retained sufficient strength to command her will in regard to them. Several times after it was thought she had passed the ability to speak, fell from her lips, after some little attention received, her gentle "Thank thee." Equally on similar occasions, came the tender and affectionate stroke of her hand on one's arm or cheek.

Her very walk among us has been soul-inspiring and an incentive to greater efforts to reach forth for the possessions of the Higher Life.

True, she was not without her faults, like her fellow-creatures, but the trend of her life unmistakably portrayed living desires to walk daily with her Saviour, of whom she seemed to have visions on her death bed, for many times during her last days her face would lose all traces of pain and light up with the sweetest of smiles—so innocent and childlike—as she, pointing upward, appeared to behold beautiful things above her.

Her educational advantages were meager as compared with those of to-day, due to the scarcity of schools and the breaking out of the Civil War during her early girlhood. She was of an exceptionally bright intellect and the possessor of a mind thirsting for knowledge, and was ever on the alert to satisfy this thirst; hence, she acquired an extraordinary store of knowledge, to which she was constantly adding through life.

She kept well abreast of the current events of the day and could converse fluently upon almost any subject of domestic or national interest.

About twenty years of her early and middle life were spent in the school-room, where she worked ardently, endeavoring to help her pupils develop into well-rounded characters—physically, mentally and morally; many of whom rise up to-day and call her blessed!

After having passed the meridian of life Aunt Julianna was united in marriage to Cyrus W. Harvey, Wichita, Kansas, a valuable minister of the Society of Friends, an ex-editor and publisher of a periodical known as the Western Friend, and an author of several books and booklets.

This union, though very brief, was to each of them a most happy period; about two years of which they spent in the city of Wichita, Kansas, where she made many interesting friends.

The remaining three years of this married life were mostly spent at Rich Square, N. C., in a cozy little cottage near the Friends' meeting-house, where she was a life-long and consistent member and for several years a beloved minister.

Religiously speaking, Aunt Julianna, although being very staunch in her convictions as to the pointings of the finger of Truth for herself individually, beautifully exercised the spirit of charity towards those whose paths led in different directions from her own, often expressing herself as believing the Temple of God—the true Church—is wholly made up of consecrated followers; and that this Temple must necessarily be composed of various parts or materials, so to speak, therefore there were required laborers of various kinds—each and all working together in a most beautiful harmony without even the "sound of a hammer."

Aunt Julianna had traveled considerably, having been in about half of the States of the Union. In the spring of 1910, she accompanied her husband to his daughter's at Malvern, Pa., where, after three weeks' time, he was removed by death. His illness and death was a heavy stroke upon her, from the effects of which she never fully rallied. After a few months she began to decline in an alarming manner and finally resorted to a hospital in Richmond, Va., for treatment.

The nature of her disease was exceedingly trying. It was indeed most pathetic and lovely to behold the sweet patience which she repeatedly manifested when being unable to make herself understood because of her inability to articulate and command the proper words. At one such time she remarked to her nurse—"To me it is a sweet thought, I can talk to Jesus without the use of words."

The funeral was held at the home after the order of Friends. There were presented many beautiful testimonies relative to the useful life of this worthy woman to a large concourse of sorrowing relatives and friends.

As some of us stood gazing upon her face for the last time as she lay in her casket which was bathed in the glorious sunlight of that beautiful departing day—so typical of her beautiful life—we could but feel that those golden sunbeams were ordered from far beyond our mortal vision as a heavenly benediction upon a life well spent!

FRENCH SOLDIER PACIFISTS.—Leah Cadbury, who worked as a nurse in France last summer with the American Ambulance Unit, spoke before the Women's Peace Party in West Chester.

"Are there any pacifists in France?" asked one of those present.

"Oh, yes," was the prompt reply. "All soldiers are pacifists. At least all that I talked with. They are absolutely opposed to war and consider it the most terrible experience that any one can go through.

"One wounded soldier told me that he devoutly hoped his children might never know what war is."

"How can they fight if that is true?" was asked.

"They fight," said L. Cadbury, "because their devotion to 'La Belle France' is so great that they feel it their duty to put aside any personal feeling in the matter and devote themselves and all that they have to the effort to save her from her enemies."—West Chester Local News.

For "THE FRIEND."

CHARACTERISTICS OF THE IDEAL BOY OR GIRL.

(In a recent article in THE FRIEND reference was made to a formulation of traits to be arrived at in character building, by William McAndrew, Associate Superintendent of New York City Schools. This summary is contained in a remarkable little book entitled "The Public and Its School.")

"WHAT A BROOKLYN GRADUATE SHOULD BE."

"The purpose which led the builders of America to establish for the first time in history a plan of free and universal education was expressly to rear a race of citizens superior to existing humanity. No expounder of the function of public education in the early days of the republic or at the present time has been content with spelling, writing, and figuring as the result of school training. The culture of better men and women has been the theoretical aim of American schools from the beginning.

"Would it be possible to define profitably for the Brooklyn schools the personal product to deliver which they are maintained? Such a formulation has engaged the attention of managers of school systems to an increasing degree in the past twenty-five years.

"Starting with the specific attainments the lack of which has been emphatically asserted and extensively advertised throughout the country, I added to the list other virtues given me by employers as needful. I submitted the list to ministers, lawyers, and various citizens, and to thirty Brooklyn principals, asking for corrections and additions. Striking out the repetitions and the different forms of expressing the same idea, I present herewith a Brooklyn boy or girl made up of these characteristics, as he or she, certificate in hand, theoretically walks down the front steps of the perfect school on graduation day:

"Health, agility, cleanliness, good posture.

Good personal appearance, attention to dress, erect figure. Audible voice, clear and correct speech.

Self-control, ability to look you in the eye, courage, absence of the impediment of shyness.

Deftness of hand, including legible, shapely penmanship, power of simple graphic representation, ability to use common tools and simple machines.

Punctuality; economy of time and material.

Ability and tendency to think, to compare ideas, and to reach consistent conclusions.

Tendency to reflect before important action.

Mental economy. Ability to study a problem intelligently and to summarize essentials in a reasonable time, intelligent application.

Orderliness. Tendency to plan.

Ability to comprehend and to reproduce in writing or by word of mouth printed or oral discourse of reasonable difficulty.

Accuracy and reasonable speed in such computations as the ordinary citizen is called upon to make and in such quantitative work with tools and material as is pertinent to the tool and machine work of the school.

Appreciation of the value of money, of the advantage of intelligent spending, and of thrift.

An efficient knowledge of the usual sources of information. Skill in using them.

Conception of the intellectual inheritance of mankind. Possession of a reasonable fund of information resulting from the conventional studies, including especially the duties of a citizen.

Knowledge of the main avenues of self-support, the nature of occupations, wages, and opportunities.

Taste, refinement, appreciation of beauty in literature, music, art and nature.

Humor, capacity for healthy enjoyment, cheerfulness.

Desire and ability to cooperate with others. Willingness to act under direction; loyalty.

Intelligent patriotism.

Industry, perseverance, grip, grit, self-reliance.

Originality, independence, initiative, management, enthusiasm.

Honesty, decency, clean-mindedness.

Good manners, courtesy, consideration for others, helpfulness, readiness to volunteer, unselfishness.

Advantageous use of leisure.

All-round capacity, harmonious development.

Consciousness of a personal ideal.

Ambition to make the most of opportunities individually and as a contributor to the common good."

"There is nothing new in the list. All this has been said by writers on education before. Clergymen cover, year after year, virtues which they hope to propagate. The picture of my ideal graduate, however, was made in Brooklyn. My proposition is that I use it as more than a fanciful sketch—as an architect's plan or a specification for the one hundred and seventy-five contractors engaged in supervising character-building in the borough. That is, I should like to see practice officially diverted from concentration on a course of study to conscious cultivation of human habits, traits and tendencies."

Parents as well as teachers may be interested to figure on these specifications.

FAITH.

"Whosoever shall say unto this mountain, 'Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea,' and shall not doubt in his heart, but shall believe that those things which he saith shall come to pass; he shall have whatsoever he saith." Among the Japanese Christians we find many who can teach us lessons in the exercise of that faith that can remove mountains of difficulties. Fukazawa San, a young teacher in a little town in Ibaraki province, is a good example of this.

Last winter she went down to Shimodate, where the Friends' Mission has a worker located, for the special meeting that is usually held that time of year. Before going to the house she went and got her brother and his family and persuaded them all to go along with her to enjoy the evening. It was the first time she had been able to get her brother to a meeting at the evangelist's house, and all were rejoiced to see him there.

After some exercises by the children of the First-day School there was a social time for all and then a religious meeting. A visiting minister had a message of salvation and others gave words of testimony. Finally, Fukazawa San made her way from the back of the room to the front, and facing the meeting with her smiling face lit up by the lamp she gave a message of the Father's love and her great joy in following Him. She was especially happy that her brother and his family had been brought to the meeting, and it was her prayer that before next winter, not only this brother, but her old mother and two other brothers would be led to Christ. Her face shone and her joy seemed full, as she looked forward to that happy time, which was sure to come, because her Heavenly Father knew what she had need of before she asked Him.

Six long months passed and still Fukazawa San was the only Christian in her native town. But she did not lose hope, but prayed and trusted and especially looked forward to some special tent meetings that were to be held in Shimodate, arranging that all her family should be there if possible at that time. The time for the meetings came and word came that Fukazawa San was sick and could not come. Two days of the meetings were over before she got there and up to that time her Shimodate brother, even, had not gone to a meeting. But faith was not wanting.

It was the night of the sixth day of the meetings—a day filled with prayer, fasting, meetings and victory. The evening meetings were finished and a few enquirers remained in the tent. But the rest had better be told in the words of one who was there, Elizabeth Binford: "About ten o'clock Fukazawa San came to me and said, 'I believe to-day is the day of Grace for my family.' I knew she had been fasting and praying for five days the week before. 'Can you come to my brother's house? My mother is there, my oldest brother is up from Tokio and my youngest brother is expected. Can you come? "Yes," I asked Tozuka San if he would go. "Yes," and then I listened to Akiyama San talking to a man and soon detected that he was an idle questioner, so I asked him also. (These were two workers at the meetings.) We three went—Fukazawa San had preceded us. She met us at the door and said, "My oldest brother has been drinking and is ashamed to be caught thus." He was not drunk, however, and was pleasant and began talking about the first Bible in their home, twenty-five years ago, and how he had bought it and was the first to read it. "But now I am a sinner and my little sister is the Christian." The old mother went to meet the 10.40 train on which the other son came. I thought he was not pleased with the midnight innovation, as he sat sulkily in the shadow. Akiyama San opened the Bible and gave a message from the jailer who said, "What must I do to be saved?" He gave the message in thirty minutes and Tozuka San poured out his soul in prayer.

"Have you got the scene?—an old mother of seventy-six, her three sons and the wife of one and Fukazawa San, the youngest of all. Then the daughter began to pray—and such praying—such sacrifice in prayer—"God, I am ready to die for my family." Before she finished the youngest brother, who had been in the shadow, got up and came into our midst. I thought he was angry. He sat down and then opened his mouth and his heart and I never heard such a first prayer in my life—I repent now—this day, just at midnight, I start to follow Jesus Christ. Why did my sister fast and pray? Why has she become weak, O God?—for me it is. I begin now to follow." Then followed the mother's prayer—at seventy-six, mind you—then the Shimodate brother and his wife, and then the oldest brother. Then the whole company—men included, and Japanese men who would not weep at the funeral of a loved one and who loathe emotion—in the presence of God as sinners all wept—we all wept and prayed and praised!

"Tozuka San kept saying all the way home, 'Ron yori shoko.' (Fact is better than argument.) Much is said now-a-days against anybody becoming a Christian except through his head getting educated up to it! That evening can not be explained except as we believe in God and believe in Jesus Christ and the Holy Spirit. They are not mature Christians, but they are Christians and they know it and count themselves such. The letters Fukazawa San has from her brothers show it and the prayer I have had with the mother shows it, and Fukazawa San prays daily for her brothers' growth in the Christian life."

If we had the simple faith of Fukazawa San how much more we would be able to do at home and abroad in bringing our brothers to Him. "Lord, increase our faith."

YOUNGER FRIENDS.

EXTRACTS FROM THE GOLDEN CLEW (CHAPTER XI)—LIGHTS IN THE WORLD.—Ralph and Dorothy joined mother and Marion; and, after a few minutes' lively discussion of ice and skaters, Marion told Dorothy of their conversation.

"Ah, I wish I had known what was going on," she said, "I would have come off sooner."

"Then I am glad thou did not," said her aunt; "this exercise and fun are good for you children."

"There was one thing I wanted to refer to again. It was about Cousin Harry, and his position in the army, Marion. Thou seemed a little uncertain whether it was right or not to be a soldier."

"No wonder," said Ralph. "I think it is a very mixed question."

"I don't think so," said his mother, "if you have got beyond believing that might is right. The difficulty is that we do not apply to nations the same standards and arguments we apply to individuals. We do not for a moment allow that men should settle their quarrels by a stand-up fight. Then why should nations do it? It seems to me to be a relic of barbarism that we are not able to shake off."

"It is all very well to call it wrong," said Ralph, "but what are you to do? If enemies come, we must be prepared to defend ourselves. I think volunteers are noble. They are ready to give their lives for their country." And Ralph gave his skates an emphatic twist in the air.

"Harry is not a volunteer," answered Marion.

"Well," said Ralph, "I confess I have not so much to say for the army. As far as I can see we make great mistakes sometimes when we go abroad to fight."

"Yes," said Dorothy, "those horrible opium wars, for example, that we heard about the other day."

"Of course," replied mother, "it is the standing army which is the most terrible evil. The cost to the country is tremendous, nearly thirty-five millions a year. And our troubles are as nothing to the oppression on the Continent, where every man is compelled to bear arms during some of the most important years of his life, and where the chief thought of the government seems to be the preparation for another and far more devastating war than we have ever yet seen. Think what it means, dear children! Nations, professing to be Christian, deliberately preparing for each other's massacre, and planning a state of ruin and calamity such as we cannot dream of."

"What can we do?" asked Ralph.

"Why, try and bring about the same conditions between nations that we have already agreed on as best and right among individuals. When people cannot agree, they bring their dispute before a magistrate, or a judge and jury; and these hear the dispute, and settle it in the best way they can; and then the matter is generally ended. We want to see the same plan carried out between nations. It would be called a Court of Arbitration, and at least eighty quarrels have already been thus settled, so preventing many wars. It is the only plan that we have at present, that is at all consistent with our enlightenment and civilization. It often grieves me, and I feel it is a disgrace to us Christians, indeed many professed unbelievers are beginning to see the iniquity of war, and to wish that it could be done away with. Christians, many of them, still uphold and defend it."

"They see the difficulties," said Ralph.

"There are always difficulties, tremendous difficulties, when we try to set a wrong thing right. But that is no reason for defending it. And they increase the difficulties ten-fold, by countenancing the raising of armies, whether volunteer or others, thinking that by so doing they may stave off the dreaded war. As long as we have soldiers of any kind, we show we depend upon force as the remedy for evil and injustice, and on the strength of man for our protection against our enemies; whereas, as we profess to believe, God is our Refuge and Strength, force is no remedy. The strongest nation is not necessarily right. More often than not it is just the other way."

"But we have policemen," said Ralph, "and they keep order by force."

"The little handful of policemen we have in our large, wicked cities would be of no use at all if they had not the magistrates and judges behind them with all the punishments they can give, and do give. It is they, really, who keep order, not by force, but by law. The policemen are, as it were, the outward arm of the law—its instrument. The army is a law unto itself; it outrages every law in heaven and earth with impunity, and there is no stopping it. It crushes, or is crushed, and that is all the result. There is no appeal from it. The victor dictates, the defeated submit. Besides, my dear children," mother went on, "you do not need that I should tell you that to every one who has offered himself to the service of God and to his fellow-men, war should be impossible. He loves and honors all men as his brothers under the common Fatherhood of God. He acknowledges the Prince of Peace as his Captain, who has told him to love his enemies. How can he fight?"

"Of course, if we look at it in that light," said Ralph, "I know we must give in."

"Well, my dear boy, I do look at it in that light, and I hope thou wilt, too, some day."

Ralph did not answer for a moment, and then he said: "There have been some splendid men who thought it was right, anyhow."

"Yes, indeed," said mother, "though that is no reason why it should be right for us. And we must admire the grand courage that some of them have shown in their terrible duties. But they do not appeal to me in the same way that many other heroes do, who have shown their self-sacrifice in another way—the martyrs, for instance, and men who have endured like Columbus, and fought for the good like Lloyd Garrison and Thomas Clarkson."

"Yes," said Marion, "I have been thinking, while we have been talking, that there is something false about war. It pretends to be brave, but it is a cowardly thing for men to crush those who are weaker than themselves, and yet that is what England is doing constantly; but it is mean, for men to deceive and cheat and steal, and think it is all right if they are only fighting. It pretends to save life, but it does just the opposite. It seems to me it is only fit for savages, and those who have never been taught the truth."

"It's nice to think one can be of some good, without going out as a missionary," said Ralph.

"I hope to live to see thousands more go out to work abroad," said mother, "and then the work will be only just begun. But there is plenty left to do at home. Laws to be mended, books to be written, the weak and down-trodden to be reached and raised, men and women to be taught, and, above all, good and upright lives to be lived, full of love and power. Thousands of men and women around us are miserable, restless and hopeless. Like wanderers who have lost their way, they are groping and longing for something they cannot find. They turn from religion, because they see much that is selfish, unreal and untrue in many of those who profess to be religious people; they think it is made up of forms and words. They do not know that at the heart of true religion lies the cure for their misery; they do not understand that their souls are starving for the love of God. Do you not long to help them? Do you long to witness to them that 'God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son,' to save them? But you can only show them what you have seen first yourselves, and the things that are real to you will become real to them. Now, children, think of it, and make up your minds, for though life seems long to you, it is really very short, when we think how much there is to be done, and the only way to make these lives of yours so full of strength and joy now, is to yield them up to the Lord, who died for you, wholly and entirely to do just what He wants you to do, always, forever."

The family passed in to the warm, bright hall; all without is cheerless, but the lamps gleam out like lights "in a naughty world." Thus may their lives and ours, dear children, shine to the glory of our Heavenly Father, and for the blessing of our brothers and sisters on the earth, who are looking to us to help them.—G. CROSFIELD.

NOTE.—These articles were written before the present war.

AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE.

FRIENDS AND THE WAR LOAN.

We urge strongly that those Friends who are conscientiously unable to subscribe to the "Liberty Loan," because the money is to be used solely for the purpose of war, should contribute to our Committee amounts as nearly commensurate as possible. Just as the majority of our young men have expressed themselves as conscientiously unable to fight with their hands, so many older Friends are conscientiously unable to fight with their money. Just as these young men are willing to give themselves in forms of constructive service, so older Friends should be as ready to support them in this work, as others are ready to support the destructive purposes of war.

Our money cannot pay dividends of four per cent., but it will pay dividends in homes restored rather than destroyed, in cheer and hope rather than in misery and despair. The donors of our fund receive no bonds which their children can inherit, but they will so justify the Society of Friends in the eyes of God and of the world that their children will receive the same rich heritage of principles that our forefathers passed on to us.

We can effectively use an unlimited amount of money since we are in touch with unlimited need. Most Friends' communities should be giving treble and quadruple the amounts reported thus far. The situation cannot be judged by the standards of normal times. There is not only an unprecedented crisis in the world which creates unprecedented obligation, but we bear a peculiar relation to that crisis. In our religious faith, we insist upon the practicality of spiritual forces which most men deem impracticable for the present. We must be ready in a sacrificial giving of our money and our labor to prove in conduct the practicality of the ideals we profess in words.

FRIENDS AND THE SELECTIVE SERVICE LAW.

The latest reports from the military camps indicate that many Friends with discharges on Form 174 have been asked to perform certain duties and have consented. Such orders are a direct violation of the instructions from Washington to the commanders of the camps, that conscientious objectors are to be segregated and not required to perform any duties. These instructions are required by the Selective Service Law, which absolutely exempts persons holding Form 174 until the President declares what forms of non-combatant service they shall be liable for. At this writing we have definite information that the President has not made such declaration.

Persons who comply with such orders may have difficulty later in being assigned to any other service in case we get a favorable ruling from Washington. The officers may say to such persons, "We are recognizing only conscientious conviction, and if you had a real conscientious objection, you would not have performed such duties in the first place."

There is also great probability that the government may judge of the principles it is willing to recognize by the action of the majority of our members.

From every standpoint it is highly important that all Friends who are taken to mobilization camps should insist upon being segregated in accordance with the instructions from Washington and should further insist consistently at all later times upon being assigned to service entirely dissociated from military control. All Friends reading this statement should see that members of their respective meetings who are affected by it should receive the information.

Arrangements should be made for one or more Friends' ministers to visit the camps where Friends are located and keep in constant touch with the men. They are in peculiar need of spiritual assistance. They have entered a path of religious conviction, and must pursue it amid associations that tend to blunt and deaden spiritual impulses. It will be to our lasting disgrace if, as a body, we now fail to minister to the needs of these men.

DRAFTED MEN WHO WERE IN TRAINING AT HAVERFORD EXEMPTED ON INDUSTRIAL GROUNDS.

All drafted men in the Reconstruction Unit, who have received the training at Haverford, have been exempted by the District Boards which have jurisdiction of their cases on so-called "industrial" grounds. In other words, this work has been recognized by three District Boards of the country as a service "necessary to the maintenance of national interest during the emergency," so as to come within that provision of the exemption clause of the Selective Service Law.

The above decision has been made with reference to the following men, whose cases have been pending before the District Board for Eastern Pennsylvania, to which they had been transferred from their home boards. These men are all expected to sail the early part of Tenth Month:

Alfred C. Vail, Chester, Pa.; E. Morris Burdsall, Port

Chester, N. Y.; Given C. Johnson, Le Grand, Iowa; Richard J. M. Hobbs, Greensboro, N. C.; Von D. Amick, Haviland, Kansas; Luther E. Warren, Wilmington, Ohio; Harold S. Laity, Chappaqua, N. Y.; Coleman Travis, Poughkeepsie N. Y.; Harold D. Marshall, Whittier, Cal.; Walter E. Smith, Eureka, N. Y.; William B. Southworth, Cambridge, Mass.; Leland K. Carter, Indianapolis, Indiana.

VINCENT D. NICHOLSON,
Executive Secretary.

NEWS ITEMS.

FRIENDS UNDER DETENTION.—(Extracts from letter received from Stephen Hobhouse, Exeter Civil Prison, Eighth Month 20th)—As for my whole life-task just now, this is how I conceive it,—in the drudgery of the needle, in the grubbing up of weeds, in the cleaning of my cell, and its equipment, at my meals and on my hard bed, in the hours of silence and solitude, in the discomfort and weariness of my ailing body,—in all this to find and to realize the Kingdom of Heaven within and without—or in other words the Christ-life,—Christ as Son of Man, or the patient suffering soul of Humanity, and as Son of God, or the Divine Spirit of the Universe. . . . But my efforts, such as they are, are wonderfully helped and illuminated by my concentration, without other distraction, upon the thoughts of Jesus and those apostles of a new life. I am not free, writing from here, to speak my mind about the war, and will only say that I am often bowed down with a sense of all the hatred, strife and misery; and am seeking ever to be, as I said at my court-martial, "one tiny channel for the waters of healing." May those who have faith in the truly spiritual universe accept as a real form of service the prayers and penitence of us prisoners!

But it is still the burden of another bondage that weighs upon me most heavily. To any one who is sensitive in mind or body, life, like ours here, under the ordinary conditions of a prison for criminals, is hard and wearisome. And yet, when I breathe the pure bright air that comes in through my little window, when I consider the cleanliness of my cell and of its humble furniture, when I feed on its peace and quiet and that of the garden outside, when I thank God for the food and clothing supplied to me—when I am tempted to complain, in spite of all these blessings, then my mind turns in contrast to those other prison houses, in the midst of which are my wife and home, to the far sadder prison houses of our modern cities; to those thousands of mean streets where millions of innocent boy and girl lives are condemned to grow up in rotten, vermin-riddled houses, in basement rooms perhaps, open to the dust and grime of the pavement, underfed and ill-clothed, in an atmosphere poisoned by vice and strong drink. We rightly call it a grievous crime to hurl death from the air, in the passion of warfare, upon our children. But shall not those of us, at any rate, who believe in the pre-eminence and survival of the soul, reckon it a still worse sin to share, as we have done in the past, in year after year of peace and prosperity, in the responsibility for social conditions (to be found in almost every town and city) in which the children who survive the heavy death rate grow up, save for some moral miracle, into men and women who are coarsened and stunted in soul, without any vision of the beauty and meaning of life?

Such are the thoughts that burn in me here, and with them the longing of a great hope. I recognize that thousands of men went into the hated work of war to succour the weak, and because they could not bear to live in comfort while millions were agonizing in the trenches. May God direct this spirit of sacrifice into another and holier form of sacrifice and warfare; and, when peace is made, may men and women come in their hundreds at least, in the same spirit of noble shame and love, and share as far as they have the strength, in the lives and burdens of these victims and bondservants of industrial strife. For a short time, with the spirit of sacrifice still glowing in us, the opportunity will be open as never before. But in a year or two, unless we fight our hardest against the old forces of selfishness, the way will close up again, and burdened with a vast load of debt, the country will sink back into ruts of even deeper inequalities of poverty and wealth. (Let those who would be warned read the history of the dismal years of repression and social distress that followed the victory over Napoleon in 1815). Whether we are in prison or in the trenches for conscience' sake, may we not now unite in preparing to dedicate the rest of our lives to the building-up of a true national brotherhood, inspired not by any half-selfish spirit to preserve for our race the dominance of the world, but simply by pure compassion and brother-love, by the need of doing justice to those myriads of innocent lives that have been caught in the toils of our mechanical civilization? If we cannot uplift them at once, we can at least make our homes side by side with theirs, and share in some part of the evil conditions, until the spirit of the nation rises to sweep them gradually away.

One of the things I feel growingly we must pray for is that God will raise up in our midst a prophet, one who, like Francis or Luther or Fox, will gather up and sound forth all that is truest in our hopes and longings, sound it to the world in trumpet tones and live it too. He may be in the agony of the trenches now, or in the despised Nazareth of some newly-founded Christian Church in China or India.

(Stephen Hobhouse is at present in solitary confinement, due to his desire to be equally loyal to Love and to Truth.)—The Friend (London).

W. RUSSELL FRAYLING'S THIRD COURT MARTIAL STATEMENT.—'This is the third time that I have been tried by court-martial,—although the technical offence in each case has been different, yet actually I have been court-martialed for the same offence. I wish the authorities responsible would be candid, and have the courage to put on the charge sheet my real offence,—that I refuse at the bidding of the State either to fight or take any part in the organization for war because I believe it to be contrary to the example and teaching of Jesus Christ.

"As a member of the Society of Friends I am only maintaining the ancient testimony of the Society, and the fact that there are many members in prison for upholding this principle goes to prove that religious freedom has disappeared from this country. I wish to quote from our Yearly Meeting Epistles of 1916 and 1915 in support of my contention:—

"In 1916: 'Our testimony as a Society is against all war and on behalf of the supremacy and liberty of conscience. This we unhesitatingly reaffirm, and, where our members are brought into difficulty or suffering through obedience to conscience, we take our stand beside them, and assure them of our loving sympathy and support.'

"In 1915: 'We claim with absolute conviction though with great humility, that only spiritual power can defend or advance the spiritual causes which matter to the world. We claim that there is a better way, and that love alone can avail to find and follow it.'

"Because I accept this position which has been held by our Society since its foundation over 260 years ago, believing that not only is it one of the fundamental principles of Quakerism, but also of Christianity, and that it goes to the root of the trouble,—because I refuse to deny this I am court-martialed, and shall receive the usual sentence of two years' hard labor. I say this purely as my defence, not by way of complaint, for I am convinced that I can in prison make a greater protest against the iniquity of war than I could if I had exemption."—The Friend (London).

A LETTER FROM FRANCE, by HOWARD W. ELKINGTON.
MISSION DE LA SOCIÉTÉ DES AMIS, CHALONS SUR MARNE,

Ninth Month 21, 1917.

My Dear Father:—

You probably are somewhat in doubt as to the work done by the Mission and more particularly by your children. My work, as I have written before, is in the agricultural department. It has been the job of this department to alleviate the difficulties of the land due to the war. This has been done by the purchase of several thrashing machines, one steam plow and several reapers, binders and such like machines for the land. These machines are then sent out to the districts surrounding Sermaize on the Marne and Upper Meuse to villages and manned by us. It is the business of the Mission to run and to keep in order all its machines and, so far as possible, to keep in repair machines of the commune or district that need attention.

The country around Sermaize is divided up into some five separate districts, having one or sometimes two men from the Mission responsible for the territory.

During the last three weeks or so we have been busy at the source (the place where the Mission is housed and where the shop is located), mending all broken parts of the thrashers which are about to go out. This has been most interesting and congenial work for me, as it requires a small amount of mechanical skill and ample opportunity for working about with various tools. For instance, yesterday, I spent part of the forenoon in soldering up a water tank, the day before in repairing step-ladders. The repairing of wood work has fallen to my special lot, so that much time goes to the use of plane, saw and chisels. Once in a while I manage to slip in something extra, such as a towel rack for sister Mary and a bread-board for the housekeeper of the establishment—upon which was inscribed the plaintive request—"Give us this day our daily bread." Unfortunately, the piece of wood from which the board was made was quite small for the huge loaves with which we are blessed. "Tis the custom of the French, as you may recall, to make large loaves much resembling a gigantic doughnut, with a hole of such size that the loaf is conveniently carried with the arm thrust through it or, by the gentler sex, with the arms upon the hips. If opportunity allows, I think that I shall make another board, upon which I shall inscribe the subtle hint: "Man cannot live by bread alone." Although this topic is only indirectly connected with agriculture you can gather at a glance the connection. As I was saying we are about to send the thrashing machines out to the various villages in order to commence the winter thrashing. It is the practice in these parts to gather the grain as at home, but instead of thrashing it at once and on a large scale, each cultivateur takes his crop to his barn where the crop is thrashed. For us this means that we are busy from now till next spring, going about from barn to barn thrashing the crop.

For this work the Mission makes no charge except the cost of gasoline, which by the way is something like $1.00 per litre, and even then only purchasable at certain government depots with certain official "Bons" or permissions. If the machine, crop and barn are insured the farmer pays this charge also. It takes about four or five men to run the thrasher. The Mission is supplying one man to run the engine and possibly another to tend to the feeding in of the grain. The commune or farmer, however, has to supply the others, paying for their services at about the rate of five francs a day. Labor, of course, is the great difficulty in the district. Consequently, considerable burden is brought upon those not accustomed to the work. One of the worst features of the war, however, is the land "en friche," that is land belonging to those who have gone off to battle and who have not returned for one cause or another. Their land is not touched by anyone at home, partly because there is not sufficient help to tend to the land owned by surviving owners and partly because any other course of action would easily lead to trouble where individual rights are so zealously guarded. The result is that weeds, thistles and tares of all kinds abound in wild profusion upon such tracts. It would not be so bad if the good ground were not contaminated. But it is practically impossible to prevent this. The Mission uses some of this ground "en friche," adjoining the property, for the raising of vegetables—working upon the supposition that a lived-in house is much better off than one which stands empty, offering a home for bats, spiders, rats, mice, etc.

You probably gleaned from the foregoing pages that sister Mary has joined us at Sernaize. She came last Fourth-day from Entremont. We, of course, are very glad to have her here. She and William are scheduled to go to the new camp being constructed near Dole, to act as steward and matron for the party of 100 that are about to arrive from Haverford College. This is really a most happy arrangement . . . there are an enormous quantity of things for which we can give thanks, N'est-ce pas? my dear father.

SCHOOL VISITING IN THE INTEREST OF SCIENTIFIC TEMPERANCE INSTRUCTION.—From the Seventh Annual Report of Friends' Temperance Association, we learn that over one hundred schools have received from one to three visits each from the specially equipped Temperance Visitors. Sixty-eight of these schools have taken up the work of writing Temperance Essays in their Seventh and Eighth Grades, resulting in the preparation of 6,280 essays. In other schools, Teachers' Meetings have been held and talks given to pupils at assemblies or in class-rooms.

The following from G. M. Trevelyan's report in The Friend (London) will be of interest:

During the month [the Seventh Month] we have carried 5,171 cases (3,926 sitting and 1,245 lying) and have covered 33,806 kilometres. The total number of cases carried to date amounts to 97,077, and the total number of kilometres run is 792,216.

In a home letter written early last month from 31 Rue Bergère, Paris, Alfred Lowry, Jr., reports himself and wife as busy with the new work recently assigned him. He says "Thanks for the encouraging words, it helps, to know that you have a certain amount of confidence. Of course there are problems of one sort and another, but by endeavoring to look at the thing from the big end and to tread lightly at times, things have really gone very well. It was a delicate matter for me to be asked to step in here where there were older men already on the job. . . . I have secured another Swiss who is located at Marseilles and who is already doing good work, I think. If I can get my passport fixed up in time I want to attend a Prisoners' Work Conference in England soon. It is to be held at Jordans, where Wm. Penn used to attend meeting and where he is buried. . . . I have been glad this year to have a chance to study the Y. M. C. A. from the inside. The Y. M. C. A. attempts to adapt the religion of Jesus Christ to the needs of the present day, whereas I believe the ideal of the Society of Friends is that present-day conditions can and should be adapted to accord with the Gospel of Christ. Perhaps there is room and need for both, especially if by the first you understand our conceptions of that religion. . . . We have just been going over the accounts for last month, and in every item but one, of our budget we have overspent. . . . Wait till heat begins to appear on our board-bills.

The Alumni Association of Westtown School will hold its annual meeting at Westtown on the 13th. In the evening David Starr Jordan is scheduled to speak on "The Outlook for World Peace."

AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE.

Mail and Packages for Members of the Reconstruction Unit in France.

We have just made an arrangement with the Post Office Department whereby letters, newspapers and parcels can be sent to our workers in France at the domestic rates of postage.

Parcel post will be sent at the eighth zone rate of twelve cents a pound, with a maximum weight limit of twenty pounds. This applies only to the ordinary parcel post; no C. O. D., insured or registered packages will be handled.

Money orders may be sent at the domestic rates.

No money or valuables can be sent by registered mail.

Mail should be addressed as follows:—

John Smith,

American Friends' Reconstruction Unit of the Red Cross, Friends' Expeditionary Forces,

France.

Care Charles Evans, Hôtel Britannique, 20 Avenue Victoria, Paris.

Packages intended for delivery before Christmas must be mailed before Eleventh Month 15th, and marked plainly, "Christmas package."

Persons desiring to send packages weighing more than twenty pounds may send them to our store-room, and we will send them by our workers as excess baggage. We shall probably be sending workers every week until the first of next year. Such packages should be addressed:

American Friends' Service Committee Store-room,
Fifteenth and Cherry Streets, Philadelphia, Pa.

Care Mary H. Whitson.

A letter should be sent to Mary Whitson, advising her of the shipment and the name of the person in France to whom it is to be delivered.

VINCENT D. NICHOLSON,
Executive Secretary.

REPORT OF THE TREASURER OF THE AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE, WEEK ENDING TENTH MONTH 8, 1917.

Amount reported last week	$187,518.45
Received from eleven individuals	$ 829.50
Received from eleven meetings	4,151.00
	4,980.50

$192,498.95

CHARLES F. JENKINS,
Treasurer.

NOTICE.

MEETINGS from Tenth Month 21st to 27th:

Muncy Monthly Meeting, at Muncy, Fourth-day, Tenth Month 21th, at 10 A. M.

Frankford, Fourth-day, Tenth Month 21th, at 7.45 P. M.

Georgetown, Fourth-day, Tenth Month 21th, at 8 P. M.

Philadelphia, Fourth and Arch Streets, Fifth-day, Tenth Month 25th, at 10.30 A. M.

Langdowne, Fifth-day, Tenth Month 25th, at 7.45 P. M.

POCONO MANOR INN

OPEN ALL YEAR

Situated in the beautiful Pocono Mountains in northeastern Pennsylvania is most attractive the year 'round.

Golf, Tennis, Bowling, Driving, Motoring, Swimming and Boating are but few of the recreations found at this popular resort.

J. W. HURLEY, Mgr., Pocono Manor, Pa.
(Pocono Summit Station, D., L. & W. R. R.)

WOOLMAN SCHOOL

A FRIENDS' SCHOOL FOR SOCIAL AND RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.

COURSES OF STUDY, FALL TERM, 1917.
History of New Testament Times; Old Testament Literature; Literature and Principles of Friends, given by Elbert Russell; The Life of Paul, J. Henry Cadbury; Methods of Social Betterment, J. Byron Deacon; First-day School Methods, Annie Hillborn.

Intensive work in conversational French will be provided for students wishing to prepare for reconstruction work in France.

Fall Term begins Tenth Month 10.

For admission apply to

ELBERT RUSSELL, Director,
Woolman School, Swarthmore, Pa.

SEE WALKER & KEPLER

FOR

Good Electrical Work

531 CHESNUT ST. -:- PHILA.

W. B. WEAVER
UNDERTAKER and EMBALMER
550-552 N. 5th St., PHILA., PA.
*Special Attention Given to Funerals
In and Out of the City. Also Chapel
Accommodations for Funerals.*
BELL 'PHONE : ESTABLISHED 1880

ELKINS, MORRIS & CO.

BANKERS

REPRESENTATIVES

WM. E. CADBURY
PAUL W. BROWN
JAMES P. MAGILL

LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

RAILROAD AND PUBLIC UTILITY BONDS

FOR

CONSERVATIVE INVESTMENT.

FULL PARTICULARS ON REQUEST.

ASSOC. M. AM. SOC. C. E. Bell 'Phone—Lombard 3432

EDWIN M. EVANS
CONTRACTOR & BUILDER
My jobbing department is well equipped,
prompt and efficient
321 S. LAWRENCE ST. :: PHILA.

JOSEPH G. FOGG
FUNERAL DIRECTOR and EMBALMER
S. W. COR. 16TH and RACE STREETS
Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals
BELL 'PHONE SPRUCE 1040

HARRY S. LEE
313 WALNUT STREET
PAINTER AND GRAINER

ANTIQUE and OFFICE FURNITURE RESTORED
JOBGING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO
ESTIMATES

W. J. MacWatters

Let Me
Help You

In Selecting Your

RUGS and CARPETS

Domestic -- -- Oriental

ALL WEAVES

The Home of Bundhar Wilton

"DURABLE AS IRON"

HARDWICK & MAGEE CO.

1220 Market Street

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE MATERIAL THAT WE SELL

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

To ADVERTISERS.—THE FRIEND is now open for selected advertisements at the following rates: One inch, 56 cents, or 4 cents a line; no insertion for less than 25 cents. Long term rates given on application.

Friends having real estate to rent or sell, also those desiring board or rooms, should find THE FRIEND an excellent medium for reaching interested parties.

Standing business cards are also solicited.

R. C. Ballinger Ernest R. Yarnall John A. Stratton
TELEPHONES
Bell—Filibert 26-15 . . . Keystone—Race 637
R. C. BALLINGER & CO.
CONTRACTORS and BUILDERS
218 N. Thirteenth St. Philadelphia.

THE following timely books, mostly of those recommended by the Social Order Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, are for sale at Friends' Book Store, No. 304 Arch Street, Philadelphia.

- "The Church and The Hour," Vina D. Scudder, . . . $1.00
- "The Social Problems," C. A. Ellwood, . . . 1.25
- "The Abolition of Poverty," J. H. Hollander, . . . 75
- "Christianizing the Social Order," Walter Rauschenbusch, . . . 1.50
- "The Day of Our Visitation," William Littleboy, . . . 50
- "A Word of Remembrance and Caution to the Rich," John Woolman, . . . 05

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use
PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BREAD
made from the entire wheat grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator. Sold by all good grocers in Philadelphia.

Write for particulars to
PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.
10th & Susquehanna Ave., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

HARVEY T. WEBER

TAILOR

207-208 HALE BLDG., 1326 CHESTNUT ST.

The custom of Friends specially solicited.

M. GATCHEL
126 N. 21st St., PHILA.
MILLINERY, PLAIN AND FANCY
Phone, Spruce 3032

Premier Duplicating Co.
Micrographing, Multigraphing, Printing, Type-writing, Addressing, Mailing, etc.
630 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

Philadelphia's
Representative Store

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 91.

FIFTH-DAY, TENTH MONTH 18, 1917.

No. 16.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price $2.00 a year in Advance.

Publisher, DAVIS H. FORSYTHE.

Editors { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
 { DAVIS H. FORSYTHE,
 { MARY WARD.

Make remittances payable to

THE FRIEND,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

THE REMNANT.

It is now above thirty years since Matthew Arnold delivered in this country a series of addresses, afterward published under the name of "Discourses in America." The first of these was entitled "Numbers; or, The Majority and the Remnant." Whoever remembers either hearing or reading that address may perhaps recall something of the impression produced by the dominant thought or "doctrine": namely, that of the power and importance of the remnant. The thesis was, in part, that majorities have generally been unsound,—are generally unsound—and that their unsoundness has been their downfall; also that there is usually a remnant, a "sound minority," which, if it be very small, may still outlive the state and impress both the present and the future for good, or if it be relatively large, may save the body from total collapse and failure, even bringing to it eventually a "profound renewal."

To accomplish this latter result in large communities or states, it is obviously necessary to "increase the size of the remnant"; but with this fact in mind, and contemplating the great and growing population of the United States (where bigness is made of so great account), Matthew Arnold exclaims, "What a remnant may be yours, surely! A remnant of how great numbers, how mighty strength, how irresistible efficacy!" Yet he hastens to say that mere multitudes will not assure a saving remnant, since there have been multitudes and states in which no sufficient remnant was found. Naturally, he cites Isaiah as well as Socrates and Plato in behalf of his claim for the value of the remnant, and he acknowledges himself more in accord with prophets and philosophers ("the saints and the sages") than with politicians. When he says, "The Eternal has attached to certain moral causes the safety or the ruin of states", he is distinctly in accord with the prophetic view; and conjoined with this is the thought that the safety of the state is maintained, or its ruin averted, by a vigilant attention to whatsoever things are true and just and pure and "amiable."

Judging by such a standard, who would affirm that majorities have been, or are yet, "consistently sound", even though an increase of virtue has unquestionably marked the progress of human history, and though also the real virtue of the people cannot always be judged by the actions of the ruling powers? "The remnant" is not constituted by minority alone, since that may be a clique, an oligarchy, a despotism; but it is the saving element, the leaven working toward a "profound renewal" of the multitude. It may sometimes be fittingly described as "an afflicted and poor people", and always "they shall take refuge in the name of Jehovah." Moreover, "the remnant of Israel shall not do iniquity nor speak lies"; and in the larger light of the Gospel day it must perfect this principle by giving attention, positively and actively, to the things that are true and just and pure and lovely. It must not centre its chief thought upon itself, for its own sake, but upon the principles for which it stands. It will then not be more concerned about its present size than about its vitality; not so much about its reputation as about its integrity and its potency for good.

It is not the purpose of this article to try to assign people to their appropriate classes, to discuss the relative merits of different groups, nor to encourage a "smug complacency" in any member of any group. The thought is rather that the progress of truth is still much and often against the current; and that now, as in the days of the prophets and the sages, those who have been given insight and vision have need of courage and constancy in the work to which they are called, and of confidence also that the Seed of the Kingdom shall ultimately possess the earth, and the remnant grow to a multitude.

M. W.

A MEETING OF "THE BRETHREN."

Folded away in a verdant valley among the steep Pennsylvania hills, near Wernersville, lies the old hamlet of Cocalico, and thither, to the meeting-house of the Church of the Brethren (Dunkards), a group of five Friends wended their way on a breezy autumn morning.

Many automobiles, as well as carriages, were drawn up behind the plain brick building, with its small-paned windows—shining clean, as all windows are in this region—its clean, bare floor and wooden benches. Men enter at one door and women at another, and sit on opposite sides of the room. The women remove their black bonnets, and reveal the white caps, shaped much like Friends have been, but with no frill, or but a narrow one, about the face. Near the raised seat, like a low gallery, where the ministers are seated, are five or six benches placed at right angles to the others, and these are occupied by the older men and women, and those whose dress is especially "plain." Only grey, brown or black dresses are seen here, and the men all wear the full beard and the straight-collared coat.

Many children are present; girls sitting with mothers, boys with fathers, and babies abound, not only tiny ones, in their mothers' arms, but lively toddlers, who vociferate their own remarks, or trot up and down the aisles. But it is wonderful to see, as the meeting progresses, how little any one is disturbed by this. The speakers seem quite oblivious to it, and no one else pays much attention. A pretzel or cake is forthcoming from "mother's" pocket—an older sister or kind grandmother offers lap or shoulder for a sleepy head, and that is all. The meeting had begun at 9.30 and it was 10 o'clock when the Friends arrived. The four men on the facing seat had each his part in exhortation and prayer. All of them wore the beard, and the distinctive dress, three were elderly, the fourth quite young. Their voices were singularly gentle, their manner earnest and reverent. A chapter in the Bible had evidently been read, each commented on it, and gave his thoughts on the truths it contained.

One spoke of the need of simplicity—"We live perhaps too gay and rich in this world,"—and of the power of the simple and sincere Christian life. "It is an old saying here, that it doesn't take a barrel of salt to keep a barrel of meat," he told us; then speaking of the great need of more such examples of righteous living, said, "Sometimes now, we feel the salt is limited!"

A still older man spoke in German, which was evidently better understood by the older people among his hearers. One of our party could follow his train of thought, and told us afterward that, alluding to the war, he said, "We ought not to feel that those who were killing men were always the most wicked. If we shut the light of Christ out of the soul, we are killing our own souls, and maybe those of the little ones around us."

An earnest prayer was made that the young men might be true to their convictions, in this time of trial, and kept from entering into the spirit of war.

A hymn, sung without any instrumental music, with the refrain, "Sometime we'll surely know," was joined in by nearly all present, with sweet voices, and reverent manner.

Those not members were asked to withdraw before the others, and a number of boys and girls, who had not yet adopted the "plain" dress went out with us. We waited for some talk with the older people, who followed us in about twenty minutes, the older men saluting one another with a kiss of greeting.

The elders seemed quite willing to talk with us. One of them had lived near Easton, Md., where some Friends often attended their meetings. We touched on the "plain" dress, asking when it was assumed by their young people. "When they are baptized, and join the Church." When asked whether, if the plain garb was not put on, they could still be given full membership, he answered, "No, surely that would not be according to the Scripture!" adding, "Some of them drift away, like your own young people!"

We felt much at home with these plain and kindly people, and could but regret, as, on our homeward ride we passed their beautiful farms, with neatly kept buildings, and door-yards gay with old-time flowers, that our government should make such a blunder as to take these men from their home occupations and put them into military camps, where they can never be happy or willing workers, even though excused from actually bearing arms.

The question has been raised why these sects have had what appears a more favorable position before the public, in our daily press, than has been given to Friends. One answer may be that they present a more "unbroken front," that their elders do feel at liberty to give them definite advice even as to small details of conduct, in the present crisis, and the young men expect and accept it.

We, perhaps depending more than they upon the "inner light," which will reveal the way to the seeking soul, have feared to dictate or to direct our young men, while desiring none the less that they may follow a straight path. So we may seem to a superficial observer to waver where they stand firm.

There seems no doubt among the Brethren (which name they prefer to "Dunkard") of a desire to be loyal to the Government, if this can be without violating their consciences. "The President will tell us what we are to do," said one of them. They were interested to hear of the work of our American Friends' Service Committee, and seemed to feel, as we did, that the common anxiety that our ancient testimony should be maintained drew us together in a bond of Christian fellowship.

F. T. R.

RED CROSS WORKERS AND THE MILITARY SYSTEM.

[The subject of the following letters may be on Friends' minds elsewhere than in Boston. The clearest way of presenting it seems to print both letters.—Eds.]

3 ROCKLAND STREET, Roxbury, Mass., Ninth Month 30, 1917.

DEAR FRIEND:—

It has been stated more than once in my hearing that "Red Cross workers are obliged to carry side-arms, and take oath to use them if necessary to defend themselves or their wounded charges." While I believe that people who make this statement are confusing the Red Cross with the Army Medical Corp, I wish thee would publish in THE FRIEND answers to these questions: Is it true of the Red Cross? If so will it apply to members of the American Friends' Service Committee who may serve under the American Red Cross in ambulance work?

I should suppose it is understood by all that there is no question of bearing arms for defence when engaged in civil relief work as the American Friends' Reconstruction Unit of the Red Cross, but I really think a number of people are quite hazy about what may be demanded of ambulance workers.

EDITH B. BELLOWES.

TENTH MONTH 4, 1917.

EDITORS OF THE FRIEND:—

Dear Friends—Replying to the inquiries of Edith B. Bellows, I can say very definitely that at the time I left France, about the middle of Eighth Month last, no members of the American Red Cross were required either to take an oath or to carry arms, and I did not see any who did carry arms.

It is very clearly understood that no members of the American Friends' Reconstruction Unit of the Red Cross will be required to do either of these things.

So far as the Red Cross is concerned, the members of our Unit will be volunteer workers, and, should there be, contrary to expectations, such requirements made at any time in the future, these members will be entirely free to withdraw.

In making the arrangements, it was expressly stipulated in the correspondence that the members of our Unit might be given "any work to which Friends may be properly called."

MORRIS E. LEEDS.

AT CANA.

To Cana, on the marriage day,
The Saviour came with brow benign,
With most and least to share the feast—
To break the bread, and taste the wine.

To Cana, on the marriage day,
The Saviour came with gaze Divine,
And walked among the wedding guests,
And turned the water into wine.

No shadow marked the tranquil sky,
No echo whispered of despair;
But all was peace and holy joy—
The presence of the Lord was there!

A cloud of joy—serene, supreme—
Hung brightly o'er the bridal pair;
No sorrow marred that peerless day—
The spirit of the Lord was there.

Forbear, ye Pharisees, forbear
To check, to silence, joyous mirth;
God hears it gladly in His heaven—
Nor did Christ chide it on the earth.

—ARTHUR GOODENOUGH.

THE EXTREMITY IN BIBLE LANDS.

[Under date of Tenth Month 7th we have the following from Emily Oliver. The following paragraph in the letter sent with copy seems to us the plain logic of the situation.—E.S.]

There is so much relief work of a military nature that Friends cannot share in, but the cause of Armenia and Syria is one which we can espouse without any qualms of conscience and I am sure Friends would respond to the appeal even more liberally than they have done if they knew more of the splendid work of the Armenian and Syrian Relief Committee and how safe it is to send help through them to these countries where the need is so great.

Estimate number of deported, destitute Armenians, Syrians and Greeks, now in Asia Minor, Syria, and Palestine at one and one-half millions. Demands for help are inexorable. Bread winners generally have perished through massacre, deportation, or in army. Practically all now destitute were self-supporting before war.

Property taken from these people by military or destroyed in deportations, totals millions of dollars. The number of destitute is increased by the deportation of Greeks from the sea coast. Refugees from regions occupied by military are increasing the poverty. Business paralyzed. Animals requisitioned. Schools and churches generally closed. Buildings used by military. Prices of food and other necessities of life increased several hundredfold, going higher. Needs greater because needy people are more numerous than last year.

Expenses, on moderate basis, for repatriation, rebuilding homes, seed, animals, tools, necessary for self-supporting life $8,000,000. Present need is for keeping the people alive. Food, clothing, shelter for 1,000,000 most needy people, $1,000,000 per month, supporting 35,000 orphans $30,000, minimum total needed, monthly, $150,000. As stated in cable of [Fifth Month] 21, can forward all funds received.

A few weeks ago a conference of delegates and missionaries was called in New York by the Armenian and Syrian Relief Committee to meet with friends lately returned from the East and hear from them accounts of the present condition of affairs in the Turkish Empire.

The speakers told us freely of what they had seen and knew to be true, on the understanding that nothing should be reported in the papers. This was especially emphasized before Ambassador Elkins of Constantinople and Consul Jackson of Aleppo addressed us, but their accounts fully corroborated the stories of missionaries from Armenia, Persia, Syria and Palestine. It was a heart-rending tale of sorrow and suffering, told with wonderful self-control, by those who had themselves passed through the fire and agonized with the people they served and helped to the utmost of their powers, and as one heard tale after tale of thousands and hundreds of thousands in dire need and distress, one's brain almost reeled at the thought of so much agony and suffering, and we felt that C. V. Vickrey, the Secretary of the Association, did not exaggerate when he said that the case of Armenia and Syria represented "the most desperate need in the world today."

The aim of the Conference will be seen in the following quotations from different speakers: "We are not here as a court of law to apportion blame and say who robbed the poor man by the side of the road—the poor man is there and we must help him; we are not here to dwell on past suffering, fearful though that is; we have been moved to tears by what we have heard, but tears will not feed the starving; we are here to think of the best means to help the remnant, to arouse interest in this country and gather funds for the work. Homes must be opened for orphans where they may be trained to be leaders when the time for reconstruction comes.

"It is a greater problem than merely giving food and clothing, it is to take adequate care of the people to be found there, to put them back in their own homes, their feet in the right direction, so that they can help themselves; we don't want to make them a nation looking outside for relief, but self-reliant, looking to the stars, a nation of freemen."

One and another spoke of the hopeful attitude we should take in looking in the future and how abundantly worth while it is to help a people with such a history behind them, a people so deeply religious and devoted to the Christian faith.

An Armenian pastor from Constantinople told how since the fifth century they had stood, a martyr race, on the frontiers of Christendom, bearing all through the Middle Ages, shock after shock from the advances of great non-Christian hordes—willing to take the first blow, willing to suffer and die for Christianity, but never to surrender.

There is no such thing as despair in the heart of an Armenian—despair of our own lives—yes, but we never lost faith in the race, it must stand or fall by its own merits and there is strength and virtue enough to re-people Armenia among the two million safe on Russian soil.

The result of the relief work was spoken of by many and shown to be the means in God's hands of softening antagonism and breaking down the so far almost impenetrable barrier between the Muslim and Christian world. Moslems and Christians are helped alike and touching incidents were given of the gratitude of Turkish soldiers and Muslim sheiks who in their need were brought to realize the true Spirit of Christianity. One Turkish governor who came to a town bitterly opposed to Christian missions, grew to love the American missionary as a brother and, when the missionary was taken seriously ill, ordered prayers to be offered for his recovery in all the mosques in the town; the same governor sent to the mountains for snow for a British lady who was ill. "We have knit the people to our hearts by service and can never get away from the responsibility of the new affection."

It was cheering to hear that funds can still be sent into all parts of the Turkish Empire through Switzerland and there are enough American and Swiss missionaries now in the country to carry on the relief work, besides German missionaries who are also nobly doing their share; and while prices are prohibitively high in the open market, the government will sell at lower rates to men whom they know and trust, but millions of dollars are needed to carry on the work.

The situation in Syria and Palestine is a critical one, and unless help can be sent on a large scale before winter sets in, the country will be almost depopulated; on the Lebanon alone the death rate is one thousand a day.

Friends will be glad to hear that relief work is being carried on in Brumana, under the care of Dr. Dray, formerly of Philadelphia, now Professor of Dentistry in the American College, Beyrout. A soup kitchen has been established here and seven to eight hundred people are fed daily. Another three hundred are cared for daily in Ras el Metn, by my husband, with funds sent by Friends for relief work. A letter just received from England, written by a Brumana Friend Sixth Month 24th, says, "Outwardly all seems very quiet—our little church is keeping up, but the struggle is hard. D. Oliver is still allowed to be at his post and his efforts are indefatigable—he often visits us on this side of the valley. Tell his wife he is well and she need have no anxiety on his behalf. More help is needed. So far we have been kept wonderfully. The future looks dark, but He is our refuge and underneath are the Everlasting Arms."

But it is not only in villages we have heard of, where friends we know and love are working that "more help is needed"—there are thousands of other villages and towns throughout the Empire where hands are being stretched out to us and the cry is going up even now for help—the sound is faint for it comes from very far away and the voices are too weak to make themselves heard at such a distance; but He who heard the cry of the lad in the wilderness is sending on the call through His messengers and making it so insistent that we cannot fail to hear. May He also incline our hearts to listen and send back an answer so strong and helpful that despairing ones may hope again and realize that God has not forgotten them.

The following telegrams have lately been released for publication:

Estimates place the number of Armenian and Syrian refugees in Caucasus at 250,000, Eastern Turkey 100,000. Total slowly increasing by newcomers. Two hundred and fifty thousand of these without employment. Large proportion women and children. Minimum estimate necessary for individual three dollars per month.

The following extracts are from a letter just received from the Erivan Branch of the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief at Erivan:

"There are many more whom we cannot help, than the number helped by us. They come pleading for work until it seems sometimes as though we must go crazy from being constantly compelled to refuse them. Illustrations seem out of place. It is one constant stream of ragged, forlorn women with drawn faces, begging with tears, and even demanding work.

"It is impossible for the people to return to their old homes, conditions are too uncertain. Local farmers and merchants feel the stress of the times too much to employ help, so the refugees are dependent almost wholly on charity. It is pitiful to see people once well-to-do now begging. When opportunity presents itself most of them swallow their pride and gladly become servants.

(Signed) HARRISON A. MAYNARD."

Missionaries arriving in New York from Beirut, Syria, confirm all previous reports. Deaths in one section of Syria from starvation and resultant diseases reached rate of thousand per day. There are at least fifty thousand orphans in Lebanon alone. American Committee earnestly solicits co-operation in relieving this winter the greatest suffering ever known in Bible lands.

SUMMARY OF REMITTANCES.

Remittances previous to Seventh Month 1, 1917	$3,330,320.00
During Seventh and Eighth Months.....	925,100.00
Total	$4,255,420.00

WHAT IS A PACIFIST?

LLOYD BALDESTON.

The term pacifist has been applied to at least three classes of people since the declaration of war by the United States. The first class consists of German sympathizers, who oppose this war for obvious reasons. The second are socialists, who oppose war in general because they believe that wars are fought, broadly speaking, by the poor for the benefit of the rich. The third class, which includes many socialists, is made up of those who refuse to participate in war from conscientious motives, and believe war to be always and everywhere wrong. This paper deals only with the third kind of pacifists to whom the term was first applied in contempt, some time before the beginning of the great war.*

As with many another epithet intended to convey opprobrium and reproach this term has been accepted as a title of honor by those to whom it was applied. It is my purpose to state, however imperfectly, the basis on which the uncompromising opponents of war rest their case, and to answer some of the arguments which are urged against our position.

Permit me first to point out one of the misapprehensions which has gained currency. Pacifists do not visit wholesale condemnation upon soldiers, either past or present. A recent editorial in a great daily heaped reproaches on Jane Addams and other outspoken opponents of war, asserting that by condemning war they virtually called George Washington a murderer. We claim as a right the freedom to follow the dictates of our consciences, and accord the same freedom to every one else. One may be pardoned for doubting whether the claim of conscientious motives as an excuse for doing wrong is in all cases sincere, but for us to impugn the sincerity of soldiers in general because we believe war to be wrong would be manifestly absurd.

History has no doubt exaggerated the better side of war and minimized its evils, but after all allowances are made, many of the long list of martial heroes compel our admiration. Pacifists do not admire soldiers because of their success in war, and many great soldiers they decline to admire at all, but they do not withhold admiration from great souls like Washington and Lee because they were soldiers.

Turning now to the positive basis on which the pacifist case rests, we find it two-fold. First, he believes that war directly contravenes the teachings of Jesus Christ. Second, he is convinced that for any international difference there is always a better solution than war. To those who acknowledge Christ's authority, the first of these bases is sufficient reason for refusal to participate in war, provided they are satisfied of its correctness. The statement that war is the antithesis of Christianity seems to me self-evident, but I am well aware that to the vast majority of my fellow Christians it does not now seem so.

*The writer supposes that the word first obtained currency by being used by Theodore Roosevelt. It does not appear in either Webster or the Standard Dictionary.]

The pacifist feels that the sum of Christ's teaching is a gospel of universal good-will, while his opponent limits this good-will as not extending to the enemy in war time, at least until they are captured. General Howard indeed claimed that he loved his enemies even when shooting at them. This extreme view, I think, is somewhat rare.

Let us try to picture the position of Christ as he neared the end of His ministry, and draw from His own acts His attitude toward strife. Bitter feeling against the Roman power was rife among the Jews, particularly those of Galilee. Jesus had a large following there, and could easily have surrounded Himself with a formidable force. Can we imagine Christ as the head of an insurrection? What are His own words? When He was arraigned before Pilate he said, "If my kingdom were of this world, then would My Servants fight that I should not be delivered unto thee. But now is My Kingdom not from hence." And so, in pursuance of His mission to redeem mankind, he suffered an ignominious death, and failure apparently complete. I confess that "Billy" Sunday's remark that if Christ were now on earth He would be in the army of the Allies seems to me arrant blasphemy. Christianity means love, truthfulness, purity, mercy, justice, forgiveness. War cannot be waged without hate, deceit, cruelty, injustice, retaliation; these are among the virtues of war.

In justification of this view of what obedience to Christ's teaching requires, it is fair to inquire how the early disciples looked upon participation in war. Christians have now been fighting for more than 1600 years, and so the average modern man is not free from bias.

I quote from J. H. Holmes, "New Wars for Old," pages 170 to 183: "There was more than one reason why the early Christians declined to enter the ranks of the legions. First of all, they could not conscientiously take the oath of obedience to the Emperor which was required of every legionary. In the second place, they were unwilling to place upon the Emperor's shrine the offerings exacted of every soldier, and thus worship the ruler as semi-divine being. Furthermore, they were well aware, if they enlisted, that they were liable to be summoned at any time, in obedience to the whim of the emperor or even of a provincial officer, to arrest their fellow Christians. . . . More important than any such reasons as these, however, is the simple fact that conversion to Christianity, in this age of the world's history, involved conversion to the ideal of non-resistance. No man, so it was believed in this benighted era, could be a soldier of the Empire and at the same time a follower of the Nazarene. To draw the sword, even in the public service of the country, was a flagrant violation of Jesus' law of life. Therefore, they did refuse, and many were those who walked the bloody path of martyrdom as the price of this refusal."

The writings which have come to us in abundance from the first three centuries after Christ give ample evidence of the depth and thoroughness of the early Christian attitude upon this issue. The idea of non-resistance in its most extreme form is written all over the pages of this patristic literature. In one of the most famous letters of the great teacher, Justin Martyr (circa 150 A. D.), we find a citation of the passage from Isaiah prophesying the day when "nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more," followed immediately by the impressive declaration of Justin that "this prophecy is already being fulfilled, since we, who formerly used to murder one another, not only now refrain from making war upon our enemies, but also, that we may not lie nor deceive our enemies, willingly die, confessing Christ." Repudiating the charge of cowardice brought against his brethren because they refuse to fight in the legions, Tertullian says, "For what wars should we be not fit, we who so willingly yield ourselves to the sword, if in our religion it were not accounted better to be slain than to slay?"

Celsus, the opponent of Justin Martyr, wrote, "You will not bear arms in the service of the Empire when your services are needed. If all people should act upon this principle, the Empire would be overrun by barbarians." To which statement it was unflatteringly replied that this matter was not in the hands of men, but of God. If God desired the Empire to be overrun by barbarians, then this was part of the "Divine plan" and must be endured. Even though this part of the Divine plan could not be understood, that other part of the Divine plan, the law of love, was perfectly plain to every conscience. Therefore must this law be heeded, though the end of the world come.

We are well aware that there are two kinds of force, and in undertaking to defend the use of a police force at the same time that we oppose war, we recognize the difficulty of drawing the line between permissible and non-permissible use of force. The police are installed by the forces of order to suppress disorder. We can hardly assume that police are always on the side of absolute right, but at any rate they are a part of a system of government, whose authority is generally recognized, and their authority is strictly limited. Military authority is unlimited. Its use of force is unlimited. War resembles nothing so much as a conflagration, as has been many times said. When once fairly started, it may spread indefinitely, and it is only certain to end when nothing is left to consume.

The second basis for the pacifist position is this: we believe that no dispute can arise between nations which cannot be settled otherwise than by war. No doubt we are all agreed that a world federation would be a good thing and equally agreed that arbitration treaties are good things, and that these agencies would settle most disputes without bloodshed. Two differences of opinion are likely to arise, one with regard to the universal jurisdiction of arbitral courts, and one with respect to enforcing the decrees of a possible world federation.

It is held by many publicists that courts of arbitration can deal only with justiciable questions, and that when questions involving the national honor are involved, no arbitration is possible. In order to meet this argument, I must refer to the general proposition that the same rules of conduct which are regarded as binding on individuals are also binding on nations. This proposition will be disputed, but it is so evidently reasonable that instead of laboring to prove it, I shall simply place the burden of disproof on him who denies it. Now if nations ought to be just and truthful and forbearing in their behavior toward each other, the nation which claims that questions affecting its honor cannot be passed upon by a court, places itself in the same class as the duellist of the eighteenth century. He was quite willing to go to court to recover damages against a man whose cattle had broken into his field, but if the man called him a liar, he must fight. We now smile at the absurdity of risking one's life to avenge such an insult, but it was no laughing matter in the year 1800. So our grandchildren will marvel that nations should have been ready to sacrifice everything to avenge an insult to their flag. Whatever the nature of the dispute, a court of arbitration is perfectly competent to hear the case and to make a just award. The nation which refuses to accept arbitration lays itself open to the suspicion of being in doubt as to the justice of its claim.

As to the other side of the pacifists' program, the side concerning personal conduct, they accept the teachings of Christ in regard to human duty literally; they believe firmly in the invincibility of good will and refuse either to fight or to obey military authority, confident that the best way to contribute toward the realization of an ideal is to cling to it under all circumstances. They propose to do their utmost to live in the spirit of this ideal, rendering a full share of service toward the common good, and by word and example endeavoring to promote the gospel of peace, praying for the day to come when war will be impossible because men will not fight.

"Ah, when shall all men's good
Be each man's rule, and universal peace
Lie like a shaft of light across the land,
And like a lane of beams athwart the sea,
Through all the circle of the Golden Year?"

EXTRACTS FROM THE JOURNAL OF THOMAS STORY.

[The following extracts from the Journal of Thomas Story are made by our friend Benjamin H. Doane, of New York City. Their application to some present-day problems will be clear.—E.S.]

The Friend from whose journal the following extracts are taken was a minister of Friends, the personal friend and confidant of William Penn, and the first Recorder of the City of Philadelphia. He traveled extensively throughout the British Isles, North America, and the West Indies, between the years 1686 and 1740.

1714; London: (Page 462)—He returned to England from America, landing at London on the sixth of Tenth Month. In the meetings he declined "to appear in public as long as he could be still in peace," "but suffered under the burden of the word of Truth and a right concern in it, by reason of some forward spirits, who, having accustomed themselves to talk of the things of God in their own power and wills, left me no room in some meetings to discharge my mind of the things incumbent upon me."

1715; (Page 466)—The Yearly Meeting at Kendal "was very large, but not so thoroughly seasoned as might have been, by reason of the forwardness of some; which is too often the case of such meetings, where those of least weight and service are often in the way, obstructing the service of such as have the real concern and are better qualified for the work: a distemper the church labors too much under in many places at this day and hath been of great hurt."

(Page 467)—(Being a great preacher, wherever notice was given of his intention to be present, many would attend. His freedom from vanity on this account and his deeply spiritual insight are shown by the following entry): On the fourth of Second Month he went to Kirklington Meeting, "which was large, but not so open as I could have desired, the expectation of the people being too much outward."

(Pages 520-1)—Rotterdam: "During this time I inquired more particularly into the state of the Menists in those parts, and found that all along their ministers had preached freely, until of late some here and there had begun to receive hire, but were moderate therein; and though they still kept up their old testimony against fighting and swearing, yet they were not so live in their worship, nor so near the Truth as they were in their first appearance; and I was informed that their ministers are for the most part but dry and weak in their ministry, and sometimes their hearers had rather some of them would be silent than preach, though gratis. If thus it be, it hath fared with them as with many others, who, having had a day of visitation from the Lord, and obtained a reputation through His goodness among them . . . yet some, becoming more loose and not keeping in the grace of God and the virtue and power of it, have ended in mere formalists; and then in a generation or two little has appeared but the outside and form of godliness which the power of Grace brought forth in those who went before."

1716; Ireland: (Page 530)—"Teachers and priests pretend to have power to teach and baptize all nations, and yet sit down at the first parish or town where they can have a presentation or make a bargain at so much a year, and never go into half or a thousandth part of their own nation. . . . The Apostles themselves, who had the immediate command of Christ, . . . were not to proceed upon that command barely, without actual power by the Spirit. So none else can have power but by the same Spirit. Since then these have not the Spirit, they have no power from God; but through covetousness and as mercenary hirelings for bread, run when they are not sent, and do not profit but deceive the people; who, nevertheless, loving to have it so, the buyers and sellers, as in the parable of the Ten Virgins, are excluded together."

(Pages 560, 563-4)—(Walking from Carlow to Kilkenny, to answer a charge made against him at the Assizes, he fell in with a number of people on the way, and one of them, evidently a Roman Catholic, offered to discourse with him about religion. In their discussion, on the subject of Transubstantiation, he made this argument:)

"If Jesus literally meant that the bread which He broke was His body and the wine His blood, then the body which broke the bread thereupon ceased to be His body and the bread began to be His body and became so, before he could truly say it was so, or else there must be separate bodies at the same time, and yet all but one body. Which is absurd and unreasonable. And if, while Christ sat at the table with His disciples, they all ate the entire Christ the evening before He was crucified, and, according to His literal words, spoken of the wine as His blood, they obeyed His command, 'Drink ye all of it,' then who was left uneaten to be crucified next day, and whose blood remained to be shed?"

He concludes the account of his intercourse with this person, as follows:

"By this time we drew near the town, and then he said, No doubt you but have a good intention in what you do, in traveling so in the world; but you must have some good considerations for it, as our priests have gold and silver; and he mentioned about 300 guineas for that time. I told him, No; you whom God had raised up and qualified in some degree in this age to that service were advanced above any such mean, base and mercenary considerations as to take anything from men for this labor; which we bestow freely in the love of God; and by His commandment for the common good of men.

"Why, said he, the Apostles were but poor men and wanted necessities, and must have received of the people, or wanted. True, said I; but then they say, having food and raiment, let us be therewith content; and where that is really the case, such as are poor among us we would not begrudge them that; but it is very seldom or never so among us, but rather we feel we can generally say, these hands of mine have ministered to my necessities; having no desire that any such thing should be done to us; and we generally have sufficient of our own.

"Then, said he, but in case your friends, after some very good sermon that pleaseth a great congregation well and generally, should offer you a purse of two or three hundred guineas, would you not accept it, being freely given? I replied, No; I hope it would be no temptation, if so it were; which never can be as long as they and I abide in the truth we profess, either to give or receive that way. I should rather be greatly troubled to see so great a degeneracy, as to subject them to so great an evil.

"Well, said he, I cannot tell; you say well, and I am apt to believe you; but if you would not, there are many would be glad of the offer and make no bones on it, but receive it with both hands.

"I believe it, said I; for there are too many mercenary hirelings in the world in this age; who, though they pretend a mission to go teach and baptize all nations, yet as unfaithful servants, if they were sent at all, sit down where they can have the first maintenance, and never move until the voice of a better cry in their ears; and then, and not till then, they run where God does not send them.

"There is too much of it, said he. And so we parted in friendship, with good wishes on all sides."

(To be concluded.)

"He who bathes in the stream should not forget the fountain."

"He that despiseth the beginning doth not merit the ending."

PRESIDENT HYDE'S HYMN.

(This hymn, written by the late President William DeWitt Hyde, of Bowdoin College, was sung at his funeral.)

Creation's Lord, we give Thee thanks
That this Thy world is incomplete;
That battle calls our marshaled ranks,
That work awaits our hands and feet.

That Thou hast not yet finished man,
That we are in the making still,—
As friends who share the Maker's plan,
As sons who know the Father's will.

Beyond the present sin and shame,
Wrong's bitter, cruel, scorching blight,
We see the beckoning vision flame,
The blessed kingdom of the Right.

What though the kingdom long delay,
And still with haughty foes must cope?
It gives us that for which we pray,
A field for toil and faith and hope.

Since what we choose is what we are,
And what we love we yet shall be,
The goal may ever shine afar,—
The will to win it makes us free.

CAMP MEADE TROOPS RESPECT THE "C. O.'S"

[This article appeared in the Ledger of the 8th. It was included in the early morning edition only (known as the bull dog edition) and efforts to obtain it, even at the Ledger headquarters later in the day, failed. Because it did not have a general circulation and is sure to be of interest to our readers, we are reprinting it. In substance and spirit it is highly creditable to the staff correspondent and to the best traditions of the Ledger. It seems clear that the assurance given by the Secretary of War to the delegation from the Philadelphia Representative Meeting is being strictly observed. The effort not to violate sincere religious conviction is attested by this article.—Eus.]

Within sight of the caissons that will carry the great guns with which this division will be equipped a little group of men sits daily, pouring over Bibles, singing hymns and praying. About it roar the thunders of Mars, to be heard in the great auto trucks that careen and roll along—giant overland dreadnoughts; the yells of the negroes as they drive their obstinate mules about, or in the song of the hammer and the symphony of the saw. But these men are as aloof from all these martial activities as if in a cloister, and no sandaled monk scanning his missal and telling his beads is further away in sympathy and spirit from the war that is seen all about the little knot of men.

These chaps are the conscientious objectors, which soldier lore has boiled down to "C. O.'s." They comprise youngsters whose road lies toward peace, but who have been diverted from their path by the stern call of military necessity. They represent various sects, all of them opposed to war. They maintain a high moral courage and are willing to face a firing squad and die for their faith. It is not the fear of death, or the lack of physical courage that keeps these men apart from their fellows. It is the zeal of the faith—they are pacifists of principle, who fear to fight because they cannot break a religious vow.

Major General Kulin has had these men set apart in the barracks, which they share with the Twenty-third Regular Engineers. These stalwart soldiers who want to war treat these "C. O.'s" with marked courtesy and a fine respect. They feel that the young men are martyrs for a religious cause and as such they regard them as too brave for ridicule and too courageous for jeers.

As a result, these two elements in the barracks, so widely different in their mode of living and so divergent in their belief as to the duty of the citizens, live on amicable terms and are in concord personally if they are in discord professionally.

But to pierce through the outer crust of this opposition to military service reveals so many interesting phases that it is well worth thirty minutes of any man's time. The orders from headquarters are to treat these men with every consideration, and the calibre and the character of the "C. O.'s" themselves are such as to earn it without official dictum. They are segregated, but not "incommunicado." They are there because they feel that the duty to the principles in which they believe is higher than the demands of the State.

General Kuhn is willing that the principles, aims and objections of these young men may be voiced by themselves through the public prints. But he says that he does not want their names used, because it might be embarrassing and might bring upon them odium which he says they do not deserve.

These conscientious objectors, however, were not opposed to the use of their names nor to a discussion of their case in the public press. Rather did they welcome an opportunity to give their side of the question to the people, in order that they might have "a day in court" to tell their own story. Several of these "C. O.'s" are Philadelphians and they bear names that, if printed, instantly would stimulate great interest among its citizens.

One of these resides at Haverford. He is the grandson of one of Philadelphia's distinguished merchants, who died last year. Raised in the environment of the Friends, he is a cultivated, athletic, studious, deeply religious chap, who admits that he regrets the tenets of his faith bar him from a military uniform and a rifle. He also says that he belongs to the Fellowship of Reconciliation. It has a membership of 1000 in this country and 4000 in England.

"Its purpose," said this youngster, "is to put into practice the principles of the New Testament; to forgive our enemies and to allow our enemies to smite us on the other cheek—that is what we believe."

"Well," he was asked, "would you take some activity that was not concerned with the killing of men?"

"I cannot," he replied, "because my religion forbids me from participating in anything that has to do with war. I must refuse to serve in any capacity, even though I might be the staunchest patriot and personally would be glad if my religion did not forbid participation in warfare."

This view is not shared by a chap from Plumsteadville. He belongs to the New Mennonites. He was a proctor at the Normal School in West Chester and as such had charge of 250 pupils. He says that he cannot bear arms.

"But my faith," he said, "does not forbid me to engage in other activities connected with warfare. So I am personally glad of an opportunity to serve in the ordnance or the quartermaster corps, or some branch of the service not directly connected with the killing of men."

The Old Mennonites, however, who are numbered among the "C. O.'s" are so firm that they cannot even don a uniform. They are gathered here from Pipersville, Quakertown, Lederach, Harleysville, Lancaster, Farmersville and other places remote from the beaten paths. They declare that they are willing to die for their religious convictions, but that they cannot bare their breast to the brunt of the battle.

As a contingent these Mennonites are a splendid body of boys, for they are scarcely more than that. All of them are farmers and they carry the indelible marks of the agrarian upon them. One fellow had never been away from his home overnight until he came here. He says that the old home town in which he lives is a "schoolhouse and a church."

But stranger than any of these conscientious objectors is a north of Ireland chap, whose name begins with "Mac" and whose tongue carries the burr of the hinterland. He is a member of the sect known as the "Assemblies of God," which has had a startling career, and seems to be a sort of religious "war baby." It was started in St. Louis after the war broke out and incorporated in Washington.

It has two churches in Philadelphia, at 6003 Larchwood Avenue and 8622 Germantown Avenue. He amplifies his attitude toward war by saying that he is "trying to do as Jesus would do if He were upon the earth."

A less saintly but assertive young engineer, with no attempt at flippancy, but with a sincere desire for the truth, asked this man:

"Do you think that if Jesus were upon earth He would hold communion with such a man as the Kaiser?"

The zealot refused to enter into an academic question of this sort. He said:

"I am responsible only for my own actions," he added, "and my conscience tells me that I must not participate in warfare."

One of the objectors is the general secretary of the Friends' Institute in Philadelphia. He is a pale, studious-appearing young man, with an impressive manner of speech.

"We must wage this battle against participation in warfare," he said, "because there is a great principle at stake. It is our lot to be the pioneers, and we must act accordingly and, perhaps, suffer some." But with us rests the fight for years and generations to come."

A HOME OF REST.

OLAF BAKER.

It was the happiest inspiration which prompted the idea of a rest-home for mothers—the wives of interned aliens. The majority of these women had had a terrible struggle since the interment of their husbands. As time went on, the trials of their position grew heavier instead of diminishing. It became increasingly difficult to provide for the imperative needs of the children whose growing bodies were suffering through insufficient food. Over and over again some distracted woman, taxed beyond the utmost endurance of her failing powers, would break down utterly. If such cases could be succored before the breaking point was reached, the final collapse might be averted; so someone suggested a rest-home as the solution of the problem. Hardly had it been thought of when some kind friend offered a house and garden in a quiet suburb, rent-free. Other friends enthusiastically responded to a request for furniture and bedding. In so short a time as almost to seem incredible, the Mothers' Home of Rest was an accomplished fact.

The other afternoon I went to see what sort of outward shape an idea so swiftly and almost magically embodied would present.

I found a high plain house in a suburban road. Viewed externally it suggested neither rest nor unrest. Its testimony was negative: just a tall, plain house. Even when I had crossed the threshold, I was not struck with anything peculiarly soothing. One might repose there or one might not. It seemed a matter of temperament. I was kindly shown over the house by one of the ladies in charge. The rooms were large, well-proportioned and airy. The furniture was comfortable, but not luxurious. There were two sitting-rooms; one for the ladies in charge; the other—the larger one—for the mothers. In both I observed a blessed lack of that superfluity of abomination known as "bric-a-brac." Order and spotless cleanliness supplied its place. I was shown one of the bedrooms. It was a large, cheery apartment looking out on the garden. In it were four small beds. There was another room overhead with a corresponding number. In case of emergency an extra bed was available somewhere else. This gave nine beds for mothers in all. On the top floor were two attics, one of them being very useful as a box-room. From the window of the first there was a view; a vast view of a sea of motionless billows that threw up a dark spray of chimneys and churches. The greatest city in the world swept away below one to an immense horizon, and for all the immobility of its wave-like roofs, seemed to break at one's feet (with a roar!). As I gazed, the significance of the words "Home of Rest" began to reveal itself to me with a deeper meaning.

We went down into the garden. All this time I had not seen a single "mother." But in the garden I came upon several. They were gathering mulberries! Yes—actually—a mulberry tree! a great old mulberry tree of tremendous age. At the very edge of that vast sea whose ground-swell of seething life came to us through the leaves. The tree was hollow, with an ominous leaning to the south. It made one wonder a little as to what might happen on some dark night of storm. There were two apple trees and a pear tree. From the next-door garden, other pear-trees leaned over confidently, their overhanging boughs laden with fruit. And round the grass plot and beside the vegetables, I recognized the dear old-fashioned flowers of an old-fashioned garden—nasturtiums, golden-rod, roses, white and scarlet phlox.

The grass plot was shaded by a large hawthorn. Here, even in the hottest weather, the mothers could sit while they worked or read. There was a little group of chairs and a long table on trestles. On this latter, presently, tea was laid. This was done by the mothers themselves. When it was ready, we all sat down. There were bread and butter and buns. There was a piled-up plate of mulberries. It was a picnic!

And then, looking round the table, I realized to the full the intense reality of the home of rest. All these faces were of those who, perhaps for the first time since the war, experienced what rest really meant. For the fortnight or three weeks of their visit, no household worries, no floors to be washed, no children to be got ready for school! The few light duties they were asked to perform, such as bed-making, dusting and washing-up after meals, were executed with willing hands. To women accustomed to the unceasing daily drudgery of home and the multitudinous cares of a family, these things were more in the nature of pleasant recreations than anything else. And as we drank our tea and ate our mulberries, war and the rumors of war seemed to recede into the distance; and nothing but that dull roar of humanity reached us faintly through the stirring of the leaves.

I think it is not only the absence of household worries which removes the careworn look from the faces of those who some seeking rest in that tall house on the slopes of Highgate Hill; but an atmosphere that issues from hearts at peace with one another, gathered into unity out of the distracting vortex of the times. And when these mothers return at length to resume the burden of the days, I think they will carry with them, each in her own heart, the memory of a green place where an old mulberry-tree drops its gracious fruit, and where a Presence seems to make itself felt as it moves along the garden in the cool of the day.

LONDON.

PEACE BETWEEN NEIGHBORS AND BETWEEN NATIONS.

Do not let the war and its attending excitement cost you the loss of a single friendship. There are alien friends, and citizens too, who have very different ideas than we have regarding the great war that is now raging; and the maintenance of these friendships through a trying time may be to the individual one of the supreme tests of character. Individually the loss of a friendship may be as great a misfortune as the loss to a nation of a great battle. In either case it is merely a part of the great struggle for the supremacy of good or evil.

Let us have patience—tolerance, if you please—and reason together.

Some day, maybe in the far distant future, we may see things more clearly as they are and become more of one mind, with united action on some of the great perplexing questions of the day. If we cannot sit together now and reason sanely, the great life struggle will continue down through the ages. If individuals to-day cannot tolerate each other—both trying to get some light from the other—can we expect nations to stop fighting?—Lindsay Gazette (Cal.). Selected by William C. Allen.

"The prayer that cannot be uttered is taught by the Spirit of God."

THE PRAYER PATH.

WILLIAM C. ALLEN.

From far-away Africa there comes a simple story, woven into rhyme, illustrating the prayerful watchfulness of the new converts to Christianity over one another. In Uganda each native Christian had in the jungle a resort for secret prayer. The grass on the paths to these trysting places would if much resorted to become worn and thin. Of these transformed men and women we are told that:

If they hear the evil tidings
That a brother is backsliding,
And that some are even saying,
"He no longer cares for praying";
Then they say to one another,
Very soft and gently, "Brother,
You'll forgive us now for showing
On your path the grass is growing."
And the erring one, relenting,
Soon is bitterly repenting.
"Ah, how sad I am at knowing
On my path the grass is growing;
But it shall be so no longer,
Prayer I need to make me stronger;
On my path so oft I'm going,
Soon no grass will there be growing."

Let us accept this unaffected lesson from Africa. Those to whom the Gospel has freshly come can often remind home Christians of their errors. They may remind us that it is possible that we with cathedral, ritual or outward manifestations of loyalty to Christ may after all have forgotten the humble and much worn pathway to the place of secret prayer.

We sometimes see a brother faltering or missing his way—shall we criticise him because he has lost his contact with God? Do we whisper about his errors or unctiously refer to him as an instance of the possibility of a fall from grace? God forbid. Let us rather imitate those converts of Uganda who go to the erring brother and show him that he has neglected the pathway to the place of prayer. He may then with repentance be induced to find reconciliation with God and renewedly discover the joy of contact with Heaven and the sweetness of the Christian life.

Is the grass growing on our "prayer path"? Have fears too violently swayed us? Do we prove weak in the presence of temptation? Are we forgetful of the ineffable love of God? Does bitterness or malice sometimes sway our feelings and expression? Do time-wasting pleasures make spiritual thoughts distasteful? Do we engage in a strenuous struggle for material needs, forgetting service on behalf of our Master? Will not all this mean that we have been deficient in communing with God? If honest with ourselves will we not discover that we have for the moment failed because of lack of faith in the power of living prayer?

SAN JOSÉ, CAL.

CORRESPONDENCE.

CHESTNUT HILL, Phila., Pa., Tenth Month 3rd.

DEAR FRIEND:—

Fifty-two years of continuous service for colored people in Philadelphia is the proud record of Joseph Sturge Mission School, 918 Locust Street.

Over three hundred are on our rolls and there is an average attendance every First-day morning of one hundred and sixty-seven.

We feel that this work is worth while and it should be continued efficiently. It so happens, however, that this year some of our most important workers have been called away either for foreign work or for Government service in this country, and it leaves our ranks very thin.

In these times our attention is strongly centered on the hard task afforded us by the opportunities in "war service." We leap to meet these needs with that gladsome and joyful spirit inspired by the very difficulty of the work. Some of us, however, for various reasons cannot go to the front. But there are opportunities for heroism still left at home.

It seems pretty difficult at times to rise early on First-day morning, to come to town and devote an hour to service among the colored people at Joseph Sturge. It is little enough, however, compared with what others are doing. But because I believe in the value of our School and in our Friends' capacity to meet the need, I dare ask them to help us out, at this time, to continue faithfully to uphold our hands and maintain an efficient corps of workers in Joseph Sturge.

We would like to appeal, through THE FRIEND, for additional workers who would be willing to help on First-day mornings during the winter, before Meeting, between the hours of nine and ten. I hope I may hear from twice as many as are needed.

Very sincerely,

D. ROBERT YARNALL,
Superintendent Joseph Sturge Mission.

TENTH MONTH 12, 1917.

TO THE EDITORS OF THE FRIEND:—

Dear Friends:—The Friends' Institute is considering engaging one of our young Friends who is an efficient stenographer, typewriter and book-keeper as an assistant to Edith Stratton, the newly elected Secretary of the Institute, during Harold Lane's absence. Whether this can be done will depend somewhat on how much of clerical and stenographic work can be turned in her direction by Friends and Friendly organizations, inasmuch as the Institute itself has not sufficient work, nor funds, at the present time, to consume a stenographer's full time. I address this letter to you to inform Friends of the Institute's plan in order, if possible, to gain some estimate of work that may be turned in our direction. This seems necessary before definitely making the engagement. Will Friends, therefore, who know of work that needs to be done at times and which can be given to the Institute stenographer to do, kindly communicate with me at an early date and oblige greatly.

Very sincerely,

EDWARD C. WOOD,
For the Institute Board.

20 S. TWELFTH STREET, Philadelphia.

NEWS ITEMS.

By authority of a minute granted to Samuel W. Jones by Lansdowne Monthly Meeting, a meeting has been arranged to be held in the Carversville Christian Church, Carversville, Pa., First-day, Tenth Month 21, 1917, at 3 P. M.

MEDIA FRIENDS' SCHOOL opened Ninth Month 10th, with twenty-six pupils enrolled and in attendance during the month. M. Elizabeth Whitacre and Leora Chappell are the teachers. The Kindergarten is in charge of Lucie L. Logan. She has eight children in attendance.

At the Monthly Meeting held in Moorestown, N. J., on Tenth Month 2nd, Wm. C. Allen, of San José, Cal., was granted a minute to hold meetings and to have other religious service on the Pacific Coast. His purpose is to exalt the service of united waiting upon God.

STIMULATED by the notice in THE FRIEND and otherwise an unusually large number assembled in the Merchantville Meeting on the 7th. There were forty present. Three Friends from Pennsylvania had acceptable service and the meeting seemed settled and baptized.

ATGUSTUS GEORGE WALLER, of Westminster Meeting, London, has been spending some days in Philadelphia, on his way home from New Zealand and California. He was at Barnesville Yearly Meeting and visited other meetings, including a Quarterly Meeting in Iowa. He has a letter of introduction from his Monthly Meeting.

A. G. Waller's special subject is that of Town Planning. It seems fitting that he should spend some time in William Penn's "greene country towne."

FRIENDS' ACADEMY NOTES.—The Moorestown Friends' Academy opened on Ninth Month 10th, with an attendance of 108 pupils, the enrollment being about the same as last year. This includes about fifteen new students. The size of the School and the earnestness of the pupils presage a prosperous year. Three years ago, the course was cut down to the First Year of High School, but this year, in answer to a popular demand, one class has been restored. It is hoped that the way may open for this to be made permanent. All of last year's teachers have returned, and one new teacher has been added to the staff. She is already rendering good service and filling her position very acceptably.

REPORT OF THE TREASURER OF THE AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE FOR WEEK ENDING TENTH MONTH 15TH.—

Amount reported last week	$192,498.95
Contributions from 15 meetings or associations	1,423.85
Contributions from 15 individuals	1,854.29

$195,777.09

CHARLES F. JENKINS,
Treasurer.

FRIENDS' SELECT SCHOOL NOTES.—School opened on Ninth Month 24th, with a slightly larger enrollment than a year ago. All the teachers were in their places, except William V. Dennis, who recently underwent an operation in the Pennsylvania Hospital. During his convalescence his work is being taken by Walter C. Crouch, a graduate of Syracuse University, who has had extensive teaching experience in New York State.

The High School Department is considerably larger than last year, while the Elementary School is somewhat smaller. Serious work started at the very beginning, and a fine spirit is manifest throughout the School.

Among the visitors so far are the following Friends who have spoken helpfully either at collection or meeting: Robert C. Root, of San Francisco, Director of the Pacific Coast Branch of the American Peace Society, Joseph Elkinton, Agnes L. Tierney, who was our History teacher in the '90's, and Thomas E. Jones, the Field Secretary of the American Young Friends' Work.

We have engaged for soccer the field belonging to the Athletic Association of the Philadelphia Electric Co., between the Sixty-ninth Street Terminal and Lanerch, and for English Field Hockey, the use of the grounds at the Kingessing Recreation Centre, Forty-ninth Street and Chester Avenue, on certain days of the week.

During the summer two of the oldest surviving scholars of the School died. They were Abraham F. Pennock, of Lansdowne, in his ninetieth year, and Anthony M. Kimbler, of Germantown, aged ninety-three.

FRIENDSVILLE ACADEMY, FRIENDSVILLE, TENN.—[The following account was sent to our dear friend Margaret W. Haines. It came to the office of THE FRIEND shortly after the announcement of her death, having been forwarded by one of her daughters.—Eds.]

Friendsville Academy opened its sixty-first year on the fourth of Ninth Month. The enrollment surpasses that of all preceding years. Many improvements have been made during the past vacation time, among which is a new Domestic Science Kitchen, well equipped with all modern appliances; a new Physics Laboratory; an Agriculture Laboratory; and a Manual Training Shop. All the different courses that support these are very popular and their usefulness is well recognized by the patrons.

A new Business Department has been installed. This will train the student in Typewriting and Bookkeeping; also the laws of ordinary business transactions will be given attention, in order to fit the student for work in the business world.

In the Primary Departments, new seats are being placed in order to accommodate the students.

The School is in charge of a strong and excellent faculty. Professor P. F. Robuck is at the head of the Department of Agriculture and Mathematics; Eula Gay Hackney has charge of the German and Household Science; Irene Jackson, the Intermediate; and Univive Payne, the Primary.

Professor H. G. Tenet, the Principal, has invited the friends and patrons of the School to call and inspect the work. This is an important matter and should not be neglected by any one who is interested in school affairs.

The Wm. Forster Home for Girls who are attending the Academy, has an excellent matron in Esther Ballentine and the Home already has nine girls in the family and more expected soon. The prospects are that we will be crowded before Christmas.

A VISIT TO CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS AT CAMP MEADE.—On First-day, Tenth Month 14th, Dr. Edward G. Rhoads, George H. Hallett, Jr., Robert Gray Taylor and Harold Evans visited the conscientious objectors at Camp Meade. They found sixty-four of them segregated with the Twenty-third Engineers in Section P of the camp. Their barracks are about a mile and a quarter from the entrance to the cantonment at Admiral Station on the electric railroad between Washington and Baltimore. The largest number belong to the various branches of the Mennonite and Dunkard Churches. There are five Friends: Harold M. Lane, Arthur Thorp, Harry Bradford, Wilfred P. C. Hagaman and Henry Stahler. Two others, Wray B. Hoffman and Joshua L. Baily, Jr., while not members, are closely associated with Friends. Among the others are members of less familiar religious organizations, such as the Christian Church, the Assembly of God, etc. There are also a few Jews.

The group are quartered in two rooms on the second floor of the barracks, and are not required to wear uniforms, drill, or do any work of any sort except to take care of their own rooms and equipment. They are "guarded" by soldiers whom they call their "nurses" and are taken on "hikes" twice daily. On the whole they seem to have been well treated and the attitude of the other men in camp has been for the most part respectful and to some extent sympathetic. They receive the same food as the other men in the camp, but are not allowed to leave a limited space around their barracks except when on the "hikes". Reading, writing and playing games seem, however, to make the time pass quickly with them and they appeared to be in good spirits and contented.

These young men are faithfully upholding the testimony of Friends in striving to live in that spirit which takes away the occasion for all war, and the least that that rest of us can do is to give them our support in every way possible. It is hoped that arrangements may be soon made for regular visits to Friends and other conscientious objectors in this and other mobilization camps, so that they may feel that the Society of Friends is really standing behind them in this crisis.

II. E.

GERMANTOWN FRIENDS' SCHOOL NOTES.—School opened on Ninth Month 25th with a full attendance. Several of the classes had not a single absentee, and in the whole School with its unusually large enrollment there were a mere handful who did not report. At the close of the first day only three pupils were not heard from definitely with regard to their expected date of return, and they were rounded up within two days. The number now on the rolls is 498, 226 boys and 272 girls. The increase in attendance is chiefly in the High School Department, and the teachers are glad to feel that a considerable number of earnest college preparatory pupils have joined the higher fraction.

School never opened with less friction in the machinery or with greater earnestness on the part of the pupils. Everyone looks forward with confidence to a good school year.

The usual number of teachers were occupied in summer camps, or in summer school work to better fit them for their duties. Alfred A. Smith, the Physical Director for the boys, was prominently connected with the Cobbs camps, and H. A. Dominovich, Irvin C. Poley and D. Lawrence Burgess were again engaged in the direction of Camp Mungticook at Camden, Maine, with its outlying system of camps.

Elizabeth A. Jones and Elizabeth S. Kirk were at summer schools, together with a number of teachers under appointment who were definitely preparing for their year's work.

We miss Elizabeth K. Brown, who is this year on leave of absence at Columbia University studying for her degree; and Emalie C. Bradbury, who has reached her destination in Russia to join the English Friends in the War Victim Relief. To take their places Lida May Smith, a graduate of the Kansas Normal School, has been appointed for Fourth Primary Work, and Alice Prosser, a former graduate of the Germantown Friends' School and of the Philadelphia Normal School for Girls, for the First Primary position.

Several other new teachers are added to our force:

Gleon Romeyn Bennett, A. B. Clark University, has been appointed to teach Science and Mathematics. He has had valuable experience at Phillips Andover and Columbia Grammar Schools, New York City, and for the past two years has been taking advanced courses at Teachers' College and Columbia University.

Joseph James Price, A. M., Haverford College, has taken charge of the Department of History. He has been teaching for several years at Friends' Central School, and spent last summer studying at Columbia University.

Hadassah J. Moore, an experienced teacher, has been appointed assistant in the Intermediate School; and Anna V. Condon, a graduate of the Sargent Training School, to assist Elizabeth A. Jones in the physical Department. The outdoor athletic work for the Intermediate and older girls will be a good deal extended and she will have a large part in this service.

Ruth F. Cowl, formerly with Westtown School, has entered upon her duties as Assistant Secretary and teacher of Mathematics in the third year Primary. She, too, was working this summer in New York to prepare for her duties in Germantown.

E. Marie Lorimer, who was appointed to assist in the Kindergarten, is unable to resume her work for the year, and Mary J. Moon, who was studying Kindergarten methods at Teachers' College last summer, has taken her place.

After careful consideration the Advisory Committee decided it was wise to have the younger boys in the Intermediate School substitute French for German this autumn, and they are now starting on their work under the instruction of Jules Marcel Wilmaet, a graduate of the Lycée of Rheims.

The daily medical inspection, that has been conducted much to the satisfaction of our patrons by the Board of Health for the last two years, has this year been taken over by the School as part of its regular work, and Dr. Samuel Rhoads has entered on his service as daily school visitor.

A number of minor improvements have been made in the School buildings and property during the summer, including the usual painting, carpenter repairs, etc. The chief improvement, however, has been the rebuilding of the driveways and the widening to almost three times its former width of the main driveway from the meeting house to the School to take care of the large number of automobiles and carriages passing daily through the grounds.

The usual activities of the School are starting with good spirit. The girls are busy with their hockey and the boys are active in both soccer and rugby football. A junior rugby team, which promises well, has already been organized and defeated the Penn Charter Tertia by a score of 47-0 in a game that showed good team organization.

The question of some form of service in which the boys and girls of different ages can take part during the war for the real help of humanity, has claimed the attention of the School. The Student Council is considering ways and means. With them are associated Edith H. Knight and D. Lawrence Burgess of the teachers, and Beulah H. J. Woolston and Bernard G. Waring of the School Committee.

It is always pleasant in the autumn to have visits from a large number of former pupils who are now in college or about to enter on active work or some other form of study. This autumn there have been an unusual number of such visits, particularly on the opening day of school.

The class graduated last Sixth Month is represented in seven colleges. Robert L. Molitor, who has been an Honor student of the School for a number of years, won one of the four Corporation scholarships offered annually by Haverford College to the pupils making the highest average in the entrance examinations. This is the more of a distinction because Haverford College has this year the largest Freshman class in its history.

A CABLE despatch to the Public Ledger gives the sad intelligence of the death of Isaac Sharp, for more than a quarter of a century, Secretary of the Society of Friends of London Yearly Meeting. Appreciations of Isaac Sharp, consisting of quotations from English Friends and appreciations of eleven American Friends, including William C. Allen, Benjamin Battin, Robert L. Kelly, Isaac Sharpless, Allen C. Thomas, William T. Pearson, Timothy Nicholson, Amelia Mott Gummore and George Vaux, Jr., were published in Friends' Intelligence of Eighth Month 28th.

NOTICE.

FRIENDS' LIBRARY, 142 N. SIXTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.—The following books have recently been added to Friends' Library:—

Abbott—America in the Making.

Davis—America's View of the Sequel.

Jones—St. Paul the Hero.

Moffatt—Introduction to the Literature of the New Testament.

Powers—Stories the Troquois Tell Their Children.

Putnam—Lighthouses and Lightships of the U. S.

Pyle—Wonder Tales Retold.

Ribhany—Syrian Christ.

Saunders—Wandering Dog.

Washington—Tuskegee.

LINDA A. MOORE,
Librarian.

FOUNDED 1865.

THE PROVIDENT LIFE & TRUST CO.

OF PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Insures Lives Acts as Executor, Etc.
Accounts Solicited Deposit by Mail
Travelers' Cheques Monthly Statements by Mail

WRITE FOR LEAFLET.

Fourth and Chestnut Streets, Phila.

H. F. BRUNER

S. D. HALL

H. F. BRUNER & CO.

COAL

OFFICE AND YARD

16 N. TWENTY-FIRST STREET
PHILADELPHIATELEPHONES: LOCUST 244
RACE 661

Friends Arch St. Centre

304 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Provides comfortable accommodations for guests by the day or week. Meals at moderate prices.

AMELIA D. FEATHERSTONE, Matron.
PHONE—MARKET 1071.

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE
PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

SPECIALTY DESIGNED PRINTING

E. M. CHEANE

Commercial Designer

REVIEWS
DESIGNED PRINTING

Letchworth Cottage

Spring Lake Beach, N. J.

Open for the Season 1917

A. C. & S. H. Letchworth

PUBLIC STENOGRAPHER

GEORGE B. COCK, Liberty Building

Established 1896. Experience 39 years; Medical 13

ALFRED C. HAINES

Building Glass and Paints

56 N. Front St., Philadelphia

POCONO MANOR INN

OPEN ALL YEAR

Situated in the beautiful Pocono Mountains in northeastern Pennsylvania is most attractive
the year 'round.

Golf, Tennis, Bowling, Driving, Motoring,
Swimming and Boating are but few of the recreations found at this popular resort.

J. W. HURLEY, Mgr., Pocono Manor, Pa.
(Pocono Summit Station, D. L. & W. R. R.)

WOOLMAN SCHOOL

A FRIENDS' SCHOOL FOR SOCIAL
AND RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.

COURSES OF STUDY, FALL TERM, 1917.

History of New Testament Times; Old Testament Literature; Literature and Principles of Friends, given by Elbert
Russell; The Life of Paul, J. Henry Cadbury; Methods of Social Betterment, J.
Byron Deacon; First-day School Methods, Annie Hillborn.

Intensive work in conversational French will be provided for students wishing to prepare for reconstruction work in France.

Fall Term begins Tenth Month 10.

For admission apply to

ELBERT RUSSELL, Director,
Woolman School, Swarthmore, Pa.

FRIENDS' BIBLE ASSOCIATION

HAS ITS HEADQUARTERS AT

207 WALNUT PLACE : PHILA.

It is able to furnish Bibles and Testa-
ments to Schools and Bible-classes and would be glad to have Friends everywhere acquaint themselves with the needs of their neighborhoods and allow the Bible Association to help them procure the books they may want. : :

GLASLYN-CHATHAM

PARK PLACE

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

A Family House of Established Reputation.
Open Throughout the Year.

NATHAN L. JONES.

WALL PAPERS—All Grades

WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER

Custom of Friends Specially Solicited

FRANK C. RUEHL

Successor to S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON

902 SPRING GARDEN ST. : PHILADELPHIA

Opposite Spring Garden Station, Phila. & Reading R. R.

ESTABLISHED 1849. BELL 'PHONE.

WANTED—IN A FRIEND'S FAMILY OF TWO adults, a working housekeeper; a Friend preferred.
Please reply with references to "A." "THE FRIEND."

ROOMS TO RENT—FOUR CHEERFUL WELL-furnished rooms and bath.
Address JOSEPHINE KIMBER,
5337 York Avenue, Germantown.

THE HOLMES PRESS

Printers

J. L. Engle, Pres.

1336-40 CHERRY ST. - PHILA.

HARVEY T. WEBER

TAILOR

207-208 HALE BLDG., 1326 CHESTNUT ST.

The custom of Friends specially solicited.

WILLIAM S. YARNALL

MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

128 SOUTH SIXTEENTH STREET

PHILADELPHIA

RESIDENCE: 224 S. 44th St. BELL 'PHONE: Baring 2084X

WILLIAM OAKES

Plumbing and Heating Contractor
ALSO LEAD BURNING

260 SOUTH TENTH STREET

PHILADELPHIA

BELL 'PHONE: Filbert 2666.

GIRARD TRUST CO.

BROAD and CHESTNUT STS.

CAPITAL
AND
SURPLUS } $10,000,000

Acts as Executor, Trustee, Guardian,
Administrator, Assignee and Receiver.
Safes to Rent in Burglar-proof Vaults.
Interest Allowed on Deposits. :: ::

E. B. MORRIS

PRESIDENT

TO ADVERTISERS.—THE FRIEND is now open for selected advertisements at the following rates: One inch, 56 cents, or 4 cents a line; no insertion for less than 25 cents. Long term rates given on application.

Friends having real estate to rent or sell, also those desiring board or rooms, should find
THE FRIEND an excellent medium for reaching interested parties.

Standing business cards are also solicited.

WANTED—SALESMAN TO CANVAS RETAIL store and institution trade for staple food product,
"C." Care "THE FRIEND."

FRIENDS OR OTHERS WHO ARE THINKING
of attending Cornell the coming year will find comfortable rooms in a Friends' family, at reasonable price, at 238 Linden Avenue, Ithaca, N. Y. Five minutes' walk from Campus. EDWARD WOOD.

WANTED—A CARETAKER FOR THE INDIAN boys at Friends' School, Tusasassa, N. Y.—Preferably one who can teach manual training. Applications for the position may be made to
Wm. B. BROADBENT, Superintendent,
HENRY HALL, Friends' Hospital, Frankford, Phila.
ANNA WALTON, Moyland Pa.

The drive pictured above is in our own factory. It is a hard one, not only because of the four pulley arrangement, but because of a fluctuating load.

Our Gilt Edge Belting stands up well to this work. It saves stops and trouble, and keeps the machine busy.

J. E. RHODS & SONS

PHILADELPHIA: 12 N. THIRD ST.
NEW YORK: 102 BEEKMAN ST.
CHICAGO: 322 W. RANDOLPH ST.
BALTIMORE: 37 S. CHARLES ST.
FACTORY AND TANNERY: WILMINGTON, DEL.

W. B. WEAVER UNDERTAKER and EMBALMER

550-552 N. 5TH ST., PHILA., PA.

Special Attention Given to Funerals
In and Out of the City. Also Chapel
Accommodations for Funerals.

BELL 'PHONE : ESTABLISHED 1880

Philadelphia's
Representative Store

ELKINS, MORRIS & CO.

BANKERS

REPRESENTATIVES
WM. E. CADBURY
PAUL W. BROWN
JAMES P. MAGILL

LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

RAILROAD AND PUBLIC UTILITY BONDS

FOR

CONSERVATIVE INVESTMENT.

FULL PARTICULARS ON REQUEST.

We recommend the use of RAG FEATHERWEIGHT

(Antique Finish)

As the paper for high-grade Books and other Publications

JOSEPH G. FOGG

FUNERAL DIRECTOR and EMBALMER

S. W. COR. 16TH and RACE STREETS

Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals

BELL 'PHONE SPRUCE 1648

HARRY S. LEE

313 WALNUT STREET

PAINTER AND GRAINER

ANTIQUÉ and OFFICE FURNITURE RESTORED.

JOBGING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO

ESTIMATES

W. J. MacWatters

Let Me
Help You

In Selecting Your

RUGS AND CARPETS

Domestic -- -- Oriental

ALL WEAVES

The Home of Bundhar Wilton

"DURABLE AS IRON"

HARDWICK & MAGEE CO.

1220 Market Street

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE MATERIAL THAT WE SELL

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY

MANUFACTURERS

PHILADELPHIA

SEE WALKER & KEPLER

FOR

Good Electrical Work

531 CHESNUT ST. -:- PHILA.

Assoc. M. AM. Soc. C. E. Bell 'Phone—Lombard 3412

EDWIN M. EVANS

CONTRACTOR & BUILDER

My jobbing department is well equipped,
prompt and efficient

321 S. LAWRENCE ST. :: PHILA.

R. C. Ballinger Ernest R. Yarnall John A. Stratton

TELEPHONES

Bell—Filibart 26-15 -- Keystone—Race 637

R. C. BALLINGER & CO.

CONTRACTORS and BUILDERS

218 N. Thirteenth St. Philadelphia.

THE following timely books, mostly of those recommended by the Social Order Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, are for sale at Friends' Book Store, No. 304 Arch Street, Philadelphia.

"The Church and the Hour."	Vida D. Scudder,	$1.00
"The Social Problem."	C. A. Elwood,	1.25
"The Abolition of Poverty."	J. H. Hollander,	75
"Christianizing the Social Order."	Walter Rauschenbusch,	1.50
"The Day of Our Visitation."	William Littleboys,	50
"A Word of Remembrance and Caution to the Rich."	John Woolman,	05

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use
PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BREAD

made from the entire wheat grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator. Sold by all good grocers in Philadelphia.

Write for particulars to

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.
10th & Susquehanna Ave., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 91.

FIFTH-DAY, TENTH MONTH 25, 1917.

No. 17.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price $2.00 a year in Advance.

Publisher, DAVIS H. FORSYTHE.

Editors { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
DAVIS H. FORSYTHE,
MARY WARD.

Make remittances payable to

THE FRIEND,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

*"O Heart, that beats with every human heart,
O Heart, that weeps with every human tear,
O Heart, that sings with every human song,
Fill our slow hearts with flood-tides of Thy love:
That they may beat with every human heart,
That they may weep with every human tear,
That they may sing with every human song,
And thus, through Thee, unite with all mankind."*

—Maurice Rountree, Prisoner for Conscience' Sake, 1917.

CHRISTIAN SERVICE.

Many young Christians experience deep searchings of soul when endeavoring to decide what particular line of service they can follow on behalf of their Lord. Surely the quickened heart and intellect have great reason to wish to do something for Christ. The cry of a newly converted Paul, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" has reverberated through countless hearts since then. It is a sign of discipleship.

I know a young woman who, if she had so desired, might have entered into fashionable life and frivolous pleasures with such possibilities as money, social position and superior education could afford. But she was a Christian and her parents had brought her up with ideals of service. So she preferred to teach school where her Christian talents influenced many young people for good. Was her choice not a wise one?

When in Korea I met a missionary who years before as a young man had felt that God was calling him to service in that distant land, but apparently there was no opening for him there. He finally decided that he would accept a position as missionary in India, wrote a letter of acceptance and, in New York City, walked to the letter box to post it. Just as he was about to do so he heard behind him a voice, "But what about Korea?" He turned, but no one was near him. "This is very strange," he said to himself, "I will wait." Instead of mailing his acceptance to India he walked to the office of the missionary board operating in Korea. When he entered the elderly secretary, holding a letter in his hand, remarked, "If ever there was a coincidence in the providence of God, here it is. I hold in my hand a letter from a young man who had expected to go to Korea in which he informs me that he cannot go. As I read it, you who want to go to Korea, enter. See the medical man and if everything is all right we will send you to Korea." Soon he was en route for that strange land and for thirty-two years his service had been wonderfully blessed. Thus we often find in Christian experience that, when God calls us into a certain service, He is sure to open the door. Much observation in many lands has conclusively proved to me that the day of Divine guidance is as bright as ever, but that it is for those who consent to be led by that guidance. This fact is one of the reasons why some of us are Christians. God redeems all His promises to the children of faith.

True it is that He often leads His children into service by His providences. Sometimes, however, we are obliged to walk for a season by faith and not by sight. There may be the willing mind, but not the immediate guidance that we crave. We are perplexed and wonder what we shall do. I have yet to see the earnest follower of Jesus who was not humbled by such an experience. Too frequently such testing times are impatiently met. We nervously feel that we must get at something. We forget that excellent work may be sadly misplaced in the great harvest field. We do not understand that our finite comprehension necessarily fails to grasp the vast range of the economy of God and His deeper purposes. He may have other plans for us. His desire to secure our services is very much larger than our ability to serve Him. Under such conditions the best thing is to wait. Wait on God for His counsel—wait until He opens the way. The time to know His will most certainly will come to us. Paul tarried in wonderment and obedience to the monitions of the Divine Spirit in his heart, until he heard the call from Macedonia, "Come over and help us." Then he went forward. Europe for the first time heard of the risen Saviour. Thank God for the patient worker who permits his Master to lead him. In proportion as Christ's people let Him control their activities the efficiency of His service will be increased. This is an axiom.

The ways of contributing spiritual help to others are limitless. Perhaps the daily Christian life is the best of all. "They that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars forever and ever."

W. C. A.

THE VALLEY OF HUMILIATION.

One need make no secret of the fact that this is one of the difficult places of the Christian path. A multitude, besides Christian in Bunyan's famous allegory, attest it. Few recognize, however, that humiliation is generally of our own making. It was Apollyon in "Pilgrim's Progress" that made this fact emphatic. "Thou didst faint," he said, "at first setting out, when thou wast almost choked in the Gulf of Despond; thou didst attempt what was to be rid of thy burden, whereas thou shouldst have stayed till thy Prince had taken it off; thou didst unfeelingly sleep and lose thy choice thing; thou wast also almost permitted to go back, at the sight of the lions; and when thou thoughtest of thy journey, and of what thou hast heard and seen, thou art inwardly desirous of vainglory in all thou savest or doest." This is indeed keen analysis. It strips the mask from a world of false humility and leaves us in a low place, but a low place of our own making. Perhaps no discrimination is more frequently needed by the Christian than that which makes it perfectly clear that humility and humiliation are widely separated states. Humility is due to an overpowering sense of God's strength and perfection; humiliation to a mortified sense of human limitation and failure. Our inward desire has been for recognition, for appreciation, for place—in Bunyan's telling word, for "vainglory;" and when these have failed we give ourselves the pitying name of "poor creatures."

An ordinary incident with an extraordinary outcome in highly chastened Christian character will further illustrate this point. A worthy elder in the Society of Friends of a by-gone generation (she has been dead sixty years) is still remembered in the community where she lived for her unparalleled unselfishness, and for her frequent exclamation, "What a monster self is!" This in her case was not a method of rebuking other people. If she rebuked others at all it was by the unconscious method of being what she would have them be. She was one who was indefatigable in service. The mother of an active family of eleven children, she made a home for them that was a centre of innocent happiness, liberal provision and open-handed hospitality. But in addition she was the good angel of the community and by courtesy an "aunt" to the one thousand or more inhabitants of the village where she lived. She found time to minister to the sick and suffering with her own hands; her chamber was a confessional for the wayward and heart-broken. Naturally, as a result of this, a large measure of grateful love was her meed. A weak nature would have been undone by it—many a strong nature has succumbed upon less occasion. She constantly tested herself, rebuked the tempter, kept her eyes on her Guide, with this quaint exclamation, "What a monster self is!"

And it was a monster that Christian met in the allegory; Apollyon may not have been intended to personify self. We are not created in an exposition of the allegory. One point in the narrative is, however, of perennial usefulness. When the monster was met in the valley of humiliation, despite his approaches, despite the assaults of discouragement, Christian kept steadily on his way. The mists of doubt and uncertainty did not totally eclipse the vision of the celestial city. So in our own life journey. Our favorite plans may fail, our best efforts be misunderstood, even our motives be questioned; altogether our life may seem faulty and fruitless, but if "our eye is single," and we keep our eye on in the dusty routine that we have often been dumfounded with the light, we shall be witnesses of one of those miracles of grace with which the Christian life is imbued. Our humiliation will be transmuted into humility, for God can make the weak things of earth his instruments.

More especially in this time of a God-remembered we need to keep the cheer of Christian's example in mind. "The old order changeth." We are tempted to forsake well-established lines of endeavor, to question even the foundations of religious work, to renounce much that under normal conditions we felt called to do. True, the world can never again be the same, but if we have had a vision of light it must have been in the direction of the new order. In the midst of the uncertainties of storm and fog a good captain may "slow down," but he will not change his course until he can see the sun and stars again.

J. H. B.

FRIENDS' AMBULANCE UNIT.

[A recent number of The Friend (London) appears under the general caption of Friends' Ambulance Unit Special. As supplement to the clear statement made in our paper some weeks ago by Morris E. Leeds, we reprint herewith portions of the leading article in this special issue of our valued contemporary.—Eds.]

As the war is prolonged the changes in the Unit become more numerous, but happily for all concerned Leslie Maxwell remains. The personnel of the Unit and its work change. Many fresh men have joined, and a considerable number have left. The total number who have lived and labored in its ranks is 1,000. Many of these came gladly in the early days of the war to give themselves and all they had to service under the Red Cross—those first wonderful days of adventure and enthusiasm. Many others came later impelled by the ever-changing circumstances of the situation and the national demands made upon them. The motives of joining the Unit are known only in the secret places of each man's heart. Broadly, however, the foundation is one and the same—a determination to adhere to the Quaker objection to war combined with a determination to serve their fellow-men. How difficult has been the decision none can know save those who have had to decide. The form and occasion of service have been various. Some of it plainly of first-rate, early and vital importance; some of it to come to fruit only after many days; some of it a serving of tables, a rather weary and monotonous round of routine duties necessary to the establishment and maintenance of a large organization. Some men have left us and have exchanged their liberty for the shades of the prison house, or, as they would say, have entered that larger liberty of being ready to be bound that others might be free. These, too, have sought to serve their fellow-men. We offer no judgment of the value of different service. We desire only to help each man to do his duty in this epoch-making time upon which the ends of the earth have come.

THE LIMITATIONS OF A QUAKER UNIT.

As there has been a change in personnel so also there has been a change in the routine work of the Unit. Two factors have been mainly responsible for this change. The military situation—the immobility of the armies and the development of their administrative arrangements, particularly in regard to medical service, has been the first and principal factor. It has constituted the environment of the Unit, pressing upon it from all sides, delimiting and restricting it. The other chief factor has been the principles for which the Unit stands. During the year which has passed the Unit has withdrawn from two important branches of its work, the orderly staffing of the King George Hospital in London and the two hospital ships. The Unit withdrew from the first in Twelfth Month, 1916, because of the inherent and insuperable difficulty of organizing and maintaining a voluntary Quaker Unit in the same hospital as an R. A. M. C. unit. The methods of control of these two units were found to be incompatible and unassimilable, and the Friends' Ambulance Unit was not prepared to surrender its non-military rule and classification, its non-officers, and its freedom of control. There seemed no alternative but the orderly withdrawal. And in the same applies to the hospital ships. When the Authorities decided to remove the two ships which we served from the eggs of the Red Cross and make them armed troopships our case was altered. No one more deeply regretted this withdrawal than the men who had sailed the seas, east and west, for fourteen months in their beloved ships and brought many a wounded man to port. The Unit were, however, not willing to modify the principles that they should serve only under the Red Cross, only in a non-military capacity, and only on the business of life saving. Here, then, are two examples of the way in which the principles for which the Unit stands restrict the scope of the work undertaken. They do not complain but they desire it to be recognized that the limitations set upon the working of a Quaker Ambulance Unit in time of war are numerous and considerable. Friendly critics sometimes ask, "Why don't you do this, or that, or the other thing?" forgetting that to do these several things is impossible to an unenlisted unit not under military control and working in the war zone.

Apart from these changes the work has proceeded on much the same lines as last year. It has been curtailed in regard to the King George Hospital and the hospital ships; it has expanded in the new hospital at Uffculme, in the third recreation hut at Dunkirk, in the enlargement of the Queen Alexandra Hospital, and in the beginnings of new civilian work in France and Belgium. The Unit is now therefore engaged as follows:—

1. Dunkirk Headquarters (office, instructional school, stores, motor department, F. U. groupment, Q. and S. groupment, Barge, civilian and sanitary service, etc.)	142
2. Queen Alexandra Hospital	91
3. Four Ambulance Trains (Nos. 5, 11, 16, 17)	195
4. Three Ambulance Motor Convoys (S. S. A. 13, 14, 19)	140
5. Three Recreation Huts for soldiers and sailors	24
<hr/>
In France and Belgium	592
6. Hospital at York (300 beds)	117
7. Hospital at Uffculme, Birmingham	54
8. Star and Garter Hospital, Richmond	18
9. London Office, Training Camp and Reserve Members on Indefinite Leave	23
<hr/>
804
10. Members in General Service Section	387
11. Members left the Unit (see below)	340
12. Members killed or died of disease	8
<hr/>
Total	1,539

These figures speak for themselves. They represent a band of men, members of the Society of Friends or those closely associated with it, who have been accepted as members of the Red Cross or deputed to other forms of national service under the auspices of the Unit. It will be seen that 340 members have left the Unit during the three years. The grounds of their departure are as follows:—

(a) Compelled to return to business or occupation	53
(b) Resuming medical or other studies	16
(c) Joining Friends' War Victims' Relief Work	14
(d) Enlisting in Army or Navy	66
(e) Joining other branches of Red Cross or Y. M. C. A.	8
(f) Joining First British Italian Unit	22
(g) Found to be unsuitable or requested to leave	14
(h) Doctors returning to practice or official duties	15
(i) Invalided home	16
(j) Boy Scouts returning	12
(k) Nurses returning for other duties	64
(l) On grounds of "Conscientious Objection"	23
(m) Joining General Service Section of the Unit	17
<hr/>
340
Killed or died of disease	8
<hr/>
348

It will be seen that the Unit has lost eight members by death and that about 150 of the 340 are nurses, boy scouts, and invalided or transferred men. The Unit has been glad, so far as allowed by the authorities, to facilitate transference to the War Victims' Relief Work and the Italian Unit. Speaking generally, therefore, it has experienced an actual loss during the three years of some 180 men.

(To be concluded.)

EXTRACTS FROM THE JOURNAL OF THOMAS STORY.

(Concluded from page 198.)

1717: Bishopstow, Eng. (Page 576).—"On the 30th of 3rd Month we had a meeting at Bishopstow in a barn, where some of the townspeople came in; but to me, the meeting was very dull and dead a long time; and after some Friends had spoken what was in their minds, the meeting was silent a while, and then I stood up and told them: That there had not been more mischief done among the children of men by anyone in any past ages of the world than by men's running in the name of God as His messengers, when He did not send them, who not only did not profit the people at all, as set forth in the 23rd chapter of Jeremiah, but did much hurt by misguiding them; and though it might look strange to some, a meeting being appointed and the people invited, that I said nothing, yet as no consideration arising that way ought to prevail with me to run in my own will, to speak of the things of God among them, so it might be better, both for them and me, I were silent than to do it." (And as justification, he instances the harm done by Paul, 1 Cor. vii. 12, with his "Thus say I, and not the Lord.") But he was careful to explain that his words had no reference to any who had spoken in that meeting at that time.

(Page 578).—London Yearly Meeting, in Fourth Month, "was considerably larger and more peaceable than for many years past," but "it was a crowded time; and I, rather being willing to be straitened than to straiten any, suffered much in my mind and spirit, for want of opportunity to clear myself; there not being for the most part one minute's time between the end of one testimony and the beginning of another, an indecency I have ever disliked. However, things in the main were pretty comfortable."

1719: Bristol. (Page 627).—"There are at this time in that city a young people, the offspring of Friends, a comfortable body, who love Truth when preached to them in the life and demonstration of the wisdom and power of it; but many of them, not yet much acquainted with the powerful work of Truth in themselves, are not apt to relish the harsh and unwarlike discourses of some among themselves, such as Sarah Dixon and her disciples and accomplices, who very unwarrantably and falsely apply unto them, and even to the men's meeting there, all the woes and judgments against old Israel in their most degenerate state; of which these young people and others, knowing themselves not to be guilty, though perhaps in some things they want amendment, are greatly offended and hurt; judging the unbraiding of such to arise from no other ground than their own ill nature, heightened by some private offences taken at some particulars, against whom they cannot have their revenges in their own way." (Of his own preaching to them he says: "Though using all decent plainness with them, yet as it was in the love of Truth, they received it in the same ground.")

1734: Carlisle. (Page 700).—"This was his own Monthly Meeting. On the nineteenth of Second Month he was at the Monthly Meeting, where Friends told him they hoped he would be at the Quarterly Meeting and agree to be one at least to represent them at the approaching Yearly Meeting at London. He let them know he would do so." And as I intended to visit some other places after the Yearly Meeting was over, the Monthly Meeting gave me another certificate; being a common order then among us, to which all were alike subject, how well soever known in our Society in general, to prevent disorderly persons and impostors."

TEMPTATION.

Not alone in pain and gloom
Does the abhorred tempter come;
Not in light alone and pleasure
Profers he the poisoned measure.

When the soul doth rise
Nearest to its native skies,
There the exalted spirit finds
Borne upon the heavenly winds
Satan in an angel's guise,
With voice Divine and innocent eyes.

—RICHARD WATSON GILFILL.

DARK BEFORE DAWN.

There are many of us in the present darkness who echo the cry, "Who will shew us any good?" We are like those who go sadly on their way, saying to themselves, "We trusted it had been He who should have redeemed Israel, but now—" "now He who was our Lord has been betrayed, scorned, dishonored, crucified, and the powers of Hell seem to have prevailed against Him." All we can do is to go and mourn in the garden by the tomb and lo! the tomb itself is empty and the last consolation gone.

"They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid Him." So mourns the woman at the grave-side, her eyes too dim with tears to see the form of One who draweth near, and her ears too dull with grief to recognize the voice of Him who says to her, "Woman, why weepest thou? whom seekest thou?" Not till He calls her by her own name, does she turn and see Him. "Jesus saith unto her, 'Marry'; she turned and saith unto Him, 'Rabboni, Master.'" That Master whom she had left in the tomb, emptied of all, has conquered death by dying, and still lives and loves. The crucifixion is over and it is now the Resurrection morn.

That which happened once outside Jerusalem is happening ever. Love is eternally dying and eternally conquering death. It is not possible for Love to be hidden by the grave. Our hearts are sore with sorrow and dismay, and we see nought but the dying and the empty tomb. And lo! He is not here, He is risen. He speaks to us. He waits for us to turn and recognize Him. We think He is gone from us, but it is only that our eyes are "holden," for behold! He is at our side and "He is alive for evermore."

We have looked for Him, coming as a king to reign, and have missed His footprints in the garden, the street, the upper-room, or by the fishing-boats on the shore. We must look for Him again among the common people, and touch Him in the throng and press. Where the sick are being healed, where the lonely are being loved, where prisoners are being set free, and where those in the shadow of death are beginning to see a great light, there we shall find Him in the midst.

One day we shall find Him in the house of mourning, and the next at a village feast, one day we shall walk with Him through the cornfields and the next He will take us on the mountain-top or the desert.

It may be He will come to us in the night, while the storm is raging, or it may be when the dawn is breaking that we shall hear His voice over the waters.

We cannot tell what He will say to us till the moment comes. Suddenly we find Him in our midst, we see His form, we hear His voice. Then are the disciples glad when they see the Lord. First He reveals Himself, He brings "Peace," then He calls them to "follow," and finally He says to them "Go!"

M. C. ALBRIGHT, in Friends' Monthly Friend.

A BELGIAN VIEW OF PEACE.

Readers of the New York papers may have noticed some communications from Henri Lambert, of Charleroi, Belgium, in regard to Peace. Formerly last summer he issued a "Message to the Society of Friends and Other Christians," making a plea for "free trade" as a necessity for an international basis of a lasting peace. Samuel Milliken, of Philadelphia, feels that Friends have not given sufficient regard to this plea. It is put forward as a political matter. The new world order will certainly associate religion and politics more intimately if it produces the fruits of amity so much desired by us all.

Our Social Order Committee will doubtless have something in good time to say on this and similar subjects. The following are the concluding paragraphs of Henri Lambert's message:—

I submit this proposition: GOD HAS NOT GIVEN THE LANDS AND THE SEAS TO THE NATIONS, BUT TO HUMANITY. NATIONS WILL NEVER ENJOY GOOD-WILL AND PEACE UNTIL THE DIVINE WILL BE RESPECTED AND FULFILLED. This does not mean that every human being must be at home everywhere on the globe, and that political frontiers of nations should be abolished (an unnatural, unprogressive idea); but it does mean that economic frontiers must be abolished, i. e., that the "open-door" for free exchange of things and services must be universal, every man thus finding at home, in his own country, among his own people, the best possible opportunities for making a living. Thus, all human kind through co-operation may progress materially, intellectually, spiritually; therefore in harmony and peace. "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His justice, and all these things shall be added unto you."

Pascal said that "as it has not been possible to insure that what was mighty should be just, it has been insured that what was just should be mighty." The war powers of the mighty nations will be vanquished only by the almighty spiritual power of international justice, the necessary, practical, fundamental characteristic of which is liberty in exchange of economic services.

I respectfully suggest that the Society of Friends throughout the world transform their negative, passive attitude into a positive, active one; that they substitute for "Non-resistance to War" a vigorous and uncompromising resistance to the chief cause of war, viz., the un-Christian international policy of obstruction to mutual services, mis-called "Protection." I suggest to them that International Free Trade, foreshadowing the reign of morality, harmony and good-will among nations, is a great and true Christian peace ideal worth striving for, worth "fighting" for.

HENRI LAMBERT, of Charleroi (Belgium).

Titular Member of the Société d'Economie Politique of Paris.

PARK AVENUE HOTEL, New York, Seventh Month 15, 1917.

For "THE FRIEND."

Writing from Peking, China, on an International Sunday-school lesson of recent date, William T. Ellis, a well-known journalist, said: "Most of the present failures of our Christian civilization are due to failures of our moral and religious leaders. Let us not mince words here. Shallowness, materialism, sensuality, pleasure-lust, ruthless selfishness in economic relations, political perfidy, and the plight of the poor, may not be evaded as a responsibility of those who set moral and social standards. Our generation has lacked supremely in faithful shepherds, who are nowadays called preachers and teachers and authors and editors and publicists. The high, stern, challenging note has been missing from the spoken and written word generally speaking. In conversation among themselves, religious leaders freely admit that the ministry has never before been so manifestly treated as a "job," a means of livelihood, as to-day. So also with the teaching profession. We are busy with schemes of pensions and minimum salaries to make the positions as lucrative and attractive as possible. Even being a missionary may become a mere profession. Clergymen, like actors, are graded by the salaries they can command. Ecclesiasticism concerns itself more with the business end of the church and her employed officers," etc.

Selected from The Pacific, a Congregationalist paper of San Francisco, by William C. Allen.

"If God has called, He will also open the door."

WAIT FOR THE KEY.

ISAAC PENNINGTON.

Wait for the key of knowledge, which is God's free gift. Do not go with a false key to the Scriptures of Truth; for it will not open them. Man is too hasty to know the meaning of the Scriptures, and to climb up over the door with his own understanding; but he has not patience to wait to know the door, and to receive the key which opens and shuts the door; and by this means he gathers death out of words which came from life. And this I dare positively affirm, that all that have gone this way to work have but a dead knowledge; and it is death in them that feed upon this knowledge, and the life is not raised. Consider now the weight of this counsel in the true balance: there is no opening of the Scriptures but by the true key, nor is there any coming at the key till the Lord please to give it. What, then is to be done, but only to wait (in the silence of that part which would be forward, and running beforehand) till the key be given, and to know how to receive it, as it is offered in the light; and not to wait in the will, or expect to receive it according to observations in the fleshly wisdom from the letter.

Let not thy understanding have the managing of this key, when it is given; but know the true opener, the skillful user of the key, the hand which can only turn the key aright; and let Him have the managing both of His own key and of thine understanding. Do not run in thine own understanding, or in thine own will, to search out the meaning of Scripture; for then thou feedest with the Scripture that which it is the intent of all words of life to destroy; but as thou waitest for the key at first, so continually wait for the appearances and movings of the User of the key, and He will shut out thy understanding and will continually, which would still be running after the literal part of Scriptures; and let thee into the life, both of the prophecies and doctrines thereof. Man, when he hath received a true gift from God, would be managing of it himself, and to be sure he will manage it for himself (for the gratifying and pleasing of himself, and not of God), and then God, being displeased, takes away the substance, and leaves him the shell. Therefore he that hath received a gift must be very watchful, against that which would betray, or he may easily lose it; for though the gifts and calling of God are without repentance; yet if that lay hold of the gift which was not called, and to which it was not given, the Lord will thrust that by, and take away His gift from it.

A VISIT IN JAPAN.

[The following is taken from an account written by a visitor at the Friends' Mission, Tokio, Japan, for a newspaper in Des Moines, Iowa.—Eds.]

TOKIO, Tenth Month 30, 1917.

Recently I journeyed up to Mito, capital of Ibaraki Province, about ninety miles north of Tokio.

I left Tokio at ten o'clock in the morning from Ueno Station, over the East Coast Railway, which follows the shore, a few miles inland, from Tokio to Sendai, Mito being half way between the two places. The train started out through pretty suburbs, which are one broad stretch of gray tile roof, islands in a sea of spring green, and where much market gardening is done along intensive lines, and soon crosses the river, where a week ago there were cherry blossoms in full bloom, and everything wore a pink tone.

Now the color scheme is changed. Wherever there is a chance for wild growth, a flower which looks much like our buttercups, but is not, was blooming, and wide patches of mustard and rape, in flower, alternated with vegetable gardens and fields (such little fields, but so many of them) of barley already in the head. The patches of mustard were so many that it became a burning question with me what was to be done with it all. I wondered whether Japan was planning to add millions of mustard plasters to the horrors of war, but I have since learned that no such "frightfulness" is contemplated, but that oil is the product of the seed.

Wherever there was not barley or mustard or rape there were rice fields in a state of preparation. In some the young rice was coming up on the surface of the water, and will be ready to transplant, stalk by stalk, by the time the fields are ready to receive it. In the barley fields between about every fifth row of barley there is a row of beans in bloom, and the crop cannot come on too quickly, for beans, a staple of the common people, who can ill afford to eat rice, are now at almost prohibitive prices on account of the war.

Interspread among the fields which are almost as level as a floor, are little hillocks covered with trees, pines and bamboo for the most part, and these give a variety to the landscape and make it beautiful, and there are many rivers flowing down to the nearby sea. At Tsuchiura there is a broad stretch of water, whether a lake or an inlet of the sea I do not know, but it looked like a fresh water lake, with pretty wooded banks, and many fishing boats carrying big dip nets, sailing out upon it.

I was going to Mito by invitation of the Gurney Binfords, Richmond, Indiana, people. They have been connected with the Friends' Mission out here for seventeen years, and have spent all that time at Mito. My host met me at the station, a figure in khaki, looking much more military than ministerial. I at once connected him with the Advance Guard in the Peaceful Army of Friends of All the World.

He conducted me to a motor-cycle having a basket seat at the side and looking something like a carriage for a very reckless baby—a baby which meant later to drive a bi-plane after hardening its nerve in this machine! I did not perceptibly hesitate, I hope, to take my place, and once in and off I liked it. I shall not feel sorry any more for men condemned to ride motor-cycles, as I have always done. It was remarkably comfortable in spite of its rakish look.

We took the long way home that my host might show me the notable places of the town, and passed en route the park which was once the castle grounds of the Mito branch of the Tokugawa family. We passed the "State House," as we would say, wherein the representatives of the people (more or less) meet to enact laws for the province, just as our State Legislatures do for our States. We also saw the Normal School, and several other buildings that looked to be adequate for primary and middle school purposes. These grade schools are referred to as "schools of twelve hundred," that being the average number of pupils attending one school. When the attendance gets much above that figure in a district a new building is erected. Mito is building two new schools this year. It is a place of fifty thousand inhabitants.

The Binfords live in a house that was built as a home for one of the Samurai retainers of the Daimio of Mito. It is about ninety years old and, of course, typically Japanese of the period of purely Japanese things, though the present occupants have added a second story, and have replaced much of the paper "shoji" with glass, making it lighter and much more comfortable from our point of view.

On each side of the entrance are little cupboard-like rooms for storing shoes and umbrellas. These are still in use, for the floors are covered with tatami. The Binfords found this necessary, as their guests are Japanese people of the old school who prefer to sit on the floor rather than on chairs, and who would not come freely unless they were able to do this. (Incidentally, all the missionary homes I know anything about have a room at least, so furnished that they may use when it is needed for the entertainment of guests who would not feel at home in any other surroundings.) But the Binfords, in common with many other people, have simplified the matter of putting off and on shoes every time they go out or come in, by wearing what they call "evanadistic" shoes—the old-fashioned "sitters" with an inset of elastic at the sides.

Aside from the tatami and glazed shoji the house is furnished in the Western style, but with a color scheme keyed to the tan color of the floor, and in spite of being comfortable, has a really Japanese air. This is helped out by the garden, visible through the shoji, which has all the character of a Japanese garden, with its fantastically trimmed trees, and other Japanese characteristics.

After luncheon, Elizabeth Binford took me for a walk which had for its object the purchase of wherewithal to line a comforter which the ladies of the Sewing Society had just finished, and was to include a visit to an embroidery school.

At the embroidery school we had to take off our shoes to go to the upstairs room, where eight or nine pupils were kneeling on the tatami before embroidery frames, raised about ten inches from the floor. They were most all of them boys. Here in the Orient, the embroidery has always been the work of men and boys rather than of women and girls. I should think they ranged from nine to eighteen years. They work for ten or twelve hours a day, with time for luncheon in the middle of the day. They push the needle straight down and straight up and do very pretty work. The Japanese thimble is a roughened ring of steel about as wide as an ordinary wedding ring, and is worn between the first and second joints of the middle finger. It looks rather awkward.

When we reached home and were seated about the hibachi I reckoned up, and found that I had taken off and put on my shoes five times that afternoon! and I longed for a pair of "evangelistics!" Edith Sharpless dined with us that night. She has a kindergarten and work for girls in her home, a charming little house which she occupies with three girls, who live in Japanese style. She herself keeps to American ways, except in the matter of floors and foot wear. Feeling it right to use the tatami, she has learned to wear the "tabi" and "geta," to save time.

"Tabi" are white or black cloth shoes which have a separate compartment for the great toe, and "geta" are woven straw or wooden sandals—rather soles with no tops, just a strap which fits between the toes and over the top of the foot. One keeps the "tabi" on all the time, and kicks off the "geta" at the door. Even so it is an awkward, time-consuming practice, this constant changing of foot gear. If the baby is about to fall into the well one must stop to wriggle into "geta" before going to the rescue!

(To be concluded.)

A PACIFIST AMONG SAVAGES.

(Continued from page 507.)

THE ZEBADDLE FAMILY.

On one occasion, not long after going to the Kiowa camps, the lodge in which I was sojourning was taken down, and the man and his wife left for some other place, leaving me without knowing where to go, or what to do, Kicking Bird being away at the time, and I could not talk with any one in the camp. However, it was not long until an Indian by the name of Zebaddle came to me and by signs bade me enter his lodge. My goods were soon brought in and I soon felt quite at home, and grateful for the kindness thus proffered to a stranger, though the lodge was untidy, even for that of an Indian.

A dirty little boy, perhaps ten months old, was creeping about the dirt floor, the scanty garments with which he was clothed and the color of his hands and face were scarcely distinguishable from the ground floor upon which he was crawling.

His hair covered his head in matted tangles, while his sparkling eyes shone like diamonds just washed from the dirt. At first I was an object of terror to him, but this soon gave place to unbounded curiosity, his eyes were scarcely off of me while I was in the lodge. He watched every movement I made, taking good care not to stray too far from his mother's protection. After some time he gained more confidence and ventured to creep round to my side of the fire pit, in the center of the lodge, frequently measuring the distance to his mother with his keen, sparkling eye. After a number of tours of in-spection between which he returned to his mother, each time coming nearer than before, he finally approached near enough that by stretching both arm and finger to their full extent he could touch me, drawing back to watch the result, returning still to renew his courage after each successive experiment. Perhaps about the second morning of my being with them he had become so familiar as to attempt to crawl into my lap, which I did not permit.

I noticed his mother appeared displeased with this, and made signs for me to take him up, to this I shook my head and made signs for her to wash him. She burst into a hearty laugh, and taking him to her side of the lodge she made a vigorous application of soap and water and clothing him in clean garments, she brought him and set him near me. I then took him up and kissed him, much to his mother's satisfaction.

I showed him my watch and began to talk to him. He scrutinized the motion of my lips while I spoke. This was repeated day after day with little variation, not even omitting the application of soap and water. There were many dogs about the camp and they did much barking. He would notice them and I would say, "dog bark," "dog bark!" After this had occurred a number of times, when began barking he looked into my face. I said nothing—he then said—"dog bark,"—"dog bark," much to the amusement of the Indians, who took occasion to tease his mother by saying, "He Indian?" "No, he white man!" "He talk white man's talk, before he talk Indian."

Zebaddle and his wife had never been to the Agency. After I had homed with them a short time I prevailed on them to go with the other Indians to draw rations. I told them, "I eat supper with you many times, now you go to agent's house and eat supper with me."

Having obtained the consent of the agent's wife, I brought them in at supper time, and they partook of their first civilized meal. Nothing escaped their notice. When we returned Zebaddle and myself stopped at the trading post, where he bought pie pans, tea cups and saucers, knives and forks, spoons, sugar bowl, and coffee pot. It became a mystery to me how he could get all these to camp, we being on horse-back.

When the purchase was completed, he wrapped his blanket about him, buckled the leather belt tightly around his waist and packed all these articles about his body, inside his blanket, and in that way carried them to camp, about sixty miles.

The next morning, some fifteen of the principal men of the camp with their wives came into our lodge for breakfast. I had observed quite a pile of small boards in the cook's kitchen, but did not comprehend their use, until breakfast was nearly ready, when these boards were placed around on the ground before the guests in such a manner that a board was before a man and his wife. The pie tins were filled with meat and placed before each guest. The coffee poured into the cups and set in the saucers and the sugar passed round.

Quite an improvement over the old skin or bark pieces on which meals had been served. I found Zebaddle's wife had visited the board pile at the trading post and selected the boards from goods boxes for this purpose. This example was contagious. Soon every lodge was supplied with dining boards. So much for one lesson, but more later on.

A short time after this Zebaddle and his family were sent by the tribe to reside for a time in the Cheyenne camps, and I saw no more of them for months.

One day, some new-comers came to camp; two lodges were erected close together and about the middle of the afternoon I noticed a little girl, accompanied by a small boy, both looking uncommonly tidy and clean, going from one chief's lodge to another, and finally they came to mine, with an invitation to their lodge to supper. They were the children of Zebaddle. One taking me by one hand and the other by the other, they led me to their home, the new lodges I had noticed. On entering I found myself in the cook's apartment, and soon noticed everything as it was cooked was carried out.

The chiefs and their wives began to gather in, to the number of about thirty. At this time there were no signs of supper in our lodge, and the guests began to exchange enquiring glances of concern lest some mistake had been made.

Soon, Zebaddle entered announcing—"Supper in readiness," and led the way into the other lodge. Imagine my surprise at finding myself in a dining lodge, furnished with a rude table in the center, about sixteen inches high, formed by driving forked stakes in the ground and lying in these straight cedar poles and upon these boards were laid across, and these were covered with a new red blanket, in imitation of the red tablecloth at the agent's house. In the center of the table was a new tin dish pan, containing the meat and soup, nice warm biscuits were upon a large platter and a pile of red ironstone china plates were placed near the meat and soup, where the host sat; tea-cups, coffee and biscuits by the hostess, knives and forks where the guests were to sit; all seated on the ground.

The host served meat and soup from the pan, the hostess, the biscuits and coffee, after a silent pause, as was observed at the agent's table. The whole was conducted with propriety; a civilized meal in a wild Indian camp. Before I left this little boy presented me with a nicely tanned beaver skin, which I acknowledged by giving him a nice vest, thus ensuring perpetual friendship by an interchange of presents.

In teaching them to make biscuits I washed my hands and arms very thoroughly, telling them that was "strong medicine" in making them good, and they soon realized "Thomissy," as they called me, did not like dirt, so they became more tidy.

(To be concluded.)

TO THE EDITORS OF THE FRIEND:—

Dear Friends:—In your issue of the twenty-third of Eighth Month, you kindly drew attention to the then forthcoming Conference of Christian Pacifists. As wrong impressions may have been spread through the garbled newspaper accounts, I shall be glad if you will allow space in your next issue to state the facts as to the Conference.

The authorities at Long Beach, Cal., after refusing the use of the public auditorium there, intimidated the owners of two other halls which had been promised; it was therefore decided to hold the Conference in Los Angeles; the same thing took place there, but notwithstanding this opposition and discouragement, the opening session was held in a good-sized vacant room in the Douglas Building, where about seventy or eighty met, on the afternoon of Tenth Month 1st.

The police authorities were shortly present, and while most interesting addresses were in progress on the Fellowship of Reconciliation, by Sidney Strong, of Seattle, and Harold Story, a recent graduate from Whittier College, they interrupted the meeting and asserted they had instructions to arrest the Chairman, Robert Whitaker, of Las Gatos, Floyd Hardin, of Atwater, and organizing Secretary of the Conference, and the speaker, Harold Story. A new Chairman was appointed and the meeting was continued without further interruption that day. The three men arrested were bailed out, and an evening meeting was held at a private home, at which they were present.

The three sessions on the 2nd were also held without interruption at two private homes, and the spirit and power of the meetings were most impressive. Similar conditions existed at meetings on the morning and afternoon of the 3rd, but as the meeting gathered for the evening session, just after the devotional service, it was interrupted by a number of uniformed Home Guards and others in civilian dress who forced their way into the house, and making as an excuse for their interference the fact that there was no flag in evidence, began to drag out the men members of the meeting and forced them to get into automobiles, and under guard of an equal or larger number of soldiers and civilians, drove them away to widely separated points, where they were left to find their way back as best they could. A paragraph in the papers that morning from Washington stated that meetings in private homes should not be interfered with.

Most of the meetings were felt to be favored occasions; while the number attending was much reduced by the difficulty of finding the place of meeting, all felt that the banner of God's love was over them, and that much help came to individuals in the strengthening of their faith in the power of love and spiritual force, as against hate and material forces.

Though a large number of nominal Pacifists stood aloof from the movement, it is believed that all who were present at any of the meetings felt they were times of real consecration to a righteous cause.

The trial of the three men who were arrested is set for the fourteenth of Eleventh Month in Los Angeles.

Sincerely thy friend,

IRA S. FRAME.

PASADENA, California.

CONSECRATION.

For life or death I give myself to Thee;
Let me for evermore Thy servant be;
If it should glorify Thee most that I should live,
Grant me each day my strength to Thee to give.

If it should glorify Thee most that I should die,
Take me to live with Thee for aye on high;
Let me but serve Thee with Thy every breath;
Keep me through Christ, Thine own in life and death.

—F. LEWIS BOWEN, in The Living Church.

"C. O.'S."

DEAR FRIEND:—

Saw yesterday the copy of my letter, as it appeared in THE FRIEND. That the date was omitted is indicative of the general turmoil of thought and upset of everything in particular which we were passing through. Now I could write a much smoother account of what happened. We follow a daily program of hikes, clean-up, writing and eating. A visit from Dr. Rhoads, Harold Evans, Geo. Hallett and Bob Taylor was most acceptable. The feeling of uncertainty is, of course, great, but, compared to the lot of "C. O.'S" who in other camps are getting no consideration, our lot is indeed easy. We hope that all possible is being done to influence the Government to make some acceptable ruling of the term "non-combatant." Most of the fellows here are farmers. Others are engineers. About twelve have college degrees of various sorts. Practically all have stated their objections and their decision not to have any part in the military machine. While we hope there will be some way out enabling us to render some constructive service, I believe most of us are ready to stand by our declarations.

I sincerely hope that Friends will be able to alleviate the condition of the men in the other camps.

THE FRIEND, The American Friend, The Discipline and Dymond on War are, I confess, receiving more than usual attention—and I enjoy them.

Sincerely,

HAROLD M. LANE.

CARE 23RD ENGINEERS, Camp Meade, Md., Tenth Month 16, 1917.

NEWS ITEMS.

A LETTER from Alfred Lowry, Jr., bearing date of the 12th ult., states that the copies of THE FRIEND arrive in Paris with a fair degree of regularity. A visit from Francis Goodhue, who had just returned from relief duty at the front, and from C. Canby Balderston, Jr., recently landed at a French port, was the occasion of much pleasant conversation and reminiscence.

In a letter to his American friends, dated Tok o, Japan, Ninth Month 10th, Herbert V. Nicholson describes the activities of a busy summer, among which he mentions camping first with Japanese students, then with boy scouts; travel, and work in Tokio. On the 8th ult., he journeyed to Yokohama to meet Alice Gifford, returning from America with Esther Rhoads. He reports that the voyagers were settling in with Alice Lewis.

[The following letter of gratitude is forwarded by our friend, Charles F. Jenkins. The Committee is for the aid of Alien Enemies imprisoned in England.—Eds.]

109 ST. STEPHENS' HOUSE, Westminster Bridge, S. W., London,
 Ninth Month 18, 1917.

CHARLES F. JENKINS, Treasurer, Philadelphia, Pa.:—

Dear Friend:—It is a great help and encouragement to us to receive the generous installment of $239.10 which American Friends have just sent for our work. We are getting very short of funds, and the need increases rather than diminishes, as prices go up, and boots and clothes wear out, and moreover the work in the internment camps demands constant help. We hardly know what we should do without the splendid help which we get from our Friends in America.

Please accept our most grateful thanks and appreciation.

Thy friend sincerely,

MARION C. FOX,
Hon. Acting Secretary.

From "The Public Ledger."

WHATEVER Violet Oakley accomplishes is wrought in fidelity not alone to the rules of art, but in obedience to the promptings of the spirit whose message she always seeks to convey.

Her great pictures in the Capitol at Harrisburg are not to be taken as "naural decorations" beautifully filling so much wall space with vivid pigment. They must be read with heed to subtle secondary meanings. Their realism calls mysticism into its constant service.

I have urged her to tell me something of her newest work for the Capitol, and this is her reply:

"With all the world at war, with the 'Armies of the Earth' still striving to take the Kingdom of Unity by violence, I have been at work upon what is chronologically the first panel of the Senate suite, 'The Story of the Latch String.'

"I am finding it curiously difficult, although more startlingly significant than ever, to paint this at just this time, to present this miracle of courage and great 'inner light,' to express in the figures of this Friend and his wife the absolute consciousness of the force of spirit, the impulse and impact of love casting out all fear, conquering all enmity, enlightening all darkness. God not merely believed but understood. Clothed in light on this understanding the figure is depicted and the power of this inevitability thrusts back the Indians from the door where the latch string still is hanging out.

"This is, of course, the 'miracle,' the 'marvel.'"

The inscription for this great painting, which will speak for all time to the people of Pennsylvania of the spirit in which Philadelphia and the first plantation began, is from the sixteenth verse of the eleventh chapter of Ezekiel:

"Although I have cast them far off among the heathen, and although I have scattered them among the countries, yet will I be to them as a little sanctuary in the countries where they shall come."

The artist appends also this legend:

"This is the Law of the House. The whole region round about shall be most holy. Behold, this is the Law of the House."

THE JOHN WOOLMAN MEMORIAL ASSOCIATION.—At the Annual Meeting, held on the 13th, the action of the meeting of Second Month last was ratified by the adoption of a Constitution, and the election of the following officers for the ensuing year:—President, Amelia M. Gunmore; Secretary and Treasurer, Richard T. Cudbury; Trustees, Isaac Sharpless, Caroline H. Engle, Annie L. Woolman Jones, Charles F. Jenkins, Alice C. D'Olier, Howard M. Cooper and Edward B. Jones.

A very interesting discussion took place among the twenty-four members present, as to the possibilities for service for this Association, in aiding in the solution of social problems now before the citizens of Mount Holly. The presence of the large encampment at Wrightstown, ten miles away, creates a situation which it is now our duty to meet. The meeting was unanimously in favor of a response to the appeal made by some of the Y. M. C. A. workers now on the ground that we keep the house open throughout the winter, as a place of rest and recreation for those of the religious workers who may wish to get away for a time from the camp life.

H. P. Lansdale, Chief Secretary, writes us:—"There is no doubt, if you decide to open the house, that some of us will use it occasionally." Others have urged us to remain open.

If, however, we keep the house open, the installation of a small heater is essential in order to make the house habitable in cold weather. Some funds we acknowledge with gratitude, but about two hundred and fifty dollars will be required immediately to heat the house, which is so small that the large stove, experimented with last year, took up entirely too much valuable space, besides closing our great fire-place—a valuable social asset. We are entirely equipped in other respects.

If our kind friends who are interested in having the little house fill a need of much more than merely antiquarian importance, will now come forward and aid us with a few dollars, we can at once attempt to carry out the social service to which we are called by our charter. "In the spirit of John Woolman."

AMELIA M. GUMMORE.

Haverford, Pa.

NOTES FROM LETTERS OF ERNEST L. BROWN TO HIS FAMILY IN MOORESTOWN, N. J.—Seventh Month 28th—The farm houses in southern France are mostly concrete and very picturesque, and it is hard to realize that war exists, as one travels from Bordeaux to Paris.

The Y.M.C.A. in Paris is a God-send. I never realized how much good work that organization is doing; they have an entire house where one may feel at liberty to go at any time; free French classes are held, which we have taken advantage of. I have met a number of Haverford fellows there. The Y. M. C. A. workers are the finest set of men I have almost ever seen; most of them are between twenty-five and thirty, although some are older. The English Friends are exceedingly efficient, and are, as a rule, a very pleasant and congenial crowd to work under. When in Paris we were wakened two nights by the fire engine dashing through the streets, blowing its siren as a signal for all lights out, as a German battle plane had been sighted over the outskirts of the city. It was very impressive, no lights in the city, three powerful searchlights sweeping the sky and the French aeroplanes, with their signal lights everywhere. The "all right" bugle blew at one o'clock and no damage had been done.

Eighth Month 12th—We arrived at our station in the zone Fifth-day evening and are comfortably fixed, the "casino" of a hotel now being used as headquarters, while we fellows sleep in huts built by the crowd. We have army cots with mattresses, warm sleeping bags and plenty of plain food. I wish I could tell you more, but descriptions and minute information are prohibited. Our hut here at Sermizac-des-Bains is at the edge of a forest that stretches for miles, in which are wild boars, foxes and smaller animals. I have seen plenty of bear tracks, but no animals as yet.

Eighth Month 19th—I am nearly at the end of my second week in the zone. Last Seventh-day, in a Ford truck, I collected the family wash, done by the women in the village, living in the little portable houses. Second-day I drove a three-ton Gardner truck to a town about forty miles from here, taking two cots to a maternity hospital, where K. E. is tending babies and this morning had the Hotchkiss out, taking supplies to another hospital.

The roads are remarkably good so far considering their use, and the present French roads ten miles behind the lines are any amount better than near home.

We are situated at the headquarters of the district over which the Battle of the Marne was fought in 1914. The village we live in is a centre for the surrounding country of forty or fifty miles in each direction.

It is proposed soon to move to a place farther north, where building is now going on, all the work here being agricultural at present. We see numerous Americans, soldiers and others. A class in French is to be started by the schoolmaster in the village, which I expect to attend in the evenings.

Ninth Month 2nd—The world is still moving rapidly over here. We have just finished overhauling a little Be-Siz English-make runabout, which the dentist will use to make his rounds. One of the fellows, who drives for the builders in the devastated districts farther north, is going home on leave, and I am to be sent to drive in his place. I shall probably be near the scene of action by the time you get this letter. I think this district is about on its feet again, and if we stay much longer we will outlive our welcome. Some people are very loyal, but others are extremely skeptical. I am getting to like the French people immensely, and expect the admiration to increase with greater ability to speak their language. This being First-day eleven of us started about ten-thirty, taking our lunch with us, walked about ten kilometers in kilometer (is five-eighths of a mile) to a village, where there is a beautiful old chateau and a fourteenth century abbey, now crumbling in ruins, we ate our lunch there and started back. After a "wopping" cold supper, we had meeting at eight o'clock.

Ninth Month 16th.—Five fellows and myself came up to Paris in the big truck with two-and-a-half tons of groceries, etc., for the new "équipe" which is being started at Ham, in the Somme district, to which I am going to-morrow.

Ninth Month 24th.—Just a week since I left Paris again and came up here in the Somme country. There were five of us on the truck, beside about two tons of provisions. We are about seventy miles from Paris, but having such a load, we could only make about twelve miles an hour. I am driving a French car that will carry about a ton and, although pretty old, steps right along. This work is most interesting. I really feel now as if I am doing something. The portable houses are being put up for the people when they return, but at present, the civilian population is almost nil. At one of the villages where the fellows have six houses finished only one is occupied. In fact, the woman who occupies this is the only civilian in the village. Her husband and two sons are prisoners in Germany. She was carried away, but has been allowed to return to prepare some kind of a home surrounded by six hundred army horses and soldiers galore. She had sixteen horses, twenty-seven cows and a good-sized house before the war, she now has the clothes on her back, some blankets, two beds, a stove, which I took her day before yesterday, and one pair of sheets. With some little money which she had saved from the wreck, she is starting cheerfully to begin over again. To-morrow I take an English Friend to distribute clothes to the people. It is really a great satisfaction to know you are actually helping people. I must stop now, as I have been driving all day and am pretty tired.

A CASE of small-pox, originating in the Cattaraugus Reservation, developed in a home adjoining the Friends' School at Tunesassa. We have the following word relative to the situation there:—

TENTH MONTH 19, 1917.

The small pox has been confined to one case so far, and we are hoping that the worst is over, as the average time of incubation is past. The doctor placed a guard over the Crow house within a half hour of the discovery, and it is still maintained.

We have all been vaccinated and have forbidden visiting altogether. John G. Haines in a letter suggests closing the school, but I doubt if the authorities would permit it, as a strict quarantine is maintained on the Cattaraugus Reservation, where a number of our children live.

The laths are nearly all on the new cottage, and we expect the plasterers next week. It is difficult to say when it will be ready for occupancy, but I think before the first of the year. I feel pretty safe in saying that the cost will not exceed the contract price, although several features have been added. How much lower, I cannot yet say.

The other improvements though will exceed considerably the first estimate, as so many additional things have been ordered, from time to time, and the price of materials has steadily advanced.

I think, however, nothing has been done which was not much needed, and the improvements are of a permanent character. Some of those ordered for the building are not yet completed on account of the difficulty in securing material and labor.

W. B. R.

REPORT OF TREASURER OF AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE.

WEEK ENDING TENTH MONTH 22, 1917.

Amount reported last week	8195,777.00
Received from 24 meetings	7,299.10
Received from 13 individuals	1,015.35

$204,091.54

CHARLES F. JENKINS, Treasurer

THE AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE has obtained the following list of conscientious objectors at Camp Meade, Maryland, who, on account of their uncomproising stand against any form of service under the military, have, in accordance with the general instructions sent out by the Secretary of War Baker, been segregated and are not required to perform any duties. They are now with the 23rd Engineers, and are kept in barracks by themselves under guards with whom they have come to be on good terms. Although virtually prisoners they are given more than ordinary liberty and consideration. Twice a day they are taken out on bikes, and are given the regular army food. These young men who are courageously bearing the brunt of the battle of all those who are conscientiously opposed to war in any form are willing that their names and the stand they have taken should be made public, in the hope that by so doing they may be of some service to other young men who are now facing the draft.

CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS AT CAMP MEADE.

Arnold, George R., Brethren, Hagerstown, Md.
 Baer, Isaac N., Old Mennonite, Hagerstown, Md., R. D. 6.
 Bally, Joshua L. Jr., Attender Friends, Harford, Pa.
 Barnes, Raymond, Brethren (Meeting), Saverthburg, Md.
 Bernhart, Edwin, Assembly of God, 122 Plum Street, Reading, Pa.
 Bo's, Wilbur R., Brethren, Waynesboro, Pa.
 Boteler, William J., The Christian Church, Cedarvale, Md.
 Bradford, Harry C., Friend, Fifteenth and Race Streets, 6035 Park Avenue, Philadelphia.
 Braulock, Henry, Reformed Church, 1103 Rising Sun Avenue, Phila.
 Brufaker, Harry L., Brethren in Christ, Mount Joy, Pa.
 Cnig, George, Friend, Fifteenth and Race Streets, 6123 Oxford Street, Phila.
 Cunningham, Joseph C., Brethren, Hagerstown, Md.
 Demuth, William H., Brethren, Waynesboro, Pa.
 Dotterer, David E., Brethren, New Windsor, Md.
 Elersole, Benjamin, Old Mennonite, Lancaster, Pa.
 Ekroth, Alfred, Brethren, Elizabethtown, Pa.
 Ellis, Amos J., Brethren, Collegeville, Pa.
 Folz, Edgar M., Brethren, Hagerstown, Md.
 Fox, Lester, Brethren, Quakertown, Pa.
 Frederick, Isaac O., Old Mennonite, Harleysville, Pa.
 Frost, Clarence E., Seventh-day Adventist, Ballstown, Va.
 Galner, Leopold B., Jew, 2235 S. Fifth Street, Phila.
 Gehman, Walter C., Mennonite Brethren in Christ, Emaus, Pa.
 Giebert, Timothy D., Mennonite Brethren in Christ, Bethlehem, Pa.
 Geisinger, Raymond, International Bible Students, Pottstown, Pa.
 Hagaman, Wilford P. C., Friend, Fifteenth and Race Streets, 1566 Adams Street, Frankford, Phila.
 Harly, Arthur R., Brethren, R. D. 1, Norristown, Pa.
 Harshman, Gorman L., Brethren, Frederick, Md.
 Hawkins, R. Maurine, Christian Church, Brooklyn, Md.
 Hege, Jonas, Old Mennonite, Hagerstown, Md.
 Herr, Benjamin J., United Christian, Hummelstown, Pa.
 Hicks, E. Russell, Brethren, Clear Spring, Md.
 Hoffman, Wray B., Attender Friends Meeting, 513 E. Chelton Avenue, Germantown.
 Kauffman, Herbert C., Mennonite Brethren in Christ, Zion Hill, Pa.
 Keable, Ralph D., Brethren, Mapleville, Md.
 Kaelle, Russell E., Brethren, Boones oro, Md.
 Kershner, David E., Brethren, Williamsport, Md.
 Klein, Norman J., Brethren, Mt. Airy, Md.
 Landis, Victor W., Old Mennonite, Lititz, Pa.
 Lane, Harold M., Friend, Fourth and Arch Streets, 20 S. Twelfth Street, Phila.
 Laughlin, C. Fred, Brethren, Maugans, Md.
 Lederach, Marcus, Old Mennonite, Lederachville, Pa.
 Loeb, Alfred H., Jew, The St. James, Phila.
 McClay, Robert, Assembly of God, Thorpe's Lane, Chestnut Hill, Phila.
 Metzler, Harvey, Old Mennonite, Farmersville, Pa.
 Mountney, Joseph, New Mennonite, Plumstedville, Pa.
 Myer, Melvin, Old Mennonite, Mainland, Pa.
 Myer, Melvin, Old Mennonite, Bareville, Pa.
 Newcomer, Frank C., Old Mennonite, Millersville, Pa.
 Peachey, Orrie G., Anash, Belleville, Pa.
 Ransay, Andrew, Christian Church, Box 93, Brooklyn, Md.
 Reichard, John R., Brethren, Fairplay, Md.
 Rice, William, Old Mennonite, Pipersville, Pa.
 Roop, John D., Brethren, Westminster, Md.
 Sines, Perry H., Brethren, Sines, Md.
 Smith, Raymond, Brethren, Royersford, Pa.
 Snavely, Harry S., No Church, Lititz, Pa.
 Spaldie, Virgil, Brethren, Quakertown, Pa.
 Spoorlein, Franklin E., Brethren, Accident, Md.
 Stalder, Henry, Friend, Fifteenth and Race Streets, Sandy Spring, Md.
 Stamm, Howard, Brethren, Mountville, Pa.
 Thorp, Arthur G., Friend, Fourth and Arch Streets, Media, Pa.
 Trasken, Morris, Jew, 620 Snyder Avenue, Phila.
 Walter, Sydney, Seventh-day Adventist, Silver Spring, Md.

Ward, John, Old Mennonite, Souderton, Pa.
Wishard, John M., Brethren, Boonesboro, Md.
Yoder, John C., Amish, Belleville, Pa.

REPRESENTATIVE MEETING.—At a meeting of the Representative Meeting, held Tenth Month 19th, with twenty-eight members present, the subject of aid to Conscientious Objectors, and the best method of co-ordinating our help with that of others was considered. To the following Friends already under appointment was entrusted the further care of these important tasks: Samuel L. Whitson, Isaac Sharpless, Edward G. Rhoads, Charles S. Carter, Joseph Rhoads, Brinton P. Cooper, John L. Balderston, William Bishop, Isaac Powell Leeds, Alexander C. Wood, George M. Warner and J. Henry Bartlett. Each Quarterly Meeting was thus represented. This Committee was encouraged to keep in close touch with the situation, and was empowered to employ a secretary to facilitate reference and prompt attention in cases of need.

Toward the close of the meeting, a member encouraged Friends present (and the message is for Friends everywhere) not to be deterred by cries of "treason," from an honest and opportune expression of our testimonies, including that against all war.

During the course of the meeting, Edward G. Rhoads gave a review of the recent visit he had made with others to Camp Meade. It was decided to incorporate the substance of this in the minutes as a matter of important and interesting record. The Clerk was directed to call a special session of the meeting next month, the feeling being that at a time like the present our regular meetings should be held more frequently than the rates enforce.

The meeting was informed through minute from Caln Quarterly Meeting that Mary Bacon Parke had been appointed in the place of Morris S. Cope (deceased).

At Camp Meade matters continue much as previously reported. Different officers of the day make conflicting and more or less trying rules as to the freedom of movement in the vicinity of the barracks, or as to roll call.

Charles D. Bonsach, appointed by Maryland Eastern District (Dunkard) to care for their men in camp, was allowed to have service here this morning—the first near approach to such that some have had for several weeks. His being here was most acceptable. Four or five times he has been here already to chat with the twenty-five or more Dunkards detained with the C. O.'s.

The meeting held monthly at Mount Holly, N. J., was attended on the 21st inst. by about twenty-five persons, among whom were visitors from Bucks County, Moorestown and Rancocas.

MEDIA FRIENDS' BIBLE CLASS is held in the basement room of the meeting-house, on Third Street, Media, Pa., after the close of the First-day meeting for worship. This winter, the class is following an outline entitled, "What is Quakerism?" based largely on Edward Grubb's book of that name. Many of the lessons refer to the biographies of Friends who have exemplified the tenets and principles of our Society in their lives.

ROBERT L. KELLY, ex-President of Earlham, has been asked by the editor of Scribner's Magazine, to write a four or five thousand word article for that magazine discussing the effect of the war upon American colleges.

The following is the wording of the exemption clause in the Canadian Conscription bill:

"That he conscientiously objects to the undertaking of combant service and is prohibited from so doing by the tenets and articles of faith, in effect on the sixth day of July, 1917, of any organized religious denomination existing and well recognized in Canada at such date, and to which he in good faith belongs; and if any of the grounds of such application be established, a certificate of exemption shall be granted to such man."

ROBERT L. KELLY, late President of Earlham, has accepted the Directorship of the high school department of the Community School of Religious Education of Oak Park, Illinois. This is one of the most noted schools of religious education in the country.

In acknowledging to a Friend a contribution towards relief in Palestine, Emily Oliver (152 School House Lane, Germantown, Philadelphia) writes: "I am so glad to have this now, as it will reach the sufferers before winter commences and will be there in time to relieve the distress when the need is greatest."

CORRESPONDENCE.

TENTH MONTH 20, 1917.

TO THE EDITORS OF THE FRIEND:—

Dear Friends.—An interview by a Public Ledger reporter, since reprinted in THE FRIEND of Tenth Month 18th, with the conscientious objectors at Camp Meade, has been called to my attention, and I desire to correct any misunderstanding that may result from the peculiar distortion that the reporter put on my words. I told the reporter that I was not a Friend, but that my views on war were identical with those advocated by Friends, that I considered it just as wrong to help another man take part in war as to do so myself, and that consequently I could not become part of the military machine in any way. Instead of this, I am reported as saying that I regret that the tenets of my faith bar me from a uniform and rifle, and that I would be glad if my religion did not forbid my participation in warfare.

While further comment may appear unnecessary, I would like opportunity to state that I believe that a man whose conscience tells him to participate in war, but who hides behind a church, the doctrines of which he does not approve, is no better than a man who makes his conscience over to a government not responsible to him. The Public Ledger, by implying that Friends coerce their members against their judgment, has done great injustice to that Society.

Very sincerely,

JOSHUA L. BAILY, JR.

Care 23rd Regiment Engineers, Camp Meade, Md.

NOTICES.

REQUEST FOR EXTRA COPIES OF FOREIGN MISSIONARY REPORTS.—Extra copies of the Annual Reports of the Foreign Missionary Association of Friends of Philadelphia for the years 1883-1888, 1890, 1892, 1893, 1894 are greatly desired. Friends who are through with these Reports will kindly send them promptly to Sara M. Longstreth, Friends' Institute, 20 S. Twelfth Street, Philadelphia.

SOUTHERN QUARTERLY MEETING OF FRIENDS (Conservative), of North Carolina, will convene at New Hope, near Edgar, N. C., on Seventh-day, Tenth Month 27th, and the Representative Meeting the preceding day. Those from the north and west wishing to attend may reach there via Washington, D. C., and Greensboro, N. C. Notify Cyndrella K. Davis, Edgar, N. C.

NORTH CAROLINA YEARLY MEETING OF FRIENDS (Conservative) will be held at Cedar Grove, in the town of Woodland, N. C., beginning Eleventh Month 3rd, meeting for Ministers and Elders the day preceding, at 2 P. M. Those from the north and west, desirous of attending, may leave foot of Light Street, Baltimore, at 6.30 P. M., arriving at Norfolk, Va., 7 A. M., next morning, remain on boat until they reach Portsmouth, then take Seaboard train for Woodland, by way of Boykins, Va. Friends will be met at Woodland. Those expecting to attend should notify Benjamin P. Brown, George, N. C.

MEETINGS from Tenth Month 28th to Eleventh Month 3rd:—

Gwynedd Monthly Meeting, at Northstown, First-day, Tenth Month 28th, at 10.30 P. M.

Chester, Pa., at Media, Second-day, Tenth Month 29th, at 7.30 P. M.

Concord, at Concordville, Third-day, Tenth Month 30th, at 9.30 A. M.

Woodbury, Third-day, Tenth Month 30th, at 8 P. M.

Abington, at Horsham, Fourth-day, Tenth Month 31st, at 10.15 A. M.

Birmingham, at West Chester, Fourth-day, Tenth Month 31st, at 10 A. M.

Salem, Fourth-day, Tenth Month 31st, at 10.30 A. M.

Goshen, at Malvern, Fifth-day, Eleventh Month 1st, at 10 A. M.

DIED.—Tenth Month 12, 1917, at her home near Cheltenham, Pa. MARGARET W. HAINES, aged eighty-six; a member of Germantown Monthly Meeting.

Friends Arch St. Centre

304 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Provides comfortable accommodations for guests by the day or week. Meals at moderate prices.

AMELIA D. FEATHERSTONE, Matron.

PHONE—MAREET 1571.

THE CHEYNEY SITUATION

Friends of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting have as a legacy of the efforts put forth in the 60's in the interest of training colored teachers a unique plant at Cheyney. The Cheyney Training School for Teachers appeals for help to the descendants of those who originated the idea. The School is doing a great work, but it is cramped in many ways by a lack of funds.

An efficient staff of teachers and a student body numbering 100 present an unusual opportunity for the wise expenditure of energy and money.

The Managers can do little more than administer the Trust and must look to Friends and others, who have the means, to supply what is essential for the proper advancement of the School's interest.

Leslie P. Hill, Principal, is always ready to offer timely suggestions to any who have it on their hearts to assist in the laudable work that is carried on at Cheyney.

Because of the conditions which must be met, if the School is to continue its good work, the Board of Managers feel free to request Friends to include Cheyney among the charities to which they contribute, and ask that checks shall be drawn in favor of and mailed to

WILLIAM BIDDLE, Treasurer,
119 S. Fourth Street, Philadelphia.

HARVEY T. WEBER

TAILOR

207-208 HALE BLDG., 1326 CHESTNUT ST.

The custom of Friends specially solicited

PUBLIC STENOGRAPHER

GEORGE B. COCK, Liberty Building

Established 1896. Experience 39 years; Medical 13

WALL PAPERS—All Grades
WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER

Custom of Friends Specially Solicited

FRANK C. BUEHL

Successor to S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON

902 SPRING GARDEN ST. PHILADELPHIA

Opposite Spring Garden Station, Phila., & Reading R. R.

ESTABLISHED 1849. BELL 'PHONE.

Hajoca

Pedestal Lavatory

Simple and beautiful in design. Its plain, smooth surfaces are easy to keep clean. Equipped with the Hajoca Waste, which prevents backing up of residue from previous ablutions.

Come see our model bathrooms. Our showrooms are within easy reach of City Hall. Hajoca Book, free.

HAINES, JONES
& CADBURY CO.
1130-1144 Ridge
Ave.

(at 12th and Spring Garden Streets)

WILLIAM S. YARNALL

MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

128 SOUTH SIXTEENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE MATERIAL THAT WE SELL

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS

PHILADELPHIA

GLASLYN-CHATHAM

PARK PLACE

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

A Family Home of Established Reputation.
Open Throughout the Year.

NATHAN L. JONES.

ALFRED C. HAINES

Building Glass and Paints

56 N. Front St., Philadelphia

WANTED—A COMPANIONABLE YOUNG WOMAN to assist with children, where other help is kept.
Address "G."

THE FRIEND, 207 Walnut Place.

THE HOLMES PRESS

Printers

J. L. Engle, Pres.

1336-40 CHERRY ST. PHILA.

RESIDENCE: 254 S. 44th St. BELL 'PHONE: Baring 2084X

WILLIAM OAKES

Plumbing and Heating Contractor
ALSO LEAD BURNING

260 SOUTH TENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA

BELL 'PHONE: Elibert 2666.

GIRARD TRUST CO.

BROAD and CHESTNUT STS.

CAPITAL
AND
SURPLUS } $10,000,000

Acts as Executor, Trustee, Guardian,
Administrator, Assignee and Receiver.
Safe to Rent in Burglar-proof Vaults.
Interest Allowed on Deposits. :: ::

E. B. MORRIS
PRESIDENT

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use
PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BREAD made from the entire whole grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator. Sold by all good grocers in Philadelphia.

Write for particulars to

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.

10th & Susquehanna Ave., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

TO ADVERTISEES.—THE FRIEND is now open for selected advertisements at the following rates: One inch, 50 cents, or 4 cents a line; no insertion for less than 25 cents. Long term rates given on application.

Friends having real estate to rent or sell, also those desiring board or rooms, should find THE FRIEND an excellent medium for reaching interested parties.

Standing business cards are also solicited.

FRIENDS OR OTHERS WHO ARE THINKING
of attending Cornell the coming year will find comfortable rooms in a Friends' family, at reasonable price, at 228 Linden Avenue, Ithaca, N. Y. Five minutes' walk
from Campus. EDWARD WOOD.

WANTED—A CARETAKER FOR THE INDIAN boys at Friends' School, Tunesassa, N. Y.—Preferably one who can teach manual training. Applications for the position may be made to
WM. B. RHOADS, Supt., Tunesassa, N. Y.
HENRY HALL, Friends' Hospital, Frankford, Phila.
ANNA WALTON, Myrtle Pa.

WANTED—IN A FRIEND'S FAMILY OF TWO adults, a working home-keeper; a Friend preferred.
Please reply with references to "A." THE FRIEND.

FOR RENT (FURNISHED)—A PLEASANT HOME
in Moorestown, N. J., on Main Street, overlooking the Valley, heated by hot water; lighted by electricity; near railroad station; no trees passing the door; near Friends'
Meeting and school on same side of street; garage.
Apply to M. W. STOKES,
160 E. Main St., Moorestown, N. J.

POCONO MANOR INN

OPEN ALL YEAR

Situated in the beautiful Pocono Mountains in northeastern Pennsylvania is most attractive the year round.

Golf, Tennis, Bowling, Driving, Motoring, Swimming and Boating are but few of the recreations found at this popular resort.

J. W. HURLEY, Mgr., Pocono Manor, Pa.
(Pocono Summit Station, D., L. & W. K. R.)

WOOLMAN SCHOOL

A FRIENDS' SCHOOL FOR SOCIAL AND RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.

COURSES OF STUDY, FALL TERM, 1917.
History of New Testament Times; Old Testament Literature; Literature and Principles of Friends, given by Elbert Russell; The Life of Paul, J. Henry Cadbury; Methods of Social Betterment, J. Byron Deacon; First-day School Methods, Annie Hillborn.

Intensive work in conversational French will be provided for students wishing to prepare for reconstruction work in France.

Fall Term began Tenth Month 10.
For admission apply to

ELBERT RUSSELL, Director,
Woolman School, Swarthmore, Pa.

SEE WALKER & KEPLER

FOR

Good Electrical Work

531 CHESNUT ST. -1- PHILA.

W. B. WEAVER
UNDERTAKER and EMBALMER

550-552 N. 5TH ST., PHILA., PA.

Special Attention Given to Funerals
In and Out of the City. Also Chapel
Accommodations for Funerals

BELL 'PHONE : ESTABLISHED 1880

Philadelphia's
Representative Store

ELKINS, MORRIS & CO.

BANKERS

REPRESENTATIVES

WM. E. CADBURY
PAUL W. BROWN
JAMES P. MAGILL

LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

JOSEPH G. FOGG
FUNERAL DIRECTOR and EMBALMER
S. W. COR. 16TH AND RACE STREETS
Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals
BELL 'PHONE SPRUCE 1646

HARRY S. LEE
313 WALNUT STREET
PAINTER AND GRAINER

ANTIQUE and OFFICE FURNITURE RESTORED
JOBGING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO
ESTIMATES

W. J. MacWatters

Let Me
Help You

In Selecting Your

RUGS AND CARPETS

Domestic - - - Oriental
ALL WEAVES

The Home of Bunhar Wilton
"DURABLE AS IRON"

HARDWICK & MAGEE CO.
1220 Market Street

R. C. Ballinger Ernest R. Yarnall John A. Stratton
TELEPHONES

Bell—Filbert 26-15 - - Keystone—Race 637

R. C. BALLINGER & CO.
CONTRACTORS and BUILDERS

218 N. Thirteenth St. Philadelphia.

Assoc. M. AM. Soc. C. E. Bell 'Phone—Lombard 3412

EDWIN M. EVANS
CONTRACTOR & BUILDER

My jobbing department is well equipped,
prompt and efficient

321 S. LAWRENCE ST. : : PHILA.

M. GATCHEL
126 N. 21st St., PHILA.
MILLINERY, PLAIN AND FANCY
Phone, Spruce 3032

RAILROAD AND PUBLIC UTILITY BONDS

FOR

CONSERVATIVE INVESTMENT.

FULL PARTICULARS ON REQUEST.

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

622 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE
PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

THE following timely books, mostly of those recommended by the Social Order Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, are for sale at Friends' Book Store, No. 304 Arch Street, Philadelphia.

- "The Church and the Hour." Vida D. Scudder, . . . $1.00
- "The Social Problem." C. A. Ellwood, . . . 1.25
- "The Abolition of Poverty." J. H. Hollander, . . . 75
- "Christianizing the Social Order." Walter Rauschenbusch, . . . 1.50
- "The Day of Our Visitation." William Littleboy, . . . 50
- "A Word of Remembrance and Caution to the Rich." John Woolman, . . . 05

FRIENDS' BIBLE ASSOCIATION

HAS ITS HEADQUARTERS AT

207 WALNUT PLACE : PHILA.

It is able to furnish Bibles and Testaments to Schools and Bible-classes and would be glad to have Friends everywhere acquaint themselves with the needs of their neighborhoods and allow the Bible Association to help them procure the books they may want. : :

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 91.

FIFTH-DAY, ELEVENTH MONTH 1, 1917.

No. 18.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price $2.00 a year in Advance.

Publisher, DAVIS H. FORSTRE.

Editors { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
 DAVIS H. FORSTRE,
 MARY WARD.

Make remittances payable to

THE FRIEND,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

"Any chapel was impossible. It is just this specialization that has been the trouble with religion. It is just this tendency to make it the business of a special sort of man, in a special sort of building on a special day. Every man, every building, every day belongs equally to God. That is my conviction. I think the only possible existing sort of religious meeting is something after the fashion of the Quaker meeting. In that there is no professional religious man at all; not a trace of the sacrifices to the ancient Gods. . . . And no room for a professional religious man." —H. G. WELLS.

BE PATIENT.

One of the sweetest Names by which the Divine Being has revealed His heart is that which calls Him "the God of Patience." And truly, human history, and our own lives in particular, abundantly illustrate this Divine characteristic. Israel's watchmen, as they looked abroad upon wrongs that called for righting and evils that demanded judgment, cried out: "Lord, how long?" for they marveled at the Divine patience that suffered the wrong and bore with the evil. And yet was their "how long" cry, "faith's mighty question," as one of old put it, for it implied that the long, strange silence of God would be broken one day.

Rightly understood the patience of God is the salvation of man, and our Lord, as the incarnate Word, was and is the perfect embodiment of that patience. "Sit thou at my right hand until—;" from henceforth expecting till—;" are words which unveil the mystery of the strong, silent, patient Christ. His forerunner began to doubt Him because his hopes of drastic dealings with the evils of society, the hewing down of corrupt growths and the burning up of the chaff in a baptism of fiery judgment, did not materialize in the letter under the ministry of the Son of Man. He was out of sympathy with the new spirit. And therefore said the Master: "Blessed is he that shall not be offended in Me"—offended with my patience. But may we not believe that the lonely prisoner in the tower of Macharea, before his martyrdom, like him in whose power and spirit he had come, got a glimpse of the dispensation of the still, small voice, superior to his whirlwind, earthquake and fire ministry? He, we may trust, came to rest his troubled heart in the mighty patience of God.

And we, too, need patience—patience, it seems to me, with one another, with ourselves, and with God. We need patience with our fellows, because, after all, our brother is a veiled mystery to us. We so easily judge by the appearance only. I believe that in the spiritual and eternal world will be a great transvaluation of all values. We hastily condemn now, not knowing the secrets of human hearts. We are ready to call down fire from heaven on our Samaritan neighbor, like the sons of Zebedee, when with a little patience, even Samaria shall welcome Christ under the preaching of Philip the evangelist. We may marvel that Troas should be forbidden territory to the apostle, when after a few years of patient waiting, he could write from that very Troas: "A great door and effectual is opened to me of the Lord." We may despair of a vacillating John Mark to-day and impatiently turn him down as Paul once did, and yet the day may come, as it came to him, when, forsaken by others, a John Mark may prove our comfort and support. After all, the most of those we have to do with are still in the making. And if the promising blossoms of earlier days have dropped off, let us not think there has been a going back because in the place of the fragrant and beautiful flower, appears the hard, sour, green fruit. Have patience. God's sunshine—yea and His frosts, too—shall succeed in ripening and sweetening what is unpalatable to-day. Be patient with Jacob—he will yet become an Israel. Be patient with impulsive Simon, he will one day become a Cephas, i.e., a rock-man. Be patient with the son of thunder; when he has become "the disciple whom Jesus loved" (because he needs affection more than others), the sunshine of that love will gradually expand his sectarian mind, soften his bigotry, and sweeten the acidity of his spirit, and yet leave him as loyal to Truth as before.

And do we not need patience with ourselves? Thy prayer for holiness has been answered by inward turmoil. The hidden corruptions are brought to the surface, as the scum in the new wine, in the process of clarifying, and the dross, while the silver is in the refining pot. Wouldst thou have a Pharisee's holiness? A mere cloak of hypocrisy? Have patience then, and believe that thou art not "the old man" who is now passing through the process of inward crucifixion, but thou art "the new man," crying, it may be, out of the depths of self-despair, and waiting for the Lord, more than they that watch for the morning.

And above all, we need patience with God. God is never in a hurry, and yet is never behind time. There is a "fulness of the time" for every fresh move in the kingdom of God and in the education of the race. And God can afford to be calm, seeing He has all eternity to work in, and He will not let us hustle Him. He is working out His purposes to-day. The great world-war with no apparent termination is as much under His control as the Assyrian of old, who was the embodiment of military pride, and whose doctrine was "might is right." At the appointed time "the stone cut out without hands" will demolish every evil image man has set up for himself to bow down to. There is much in our boasted twentieth century civilization that is not worth preserving. God's pilgrim people still look for a city which hath moral foundations, whose builder and maker is God, and whose fellow-workers they are as they live and labor, not in their own energy, but in His Spirit. And though the smoke and dust of battle may for a season obscure the vision of this coming City which God is patiently building, let us keep clear of becoming entangled with those things which can never form a part of its structure, remembering the words of the Apocalypse: "He that leaeth into captivity shall go into captivity; he that killeth with the sword shall be killed with the sword. Here is the patience and the faith of the saints."

CC BY-NC-SA 4.0
WORLDWIDE COMMONS

MAX I. REICH.

IN AND OUT OF INDIANA.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

What a persistent thin tradition is even in insignificant matters! When that sterling veteran, Nathan Hunt, more than fifty years ago, led the pioneer Friends into Indiana, from the east, it was a long toilsome undertaking demanding no slight outlay of courage and strength. Now Richmond, "the Quaker City" of Indiana, is little more than fifteen hours out of Philadelphia. We commit ourselves to the luxurious Pullman overnight and hardly have breakfast till we have come to our destination. We continue, however, to think and to speak in the traditional manner, as though Indiana were far away!

The city of Richmond makes little delay in extending a pleasant welcome to the inbound traveler. Its broad, well-shaded avenues and comfortable inviting homes reach well down to the railway station. One is barely five minutes from the centre of the city upon arrival at the station. The very first remark of the feminine part of the editorial we is to the effect that this appears to be a real "greene countrie towne," after the dream of William Penn. Can this aspect be attributed to Friendly influence?

A first objective in the trip which made these editorial notes possible was Earlham College. The feminine part again of the editorial we had known its sheltering care, for a term, while it still had a preparatory department. Its development into a full-fledged college without preparatory appendages presented a point of unusual interest to us, while numerous marks of a time quite removed into the past revived old associations and the memory of schoolmate names. Are there any pleasures to which one responds more cordially!

At the hotel in the centre of the town they represented the college as quite beyond walking distance, but a trolley would take us "by the gate." We found it a most pleasant, easy walk, perhaps a little in excess of a mile. The old covered bridge over the Whitewater had disappeared. A temporary affair now has its place, but a substantial concrete structure, with dignified arches, is rapidly making the span. The entrance to the campus is through an appropriate gateway of buff brick. A quiet but pleasing style of architecture in the gateway and waiting-booth for trolley passengers suggests the restraint of good taste and determined simplicity which we found a general characteristic of the commodious buildings. Nothing offends by the suggestion of an extravagant mis-use of good money. Earlhamites, new and old, have reason to love the quiet beauty of their campus. It at once has a scholastic feeling. In buildings embowered in such trees one would expect the quiet of study and reflection to prevail. There are five substantial buildings, the catalogue may list more. The centre of interest to a scholar of the preparatory period is Earlham Hall. How it suggests old Westtown, and what a poignant feeling it excites as one remembers what might have been made of the old building there, had the two upper stories been taken off and an administration building made of the remainder. We might then have had separate unit dormitories and what not! Let us be glad that Earlham Hall and Founders' at Haverford still stand!

The young people who make the college—more than three hundred of them—are best seen at the morning chapel exercise. One regrets that united silence seems to have no place in this half hour devotional period. If a great school congregation like that at the West Chester Normal, where most of the students are not Friends, can make an effective and liberal use of this means of religious expression, should Friends find it too difficult? The student body makes an engaging appearance. One would at once say they are a fine, earnest lot. Nor is this feeling other than confirmed in meeting some of them. The wholesome atmosphere of the place is an undoubted asset of great value.

First-day in Richmond offers a choice of five meetings for attendance, if that at the College is counted. Is there any other city of the size (about 30,000) where this is true? Speaking accurately, they are all five, services, as distinguished from meetings. We were able to be present at three of them and our notes not only record what we observed, but also some conclusions based on other observations as a background during the past twenty-five years or longer in similar environments. The "revival movement" in American Quakerism has quite completely "churched" much of the Society of Friends. The three services we attended in Richmond represented some variety, but in essentials were alike. There was a fairly definite program of singing, including from three to five hymns; a solo in one case, a duet in another, and a quartet in a third. Two of the three places had choirs, and in one of them a leader used a baton. Compared with singing amongst members of the Society twenty-five years ago, one might note a great advance in skill and in ability to make the engagement a united one. The ministry in all three of the meetings was what would be classed as teaching ministry. In one instance matter and manner were deeply impressive. In the others there was no lack of earnestness and of a gathering spirit. This was evident despite definite marks of professionalism. In two of the meetings silence for brief periods had a place and a seasoning effect. In no case was there a crowded congregation. Considering the size of the actual membership the attendance would be counted as good. On noting the absence of young people it was explained that they had been present at the Bible School.

Of definite Quaker teaching on these three occasions we heard none. Our brethren of other denominations would have been at home in any one of the services. The congregations all gave evident signs of a valuable cohesive quality. So far as the appearance of public worship betrays the spirit of groups they are in love and unity with one another. No one is allowed to escape from the meetings without a hearty greeting and hand shake. Many of the members maintain the marks of an inheritance of restraint and self-possession. The noblest type of "the Quaker of the olden time" persists in some degree.

The home hospitality amongst these Friends has lost nothing of the traditional willingness "to entertain strangers," even where the probability of meeting "angels unawares" is very limited! And these homes, even where they have unmistakable marks of wealth, have preserved the spirit of simplicity to a degree quite exceptional in the east. One change we venture to note seems to have come with the passing years. That is a frankness in discussing Friendly problems without the sensitiveness of feeling that all their changes have been right and all resistance of change wrong. Indeed, it was in a Richmond home that we were told of a four-year old visitor from Philadelphia who pulled her mother's dress during a meeting service and said, "Mother, this isn't meeting, it's church." Before making a positive declaration one would need a wider canvass than we have been able to make, but we did hear from numerous sources that a pressing problem of present-day Quakerism in the west is how to restore the personal responsibility for worship by a united silent waiting. This in a sense is more our present problem than theirs. If we could so vitalize our method of worship that it would develop more and better gifts, grip the young people and draw the hungry multitudes, we would not have to argue with them. Can London and Philadelphia and the smaller bodies in America, where the ancient method of holding meetings prevail, do this? A frankness like that we noted in the west would force us to admit that we have very often failed miserably in this effort.

The point of special attraction to Friends at Richmond this year was the Five Years' Meeting. The next issue of these notes will cover that interest. Two or three items from the meetings are included in this number of THE FRIEND.

J. H. B.

TO THE FIVE YEARS' MEETING TO BE HELD AT RICHMOND, INDIANA, 1917:—

Dear Friends.—It seems to me that the Society of Friends during the past century were doing somewhat as the warring nations of the world are doing to-day, bringing the Society into the condition of a divided house. Concerning which our Saviour said, "Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; and every city or house divided against itself shall not stand." Nevertheless I firmly believe that if the members of the different branches of the Society would be individually faithful to the inshining light of Truth in their own hearts, and patiently wait till "endued with power from on high," that will enable them to stand firmly upon that sure foundation of true Christianity upon which George Fox stood, then all branches of the Society will be again re-united. "For they shall see eye to eye when the Lord shall bring again Zion." The Society of Friends will then be able to do far more than it is now doing in promoting the cause of peace and good-will among men.

And it is my earnest desire that all members of the Society, everywhere, who have come to the years of religious understanding might in all sincerity of heart be able to say, "O Lord, open thou mine eyes that I may see more clearly the stepping-stones upon which my feet should tread; and strengthen thou me that I may do my part in rebuilding the walls of Zion."

This declaration of Holy Writ would then be verified to us as a people. "And they that shall be of thee, shall build the old waste places, thou shalt raise up the foundations of many generations and thou shalt be called the Repairer of the breach, the Restorer of the paths to dwell in."

With love, your friend,

JOB S. GIDLEY.

NORTH DARTMOUTH, MASS., TENTH MONTH 3, 1917.

MESSAGES FROM FIVE YEARS' MEETING.

"The Five Years' Meeting of American Friends, now in session in this city, sends to our President, bowed as he is under the weight of leadership in this world crisis, a message of appreciation and greeting. We have repeatedly been baptized into earnest prayer that God's guidance and power may be granted to thee, to ourselves and our nation and to the world in travail that the principles of justice, love and good-will may triumph and that a new day of righteousness, universal brotherhood and permanent peace may soon come to the world from the hands of an Almighty God."

The message to Secretary Baker read:

"The Five Years' Meeting of Friends, now in session, representing 80,000 American Friends, unanimously urges that drafted Friends who hold Form 174 be turned over to the American Friends' Service Commission for reconstruction work in France and in other self-sacrificing work."

NOT UNDERSTOOD.

Not understood, we move along asunder,
Our paths grow wider as the seasons creep,
Along the years we marvel and we wonder
Why life is life. And then we fall asleep—
Not understood.

Not understood, we gather false impressions
And hug them closer as the years go by,
Till virtues often seem to us transgressions,
And thus men rise and fall and live and die—
Not understood.

Not understood—how trifles often change us,
The thoughtless sentence or the fancied slight
Destroy long years of friendship and estrange us,
And on our souls there falls a freezing blight—
Not understood.

How many cheerless, lonely hearts are aching
For lack of sympathy—ah, day by day
How many cheerless, lonely hearts are breaking,
How many noble spirits pass away—
Not understood.

O God! That men could see a little clearer,
Or judge less harshly where they cannot see—
O God! That men would draw a little nearer
One another. They'd be nearer Thee—
And understood.

—From the Boston Transcript.

PEACE MESSAGE OF THE FIVE YEARS' MEETING.

We have met this year in the midst of the most destructive and desolating war that has ever been waged in human history. We are profoundly moved by the suffering of the world, and in some real sense we have come under the burden and tragedy of the staggering human woe and sorrow around us. Fondly had we hoped and fervently had we prayed that with the growth of international relationships war might cease and Christian nations might never again resort to it and let loose upon the world the devastations of hatred. We were doomed to disappointment and now we must wait longer for the consummation of our hope.

We renew, however, our unaltered faith in the ultimate triumph of Christ's way of life and the power of righteousness and love to overcome evil. We have seen gigantic evils conquered by simple faith in the forces of goodness. The barbaric prison and penal systems, the traffic in human slaves, the existence of corrupting lotteries, the exploitation of children for commercial purposes, the inequality of privilege for the sexes, have all yielded to the irresistible force of light and conscience. The saloon is plainly threatened and almost certainly doomed.

For two hundred and fifty years our Society, through peril and suffering, has made a valiant effort to carry the Christian way of life into practice, and to make a holy experiment in the application of the Gospel of love. During all this time Friends have held, alike in times of strife and in times of peace, religious principles which forbid engaging in war. It is because of our consistent fidelity to these principles that the government has given recognition in the selective draft law to our religious convictions for which provision we wish to express appreciation.

In every war-crisis, some of our members have gone along with the prevailing trend and method, but the body itself in its meeting capacity has remained through all the years unswervingly true to the spiritual ideal. We have always been and still are a loyal, patriotic people, true to the ideals of citizenship, contributing in all possible ways to the promotion of stable and efficient government, and ready to take our full share in the labors, efforts, dangers and perils involved in the maintenance of true democracy. But we cannot surrender the central faith by which we live. We cannot accept Christ's teaching in theory and deny it in life and action. We do not judge others who follow different apprehensions of duty, but as for ourselves we stand obedient to the light as given to us, and we are ready to maintain the Truth as we see it, regardless of what it may cost us in trial and suffering. In the present and in the future, as in the past, we must continue as a people to maintain among ourselves and to propagate in the world the kind of Christian life which does away with the occasion for all war, and cultivate the spirit which creates brotherhood and international unity. We desire to emphasize the positive aspect of our faith rather than to dwell upon a negative testimony, and it is our hope that our entire membership may now and in the future make a great constructive contribution of love and service, and may exhibit in this desperate time a Christian faith colored with the red blood of virility and heroism. We must not do less than those who believe that war is necessary and who are ready to fight with carnal weapons, nor can we seek an easier way of life. This is a solemn hour for us. We and our faith are on trial. We are being tested as never before. We are at the parting of the ways. We shall emerge from this crucible of the world's history, weakened in power and unworthy of spiritual leadership; or we shall rise to the crisis and find through our loyalty to Christ a new vision and increased power for a fresh onward march.

PARTS OF THE REPORT OF THE ASSOCIATED EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF FRIENDS ON INDIAN AFFAIRS (1869-1917).

TO THE FIVE YEARS' MEETING, 1917:—

This organization having been adopted as representing Friends' Indian Missions, again accepts the privilege of presenting its work.

All the Yearly Meetings of the United States with delegates here, have delegated members to our Indian Committee except Nebraska, and all have made some contribution to its funds, except Nebraska and California. Philadelphia also, active from the first, has continued its delegates and full quota to its funds.

This then makes our associate body of delegates from twelve Yearly Meetings.

Under a deep feeling of mission interest, and the desirability of its growth and retroaction amongst Friends, on the one hand, and of the still cogent need of the Indian for a quiet presentation of the Gospel Message and religious schooling on the other, this paper is presented for your information and we trust for our help, requesting of you such endorsement as a minute of approval may carry to your constituent Yearly Meetings.

Philadelphia Yearly Meeting continues its boarding school, and active mission at Tunesassa in western New York, much revived and strengthened the past few years; excepting which, so far as the writer is aware, there is now no other organized Friends' Indian Mission under a Yearly Meeting in this country, aside from the eight stations under our care and support, viz.: Seneca, Wyandotte, Shawnee, Kickapoo, Big Jim's Band, Iowa, Otoe and Osage. Of these, Wyandotte, Shawnee and Otoe are in proximity to Government Indian Boarding Schools, and having cordial and sympathetic relations with the superintendents, teachers and other employees, our Mission Friends, man and wife in each case, have enjoyed the special opportunity thus afforded, of reaching and influencing some 500 odd Indian boys and girls year by year as they come and go. The five other missions and attached meetings, are located with the remnants of tribes as indicated by the names given above. Including our Friends, Clark and Elma T. Brown, who succeeded Wm. Perry and Abigail C. Haworth as superintendents and resident missionaries at Shawnee, there are seventeen missionaries actively devoted to the work, besides our beloved veteran mission Friend, Elizabeth Test, who continues to have her home on the mission premises at Kickapoo.

[The statistical portion is omitted.]

Some of the Indians of these tribes are very poor, some have neither poverty nor riches, while some others have been sadly depleted morally by abnormal incomes, periodically paid to them from royalties, grazing, gas and oil leases, and to such the example and teaching of the lowly Nazarene do not seem just now to appeal. But is it not to the sinner to whom the ambassador of Christ is to go? We appeal for the support and the prayerful entreaty of this assembly on behalf of this difficult effort, needing to be done and being, we submit, the privilege and duty of Friends to continue to unite in supporting.

This work so earnestly followed in the past, though only one of an ever increasing list of appealing activities to claim the thoughtful attention, active support and prayerful care of Friends, has been written into our history from the beginning with prayers and tears, arduous labors and much sacrifice.

Though the executive care of the service seems by force of circumstances to focus in a few individuals, regular annual meetings of delegates have been held, at which reports from the Chairman and the Treasurer have been presented, together with reports from standing sub-committees and from our Superintendents residing at Shawnee, Oklahoma. All have received the careful consideration of said meetings.

A continuous correspondence has been maintained by the Chairman with our Superintendents and less frequently with all our missionaries, also with various other members of Committees and many other persons and organizations with allied work and interests.

The Chairman has had the further help and privilege of cordial relations with the Home Missions Council, The Indian Rights Association, The Society of American Indians, The Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Association secretaries for Indian work, and the Mohonk Annual Conference; also with the Indian Bureau, through interviews as well as correspondence with Commissioner Cato Sells and Assistant Commissioner E. B. Merritt, who are sympathetic and at times have kindly aided us in our religious effort and influence.

The financial statement shows an aggregate of $20,966.35 in receipts.

One other item: Several years ago the Chairman was requested to arrange for the compiling and writing of a book, historical and biographical, regarding Friends and the Indians. Volunteer preliminary service by several Friends was succeeded by an agreement with Dr. Rayner W. Kelsey, professor of history in Haverford College, to undertake the work, and he produced a completed manuscript to our last annual meeting. The work is now going through the press and copies are for sale at $1.50 per volume. So far as appears, no other such book on the subject has been written; it may be esteemed of distinct value and authority to all Friends and others interested. The author has not only had some years of experience in understanding the spirit and method of Friends' activities, but also a training in making discovery of historical facts.

Closing this brief and cursory review, I feel willing thus once more to urge upon us with emphasis, and upon all the Meetings we represent, the serious and insistent call to this mission work. It is our inheritance; it is woven into our history; it is our present opportunity. In this, and in all missions for the spread of His message and the growth of His kingdom, may we be faithful and earnest as He leads.

With loving regard, and on behalf of the Committee,

EDWARD M. WISTAR, Chairman.

PHILADELPHIA, Tenth Month 1, 1917.

"THERE is more life in Christ than we shall ever learn, here or there either; but they that begin first to inquire will soonest be gladdened with revelation, and with them he will be pleased, for the slowness of His disciples troubled Him of old."

FRIENDS' AMBULANCE UNIT.

(Concluded from page 207.)

THE WORK ACCOMPLISHED.

And what has the Unit done? What service have these men rendered to their fellow-men of various nations and races in the midst of the calamity that has befallen the world? The record which follows tells its own tale and gives its own splendid answer, notwithstanding the broad and certain fact that all the best work, all the finest courage and endurance, and all the truest tenderness and sacrifice pass into the everlasting silence unrecorded. No eye, however searching, could see it; no science, however exact, could measure it. But, most assuredly, nothing is lost. The earnest endeavor of this great band of young men, hating war and loving peace, pledged to struggle for the life of other young men, sometimes amid great danger, cannot fail to leave behind in the texture of the human family something invisible, imperishable and eternal.

But let us examine the cold hard figures. The Unit has been the means of providing medical and surgical treatment in its hospitals and dressing stations on the Western front for upwards of 20,000 sick or wounded soldiers and civilians; it has protected by inoculation 27,000 persons from typhoid fever; it has been the instrument of conveyance over sea of 24,000 sick or wounded men in two hospital ships; and it has carried in its ambulance convoys upwards of 160,000 patients of various nationalities, out of the valley of death and up the Hill of Hope. In another branch of its work it has labored, and is still laboring, for the social amelioration of the Belgian civil population and its orphans stranded in their remnant of fatherland; in its three recreation huts it has, week by week, brought sweetness and light into the lives of large crowds of soldiers and sailors exiled from home; at York, at King George Hospital, at Uffculme and at the Star and Garter it has devoted itself to the ministry of healing; and on the four ambulance trains it has brought a great multitude of wrecked humanity by day and night out of the inferno into the haven of rest and recovery. And this is the contentment of Friends, that this volume of work has been done, in spite of weakness, falterings and failure, by a voluntary Unit, unarmed, unenlisted, and not serving for reward. We here in England have abundant ground for thankfulness as we consider this thing which has come to pass; and the men who have shared in any way in these labors may be no less grateful in the sense of duty done—a sense of solemn, enheartening and humble rededication to the Service of Man.

THE SOUL-DEADENING CIRCUMSTANCE OF WAR.

It is not a descent to turn from this inspiring record of achievement to the every day round of toil which has raised such a monument. The spiritual is tabernacled in the material; the heroic emerges from an earthen vessel. The mistake of assuming that all endeavor is celestial is as great as supposing that it is all terrestrial. Some of the best men in the Unit would be slowest among their comrades to acknowledge, or perhaps even recognize, that their work was in any way of a spiritual order, even as others would fail to see that all high human service expresses itself in common and menial form and is concerned with ordinary human things. The true position is to keep our feet on the earth and our eyes on the stars, and, though having nothing, possessing all things, because of "A pure heart and a true mind,

And a will bound to the Eternal Will."

It is not unreasonable that monotony and weariness incidental to the continuance of the Unit should make itself felt in greater or less degree, at home and abroad and among parents as well as members of the Unit, and this natural feeling leads, from time to time, directly and indirectly, to a certain amount of anxiety. Officers and men tire at their task, and there are, quite naturally, murmurings of inequality and embarrassment in parts of the organization of so vast a machine, of the shortness and infrequency of "leave," of the drudgery and strain of hospital life, of the continued, increasing and unexpected drain on the personal resources, of the long exile, and of the thralldom of the vast military environment amid which many of the men live, bringing death and destruction at noonday and leaving behind a wilderness of desolation and misery. The soul-deadening circumstance of war is ever present and around an ambulance Unit in the battlefield. The past year has, therefore, not been without its days of darkness and discouragement, and the Committee know, and the generous and sympathetic supporters and friends of the Unit in all parts of the world know, that these things are so. The Committee desire to encourage men in all branches of the Unit to continue to stand firm and having done all to stand, to trust to their anchorage, to go straight on with their job, and to finish the task they are in, working together, as Edward Burroughs quaintly said in 1602, "in love, coolness, gentleness and dear unity."

THE PURPOSES OF THE UNIT.

After all, the most remarkable fact is the continued existence and service of this group of men after three years of war, and their loyalty and harmony and persistence. Of course, there are difficulties—but the thing goes on in spite of them, for the cause is the grandest on earth. Some of the difficulties which arise are inherent and irremediable; others are removable, and should be removed. The large size and character of the Unit and its widely separated sectional work—hospitals, trains, convoys—are almost as fruitful in providing difficulty as the military conditions and atmosphere. But there are domestic matters too, worry, vexation and irksomeness, petty disappointment and annoyance, the burden of circumstance, the irritation of restrictions of all sorts. It is a hard task to maintain the right spirit of a Quaker Unit surrounded by so much that is alien, foreign and even hostile to it. Yet this is the situation, and it demands much vigilance and abundant patience combined, as hitherto, with a good understanding of the purposes of the Unit.

What are the purposes of the Unit? First, to provide an efficient and effective Ambulance Unit, a piece of sound workmanship, a good instrument skilfully used; secondly, to render the ministry of compassion to men, women and children of whatever nation, caught in the toils of misery, suffering and death on account of the war, the splendid errand of extending the frontiers of life; and thirdly, there is the practice of the Quaker ideal, the application to the form and service of the Unit of the living principles for which Quakerism stands in the world. From time to time both officers and men would do well to examine their work in the light of these purposes and in mutual forbearance, co-operation and understanding. Only thus can the Unit hope to win through the interminable maze of things material. Only thus can it inspire its men to escape the entanglements of self and to live at the top of their capacity, character and courage.

A VISIT IN JAPAN.

(Concluded from page 210.)

The next day Elizabeth Binford took me with her to Minato, where the River Nakagawa empties into the Pacific. We went in the early morning, riding upon the cabin roof of the little river steamer (the steam is in a little tug ahead), and passing many a beautiful landscape and picturesque fishing village.

We made a few calls, then went to luncheon at a place where only rice, fish and tea are served. This was a different experience from any yet. The front part of the place is merely a fish shop, but they gave us a decent room at the back (we must take off our shoes) and served us with what they had. Less favored guests sat about in the fish shop. The proprietress kindly bestowed upon me the long end of a boiled sweet potato which she had just broken for herself, and which I carefully kept hot in the ashes of the hibachi until the luncheon was ready. This required little time, for the rice was already cooked and the fish was served raw. It was only a question of making tea. As I did not take to raw fish, a broiled bit was ordered for me, and that with the sweet potato did nicely.

From luncheon we went to a sewing school, where young women were sitting on tatami working at making their own kimonos and other family sewing, and they all stopped operations to watch Elizabeth Binford give a cooking demonstration. She had a slice of fish and three apples, a little bit of fat fresh pork, a bowl of cold cooked rice, some salt, flour and sugar in a little bowl. For utensils, an habachi with a few sticks of glowing charcoal, a pair of chop-sticks, a sharp knife, two shallow basins, a cutting board, some bowls and a tea towel; all these on the floor around her where she knelt to give her demonstration.

When we started home from Minato the railway platform was cluttered with gigantic fishes, the deep sea catch of the day. Sharks, tunny, devil-fish, porpoises, small whales! "All is fish that comes to his net" may be truthfully said of the Japanese fisherman.

At their services the following morning I listened to a sermon in Japanese. It was largely a study in their dresses and obi, I am afraid, for me, but later I heard the kindergarten teacher from Edith Sharpless's school (a Japanese girl graduate of the Tokio Friends' Girls' School) teach thirty little tots from three years old to five or six, and including a slightly older girl with a baby on her back, the story of Moses leading the children of Israel out of Egypt by way of the Red Sea. It was all worked out with a dish of sand representing the Red Sea, and little green sticks, representing the children of Israel. The children, led by Moses, arrived at the seashore and the sand separated into two heaps to an accompanying dramatic recital, and the waters thus parted, Moses led the children across in safety, stick by stick. No sooner were the children all safe on the far side than Pharaoh's army of other green sticks came up, and all the waters of sand came tumbling in upon them!

In the afternoon I went with Gurney Binford on the motorcycle to Onuki, a fishing village on the coast, eight miles away. It had rained and made us so late we missed the meeting we had set out for, but it was a pleasant spin along the country roads, where the farmers were at work in their fields, for there is no day of rest in Japan.

Having missed the meeting, we set about a house to house canvass of the village, he taking one side of the street and I the other, to leave invitations to some future assemblage. This gave me a chance to see a little of how these very poor people live, and it is pretty bad, pretty desolate and uncomfortable and unsanitary and hopeless! Flocks of children followed us, every other child carried a baby on its back, and all little nurses and babies had a cold in the head. Seeing their homes one thinks that it is a wonder they haven't worse things—and many of them have! There is no use pretending, the poor in Japan are wretched. I believe they think it is the normal state of things for people born to their sphere of life.

Going home the oil gave out and we had to push the motorcycle into Mito, about a half a mile or so, and you may fancy us trudging along between the rice fields, perspiring but determined. Fortunately we found a Standard Oil place in the near suburbs, and I took home a large square tin of "juice" in the basket with me. These things are in the day's work if one is a missionary!

The whole of Japanese family and social life is carried on at the floor level, and all the social graces are reduced to an art to fit that basis, including bowing as well as eating and drinking. If one's hostess sees one standing at the door, she doesn't say "Why, hello! Come in!" she drops to her knees and with hands flat on the floor bows to the ground.

It is very pretty, but very full of aches. Even the Japanese themselves say they find their sitting postures very tiring, and it is little short of torture to go through an elaborate meal sitting on one's knees.

Two days later the Binfords and Watanabe San went to Shimodate, some sixteen miles further inland, to organize a W. C. T. U. I was to go, too, but lying on my bed that morning I bethought me that I had not yet explored the old castle grounds nor the parks (Mito has one of the three celebrated parks of Japan), nor seen much of anything I had expected to see at Mito, so I arranged to follow them on an afternoon train, and started out immediately after breakfast with Kurumaya, who spoke no word of English, but had his instructions, to catch up with my programme.

Later in the day I went to join Elizabeth Binford at Shimodate. All the way Mount Tsukuba, with its twin peaks, was in sight, a big double ash-haze, all blue and hazy. The two peaks have names, one masculine, one feminine, and are reputed to be the parents of the rest of Japan, having come down from on high to create this island empire.

I was met at the train, and we went to call upon the distinguished people of the town, which is a prosperous one of fifty thousand people. Among them was a viscount, a member of the old nobility, who at the time of the Restoration was given that title in default of whatever one he had borne before. He has lost most of his revenue in some way, and is living quietly, the chief man of his district, making an interest in life for himself in the cultivation of roses. We had tea in his garden, and he cut for me the only rose then in bloom.

The foliage of the maple trees was as beautiful as any rose, however, and the small garden was a delightful place.

Then we went to another place and again had tea, and saw the young lady daughter of the family making a picture of bits of stone, sand and the little stone cottages and garden decorations they have for such work, which is the pastime of noble ladies and young ladies of the gentry. It is very pretty, but looks like kindergarten play to a novice.

After calling on some people who were not at all of the gentry class and visiting a second-hand store to look for old blue or red "Imari" dishes, we returned to the hotel to supper, which was served on our bed-room floor, of course, and which was very good. I am quite getting to like Japanese food, especially when, as now, it consists of dried salt broiled fish and rice.

The next morning Elizabeth Binford went home to Mito, but we had planned to meet next day in Tokio, whither she and Gurney Binford were coming to attend the Yearly Meeting of the Friends' Society.

FRIENDS' WAR VICTIMS' RELIEF COMMITTEE.

ARRIVAL IN FRANCE OF SIXTY-SEVEN MEMBERS OF AMERICAN FRIENDS' RECONSTRUCTION UNIT.

Weary and travel-worn after a sleepless night on deck passing through the submarine zone, and another sleepless night in third class railroad carriages en route from ———, fifty-four members of the American Friends' Reconstruction Unit No. 1, under the leadership of Dr. James A. Babbitt, tumbled out of the train on the 14th ult. and greeted Paris. J. Henry Scattergood and half a dozen of the English Friends, as well as part of the group of thirteen who had arrived a week earlier, were at the Quai d'Orsay station to meet them. The fifty-one men and three women scattered to their hotels, to re-gather in the evening at the splendid new Red Cross Headquarters in the old Auto Club in the Place de la Concorde.

Some of them slept during the day; all were hollow-eyed and tired when they met at the Red Cross Headquarters. They came away refreshed and inspired. J. Henry Scattergood, the American Friends' Commissioner with the American Red Cross Commission in France; T. Edmund Harvey, President of the English work in France; and Homer Folks, Director of the Division of Civil Affairs of the Red Cross, spoke so eloquently of the work before them that the travelers who came with minds filled with the difficulties of obtaining baths in France, returned fired with the consecrated spirit of these men. It is impossible to reflect the religious spirit of that meeting in words, or to report the joy with which the ship-worn group felt the spirit of the men with whom they are to work. Behind the words here reported stood three great, warm, human men.

"I am glad to welcome you here in this happy combination of the American Red Cross, the English Friends and our American Friends' Reconstruction Unit," said J. Henry Scattergood, in opening the meeting. "We rejoice in this international effort in which representatives of England and America join to help their sister nation, France. We owe our privilege of being here at all to our rich inheritance from our ancestors in England and America who have fought for freedom of conscience the world over. . . . We are here because we feel we must do something, not expecting an easier life than the millions of men who are following their light in other ways, and we are ready to do the hardest and lowliest kind of work. It is not that our blood is any less red or our patriotism any less real, it is that we are conscious that we are servants of a King who is above all nations—the King of Love, and that we must live out His Gospel of Love. It is not for us to talk, it is for us to work, and in our work to show the power of good-will even in these terrible times. We are guests of France, a nation which in its hour of trial has made itself admired and loved throughout the world. We must come prepared, not to criticize, not to modernize, not to change, but to help France as she wants us to help her, humbly and as best we can. We Friends have a special responsibility because of our views, and must be careful strictly to follow all the conditions under which the work has been permitted by the authorities. The whole Friends' expedition might be imperilled by the wilful or careless act of any individual which might lead to distrust by the officials, and every member is placed upon his sense of honor for the highest standards of conduct. I can hope for nothing better than that we should rise to the level of service of the English Friends with whom we are now merged, who have undertaken the work in a deep religious spirit. Our privilege is to unite the experience and standing of the English Friends with the enthusiasm and personnel of the American Friends and the influence and backing of the Red Cross. Wonderful possibilities open before us, the limits to which are set simply by what we ourselves make of them."

T. Edmund Harvey, with Dr. Hilda Clark, was introduced by J. H. Scattergood as "a man whose knowledge of French life, language and manners made possible that confidence on the part of French officials upon which the whole work has been built up; whose ideals and whose life of love have come from living very close to his Master; whose strength is in gentleness, whose character has moulded the spirit of all the workers; whose presence is an inspiration, and who is beloved by all who know him."

"We have been looking forward to this influx of new life," said T. E. Harvey, "and to the Red Cross making it possible for you to work along with us, with their guidance and help. The Red Cross' splendid motto, 'Inter Arma Caritas,' stands for the constructive element, building up, conserving, recreating, in the midst of war. It is a great thing to try to live up to that motto every day. By the very nature of the trust imposed upon us, we cannot speak as we might in times of peace of some aspects of our faith, but we can in our work demonstrate some aspects of humanity and brotherhood, lessen a little the terrible bitterness of war, and bring something of the spirit of comradeship and love into lives bruised and battered by the wrong that has been done. We have tried to make the ideals of service real in our work. We are all comrades and brothers working together, very democratically organized, ready—even men used to positions of responsibility—to accept in the spirit of comradeship humble duties elsewhere called menial and lowly, but which have, rightly seen, a Divine meaning. You will carry with you the honor of the Quaker name and of the American Red Cross, and you will go as representatives of America into districts where no American has ever been seen. You will go as representatives of a vision, of a way of life. I am sure that you will every one be worthy of the call that comes to you from the need of France and the need of humanity."

It was a rare tribute which Homer Folks, the Red Cross official in charge of all American civilian relief work in France, paid to the English Friends. "The Red Cross looks on the Society of Friends as in a sense its expert leaders," he declared. "There is no group of people from whom we have already learned so much, or from whom we expect to learn so much, as the Friends." Then he added a piece of advice. "Leave behind on the boat," he said, "all particular recognition of what you represented at home, and go about it simply as work to be done. You derive your impulse to this work from your very beautiful faith. The first thing to learn is to be tremendously tolerant and remember that the people you will help have a very different religion and draw from it certain very different conclusions. You will find, too, some to whom politics and religion are the same thing, but who are animated by as deep and genuine an interest in human welfare. This is the most tremendously fascinating, stimulating, developing, opportunity human beings ever were called on to meet, and it can be met only in a simple-minded human way without any tags or hypes."

For the members of the Unit Dr. Babbitt replied, "We come absolutely ready to do any service of any kind which may be assigned to us."

After an intermission for coffee and cakes—the members of the Unit have been astonished by the abundance of good food in France—Margery Fry, of the Social Service Department, Edward G. West, of the Agricultural Department, and Wilfrid Shewell, Secretary of the English Friends' work in France, explained a series of stereopticon pictures of the work in the Marne district.

Bringing numbers and fresh vim and enthusiasm into a group consecrated by three years of faithful service, the Americans find the way open for work on every hand. Before this report reaches America they will probably be scattered in a score of centres, farming, building, repairing, doing all kinds of relief work. The powerful Red Cross has given them every possible assistance; the English Friends have blazed the trail into the hearts of the French people; the Americans have only to follow in the same spirit.

RUSSIA—THE OUTLOOK.

R. R. Tatlock, concluding the report on conditions printed last week, added a few general remarks on the situation. He said:—

"One of the alarming features of the situation is the low buying value of the paper money. It is becoming a very important factor, and, indeed, is beginning to remind me of the extraordinary financial position of the country where I was the winter before last.

"As to the future, the striking feature of the situation is its size. One will hardly know where to begin or when to begin. The work necessary is endless, and it will not only require energy, but organizing power. We shall find our resources taxed to the utmost. I hope I have indicated sufficiently clearly the fact that an unlooked-for series of troubles has caused the slow settling problem of the refugees to be suddenly thrown into confused movement again. The rushing about is just like a pot being stirred; there are currents of life running everywhere. Hardly anyone seems to know where he is going or what he intends to do next. But this rushing about, with all its attendant evils—for a train full of people can actually half starve and many die under present conditions—is temporary. It will, one anticipates, after a few weeks grow quiet again, and then the work I am now doing will cease to be urgent. But I shall not anticipate.

"It is good work from every point of view. It is relieving, and better still preventing real suffering or even death, and it is familiarizing me with this part of the country, and giving me an opportunity to learn the nature of the great and exceedingly difficult problem of the future. It is, I feel sure, well worth while to accumulate the experience, and get our mission known to people without whom we could do nothing, in this way.

HAROLD J. MORLAND.
A. RUTH FRY.

(Reprinted from The Friend (London) Ninth Month 28, 1917.)

NEWS ITEMS.

The New East, a monthly magazine in English and Japanese, published in Tok-o, has Dr. Inazo Nitobe's name on the list of contributors.

Upon the completion of the second year of the Ambulance Unit for Italy in which Friends are interested, it was reported that more than 100,000 patients had been carried. Two members of the Unit have lately received serious injuries. In both cases the amputation of a leg was necessary.

T. EDMUND HARVEY, member of the British Parliament for West Leeds, has announced his decision not to seek re-election. He was twice elected for that constituency in 1910, when his majorities were 3,315 and 4,270. He succeeded Lord Gladstone on the latter's elevation to the peerage. He was a member of the London County Council from 1904 to 1907 and of the Stepney Borough Council from 1900 to 1911, during part of this period as Warden of Toynton Hall. His withdrawal from Parliament will be a loss to the small band who in these dark days have been upholding the flag of freedom. His books and various Friendly activities have been frequently noted in THE FRIEND.

ACCORDING to the eighth Report of the West China Union University, Chengtu, the past year has in many respects been the best yet experienced. Promises have been received of two splendid buildings,—the library and the middle school, the latter the gift of the Scattergood family, of Philadelphia; and the student body, both in numbers and in Christian culture, has shown remarkable growth. The total enrollment is 365 above the primary grades, divided thus: University 74, Middle School 202, Normal School 40, and Bible School 49, a total increase of 152:70 per cent. of the adult students are church members. Fully one-third of the students are at the same time engaged in some form of helpful social service. The teaching staff numbers 53, nearly 40 of whom give part-time only; Henry T. Silcock and Dr. Clifford M. Stubbs, of the F. F. M. A., are on the permanent staff. Those who have already graduated from the University are throwing themselves whole-heartedly into the service of the Missions and the cause they represent.—The Friend (London).

MARGARET THORP, daughter of Dr. J. Herbert Thorp and honorable secretary of the Women's Peace Army, was somewhat savagely attacked at a public meeting of women, in Brisbane, on Seventh Month 9th, in promotion of a petition to the Commonwealth Government for the imposition of immediate conscription. After the resolution had been moved and seconded, our Friend, in response to an invitation from the chair to anyone who wished to speak on either side, rose and, speaking rathly and earnestly, expressed her wish to move an amendment. She had not proceeded far in her speech, when an uproarious scene broke out, and an attempt was made to push and pull M. Thorp out of the room. Eventually she managed to reach and mount the platform, only to be followed by the attackers, thrown off on to the floor, and kicked, punched and finally thrown outside. A policeman then entered the room, followed by M. Thorp and some of her friends. The resolution being put to the meeting, she exclaimed on the interference with freedom of speech, an interruption which led to a further attack and expulsion, only to return a second time and to make a further effort against conscription.

THE Brisbane Daily Standard, concluding an extended description of "one of the most disgraceful displays of intolerance and unrestrained inhumanity that has ever been witnessed in this city," says: "Miss Thorp, who was severely manhandled (or, rather, woman-handled), was obviously badly shaken, but assured her friends that her injuries were trifling. That her spirit was undaunted was evidenced by her persistent re-entrance in the room, after every expulsion."—The Friend (London).

TO YOUNGER FRIENDS EVERYWHERE. "Christ has taught us together a renewed devotion to His service so that we are resolved joyfully to endeavor to practice His presence among men to the end that we may be faithful to the light He has given our forefathers and still gives to us. We are determined to go forth on a crusade of Friendship-Love, manifesting it under all circumstances to all men of whatever color, creed or position. In so doing it is our purpose not to withdraw from this world and live apart from it, but to do our utmost to transform this present order according to the ideals of our Master, Jesus Christ. We believe this to be the greatest reconstruction work upon which our Society can enter. Without waiting for the present war to cease we are resolved to forge ahead now in this programme of constructive idealism, which, if lived faithfully in our own and all other lands, will make all war impossible. We are determined by God's help to make our ideals practical by practice.

"We have solemnly faced together the fact that such a course may render us unpopular. It may make us despised; but we remember the sacrifice of Jesus, and have resolved to make whatever sacrifice is necessary to free us for the greatest service; to give the all for the All. May we not individually, and as a Society, sweep aside every cloud which obscures the mind of Christ."—LILLIAN E. HAYES, Secretary of Cedar Lake Conference.

WESTTOWN NOTES.—The First-day evening collections on the seventh were addressed by Westtown boys and girls. Three of the boys told their fellows of the Blairstown Conference they attended early in the summer, and a like number from the girls' delegation told in their collection of the Northfield Conference.

The boys continue a lively interest in soccer, and the girls in hockey. On Seventh-days and "Farm Days" they roam over the farm, or go canoeing on the Lake. Chestnutting is almost a thing of the past, and this year the shellbarks and walnuts were a very small crop.

Alumni Day at Westtown is one of the great events of the fall term. It brings to the School a goodly number of its loyal alumni; it is the time of one of our great athletic events, the home game in soccer with the George School team; and it marks the opening of our lecture course. This year the heavy rains of the week seemed likely to mar the day, but the morning of the 13th dawned clear and cool. This seemed to heighten the effect of the autumn colorings and helped us to welcome our guests.

The soccer game in the afternoon was watched with much interest by the visiting alumni, who showed their satisfaction in the fact that our boys were able to reverse their defeat of a year ago.

Supper was served for the alumni in and around the Lake House, and was a time of renewal of memories and friendships. The annual meeting of the Alumni Association was held in the Gymnasium, and was an event long to be remembered, especially by the Westtown boys and girls, because it brought to Westtown David Starr Jordan. He addressed the meeting on "The Outlook for World Peace." Doctor Jordan has long been a student of world politics, especially as they bear on the subject of peace. He has traveled in nearly all the European countries and studied conditions at first hand. He is a clear and sane thinker, with a keen sense of humor, and an equally keen sense of human and historical values. While he faces the issue as it is, he looks forward with hope to an early termination of this war, and all war. In deference to Dr. Jordan's wishes, we will not quote him, even though the salient points in his address would be interesting to all the readers of THE FRIEND.

Doctor Jordan remained at the School until Second-day morning. He spoke to the School on First-day evening on "The Call to Young Men," he had some service in our morning meeting, and had many talks with boys and girls and members of the faculty.

The week-end of Tenth Month 19th to 22nd was reserved for the home visits of the boys and girls. Nearly all of them were away from the School at that time, either at their own homes or as guests at the homes of their friends. The few boys who remained at the School found that with the greater liberties granted life was far from uninteresting. The nine girls who would otherwise have remained at the School were guests of Henry W. and Lydia M. Leeds at Atlantic City.

The daily program at Westtown now includes but six recitation periods. This necessitates more study out of school hours on the part of the students. Provision is made for this in a half-hour period between school and lunch, and a half-hour period beginning at 5:25 in the afternoon, beside the evening collection. Attendance at the first of these is voluntary for all, while all are required to attend the evening collection. The attendance at the 5:25 collection is determined on a scholarship basis. Usually about two-thirds of the School are excused from this collection.

An Honor List is made up of those students whose grades average above 80. This list usually contains the names of twenty-five or thirty students.

Arnold Post, of Haverford College, lectured at the School on the 24th, on his experiences "With the British Army Y. M. C. A. in Mesopotamia."

We look forward with much pleasure to the coming of Dr. W. T. Green. He is expected to lecture at Westtown on Eleventh Month 15th.

The Westtown Farm House, after a thorough renovation and improvement, is again open to receive guests. It has long been an important part of the Westtown "plant," and its patronage since it re-opened two weeks ago shows that it is much appreciated.

C. W. P.

LETTER FROM J. HENRY SCATTERGOOD.

During the past week I have been on a trip with T. Edmund Harvey and Edward G. West to the evacuated region for the purpose of finding a suitable site for an agricultural centre. West is the head of the Agricultural Department of the Friends' work and being a western Canadian farmer on a large scale is very well equipped to handle a proposition of this kind. We are delighted to be able to report that we found a farm whose buildings are entirely intact which will be suitable for our purpose and which is situated in a central location for reaching the various regions where our work will largely be conducted. It is at Golinecourt, near the main road from Noyon to Ham, about two miles southeast of Ham. There are ample buildings for all necessary purposes, as well as a comfortable house in which to live. It is interesting to note that some of the buildings were erected as early as 1547 and have apparently been serving their purpose ever since.

WORK OF NEW FARM CENTRE.—At this centre the plan is to have up to thirty workers, English and American, also probably at least twenty horses or mules, and large rabbit and chicken raising departments, with a special emphasis on rabbits. This place will also be the central warehouse for agricultural implements and tools.

From our survey of the agricultural needs of the devastated region, West has written a report in which attention is called to two large classes of agricultural work.

1. That of a large plowing and crop-raising through the use of motor tractors.
2. The smaller farm operations which will be carried on in close touch with the people.

The first class of work is that now being undertaken by the French Government Department of Agriculture largely with army labor and in close working accord with the local civil authorities. We have seen scores of acres now being ploughed by the use of motor tractors and we are informed that there are already four hundred of such in a large region back of the lines, the exact extent of which we have not learned. We are also told that there are to be six hundred more tractors brought in for the same work as fast as possible. This wholesale ploughing is done right across country, without regard to property lines or ownership. I might say, parenthetically, that the Germans destroyed all public records in or near Ham at least, and probably elsewhere, as well as the landmarks, so that there will be many difficult problems to solve in the future.

For the moment, however, the Government is working these large fields together, as stated, keeping track as far as possible of the individual equities, with a view to compensating the owners later, and no doubt the proceeds of the crops will be trusted or an account kept to work out this proposition. This line of work is manifestly one to be done by the Government and appears to be well in hand—at least, in the immediate section of Ham, which we had the best opportunity of viewing.

But it is quite evident that this kind of agriculture, important as it is, does not cover the full needs of the community. Many of the returning villagers come back to find everything taken away from them, as well as their properties destroyed. They have no horses, no tools, no place to live. They are not allowed to be there until a habitation of some kind can be found for them, and, therefore, in the case of the completely destroyed villages, the first thing is the type of portable houses which the Friends are building. But there are many villages which have not been completely destroyed, where some sort of shelter can be made; consequently, in some cases, there are already a good many people who have returned and have found or constructed a shelter of some kind. These people, however, are not in a position to make a fresh start in life, even if they have the courage to do so, because they have no materials to work with. Frequently their lands are not so located that they fall within the work done by the Government as described above. Naturally, the Government only will do such work in very large units and in the best located lands, lying in great leveled stretches. Here, there and everywhere, will be found other land in which these returning people are interested and which it is important should be developed, and it is upon this kind of land that we feel our Friends' work can be employed.

We propose to send the necessary men and implements from village to village and plow perhaps an acre a piece for each family who may desire it, so that they may start with a garden and have something to do and an object to live for. We will propose also to give the necessary seeds and small tools as far as possible; also to distribute from time to time rabbits and chickens. Then later, if and when the help is needed, we will expect to mow the hay or cut the crops, if the same can best be done by machinery, and also thresh the grain; in other words, this department will be a reproduction on an even larger scale of the excellent agricultural work done already by the Friends from the Semaize centre.

REPAIR WORK.—In the last few days the departmental authorities have named four villages near Roze, viz: Gruny, Cromery, Liancourt and Rethovillers for us to do repair work in, and they have given us permission to take available material from one house in order to repair another, provided this is done under the supervision of the authorities and proper lists kept of the material taken, so that compensation can later be made. This makes possible the repairing of partially destroyed houses which may be wanted by those who have returned or will return. Such repairing is preferable in such cases to building the portable houses and is equally—if not more—efficient in bringing people back to the working of the soil. The cases of the houses from which material is taken will be largely those of people who are German prisoners, or who are dead, or who for any other reason will not be likely to return promptly.

BUILDING OF PORTABLE HOUSES.—At present there is one group of English Friends engaged in erecting maisons d'habitables from Ham as a living point and working in Tunny, where they have already put up ten houses. From there the work will spread to St. Simon, Bray, St. Christophe, Aubigny, Villers St. Christophe, Douilly, Douchy, Ugy l'Équipée and, perhaps, some other localities between Ham and St. Quentin, in case the line moves farther back. At the moment, there are only six workers in their group and they are taken back and forth from Ham to their work by automobile. But this arrangement cannot be permanent because of the distance involved. It is expected that this group of erectors will be eventually increased to three groups of seven each, each such group having three French workmen in addition, the latter to do the digging for foundations and masonry work for the same. These groups will then probably live in the villages where they will be working and will be kept supplied by an automobile service from the farm centre at Golinecourt or from Ham—as the case may be. The house at Ham will be kept as a warehouse and as a centre for relief work.

This last group of erectors cannot be increased rapidly until more maisons d'habitables are able to be constructed at Dole and Ormans.

The other two centres of work, however—namely, agricultural and repairing—can be built up immediately and it now seems likely that we shall send forty or fifty of the American fellows to the war zone for this work as soon as they arrive and their permits and uniforms can be secured. There seems to be no advantage in sending them to Ormans, as at first planned, if this work is ready for them (as it now appears to be), and we can send later arrivals to Ormans in plenty of time to start work as soon as the machinery is ready.

INCREASE OF NUMBERS.—I might add that I believe that there is no real reason why we should not look forward to establishing two more agricultural centres in the devastated regions similar to the centre described for Golinecourt and which, with it, could cover a very large part of the said region which lies behind the French lines. We have not felt it possible so far to do any work in the part lying behind the British lines. If two additional agricultural centres are established it would mean about sixty more men, and I feel sure that the Red Cross will be willing to appropriate the necessary money for agricultural implements, horses, etc., for such centres, if we can promise them the men. Please, therefore, consider this matter and let us know your views, if possible, by cable. I am well aware that the question of the support of so many more men may be a deterrent in your minds, but I recall Major Murphy's grasp of the situation when Morris E. Leeds and I first talked to him and when he called Davidson recommending that all of the additional Friends who applied for membership in the unit of one hundred should be gathered to form a new section even up to one hundred and fifty men, and that if the Friends could not finance their support he recommended that the Red Cross could do so. I presume that all of this new phase of the subject is being worked out already by your committee.

At the moment I do not see any further immediate prospect of need for workers in the Friends' work unless new undertakings are entered upon, which, of course, always will be possible. At the present writing, however, there seems to be plenty of development already outlined to keep us busy, and I think there is a very slim chance of any of our men not working with the Friends' unit itself unless they prove to be unsuitable for its work in one way or another.

Very sincerely, J. HENRY SCATTERGOOD.

ITEMS FROM THE CLOTHING DEPARTMENT.—All who sent garments to the Cherry Street headquarters in Philadelphia before Seventh Month 20th will be pleased to hear that we have assurances of their safe arrival in London.

Patterns sent to Cherry Street should have with the goods an itemized list of contents, dated and signed by the sender, with full address.

There may be a virtue in leaving basting threads in, but surely a spoil of cotton would be more serviceable. Many are thoughtfully tacking pieces of the material to each garment. Some have put handkerchiefs and other articles in the pockets.

Great efforts was made to have the patterns correct in form and definitely explained, but sample garments from London suggest a few changes. The infants' brassieres should have very narrow hems at the back instead of the wide one indicated. This will permit them to lap and make any mode of fastening unnecessary. Long clothes are not wanted. Squares of white natural-colored flannel about a yard in width are needed to wrap the babies in.

A Serbian chemise for a young woman sent from London is 35 inches long. Sewers will please make all the Serbian garments correspondingly longer than the patterns. This chemise is trimmed with red round neck, sleeves and bottom.

On the Russian chemise patterns the perforation marks dividing the upper colored material from the lower muslin are too high up. They should be from 16 to 19 inches from the front collar and 22 inches from the neck at back.

Tapes should be run through the bands of all skirts except those for children under twelve. The latter should be fastened to waist or made to button on such.

MARY H. WHITSON.

140 N. FIFTEENTH STREET, Philadelphia, Pa.

REPORT OF THE TREASURER OF THE AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE, FOR WEEK ENDING TENTH MONTH 29, 1917.

Amount reported last week	$204,091.54
Amount received from 31 Meetings	4,696.25
Amount received from 11 individuals	563.00

$209,260.79

CHARLES F. JENKINS,
Treasurer.

EXTRACT FROM A LETTER FROM CHARLES EVANS TO CHARLES F. JENKINS.

PARIS, Tenth Month 12, 1917.

Speaking of the work being done by the Friends in France he says, "It is a great work, and it ranks high as compared to any other activity carried on here. Friends may regard it as the biggest piece of human labor they have ever put out."

CHARLES EVANS.

From the family of J. Howard Buzby we have solicited the following extracts from a letter of his. We are sure our readers will join us in thanks for the opportunity to have this first-hand information. [Eds.]

PARIS, Tenth Month 1, 1917.

"The trip across was very pleasant. It was not very rough, although we had racks on the tables for six days. We traveled second class, which was not bad, but it had its drawbacks! We saw nothing interesting all the way over, and would not have known there was any war, excepting for the lack of lights at nights, and the two guns, one at each end of the steamer. The night before we landed, I stayed up all night and it was well worth while, as it was very interesting going into the mouth of the Garonne River, which leads up to Bordeaux. As soon as it was light, we had our first view of France. It was very wonderful. Low river banks, just as clean as any park river banks, with the greenest fields running back into little hills, with the plainest little houses all in groups, here and there. . . .

We docked at Bordeaux about two o'clock, and after going to the station to leave our baggage, we separated and wandered about the strangest city I was ever in. Very few people speak English, so we had a funny time. The city itself is very beautiful, with many parks and old buildings. We left by train about 9:30 in the evening for Paris. The cars are very small and light, and the road is of very light construction, so that you go bumping along at a fair rate of speed. We traveled second class, as usual, which again was not bad. . . . We arrived in Paris about nine and were met by J. Henry Scattergood. . . . The first day we were here, we signed many cards and papers for the Red Cross and police, and in the late afternoon, we went down and were measured for our uniforms. Since then, we have been doing about the same thing each day. We have breakfast at seven, which by your time is one o'clock at night. After breakfast, which is the Continental kind of cocoa, eggs and dark bread and butter, we sit around until 8:15, when we have a French class for two hours, or do some work which they may give us. Lunch at 12:30 and then we go out and see what we can see! Dinner is at seven and afterwards, I am usually ready for bed. At night everything is dark after 9:30, but there are a great many people on the streets.

I have spent two afternoons in the Palais Les Invalides, which was started by Louis XIV, in 1671. There are many, many rooms filled with all sorts of old things, which are very interesting. In the court, the government has a lot of guns taken from the Germans, together with some aeroplanes that have been captured. Napoleon's tomb is here, also, and it is very wonderful inside; all of white marble with blue stained glass windows, casting a strange light over it all. . . . There is a very nice place next door where you can buy American food and it surely is good. The other night, I was in there for dinner and Agnes Nicholson came in with Charles Evans, who has just come over to take Henry Scattergood's place. I have seen Alfred and Grace Lowry several times and I am expecting to go out to their place some night for dinner. Several college boys have been around to see us, and it seems awfully good to see some one you know.

DOLE, Tenth Month 7th.

Dole is about twenty miles from the Swiss border and is just on the edge of the Jura Mountains. It is a fair sized town of about 15,000 population, and seems like a very well kept and busy place. The English Friends have a very nice camp here, where they have quite a large work shop in which they build the "demountable" houses to be sent up into the war zone. The work shop is in a half finished school building and is quite well fitted out for the work, although I am afraid it will be pretty cold in the winter, as there is no heat and only cloth over the windows. The work is quite interesting. They usually put all the new fellows to sawing "farkey," as they call it, which is nothing more than squaring one end of a piece of timber and cutting the other end to length. I was quite happy when they gave me a job of painting window sash, and when I had finished, I went to work with an Englishman, in building sections. This turned out to be a very nice job and the first day we beat the rec rd and did not try very hard! . . . From the work shop to our little camp is about a fifteen minutes' walk. The camp is just on the outside of the town, upon a small hill. They use the same kind of huts that they send to the zone. There are six 3-room huts where we live, four in a room supposedly. The kitchen, dining-room and reading-room are in another building. None of the places are heated, and already a good, big fire would go very nicely. Yesterday morning the temperature was down to thirty-four with a raw wind blowing, which made my winter underwear feel very comfortable. They say they do not have very much snow here, but that remains to be seen. . . . We use candles for light, although some of the Englishmen have lamps, which they have brought from England. . . . There is a higher hill back of the camp, and this afternoon I walked over to it. From there and sometimes from the camp, you can see Mont Blanc in the Alps. It was very wonderful with the sun shining on the snow. . . . Our life at camp is very simple, there being no discipline and you can do as you like. We have breakfast at 7:15, since they have put the time back to standard time again. We are supposed to be down at the shop at eight, and work until twelve, when we have quite a good lunch. We start again at one and go to 3:30, when we have tea. Work stops at 5:30, and supper is at six at camp. We can then do anything we wish. TENTH MONTH STR.

The weather has been fine ever since we left home until last night and since then it has been raining and blowing.

FOUNDED 1865.

THE PROVIDENT LIFE & TRUST CO.
OF PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Insures Lives Acts as Executor, Etc.
Accounts Solicited Deposit by Mail
Travelers' Cheques Monthly Statements by Mail

WRITE FOR LEAFLET.

Fourth and Chestnut Streets, Phila.

H. F. BRUNER S. D. HALL

H. F. BRUNER & Co.
COAL

OFFICE AND YARD

16 N. TWENTY-FIRST STREET
PHILADELPHIA

TELEPHONES: Locust 243
Race 661

WILLIAM B. HARVEY, WITH HEADQUARTERS at Friends' Book Store, 304 Arch Street, has been appointed Executive Secretary of the Exemption Committee of the Representative Meeting of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting. He desires information in regard to all of our members of enrollment age, etc. He will visit the Camps and render needed advice and assistance. A more specific notice will appear next week.

THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE BIBLE ASSOCIATION of Friends in America will be held in the Committee's room at Twelfth Street Meeting-House, on Fourth day, November 7, at 4 P. M.
J. SNOWDON RHODES, Secretary.

HARVEY T. WEBER
TAILOR

207-208 HALE BLDG., 1326 CHESTNUT ST.

The custom of Friends specially solicited

PUBLIC STENOGRAPHER
GEORGE B. COCK, Liberty Building
Established 1896. Experience 39 years. Medical 13

WALL PAPERS—All Grades
WINDOW SHADES MADE TO ORDER
Custom of Friends Specially Solicited
FRANK C. BUEHL
Successor to S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON
902 SPRING GARDEN ST. PHILADELPHIA
Opposite Spring Garden Station, Phila. & Reading R. R.
ESTABLISHED 1849. BELL 'PHONE.

TO ADVERTISERS.—THE FRIEND is now open for selected advertisements at the following rates: One inch, 50 cents, or 4 cents a line; no insertion for less than 25 cents. Long term rates given on application.
Friends having real estate to rent or sell, also those desiring board or rooms, should find THE FRIEND an excellent medium for reaching interested parties.
Standing business cards are also solicited.

POCONO MANOR INN

OPEN ALL YEAR

Situated in the beautiful Pocono Mountains in northeastern Pennsylvania is most attractive the year 'round.

Golf, Tennis, Bowling, Driving, Motoring, Swimming and Boating are but few of the recreations found at this popular resort.

J. W. HURLEY, Mgr., Pocono Manor, Pa.
(Pocono Summit Station, D., L. & W. K. R.)

WOOLMAN SCHOOL
A FRIENDS' SCHOOL FOR SOCIAL AND RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.

COURSES OF STUDY, FALL TERM, 1917.
History of New Testament Times; Old Testament Literature; Literature and Principles of Friends, given by Elbert Russell; The Life of Paul, J. Henry Cadbury; Methods of Social Betterment. J. Byron Deacon; First-day School Methods, Annie Hillborn.

Intensive work in conversational French will be provided for students wishing to prepare for reconstruction work in France. Fall Term began Tenth Month 10.

For admission apply to

ELBERT RUSSELL, Director,
Woolman School, Swarthmore, Pa.

ASSOC. M. AM. SOC. C. E. Bell 'Phone—Lombard 3412

EDWIN M. EVANS
CONTRACTOR & BUILDER

My jobbing department is well equipped, prompt and efficient

321 S. LAWRENCE ST. PHILA.

WILLIAM S. YARNALL
MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

128 SOUTH SIXTEENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE MATERIAL THAT WE SELL

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

GLASLYN-CHATHAM
PARK PLACE
ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

A Family Home of Established Reputation.
Open Throughout the Year. NATHAN L. JONES.

ALFRED C. HAINES
Building Glass and Paints
56 N. Front St., Philadelphia

THE HOLMES PRESS

Printers

J. L. Engle, Pres.

1336-40 CHERRY ST. PHILA.

RESIDENCE: 254 S. 44th St. BELL 'PHONE: Baring 2084-X
WILLIAM OAKES
Plumbing and Heating Contractor
ALSO LEAD BURNING
260 SOUTH TENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA
BELL 'PHONE: Fibert 2666.

GIRARD TRUST CO.
BROAD and CHESTNUT STS.

CAPITAL AND SURPLUS } $10,000,000

Acts as Executor, Trustee, Guardian, Administrator, Assignee and Receiver. Safes to Rent in Burglar-proof Vaults. Interest Allowed on Deposits. :: ::

E. B. MORRIS
PRESIDENT

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BREAD made from the entire wheat grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator. Sold by all good grocers in Philadelphia.

Write for particulars to PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.
10th & Susquehanna Ave., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

FRIENDS OR OTHERS WHO ARE THINKING of attending Cornell the coming year will find comfortable rooms in a Friends' family at reasonable prices at 235 Linden Avenue, Ithaca, N. Y. Five minutes' walk from Campus. EDWARD WOOD.

WANTED—A CARETAKER FOR THE INDIAN boys at Friends' School, Tusessan, N. Y.—Preferably one who can teach manual training. Applications for the position may be made to Wm. B. RHODES, Supt., Tusessan, N. Y. HENRY HALL, Friends' Hospital, Frankford, Phila. ANNA WALTON, Moylan Pa.

WANTED—IN A FRIENDS' FAMILY OF TWO adults, a working housekeeper, a Friend preferred. Please reply with references to "A," THE FRIEND."

FOR RENT (FURNISHED)—A PLEASANT HOME in Moorestown, N. J., on Main Street, overlooking the Valley, heated by hot water, lighted by electricity, near railroad station; trolleys passing the door; near Friends' Meeting and school on same side of street; garage. Apply to M. W. STOKES, 166 E. Main St., Moorestown, N. J.

WANTED—A COMPANIONABLE YOUNG WOMAN to assist with children, where other help is kept. Address "C," THE FRIEND, 207 Walnut Place.

FOR RENT IN SMALL ADULT FAMILY—TWO well-furnished rooms on second floor to one or two persons employed during the day. House with porch is pleasantly located near 11th St. and Lehigh Ave.; convenient to trains and trolleys. Address B—Office of THE FRIEND.

The drive pictured above is in our own factory. It is a hard one, not only because of the four pulley arrangement, but because of a fluctuating load.

Our Gilt Edge Belting stands up well to this work. It saves stops and trouble, and keeps the machine busy.

J. E. RHOADS & SONS

PHILADELPHIA: 12 N. THIRD ST.
NEW YORK: 102 BEEKMAN ST.
CHICAGO: 322 W. RANDOLPH ST.
BALTIMORE: 37 S. CHARLES ST.
FACTORY AND TANNERY: WILMINGTON, DEL.

W. B. WEAVER UNDERTAKER and EMBALMER

550-552 N. 5TH ST., PHILA., PA.

Special Attention Given to Funerals
In and Out of the City. Also Chapel
Accommodations for Funerals.

BELL 'PHONE : ESTABLISHED 1880

Philadelphia's
Representative Store

ELKINS, MORRIS & CO.

BANKERS

REPRESENTATIVES

PAUL W. BROWN
JAMES P. MAGILL

LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

RAILROAD AND PUBLIC UTILITY BONDS

FOR

CONSERVATIVE INVESTMENT.

FULL PARTICULARS ON REQUEST

We recommend the use of RAG FEATHERWEIGHT

(Antique Finish)

As the paper for high-grade Books and other Publications

JOSEPH G. FOGG
FUNERAL DIRECTOR and EMBALMER
S. W. COR. 16TH AND RACE STREETS
Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals
BELL 'PHONE SPRUCE 1648

HARRY S. LEE 313 WALNUT STREET PAINTER and GRAINER

ANTIQUE and OFFICE FURNITURE RESTORED
JOBGING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO
ESTIMATES

W. J. MacWatters

Let Me Help You

In Selecting Your

RUGS and CARPETS

Domestic -- -- Oriental

ALL WEAVES

The Home of Bundhar Wilton
"DURABLE AS IRON"

HARDWICK & MAGEE CO.
1220 Market Street

R. C. Ballinger Ernest R. Yarnall John A. Stratton
TELEPHONES
Bell—Fibert 26-15 -- Keystone—Race 637

R. C. BALLINGER & CO.
CONTRACTORS and BUILDERS

218 N. Thirteenth St. Philadelphia.

SEE WALKER & KEPLER

FOR

Good Electrical Work

531 CHESNUT ST. -:- PHILA.

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK and JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE
PRINTING OF BOOKS and CATALOGS

THE following timely books, mostly of those recommended by the Social Order Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, are for sale at Friends' Book Store, No. 304 Arch Street, Philadelphia.

"The Church and the Hour."
Vida D. Scudder,	$1.00
"The Social Problem."
C. A. Elwood,	1.25
"The Abolition of Poverty."
J. H. Hollander,	75
"Christianizing the Social Order."
Walter Rauschenbusch,	1.50
"The Day of Our Visitation."
William Littlebey,	50
"A Word of Remembrance and Caution to the Rich."
John Woolman,	05

FRIENDS' BIBLE ASSOCIATION

HAS ITS HEADQUARTERS AT

207 WALNUT PLACE : PHILA.

It is able to furnish Bibles and Testaments to Schools and Bible-classes and would be glad to have Friends everywhere acquaint themselves with the needs of their neighborhoods and allow the Bible Association to help them procure the books they may want. : :

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 91.

FIFTH-DAY, ELEVENTH MONTH 8, 1917.

No. 19.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price $2.00 a year in Advance.

Publisher, DAVIS H. FORSYTHE.

Editors { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
 DAVIS H. FORSYTHE,
 MARY WARD.

Make remittances payable to

THE FRIEND,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

"It is not being educated in the form of truth; it is not the profession of it, nor being called a Quaker; it is not barely frequenting our religious meetings; it is not even being of a moral conversation—that will do or be acceptable to the Lord, unless we also witness a possession and enjoyment of the Holy Truth, and the life and power of it, in our souls."

—Life of Joseph Pike (d. 1729), 1837, p. 38.

EXTRACT FROM "DEEP CALLETH UNTO DEEP," BEING THE ANNUAL REPORT OF THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY FOR THE YEAR 1916-1917.

"The Bible is so profound because it deals with this deep original wound in human nature. It searches down into the black pit of our evil and misery. It reveals those abysses of mercy and judgment, in which the foundations of our redemption are laid.

"More over, all superficial views of life have been shattered by the earthquake of war. Now and again, in the course of ages, some horror of great darkness falls upon mankind. In the fourteenth century, for example, there blew a mighty wind of pestilence—the Black Death, men called it—which swept away half the population of Europe. Two hundred years earlier, the times appeared evil indeed to Bernard in his cloister at Clugny as he sang Hora notissima, tempora pessima. Through the window of his narrow cell the old monk was gazing out across a world of wreck. The Church itself appeared rotten and rent to pieces; while to men in their misery it seemed, says the old chronicler, 'as if God and His saints were dead.'

"To-day, the human race lies smitten with a calamity which is more widespread and not less terrible. These last three years have shown us what unsuspected chasms are yawning under our feet. We feel like men who must grope their way on some strange planet, which is full of awful energies and incalculable perils. For us the fountains of the great deep are broken up, and the windows of heaven and the gates of hell are opened.

"Yet in tremendous days like these, the Bible comes to its own. Written for the most part amid the fires of tribulation, it speaks to us in this present tribulation with strange and piercing power. It means more to us to-day than it ever meant before. God's Book has great allies.

Its friends are exultations, agonies,
And love, and man's unconquerable mind.

"The sword has proved a spiritual ploughshare which drives furrows into men's hearts, so that the good seed can find entrance and penetrate and prevail. We begin to understand that Scripture was indeed written for such a time as this. It embraces the whole gamut of human passion and anguish, joy and terror, death and victory. To a world which lies bleeding and ravaged it carries God's own healing and consolation and repair. Across the uncounted graves of our young soldiers it whispers the sure and certain promise of immortality. The Bible enters into our profoundest need, our darkest guilt, our bitterest sorrow; it is at home among them all. Throughout its pages, deep calleth unto deep—and deep answereth unto deep. In this season of bloodshed and anguish, when there is darkness over all the earth, the Cross of Jesus Christ comes home to us in its eternal reality. Overwhelmed by daily tidings of misery and slaughter, we turn by irresistible attraction to the redeeming agony of the Son of God. As we gaze upon the eyes and brow of Him Who is indeed acquainted with grief, He meets us with a look of solemn recognition, and from the lips of the Crucified we hear the only words which speak to the heart of the world: Comfort ye, comfort ye, my people, saith your God."

Selected by GEORGE VAUX, JR.

SEDITION AND QUASI-SEDITION.

It was quite inevitable that such a composite nation as ours could not be welded into the common purpose of a world war, even though that purpose might be freedom, without the appearance of much that would be classed as sedition. Thorough-going Americans have been so long used to entire freedom of speech that the lesson is a difficult one, that a state of war requires restraint, and makes it both unsafe and unwise to express sympathies and even convictions, that under normal circumstances would pass unchallenged. The President phrased this with his usual clearness in a letter that has been widely quoted. His sentiments were accepted as a matter of course by those in any way sympathetic with the war. It is interesting to see that even a great leader amongst pacifists like Jane Addams recognizes this obligation. In her statesmanship speech to the Chicago City Club, Sixth Month 10th, she said, "The position of the pacifist in time of war is most difficult, and necessarily he must abandon the perfectly legitimate propaganda he maintained before war was declared." This by no means signifies that the peace "evangel" is thereby to become passive. Jane Addams defines a platform upon which active work can proceed to accomplish the highest world ends without sedition or quasi-sedition. We venture to predict that when in the future the notable deliverances bearing upon the present world anarchy are put in array, this Chicago speech will have a first place for its penetration and constructiveness. It is a sort of sailing chart for pacifists!

The great difficulty in regard to sedition is that it is a state of mind more often than it is an individual act or complicity in the acts of others. Now it is a very critical thing to attempt to appraise the danger of states of mind, and yet that is the task of the government official. Some states of mind he can understand. That in regard to war produced by religious conviction has been in degree patent since the beginning of the Christian era. Various sects have given it special emphasis and that, we take it, is the basis of the exemption clause in the conscription act. We are rejoiced that its administration is large enough to embrace a wide range of conscientious objectors.

That helps define the obligation which we wish to urge upon all. Our peace testimony, any religious peace testimony, reduces to the simple terms of a higher loyalty. This higher loyalty to the Kingdom of God embraces a very determined loyalty to our country in all points where conscience is not violated. Against the refusal, for instance, to take Liberty Bonds at a good four per cent. return, we set a constant and liberal outpouring of money and men for reconstruction work.

But this determined higher loyalty does one other thing: it defines the method of urging our peace views upon others at this time. So long as our appeal is to the Higher Loyalty—so long as we ask our fellows to seek a first-hand experience of peace in a personal acquaintance of Jesus Christ, we shall hardly find ourselves charged with sedition. In this spirit we can minister to soldiers and to C. O.'s as well, and not have it said we are "aiding and abetting our enemies." Never was there a louder call to us "to mind our guide."

J. H. B.

HOW TO LAY UP TREASURE IN HEAVEN.

Earthly riches have just now small place in the Christian's heart. War-suffering has presented its unusual claims, and many Christians have lessened in consequence their resources. War has increased the uncertainty of that which remains and promises further uncertainty. How naturally then our interest is transferred from the uncertain to the lasting treasure!

We may regret that we did not long ago begin spiritual investment. At least, we have the present, and although late, the occasion may not be quite lost.

To set about spiritual investment, we must sell that we have and give alms. We renounce our interest for ourselves in what of material good Providence has furnished us. That is the first step. This does not mean to part, in our own wills, with everything of money value. It means that what we now have is God's, not ours; and is to be disposed according to His will.

And now—to acquire the Heavenly Treasure which God furnishes—we must seek it. Our exercise will be to look to Him, and to continue to do so. "Provide yourselves bags which wax not old, a treasure in the heavens that faileth not, where no thief approacheth, neither moth corrupteth. For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also."

W. B. E.

CONSIDER how many of the saints of God, of all ages and places, have gone before thee. Thou art not to enter an untrodden path, or appointed first to break the ice.—RICHARD BAXTER.

SUMMERTIME. WALKING THROUGH NEW JERSEY.

B. N. TAYLOR.

Come, walk to-day
Where winds the yellow road away,
Through scrubby oaks and pines,
And blackberry vines,
And ancient fences, worn and gray.

In merry fun,
See how the little chipmunks run
Along the tottering rails,
With waving tails,
Chasing each other in the sun.

How gay and sweet
The nod of daisies as we meet.
The lean grasshopper springs,
With dusty wings
And angry leaps about our feet.

Beneath the skies
The fragrant field of clover lies.
We scent the perfumed breeze
And hear the bees,
And watch the fluttering butterflies.

With quivering wings
From the brown stump the sparrow sings.
The music of the thrush
Comes from the brush,
And rustling of small, timid things.

The rabbit gray
Stares at us ere he leaps away.
The little snake slides by,
And, shrilling high,
The tree-frog has a word to say.

A road of sand,
That winds across a level land,
Yet full of wistful dreams,
Comrade, it seems,
When you and I walk hand in hand.

IN AND OUT OF INDIA.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

(Continued from page 219.)

The Five Years' Meeting brought together in the opening and succeeding sessions a large audience, probably in excess of a thousand persons. The Five Years' Meeting itself is actually quite a small body. It is composed of delegates from thirteen Yearly Meetings, about one hundred and fifty in all. These delegates are duly qualified to speak for their own meetings, doing so usually by vote, after the manner of some boards of managers. Perhaps no better understanding of the quinquennial occasion could be given than by saying it is a case of some eight hundred spectators watching during three meetings a day the transactions of this comparatively small body. As a board of management even this small body is too large for great efficiency, for it is difficult to resolve the complexity of even thirteen points of view on unexplored details. To escape this embarrassment an active business committee had practically all new questions or suggestions referred to it for report, and almost without exception the reports of this business committee became the action of the Five Years' Meeting. One delegate made bold to suggest that the business committee discharged the functions of the Five Years' Meeting.

It was, perhaps, not unnatural in the face of this situation for a Philadelphian to query whether it would not be better to revert to the Friendly method of the "sense of the meeting" to secure judgments. This method, of course, fails unless the religious atmosphere dominates a meeting. The Five Years' Meeting seemed to be dominated by such a religious spirit, and before the sessions had advanced far it became customary for the presiding clerk to announce decisions by "consent."

The three daily sessions were opened by a simple devotional exercise, usually a brief Scripture reading with some comment and a silence in which there was usually an offering of prayer, sometimes more than one such offering. Upon the suggestion of a member of the Iowa delegation, the formal reading was several times omitted in favor of silent waiting. There was no singing or other music on the arranged program. Two or three times in the three-minute recess planned to relieve the long sessions the congregation broke into singing and this happened at least once in the devotional period at the end of a session. Two individuals made personal offerings in song, while we were present, but as a feature singing was conspicuous by its absence. At each session the recording clerk read the minutes of the previous meeting. They were always in the ancient Yearly Meeting form—"Fourth-day, Tenth Month 24th, the meeting convened in pursuance to adjournment," etc.

The subjects brought to the Five Years' Meeting for decision were quite numerous and varied in character. Some of them were questions of interpretation of discipline, others questions of finance, while still others dealt with measures of policy intended in the main to perfect the machinery of the Five Years' Meeting and to advance the general idea of centralization. As these matters came from the business committee session by session they were passed almost without debate. They did not seem to grip the meeting at all, and seeing that in the main they were questions of detail this was well. Thus it transpired that the Conference side of the Five Years' Meeting was its strong feature. This was conducted much in the general way of conferences, by the reading of reports and the presentation of set addresses with actually very little discussion or conference. Several of the addresses were memorable and struck the highest note of spiritual power.

Referring to our notes of the daily proceedings the following much abridged summary of a part of the proceedings may be of general interest:

Third-day evening, Tenth Month 23rd, the meeting organized. Apart from the regular delegations there were representatives of English Friends, although Alfred Kemp Brown was the only one present at the opening who had crossed the ocean specially as a fraternal delegate. W. Blair Neatby arrived later. Two fraternal delegates were present from the new Yearly Meeting in Japan. Nearly fifty members of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting and four Friends from Westerly Rhode Island were in attendance. Nine of the Philadelphia delegation were later named as having the privileges of the floor. That meant they might address the chair, but as indicated above the opportunity for miscellaneous contributions was decidedly limited in the proceedings.

On Fourth-day, a letter from Job Gidley was read and most kindly responded to by the clerk. The report of the committee on nominations named Robert D. Prewell as Clerk, Mary Mills as Recording Clerk and Levi T. Pennington as Announcing Clerk. The Executive Committee's printed report was put in circulation and its salient points spoken to by Professor Hole, of Earlham. We noted them as follows:

- (1) Centralization—its aims and progress.
- (2) Care of aged and disabled ministers.
- (3) Training of Christian workers.
- (4) Extension and publication.
- (5) Appointment of delegates to inter-denominational bodies.
- (6) Participation in the World Conference of Christians.
- (7) Appointment and salary of a General Secretary. A salary of $2000 was later approved.

This Executive report was followed by the reports of Joseph J. Mills and Walter C. Woodward who have filled the position of General Secretary the past five years—one for about three years, the other for the remainder of the period. The latter is the present incumbent. A brief summary of the points in these reports will probably be sufficient detail to disclose the aims and scope of the Five Years' Meeting.

The secretaries had been concerned with (a) the compilation of a directory; (b) the issuing of bulletins; (c) the preparation of budgets; (d) the collection of statistics; (e) an effort to increase the effectiveness of ministry; (f) "general alignment"; (g) problems of the war (the American Friends' Service Committee); (h) the publication of the American Friend (i) further organization of "study clubs" and "reading courses." These are all interests, it will be noted, that Monthly and Yearly Meetings undertake. The aim of the secretarial work is to make greater efficiency both by more perfect machinery and by preventing duplication of effort. Referring to some of the problems involved one delegate said emphatically, "machinery won't do it." There would be no question, we think, in the minds of those most concerned that machinery is of little account without live men and women to use it.

Passing over further details as recorded in these notes of the sessions after Fourth-day, some space may perhaps be given to brief mention of several of the more notable addresses. The Report on Negro Education was not scheduled as an address, but in lucidity and force it had much of that character. We are glad to print it in THE FRIEND.

Charles S. Macfarland, of the Federal Council of Churches, put the objects of his work before the meeting very clearly. He had much of the spirit of William Penn's maxim, "Cultivate the Universal Spirit." He dealt with the alignments of his cause more than with its special difficulties. The Peace Report was spoken to by Allen D. Hole in an illuminating manner. Elbert Russell was also at his best on the subject of peace. It was proposed that his address should be adopted as the voice of the Meeting, but the Business Committee reported that "way did not open for that." Edward Wistar, in presenting the Indian Report (printed in part in last issue), added to an effective presentation the strength of his personal devotion to the cause.

(To be concluded.)

REPORT ON NEGRO EDUCATION.

TO THE FIVE YEARS' MEETING:—

Your Board on the condition and welfare of the Negroes reports as follows:

In a recent publication of the Department of the Interior, the Bureau of Education says, "No religious group has surpassed the Friends, either in financial contribution or personal endeavor for the education of the Negroes," and it is the happy experience of those Friends who are most devoted to the Negroes' welfare to find how open they are to our advice because they believe we are "their friends."

During the five years of our appointment no meeting of our Board has been held on account of the wide scattering of our membership and the expense involved, but we have endeavored to keep the school under our care in close touch with the best and most advanced thought on Negro education.

There are six schools under the care of Friends which the government rates as "larger and more important" and two small schools. Of these, two schools are under the care of Yearly Meetings forming part of the Five Years' Meeting, those at High Point in North Carolina under the care of New York Yearly Meeting, and at Southland, Arkansas, under the care of Indiana. At High Point there are over a hundred pupils under colored teachers with some thirty-five pupils in the secondary grades. There is a farm, and several trades are taught. Besides the work of New York Friends for this school, New England has been a helper, and Friends in North Carolina have shown an increasing interest in its work.

The work at Southland has been recently reorganized, dropping the name of "College" which was really a misnomer, and calling itself now "Southland Institute." It has some 350 students, of whom nearly thirty are in the High School Department. Six of its teachers are white and Friends of Indiana have given a noble gift to the Negroes in the lives of their own members which have been lived among them.

High Point is situate in a country, of which twenty-five per cent. of the population is Negro, and Southland is in the belt along the Mississippi River, where Negroes form seventy-three per cent. of the population. Here perhaps more than anywhere else in our schools has the Society of Friends made itself known and beloved among the Negroes.

Of the other schools under the care of Friends, two are carried on by Philadelphia Friends, one at Cheyney, near Philadelphia, and one at Christiansburg, in Virginia. Two are under the care of Hicksite Friends at Aiken, near Charleston, in South Carolina. In all, Friends have an investment of nearly a million dollars in property and expend $63,000 annually in caring for 1642 pupils who are under the influence of twelve white and eighty-four Negro teachers. The government strongly advises that Friends should unite in having an Educational Supervisor for these schools, and several of our schools on the Atlantic Slope are considering the possibility of larger service which might result in a closer co-operation in our work. In all cases the Department of Education believes that we should devote ourselves to the training of teachers rather than devote our energies to elementary work which might well be done by the local authorities. In every case they counsel special training in gardening and home-making to meet the needs of the Negro in a large rural population.

"As in all other branches of our life—individual or collective—the great war has entered into the problem of the welfare of the Negro. The period since the last Five Years' Meeting has been one of dramatic interest for the United States. Into the monotonous course of his life in the South, with small wants and small wages, have come reports to the colored worker of a need for his labor in the industrial centres of the North at wages that sound to him like a fairy tale. The response has been a migration the like of which has rarely been seen within the bounds of any country. It is estimated (there is no way of knowing) that from five hundred thousand to a million Negroes have left the South since the European war stopped the supply of immigrant labor from Europe. As in the previous years, Foreign Missions became Home Missions for us by the coming of multitudes of foreigners, so to-day, the duty which we have in the past been pressing upon our Southern Friends, has suddenly come to us in the North, though we are quite unprepared to meet it.

"A fresh form of national service has thus come to Friends in all our industrial centres. The Negro is sadly ignorant of our manner of life in the North, of food, of housing and amusement; but he believes in a touching way in the friendship of the Society of Friends. Surely our best efforts to perfect his freedom from the fetters of ignorance, to guard him from the dangers of his changed environment, and to help the communities in which he is a newcomer to understand and make the best use of him is but a small repayment for this confidence which he shows in us? The Negro is with us and honestly wants to make his contribution to our American life. We can aid him to make that contribution a large one, as with sympathetic hands we help him meet the beautiful thrilling challenge of democracy on the road to the kingdom of heaven.

"Race questions encircle the globe. Through the acquisition of the Philippine Islands and Porto Rico and the peculiar relations to Cuba and Mexico, and lately to the Negro Republic of Hayti, the American people are entering more and more into problems of races and nations. In none of these relations, however, is the opportunity to serve so clear, the responsibility to assist so certain, and the necessity of solution so absolute as in the case of the black people who, in field, shop and home are in daily contact with the white people. How is American democracy to meet this test of its wisdom and idealism? Will the people of the United States work out a policy that will inspire the world to a more real sense of inter-responsibility? Never was there a more searching test of democratic ideals than the present necessity of a wise adjustment of the hopes and aspirations of 10,000,000 black people and the standards and principles of 90,000,000 white people of the United States."

NOTE.—Statistics and quotations are from Bulletins 38 and 39 of 1916, Department of the Interior, on Negro Education.

YOUNGER FRIENDS.

EDITORIAL NOTE.

This department has been undertaken with a desire that the young children of our Society should be included in the number to whom this paper ministers. Among the many and varied interests which find expression in the columns of THE FRIEND, it has seemed fitting that there should be at least one article which mothers might like to read to the little ones.

Recently some doubt has arisen in the minds of the small committee having this column in charge as to the real desire for it on the part of our members. They are far from wishing to take up valuable space in THE FRIEND; they know that at the present day juvenile reading is plentiful. Honest expression of opinion, criticism or suggestions for this department by mothers and those interested in young children will be most helpful to this committee. Work is much more ably and gladly done if the worker is assured that the task is worth while; if not, it cannot be discontinued too quickly.

If any mother feels that this small department fills a tiny need in her home, the committee would gladly hear from her, and perhaps she will pass on some of the stories and anecdotes which have pleased her little people. Such would likely be new to other young readers of THE FRIEND. This assistance would be a valuable contribution to the department.

Any such material, original or selected, with a frank expression of opinion as to the continuance of this column for Our Younger Friends, will be most gratefully received for the Committee by Elizabeth S. Pennell, Wawa, Pa.

The great change in the attitude of Friends during the past sixty years regarding the use of intoxicating drinks is illustrated by two anecdotes vouched for by our Friend, Charles S. Carter, of West Chester. The late Stephen Trimble, of Chester, he said, told him, in the earlier days of his married life, he felt that he could not any longer give intoxicants to his men at harvest time. He spoke of his feelings in the matter to his wife, and she encouraged him to be faithful to his sense of duty. But they had their serious doubts about being able to secure the necessary help if this course were pursued; and so it proved, for when the time came to harvest they needed two more men. He started to town to see if any men could be found who would agree to work without the customary allowance of intoxicating drink. He had not gone far before he met two men seeking employment where no such drink would be served. The harvest was gathered more satisfactorily than on previous years.

The other account was that of a Friend now living who, when a boy of fourteen was asked by his father to carry a jug of "drink" to men in the field. The lad asked his father if he had ever known him to refuse to do anything he asked of him. The father said he believed not. "Well," said the boy, "if thee must have that liquor taken to the men, thee must do it thyself." The father was pretty sharp with his boy, who persisted in his disobedience on the grounds of conscientious objection. So the mother became involved in the controversy and said, "I side with Jimmie." And so the father was obliged to "give in," while Jimmie (now about seventy years of age) and his mother helped to start the ball a-rolling that is now smashing the saloons and breaking down the barriers to moral betterment and social progress that the traffic in intoxicants and their use as a beverage have so long kept in the way of a purer, saner, healthier manhood.—B. F. W.

THE CURIOSITY OF A LITTLE BOY.—“Little things and little people are often responsible for great results, and maybe you do not know that the discovery of that important instrument, the telescope, may be traced to the curiosity of a little boy, and this is how it came about:

“The little boy I am telling you about, was the son of an optician, who lived in Holland. He and his sisters loved to play about their father’s work bench, and often they amused themselves by looking at the sea through the little smooth concave glass which their father used in his work.

“Now, one day, it happened that the boy, while playing with two of these glasses, chanced to hold them before his eyes, in such a way that the face of the Cathedral clock seemed very near.

“This surprised him greatly, for the clock was so far away that he could scarcely see the hands with his naked eyes.

“For awhile he stared at the clock and then at the glasses, each of which he tried in turn, but the clock was as far away as ever, and so it remained, turn them as he would, until by chance again he held both up together, when, lo as if by magic, the church stood beside him.

“Oh, I know, I know!” he cried aloud. “It’s the two together.” Then in great joy he ran to his father and told him of his remarkable discovery.

“His father tried the glasses in his turn and found that the boy had spoken the truth, when he said he could bring the great church clock nearer.

“So this was the way people learned that putting a concave and a convex glass together in just the right position, would make distant objects seem near. Without this knowledge, we should never have had the telescope, and without the telescope we should have known little of the sun, moon or stars.”

For “THE FRIEND.”

A SOUTHWESTERN APOSTLE OF PEACE.

C. F. SAUNDERS.

Travelers to or from California by the Southern Pacific Railway sometimes stop over at the interesting desert town of Tucson, Arizona, to visit among other sights that the region affords, a beautiful old church edifice dating from the eighteenth century, which was for many years the seat of Roman Catholic missionary activity among the Papago Indians of the vicinity. It is known as Mission San Xavier del Bac, and is noteworthy as perhaps the most beautiful example of old Spanish ecclesiastical architecture in the United States.

Recently in investigating some phases of our Southwestern history, I came upon a bit of this old Mission’s past that I have thought might be of interest to present-day advocates of peaceful ways. The resident missionary at that far post in the wilderness in 1768 and for a decade afterwards was a Franciscan friar named Francisco Garces. He was an energetic, enthusiastic priest in his early thirties at the time of his arrival, and, to judge from the records left of his labors, a man of apostolic calibre—“loving and taught of love.” Not satisfied with what he could do in the immediate neighborhood of his appointed post, he was in the habit of making journeys afoot to the villages of even distant tribes of Indians, with the object of bringing to their knowledge Christ and a better way of life. On these trips, which sometimes consumed months in regions where white men had never been, he carried no weapon whatever, and steadfastly refused the company of any military guard. His only human companions were an Indian or two to act as guides from place to place, and to serve as interpreters. If these for any reason deserted him, he would go on alone with cheerfulness, and simple trust in the providence of God, whose errands he believed himself on. Frequently he found the tribes at war with one another, and it was a chief burden of his preaching to reconcile their differences and teach them to live peaceably together as brothers. Indeed, he seems to have been the original Pacifist of the Southwest, and his labors for peace were attended with signal success in putting to an end for a time the numerous petty intertribal wars of the region. One can hardly doubt that his own going without arms of defense was a potent argument to clinch his preaching. His kindly, joyous, simple-hearted nature so endeared him to the aborigines that, as he himself records, a village would often refuse to supply a guide to the next tribe, wanting to keep him indefinitely for themselves!

It is significant that this apostle of peace and good-will finally met death with soldiers fighting to defend him (though the presence of the soldiers was no desire of his), in a massacre by maddened and mistreated Indians at the now vanished Mission La Purisima Concepcion near Yuma. He had been safer in the wilderness alone, and equipped (to use the words of one of his biographers) “only with charity and apostolic zeal,” as had been his wont.

THE WOOLMAN HOSTEL, 28, Duncan Terrace, Islington, N. 1, LONDON, Tenth Month 14, 1917.

DEAR FRIEND:—

I thank thee much for the letter thou sent me, also for the papers. It is interesting and helpful to read them and find how the work of Truth is being carried on and fulfilled in America. Our days are days of dread and desolation. Sorrow abounds. The future cannot be discerned with any measure of clearness. All we can be sure of is that though the times are dark, God giveth His Guiding Spirit to those who are in a seeking and waiting condition, and that out of this travail and chaos will arise convictions that will powerfully work for the true benefit of individuals and nations. We are called as never before in our time to the service of faithful witness for the Grace and Kingdom of Christ—a witness of heroic Love and Truth. When the Lord dwells in the hearts of men they cannot hurt, hate, destroy each other, but they love each other and do good in the world.

I was very pleased to get the communication from M. I. Reich sent on to me. His remarks about the Molokani are very useful. I have been devoting a good deal of time in reading about them, but there is not much which proceeds from the Molokani themselves. Probably they have not been in a position to publish much about their society. What I have learned about them shows that they are a people of great faith, spiritual, careful, truthful, peaceful, and of significance both in the history and progress of Russia.

It will be of interest to thee that I hope to proceed to Russia as soon as way is clear in the service of Christ. The Meeting for Sufferings which sat at the beginning of this month, considered my concern for that service and united very warmly with it. It was a gracious season for all. I trust this service will be fruitful in good results in the cause of Truth, Righteousness and Friendship among the nations.

Thank thee for inserting the inquiry regarding the Molokani. I hope to hear more about it, since there were several large groups of Molokani who settled in the locality of California.

With good wishes, thy friend,

EDWARD BERNSTEIN.

I trust that the ministry of dear Alfred Kemp Brown and of W. Blair Neatby will be much blessed.

SERVICE IN RUSSIA.

[Since receiving the above letter from Edward Bernstein, the following from the report of the Meeting for Sufferings in London on the 5th ult. is at hand. In these dark days such openings for service are most heartening.—Eds.]

Minutes of unity with this concern of Edward Bernstein for service in Russia were read from the Continental Committee and from Warwickshire North Monthly Meeting, the latter sent forward by Warwick, Leicester and Stafford Quarterly Meeting.

Edward Bernstein wished he were better known to Friends, that he might lay before the Meeting what he believed was the burden of the Lord. Russia was full of turmoil and seeking and he believed there was an opportunity for true and immediate usefulness there. Himself a native of Russia, and knowing both Russia and Poland, he wanted to serve Russia. He would like to take a message to the Jewish people there, and also to the Molokani (Evangelical Christians). His work would probably lie in individual conversation and fellowship, in meetings with small groups of people, in the circulation and translation into Russian of Friends' books, and in ways not yet foreseen. Although he had left Russia when in his sixteenth year, he had unity of spirit with modern Russia, and had been encouraged by Russians whom he had recently seen in England.

Friends at first felt hesitation on account of their lack of knowledge of Edward Bernstein, but in reply to questions, further information was given by E. B. himself, and, after he had withdrawn from the meeting, by A. Barratt Brown, J. D. Maynard, and other Friends. The Meeting thus learned that he had come to England as a lad, partly on account of the great difficulties placed in the way of Russian Jews, and partly because it was impossible for him to undertake military service. He had got to know Congregationalists in Leeds and when about twenty-one had been led to the knowledge of the Lord Jesus. He had studied for more than five years at a Congregational College, and had been a Congregational minister for fourteen years at Sidmouth, in London and at Torrington in Devon. He had been drawn to Friends by the reading of George Fox's Journal and the Journal of John Woolman, and had found the latter book an "unspeakable blessing." When the war broke out he felt it right to resign his position, and take up his stand for an unpaid ministry and for peace. Since then he had been at Woodbrooke for a year, and had also engaged in farm work. He had been received into membership in the Society rather more than a year ago. His ministry had been greatly valued in Selly Oak meeting, and he had soaked himself in Quaker traditions and in the spirit of the early Friends. He had a passionate concern for the people of Russia.

E. Bernstein's concern was received with general sympathy; but some Friends queried whether the present time was the right one for such a mission, and whether a suitable companion should not be sought.

Henry T. Hodgkin said that it was inconceivable that our Friend should become, as some feared, the centre of movements of a political character. If we were to make the fact of many Friends not knowing E. Bernstein an objection, we should be limiting the guidance of God to those who had been long connected with the Society. He thought that the concern was of such a personal nature, as Edward Bernstein looked to live in Russia for some time and to support himself by work as far as possible, that to couple a companion with him would be a hindrance to his mission.

Lucy F. Morland said that Friends who did not know E. Bernstein wanted from those who did know him an assurance of his sincerity; and this they had. Having heard his history and character there was only one judgment in the meeting, that he had a concern and this was the overwhelming fact. This being so, caution was out of place. To put back such a concern would be to show ourselves prepared to build the tombs of the prophets, but not prepared to help them forward when they needed encouragement.

The Meeting was evidently in agreement with this view and prepared to liberate our Friend. On his return to the room messages of encouragement were given by E. Grubb, H. T. Hodgkin, E. W. Brooks and John Morland, and prayer was offered by Arthur Dann. Mention was made of the work of Friends in the past, from the days of Daniel Wheeler to the workers under the War Victims' Committee, and the belief was expressed that there was still a great work for Friends in Russia. Our Friend would go forth to the unknown under the leadership of One whom he implicitly trusted and whose voice he knew.

"A TRUE Christian that has power over his own will, may live nobly and happily, and enjoy a clear heaven within the serenity of his own mind perpetually."

DEAD LEAVES.

Ye dainty mosses, lichens gray,
Pressed each to each in tender fold,
And peacefully thus day by day
Returning to your mold;

Brown leaves, that with aerial grace
Slip from your branch, like birds a-wing,
Each leaving in the appointed place
Its bud of future spring:—

If we, God's conscious creatures, knew
But half your faith in our decay,
We should not tremble as we do
When summoned, clay to clay.

But with an equal patience sweet,
We should put off this mortal gear,
In whatso'er new form is meet
Content to reappear:—

Knowing each germ of life He gives
Must have in Him its source and rise,
Being that of His being lives
May change, but never dies.

Ye dead leaves, dropping soft and slow,
Ye mosses green and lichens fair,
Go to your graves, as I will go,
For God is also there.

—From The Springfield Republican.

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE IN FRANCE.

We, the English members of the Friends' War Victims' Relief Expedition in France, send a word of warm welcome to the American Friends who have come to share our work with us. It is with the greatest pleasure that we greet those, who, separated from us by such great distances, share with us the same ideals and aspirations. We rejoice in this opportunity for a united Quaker effort in the service of humanity. We invite you gladly to join us in our efforts and hopes, successes and failures.

It may be that some of you will be discouraged at finding yourselves located, for a time at any rate, in a district which shows no signs of the great struggle, and that you will long to be placed in more direct contact with those whose sufferings are more evident. It may be your lot to do work which is in itself monotonous and uninteresting, as indeed has been the case with many of us who have preceded you. We hope that you may see, as we have seen, that it matters little what our particular work may be, so long as we help forward the cause of international good-fellowship, and the ideal of constructive service which we all have at heart. The dullness of the work is part of the sacrifice entailed in the service we wish to render and in the witness we would make to our faith.

In the districts devastated by the war you may be disheartened by the immense mass of suffering and the smallness of the help it is possible to give. There is nothing we have felt more acutely ourselves during our three years out here. But along with this feeling of helplessness we have learned something of the opposite. At a time when people are thinking in continents, in millions of lives and hundreds of millions of money, we have lived in small villages among humble people, doing unsensational though interesting work; we have come to see that personal sympathy and genuine understanding are all the more welcome at a time when individual personality is generally unconsidered.

We hope and believe that you will share with us the love we feel for the peasants of France. Their civilization and their view of life is very different from ours, still more different perhaps from yours. It is a civilization which has great respect for symbols, which is full of small reverences and what may appear almost foolish sensibilities. But these reverences and sensibilities, when understood, are the keys that open to us the innate gladness and good-fellowship of the French people. They are at present struck down by misery almost past bearing. There is hardly a family that has not lost two, three or even more of their nearest in the war. But still from under this suffering springs up at times their old inherent gaiety, to enjoy which is one of the pleasures of our work which we wish you to share with us.

During the last three years we believe that those we have been trying to help have come to appreciate the spirit in which our work is given. Certainly "Les Amis" are known in districts far beyond the limits of their activities. We can assure you a welcome, not only from ourselves, but from the people among whom you will live, and we believe that the work before you will be not only useful, but an experience which ever afterwards you will be glad to have known.

Signed on behalf of the Workers in France,

T. EDMUND HARVEY,
WILFRID SHEWELL,
FRANCIS F. L. BIRRELL.

THE MONK'S POOL.

W. W. CADDUBY.

When daily newspapers are filled with despatches telling of the movements of great armies, with rumors of war and the strife of men; when every day one hears of new deeds of cruelty and bloodshed, so that men declare there can be no God; at such times one realizes the blessing and relief that come from leaving all these things for a time and retiring into the wilderness afar off from the haunts of men to find God there.

It was thus with special satisfaction this year that a party of us made a camp near the summit of Loh Fau Mountain. Here we are wholly beyond the reach of telegrams and newspapers, and not more than once a week did we receive messages from the outside world. The "Monk's Pool," where I am writing, is in a little ravine about one hour's walk from our camp. It is so called because on the bank of the mountain stream that forms this pool there are two grass huts thatched with straw. One of these has been used by a Buddhist hermit as his kitchen, while in the other he worshipped and lived. In this little sanctuary there is an image of Buddha seated in the accustomed attitude of perfect abstraction. Numerous copies of the Buddhist Scriptures lie scattered about, and a priestly cloak attests to the fact that it is not long since the hut was occupied. The books are scattered about in disorder, so that perhaps the holy man had to flee in haste at the approach of some bandits.

This sacred mountain, Loh Fau, is 4,000 feet in height and is the highest mountain in the vicinity of Canton. Buddhist and Taoist Monasteries are found about the base, but except for a wandering priest, or a picker of tea leaves, no Chinese climb to the upper slopes. It is therefore completely isolated for the foreigners who camp near its summit.

This year we built for ourselves small shacks of bamboo poles for framework, with woven bamboo mats for walls. The roofs are thatched palm leaves. Except during one typhoon, which lasted for three days, these sheds have protected us well from wind and rain.

There are few wild animals on this mountain, for every winter in the dry season fire is set to the underbrush, so that the trees never grow. Our chief menace has been from robbers. On one occasion three of our company were out for a walk and suddenly nine robbers started to shoot at them. They were not armed, and so of course did not fire back, but stood still till the robbers came up to them. Two were then held up and a ransom of $1,000 was demanded. After some parleying the price was reduced to $500, whereupon the third member of the party returned to camp, obtained the $500 and released the other two.

The Chinese thief is not at heart a bad man or vicious. He has no regular occupation, and in order to make a living he holds people up for what he can make out of them.

Visits to the different monasteries reveal very different traits among the priests. At one a service is held night and morning, but the priests are far from being spiritual, and since the revolution their shrine has fallen into ruins and but few remain. At another, a Taoist shrine, we found that many of the inmates had taken no vows and used the temple more as a mountain resort. We learned that there are altogether some 2000 men attached to this temple called So Liu Koon, or "Hector Hall." These are mostly engaged in business in the city, but now and then come to this mountain resort for a few months' or years' retirement. The priest who entertained us had spent eighteen years of his life in a munition factory in Shanghai, where his wife and son still reside, but for the last few years he has lived alone in the Taoist Shrine.

This morning we had a visit from a Taoist priest belonging to another temple. He informed us that he had about ten companions living with him. They worship heaven and the Tao, or the Way or Law of the Universe. They engage in public worship four times daily. He exhibited a remarkable ability to look directly at the sun with his eyes wide open. He believes that in this way he can come nearer to understanding the light of heaven. When I was at Loh Fau in 1910 I found a hermit living on an isolated spot called "The Old Man Peak." This year on visiting the place I found the hut destroyed and the altar broken down.

One often marvels what there can be to attract these devotees of faiths which are rapidly losing their hold on the people, and indeed they have decreased in numbers during the recent years. On the other hand, there is a sense of peace and quiet in these mountain temples, where the activities of the outside world never penetrate, that makes one feel the presence of the Divine Spirit very near to him.

Tomorrow we shall return to Canton, where gambling has been again licensed by the new governor, and where sin and suffering are ever intruding themselves. I shall return to the care of the sick in the hospital and my duties at the college. In the midst of our busy life, however, we shall not forget the God of the Hills, who is also the God of the plains and the cities. He whom we can approach in the mountains we shall be able to see in the souls of men, and when men forget God in their strife we shall be better able to tell of His reality to those who look for Him.

THE "MONK'S POOL," Loh Fau Mountain,

I FIND that to be a fool to worldly wisdom, and commit my cause to God, not fearing to offend men who take offense at the simplicity of Truth, is the only way to remain unmoved at the sentiments of others.

The fear of man brings a snare; by halting in our duty, and wavering in the time of trial, our hands grow weaker, our spirits get mingled with the people, our ears grow dull as to hearing the language of the true Shepherd; so that when we look at the way of the righteous, it seems as though it was not for us to follow them.

There is a love clothes my mind while I write, which is superior to all expressions; and I find my heart opening to encourage holy emulations; to advance forward in Christian firmness. Deep humility is a strong bulwark; and as we enter into it, we find safety and true exaltation; the foolishness of God is wiser than man, and the weakness of God is stronger than man. Being unclodded of our own wisdom, and knowing the abasement of the creature, therein we find that power to arise, which gives health and vigor to us.—John Woolman's Journal.

"WITH all your good desires and grand intentions it is well to remember that obedience is ever better than sacrifice."

LETTER FROM JANE C. BALDERSTON.

[In THE FRIEND of Ninth Month 13, 1917, we published a letter from J. C. B., to which the following is an interesting supplement.—Eds.]

ON BOAT, Going From Mt. Omei to Chengtu,
Eighth Month 27, 1917.

How am I ever to tell you of the wonderful things I have seen since I last wrote you! It has been quite the most interesting summer of my life, and the one thing I regret is that it is so impossible to pass on to others any conception of the glories of Mt. Omei.

The Golden Summit is 11,000 feet high, but the place where we spent our summer vacation is at an altitude of between 4,000 and 5,000 feet. There were about one hundred of us, including some thirty-five children.

Mt. Omei is the spot of all others in Western China, if not in all China, sacred to the Buddhists. Every year they come from all over the land to burn incense and bow in prayer before the idols in the temples to be seen every mile or so along the "big road" all the way to the top. We passed great numbers of them—old men and young, some hale and hearty, and some infirm and crippled; women with feet only two or three inches long, toiling up the long flights of steps; and others, entirely unable to walk, being carried on the backs of their human beasts of burden. We wonder what must be in the minds of people who come so far and spend so much energy, all to worship before these impotent idols of wood and stone.

I planned to do a good deal of work while up there and took a Chinese teacher along with that intent, but must say I did not accomplish much in the line of study, there was so much else to do. I do not feel very sorry about it, for I had reached the place where I was desperately tired of studying Chinese, and just within the past two weeks has my mind begun to feel somewhat clear again. Yesterday I had quite a long talk with a Chinese teacher and understood practically all he said; so I feel that I have really made some advance over two months ago.

Of all the things we did, there are two of which I particularly wish to write—a trip to the Golden Summit, and one to the foot of the Omei cliff. Mt. Omei is so formed that on one side the slope is very gradual, leading off to range after range of mountains beyond, while the other side is a precipice a mile high, almost perpendicular, facing the east and the plain. From the summit one can look away to the central part of the province, and trace the courses of several large rivers winding across the plain. In the other direction one looks straight into the Snow Mountains of Tibet. From the foot of the cliff one has no such distant views, but the majesty of Omei itself impresses one much more; while the deep mountain gorges, the towering masses of rock, and the waterfalls which lose themselves in mist, long before they reach the bottom, are simply indescribable.

Our visit to the top occupied ten days. A congenial party of ten set out one bright morning and traveled down, down to the point where the path from our ridge joins the main road up the mountain. This is in the valley of the "Flying Bridges" (mentioned in a previous letter), and from there we went up, and up, and up!

That first night was spent in one of the numerous temples, near to a very large and interesting cave, which we explored. Back, in its farthest recess, we found a Buddhist shrine! Continuing our climb the next day, we reached the top about five o'clock in the afternoon.

A quite respectable set of rooms in one of the temples afforded us a lodging place. With our own cot beds and bedding, and the stores of food that we took with us (about all that three men could carry), we were able to live quite comfortably. The only eatables that we could buy up there were turnips and a kind of squash.

The first two days of our stay were rainy, giving us a good chance to rest; though after one good night's sleep we felt fresh again. Our comfort in climbing was greatly due to the wearing of the Chinese straw sandals, practically the same as our chair-bearers and other coolies wear. It is a woven rice straw sandal, tied on with strings. A loose cotton cloth lining prevents rubbing.

I wish you could all have been with us the next morning after the rain ceased, as we stood at sunrise on a verandah of the very highest temple and gazed across all the intervening miles to the Snow Mountains of Tibet. In the morning light they stand out, pure white and majestic, against the darker sky. And there is such an expanse of them—practically one quarter of the horizon, eighty-two degrees by actual measurement. In the centre, and most majestic of all, rises the Tibetan Matterhorn, that very high peak that we see, on exceptionally clear days, from Chengtu. But from here, much more of it is visible. Extending below the snow-line, we could see very distinctly two great glaciers; one of them we thought must be a mile wide at least. With a glass we could make out deep crevasses in its surface, and discovered that it became narrowest toward the lower end, which was not visible to us. The Matterhorn is well over 20,000 feet high. Our distance from it at that point between one hundred and two hundred miles.

Two or three times during our stay we witnessed a very interesting sight, called "Buddha's Glory." Given the proper combination of mist below the cliff and sunshine above, and one sees, on looking over, a shadow of one's self out upon the cloud, surrounded by a halo of rainbow colors. One afternoon, when the mist was not far below us and the sun came out very clear for a few minutes, the halo was double. The old priest who lives up there told us that they sometimes see as many as seven concentric circles; but we were a bit dubious about this. The phenomenon as witnessed by us is not unknown to Alpine tourists. It occurs only in very high altitudes. Among people who have visited Switzerland, I have heard more than one, this summer, say the scenery here is much grander and more extensive than in that country.

Our trip to the foot of the Omei cliff took us through wonderful gorges, up and down, down and up; sometimes exploring places that our leader had not previously visited. He was one who has come to Omei for seven consecutive years, and who knows and loves these mountains well. We spent a whole morning only to come at last to an absolutely impassable waterfall. So we had to return and took dinner at the same spot where we ate breakfast. Those of you who know how I love adventure will understand how much I enjoyed the whole five days of this trip.

Now we have come back again to the plain and the heat. Though we are traveling by river, and are in motion most of the day, the heat seems at times almost unbearable. But one cannot have mountain-top experiences all the time. We must come down to the valley of service; and we are returning to our several valleys, very grateful for the privileges and refreshment which have been ours in this wonderful vacation.

Almost best of all was the pleasant company in which I was so fortunate as to be included. One of them, a Cornell graduate, interested in science, gave us regular university extension lectures as we went about; and another, whose speciality is botany, added his share to these interesting treats. Three of the women in the party are Canadians. Two of these I had known slightly in Chengtu, and was glad of the chance to become better acquainted. One young man is the son of Russian Jewish parents and the only one of his family who has become a Christian. I think Christianity means more to him than to any one else in the party. He is still in the early twenties. He is out in China for his own year only, expecting to go back and work among people of his own race in New York.

It would have interested our friends to see us reading letters when a long delayed mail reached us at the foot of Omei cliff. We had been waiting long for letters because of fighting in the cities at the foot of the mountain. At last the situation had cleared a little, and three weeks' letters came all at one time. The good people back in the bungalows had sent ours over, along with a fresh supply of bread.

As ever, your interested friend,
JANE C. BALDERSTON.

NEWS ITEMS.

FRIENDS interested in forwarding Armenian and Syrian Relief may address Emily Oliver, 152 School House Lane, Germantown, Phila.

FRANCIS T. AND SUSANNA GUNDON, of Bristol, Vermont, on their way to North Carolina Yearly Meeting (Conservative) have visited acceptably our meetings at Crosswicks, Trenton, Fallstown, Twelfth Street Philadelphia, Media, Concord and West Chester. Their minute issued by Nantucket Monthly Meeting, also covers the attendance of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting next spring.

INFORMATION wanted concerning the late Joshua L. Baily between the years 1862 and 1879 for biographical purposes. Personal anecdote, when accurate, is especially desired. No data is necessary concerning either the coffee houses, the Yearly Meetings, the Moody and Sankey meetings or the Society for Organizing Charity. The co-operation of any one will be much appreciated. Address Albert L. Baily, Jr., 1508 Walnut Street, Philadelphia, Penna.

REPORT OF THE TREASURER OF THE AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE FOR THE WEEK ENDING ELEVENTH MONTH 5, 1917.

Amount reported last week	$ 90,260 79
Amount received from 22 meetings	4 846 50
Amount received from 11 individuals	900 00
	$215,007 29

CHARLES F. JENKINS Treasurer.

A FRIEND from Salem, Ohio, in a personal note, writes as follows:

W. Blair Neathy, Alfred Kemp Brown, Joseph, Sarah W. and Frances D. Elkinton have been quiet acceptably with us.

They attended Monthly Meeting at Winona, and the evening of the same day had a special meeting—there giving account of the work carried on in England and the object of the "All Friends' Conference," etc. The evening before they met with a small group of Friends at the home of Finley Hutton, Salem. On account of the very rainy weather the number was much smaller than it would otherwise have been.

It is a pleasure to meet with Friends from distant points and to know of their problems and I trust we will keep alive to the needs of our brothers in the war-ridden country and do all we can to relieve their needs.

E. F. S.

WEST GROVE DAY.—The thought of holding a re-union once a year at West Grove, Pa., of former members and attenders of that meeting (New Garden Monthly Meeting) and of any of their descendants or friends who care to come, having been discussed by a few interested persons from time to time, it was suggested that such as were known to have the matter in mind should confer with Friends of that neighborhood and be governed by the decision of such a group. Accordingly, on First-day, Tenth Month 28th, there were in attendance at the morning meeting twenty-five Friends from a distance, of whom twenty came for the reason indicated.

After the hour of worship, which was more than ordinarily impressive, those from a distance assembled in the lunch-room and enjoyed together the luncheon brought. The women folk spread a table neatly, prepared coffee, spread on the "cats" and made everything attractive. There was abundance for all. The day being very delightful, a pleasant hour was spent in strolling about the grave-yard and the beautiful grounds around the meeting-house. At two o'clock quite a number of Friends from the neighborhood returned, and an informal conference was held, in which expression developed naturally from the particular business of the occasion to a united spiritual exercise that seemed to make the sense of human brotherhood very real and precious to all.

It was the judgment of the meeting that an annual re-union is desirable; that the first First-day in the Tenth Month is a suitable date for it; that as far as practicable all who come should bring their own lunch; that no set program be arranged for the afternoon; that a mailing list be prepared and notices sent out two weeks in advance. The following persons were named as a Committee to give proper attention to details during the coming year, viz.—Benjamin F. Whitson, Morris E. Linton, Alice Hughes, Elizabeth Haines, Edgar T. Haines, Wm. B. Harvey, Amy C. Moore.

B. F. W.

LETTER FROM KATHARINE W. ELKINTON.

BETANCOURT, Tenth Month 8, 1917.

Beginning with last First-day we have been busy—morning, noon and night, with a bit of real relief work in looking after children that have been evacuated from Bar le Due. All day Second and Third-days our boys were busy running back and forth some sixty miles a round trip—each time depositing a dozen or more smiling young Frenchies at the already overflowing Surmaize. There, you can imagine the scramble! No arrangements for caring for children as the 'quipu is purely for agricultural and relief workers and the kitchen staff already overworked with thirty-six to feed at each meal. Nevertheless we tucked them away in some empty rooms in the old hotel back of the 'quipu building and I wish you could have seen them that first night! I slept on a pile of straw by the side of a bed in which six children slept feet to feet, while around me fifteen other little ones slumbered on mattresses and cots. This lasted for two nights and then, as there seemed no chance of a change, other arrangements had to be made. Thus it happened that two American boys, W. H., C. C. and I were sent here with our forty-one boys, ranging from the four-year old twins, George and Florian, to a great hulk of eighteen who has really no right to be here. As the 'quipu at Betancourt already is swamped with ninety children, we took up our quarters in the enormous stables connected with the chateau, and have really made quite an abode of it. Our kitchen is in one end of a room at least sixty feet long, with high ceiling and stone floor—the old carriage-house, I guess. Here we have a wood stove, that smokes abominably, our kitchen table, our supplies, pots and pans and near at hand the long tables and settles for the boys. Upstairs are three good sized rooms, in which the children sleep on piles of straw and blankets—a sumptuous bed-room, I can tell you, and one much appreciated by those whose lives for the past three years have been made miserable through fear of bombs and Boches.

Poor little types, they are a merry and lovable lot and I have become much attached to them in this short time. For the first two days we had to do all the cooking, as the woman, who was sent to help us, sat in our one arm chair with her feet on the stove and refused to work. It is some job to cook enough food to stuff forty-one young huskies, but you soon get used to cooking in wholesale lots and now we have another chef who lifts much weight off our shoulders, so that we can spend more time amusing the lads. My only fear is that one of our charges gets pneumonia, for their clothes are so thin, the barn lives up to its proverbial name for coldness and it has rained every day since we arrived.

This 'quipu is a fascinating old place, about two hundred and fifty years old, ugly as mud on the outside, but singularly comfortable within. Cozy little rooms, whose windows open onto lovely vistas of meadow and river—thick-walled windows, huge mirrors and deep fire-places that conjure up hosts of old-time shadows. At the beginning of the war it was taken over by E. V. Lucas and J. M. Barrie as a children's home and later turned over by them to the Friends, who have run it ever since.

It is a rare treat to get to know another 'quipu and its workers, who certainly are a mighty fine set to work and talk with. . . . Just at present life seems very well living and if at the same time one can make it worth living for others—what more can one wish for?

K. W. E.

AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE.—The following instructions given to all members of the Mission de la Socié'té des Amis will be of interest to all American Friends who have been following the progress of our work in France:—

Our work in France is undertaken by the courtesy and with the permission of the French authorities, and it is understood that all members of the Expedition who are thus engaging in work in a foreign country in war time will honorably observe the understanding upon which this work is allowed to be carried on, remembering that indiscretion by a single member may imperil the work as a whole.

A.

1. All branches of the work are subject at all times to the inspection of the French military and civil authorities and their duly accredited agents.

2. It is necessary that workers should use the utmost discretion in their personal conversation with French people, particularly on our peace views, so as to give no cause of offence to the authorities. Equal discretion must be exercised in correspondence. No information of a military character should be contained in any letter, sent by whatever method (e. g., presence or movements of troops, displacements of refugees, air raids, etc.) On more than one occasion the authorities have stated their strong objection to the expression of certain political opinions in private correspondence. Special regulations apply to the Army Post which all who make use of it must strictly observe.

3. The minimum period of service in France is six months, unless for exceptional reasons.

4. No photographs, other than portraits or domestic interiors, are allowed to be taken in the Army Zone without a special permit. Such permits are most difficult to obtain.

B.

The following arrangements have been agreed to by the General Committee of the Expedition in France and by the London Committee, and are brought to the notice of workers:—

5. English workers are appointed by the London Committee, American workers by the American Friends' Service Committee. All workers are under the direction of the French Field Committee in the sphere of work to which they are attached. They are expected to undertake any work which may be allotted to them by the Chefs d'Equipes, heads of departments or other persons appointed by the Committee. As far as possible they will be asked to undertake work for which their capacity and training may best fit them, but no guarantee can be given that a worker will be placed or maintained in any particular branch of the work. In case of exceptional difficulty any worker may appeal to the Executive Committee.

6. Furlough.—Three clear weeks' leave in England (or in France by arrangement if preferred) is granted once a year to men workers; the first leave can be granted after a minimum period of six months in the field. Married men whose work in France separates them from their wives or children will be entitled to an additional annual furlough of three weeks. The furlough for women should, so far as the work allows, be on the latter scale.

7. Sick-leave.—In cases where extended leave or special leave for a longer period than one week is required on the grounds of health, a certificate from the medical officer, or other satisfactory certificate, is necessary.

8. Board, lodging, traveling expenses from and to London, and equipment are provided by the Committee, but contributions towards or whole payment of these are welcomed, so that the funds may go with as little deduction as possible to the actual relief work. Any British workers who are able to contribute to their maintenance should arrange with the Secretary in London; American workers should communicate with the Representative of the American Friends' Service Committee.

9. Workers are warned that the authorities do not wish to grant passports to adjacent countries, and applications for such passports or sauv-conduits must only be made, if at all, with the approval of the Committee.

10. Workers are reminded that every care should be taken to respect the religious convictions of those amongst whom they live.

11. No information relative to our work should be published unless it has been previously submitted to the Secretary in London or the Secretary in France.

FINANCIAL APPEAL FROM ENGLISH FRIENDS' EMERGENCY COMMITTEE.—English Friends have been relating themselves to the needs of the crisis through several committees. Prominent in the work of the Emergency Committee is the assistance rendered to suffering aliens in England. The following extract from a letter by Anna Braithwaite Thomas to John Way may be of interest to American Friends:—

DEAR FRIEND, JOHN WAY:—

At any rate we have not recently received anything and we are very much hoping that with all the new claims upon America the needs of the Emergency Committee will not be forgotten. Our funds are getting low whilst the pressing need does not grow any less. Indeed, with another winter of war facing us and the added misery of the frequent air raids, our poor people really need our help more than ever.

A very interesting letter from the Berlin Committee recently received speaks of help given by them to distressed Americans as follows:—"Among the new cases which have applied to us of late are some especially sad ones of American women, chiefly widows, who received their income from the U. S. A. and lived in a modest way, and who now, that this no longer comes through, are too old and frail to earn, so are entirely dependent on what we either grant them ourselves or procure for them from other sources." So it is evident that Americans will now in some places find themselves in need of this kind of help.

Hoping that you will understand and forgive us for this liberty we are taking,

Believe me, very sincerely thine,

ANNA B. THOMAS.

Reply has been sent to this letter to the effect that, through the American Friends' Service Committee, we are aiming to send each month the sum of $5000 to William F. Nicholson, Secretary of the Society of Friends in England as a contribution to the various emergency works of English Friends. This money is passed on by the A. F. S. Committee as received, some of it ear-marked for the several activities of English Friends, but the great majority without any such marks, which is subject to the distribution of the English Friends' Allocation Committee and is sent subject to that on the theory that they who are so close to the work will be much better able to judge how this unassigned money should be distributed than we, who know so much less of the immediate needs.

It might be well to state in addition we forward each month a substantial sum to pay for the support and so on, of American Friends sent out under our Committee to work in France and Russia in conjunction with English Friends.

VINCENT D. NICHOLSON,
Executive Secretary.

The office of the Representative Meeting's Committee on Exemption, which is in charge of Wm. B. Harvey, at 304 Arch Street, Philadelphia, furnishes the following:—

A comprehensive card system is in course of preparation which will contain detailed information concerning the status of the young men, members of our Yearly Meeting, as it affects their being called to military duty.

It is proposed to secure the assistance of a Friend from each Monthly Meeting or group of Friends of the Yearly Meeting, who will be requested to keep the office at 304 Arch Street advised concerning developments of their respective membership; this will refer specially to those who have been actually drafted and ordered to camp.

Lists of the young men from each Monthly Meeting are being prepared, to be sent with the blank forms above alluded to in order to facilitate the service.

It is recognized that the labor involved on the part of our members in the different communities of Friends in keeping the Philadelphia office promptly advised is, and will continue to be, considerable, but it is worth while and we hope Friends will co-operate in the work.

The object to be attained is not merely to have an amount of tabulated data, which is of itself valuable, but that the effort may result in real service.

The Committee is desirous of doing all in its power towards advising, visiting, or in any way rendering assistance to our young men who are passing through a time of testing, such as has not been presented for many years.

NOTICES.

The hour for holding the First-day Meeting at Springfield, Pa., has been changed to 11 A. M. The Bible Class meets in the Meeting-house at 10.15 A. M. The attendance of interested Friends will be welcomed.

The women members and attenders of Twelfth Street Meeting are cordially invited to the Monthly Meeting Room on Fourth-days, 2 to 4.30 P. M., to sew for Friends' Emergency Service.

A MEETING of the "Council of Westtown Mothers" will be held at Friends' Institute, Phila., on Fourth-day, Eleventh Month 14th, at 2.30 P. M. The first half hour will be social. George L. Jones will address the meeting. The mothers of all students at the School are cordially invited.

MARY R. WOOD, President.

DR. GREENFELL AT FRIENDS' SELECT SCHOOL.—All persons interested are cordially invited to hear Dr. Wifford T. Greenfell, of Labrador, speak at Friends' Select School, 140 N. Sixth-street, on Third-day, Eleventh Month 13th, at 10.15 o'clock A. M. He will speak of his work. On the evening of the same day he is to speak at Westtown School.

MARKED.—At Friends' Meeting-house, Haverford, Pa., Ninth Month 29, 1917, THOMAS E. JONES, of Indiana, and ESTHER A. BALDERSTON, of Pennsylvania.

Friends Arch St. Centre

304 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Provides comfortable accommodations for guests by the day or week. Meals at moderate prices.

AMELIA D. FEATHERSTONE, Matron.

PHONE—MARKET 1571.

THE CHEYNEY SITUATION

Friends of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting have as a legacy of the efforts put forth in the 60's in the interest of training colored teachers a unique plant at Cheyney. The Cheyney Training School for Teachers appeals for help to the descendants of those who originated the idea. The School is doing a great work, but it is cramped in many ways by a lack of funds.

An efficient staff of teachers and a student body numbering 100 present an unusual opportunity for the wise expenditure of energy and money.

The Managers can do little more than administer the Trust and must look to Friends and others, who have the means, to supply what is essential for the proper advancement of the School's interest.

Leslie P. Hill, Principal, is always ready to offer timely suggestions to any who have it on their hearts to assist in the laudable work that is carried on at Cheyney.

Because of the conditions which must be met, if the School is to continue its good work, the Board of Managers feel free to request Friends to include Cheyney among the charities to which they contribute, and ask that checks shall be drawn in favor of and mailed to

WILLIAM BIDDLE, Treasurer,
119 S. Fourth Street, Philadelphia.

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE

PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

Assoc. M. AM. Soc. C. E.

Bell 'Phone—Lombard 1412

EDWIN M. EVANS
CONTRACTOR & BUILDER

My jobbing department is well equipped, prompt and efficient

321 S. LAWRENCE ST. :: PHILA.

WALL PAPERS—All Grades

Custom of Friends Specially Selected

FRANK C. BUEHL

Successor to S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON
902 SPRING GARDEN ST. - PHILADELPHIA

Stores open until 10.30 A. M. Any other time by appointment only
Opposite Spring Garden Station, Phila. & Reading R. R.

ESTABLISHED 1849. BELL 'PHONE.

The stamp of quality on Plumbing Fixtures

The Hajoca trademark represents an experience of sixty years in making sanitary plumbing fixtures. It stands for a reputation earned by ever-increasing excellence of the product. It assures you of health-protecting designs, and guarantees Hajoca quality.

Come and see the advanced designs of Hajoca Plumbing Fixtures. Our showrooms are within easy reach of City Hall. Write for Hajoca Book, free.

HAINES, JONES
& CADBURY CO.
1130-1144 Ridge Ave.
(at 12th and Spring Garden Sts.)

WILLIAM S. YARNALL MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

128 SOUTH SIXTEENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE MATERIAL THAT WE SELL

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

GLASLYN-CHATHAM

PARK PLACE

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

A Family Home of Established Reputation.
Open Throughout the Year.

NATHAN L. JONES.

PUBLIC STENOGRAPHER

GEORGE B. COCK, Liberty Building
Established 1896. Experience 39 years! Medical 13

ALFRED C. HAINES

Building Glass and Paints

56 N. Front St., Philadelphia

THE HOLMES PRESS

Printers

J. L. Engle, Pres.

1336-40 CHERRY ST. PHILA.

RESIDENCE: 254 S. 44th St. BELL 'PHONE: Baring 2084-X

WILLIAM OAKES

Plumbing and Heating Contractor

ALSO LEAD BURNING

260 SOUTH TENTH STREET

PHILADELPHIA

BELL 'PHONE: Filbert 2666.

GIRARD TRUST CO. BROAD and CHESTNUT STS.

CAPITAL AND SURPLUS } $10,000,000

Acts as Executor, Trustee, Guardian, Administrator, Assignee and Receiver. Safes to Rent in Burglar-proof Vaults. Interest Allowed on Deposits. :: ::

E. B. MORRIS
PRESIDENT

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BREAD

made from the entire wheat grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator. Sold by all good grocers in Philadelphia.

Write for particulars to

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.

10th & Susquehanna Ave., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

FRIENDS OR OTHERS WHO ARE THINKING of attending Cornell the coming year will find comfortable rooms in a Friends' family, at reasonable prices, at 228 Linden Avenue, Ithaca, N. Y. Five minutes' walk from Campus. EDWARD WOOD.

WANTED—A CARETAKER FOR THE INDIAN boys at Friends' School, Tunnesano, N. Y.—Preferably one who can teach manual training. Applications for the position may be made to

WM. B. RISOARD, Supt., Tunnesano, N. Y.
HENRY HALL, Friends' Hospital, Frankford, Phila.
ANNA WALTON, Moylan Fa.

WANTED—IN A FRIEND'S FAMILY OF TWO adults, a working housekeeper; a friend preferred. Please reply with references to "A." "THE FRIEND."

FOR RENT (FURNISHED)—A PLEASANT HOME in Moorestown, N. J., on Main Street, overlooking the Valley; heated by hot water; lighted by electricity; near railroad station; trailers passing the door; near Friends' Meeting and school on same side of street; garage. Apply to M. W. SPOKES, 166 E. Main St., Moorestown, N. J.

FOR RENT IN SMALL ADULT FAMILY—TWO well-furnished rooms on second floor to one or two persons employed during the day. House with porch is pleasantly located near 11th St. and Lehigh Ave.; convenient to trains and trams. Address "B"—Office of "THE FRIEND."

WANTED IN A HOME WITH A SMALL FAMILY in Media, Pa., a suitable woman companion. Address "P"—Care of "THE FRIEND."

POCONO MANOR INN

OPEN ALL YEAR

Situated in the beautiful Pocono Mountains in northeastern Pennsylvania is most attractive the year round.

Golf, Tennis, Bowling, Driving, Motoring, Swimming and Boating are but few of the recreations found at this popular resort.

J. W. HURLEY, Mgr., Pocono Manor, Pa.
(Pocono Summit Station, D., L. & W. R. R.)

WOOLMAN SCHOOL

A Friends' School for Social and Religious Education. Board of Managers from both branches of Friends. Courses in Old and New Testament, Church History, History and Doctrines of Friends, Missions, First-day School Organization, Social Betterment, International Organization, History of Religion, Comparative Religion, and allied subjects.

Instruction by scholarly experts from the faculties of Haverford and Swarthmore Colleges, and from other educational, social, and religious institutions of Philadelphia and vicinity.

WOOLMAN SCHOOL

SWARTHMORE, PA.

ELBERT RUSSELL, Director.

W. B. WEAVER

UNDERTAKER and EMBALMER

550-552 N. 5TH ST., PHILA., PA.

Special Attention Given to Funerals
In and Out of the City. Also Chapel
Accommodations for Funerals.

BELL 'PHONE : ESTABLISHED 1880

SEE WALKER & KEPLER

FOR

Good Electrical Work

531 CHESNUT ST. -:- PHILA.

Philadelphia's
Representative Store

ELKINS, MORRIS & CO.

BANKERS

REPRESENTATIVES

PAUL W. BROWN
JAMES P. MAGILL

LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

RAILROAD AND PUBLIC UTILITY BONDS

FOR

CONSERVATIVE INVESTMENT.

FULL PARTICULARS ON REQUEST.

JOSEPH G. FOGG
FUNERAL DIRECTOR and EMBALMER
S. W. COR. 16TH and RACE STREETS
Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals
BELL 'PHONE SPRUCE 1648

HARRY S. LEE
313 WALNUT STREET
PAINTER and GRAINER

ANTIQUE and OFFICE FURNITURE RESTORED
JOBGING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO
ESTIMATES

W. J. MacWatters

Let Me
Help You

In Selecting Your
RUGS and CARPETS

Domestic -- -- Oriental
ALL WEAVES

The Home of Bundhar Wilton
"DURABLE AS IRON"

HARDWICK & MAGEE CO.

1220 Market Street

R. C. Ballinger Ernest R. Yarnall John A. Stratton
TELEPHONES

Bell—Spruce 17-81 - - Keystone—Race 637

R. C. BALLINGER & CO.
CONTRACTORS and BUILDERS

218 N. Thirteenth St. Philadelphia.

M. GATCHEL

126 N. 21st St., PHILA.

MILLINERY, PLAIN AND FANCY

'Phone, Spruce 3832

TO ADVERTISERS.—THE FRIEND is now open for selected advertisements at the following rates: One inch, 50 cents, or 4 cents a line; no insertion for less than 25 cents. Long term rates given on application.

Friends having real estate to rent or sell, also those desiring board or rooms, should find THE FRIEND an excellent medium for reaching interested parties.

Standing business cards are also solicited.

SELL WASTE PAPER

Anyone can operate our
Common Sense

Waste Paper Baler

Each bale worth from 30c to 50c;
REDUCES FIRE RISK.
Guaranteed for one year.

$16

Sylvester S. Garrett & Co.

Wrapping, Toilet,
Building, Book

Paper

Paper Bags and Twine

259 South Third Street

THE following timely books, mostly of those recommended by the Social Order Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, are for sale at Friends' Book Store, No. 304 Arch Street, Philadelphia.

"The Church and the Hour," Vida D. Scudder,	$1.00
"The Social Problem," C. A. Ellwood,	1.25
"The Abolition of Poverty," J. H. Hollander,	75
"Christianizing the Social Order," Walter Rauschenbush,	1.50
"The Day of Our Visitation," William Littleboy,	50
"A Word of Remembrance and Caution to the Rich," John Woolman,	05

HARVEY T. WEBER

TAILOR

207-208 HALE BLDG., 1326 CHESTNUT ST.

The custom of Friends specially solicited.

FRIENDS' BIBLE ASSOCIATION
HAS ITS HEADQUARTERS AT

207 WALNUT PLACE : PHILA.

It is able to furnish Bibles and Testaments to Schools and Bible-classes and would be glad to have Friends everywhere acquaint themselves with the needs of their neighborhoods and allow the Bible Association to help them procure the books they may want. : :

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 91.

FIFTH-DAY, ELEVENTH MONTH 15, 1917.

No. 20.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price $2.00 a year in Advance.

Publisher, DAVIS H. FORSYTHE.

Editors { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
DAVIS H. FORSYTHE,
MARY WARD.

Make remittances payable to

THE FRIEND,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

A FAMILIAR TOPIC REVIEWED.

When the activities and interests of society proceed in the manner that would generally, though perhaps inaccurately, be considered normal, differences of belief and opinion as expressed in modes of living or in methods of worship attract comparatively little notice of a hostile kind. Such, at all events, has been the condition in our own land for a considerable time, and we have been used to going our several ways with a rather large sense of security and freedom, if not always of sympathy. But when disturbances of a grave kind enter the areas of civil life and bring about a great moral crisis; when the convictions of some men lead them to positions quite opposite to those occupied by most others, then the subject of conscience and its exercise comes to have a compelling interest and a more obviously urgent claim to attention. At these times intolerance stalks about with assurance, and many people who ordinarily appear considerate and reasonable become exacting and censorious.

It is often extremely difficult, we will all allow, for one person to see things fairly from another's point of view; while to be dispassionate, charitable and consistent under all circumstances were impossible "to the natural man." That one should be called upon to maintain fidelity to individual conviction in opposition to legal powers, that religious scruples are not to be set aside at the commands of men, seems a principle not yet wholly understood, even where "liberty of conscience" is cherished as a fundamental theory in government and in society. Hence it is still true that many people, one way or another, "suffer for well-doing."

Among the defenders of the rights of conscience and opposers of all coercive measures where conscience is concerned (provided always that its claims were "within the bounds of morality"), no people have been more pronounced than the Society of Friends:—and why? Not simply because they had so much at stake as regarded their own liberty, but because while fervently believing in the Light that lighteth every man, they also believe that the measure of light is not the same in everyone; that the judgments of men and their consequent persuasions of duty are affected by many influences, and that only the Divine Arbitrator can estimate the responsibility of each person, and rightly determine the proportion of faithfulness to knowledge. This doctrine, if accepted, takes away much of the ground of persecution, especially of such as comes from what William Penn termed "mis-intelligence." But besides this, they hold, of course, not only that persecution fails to convince the judgment, but that, whatever the errors or failures of apprehension, an obligation rests upon every one to do what he believes to be right, and refuse what he believes to be wrong. This appears consonant with both "Scripture and reason," though it releases no one from the duty of honest inquiry, nor excuses one for evading knowledge and "suppressing" the light that leads into truth. "Conscience," said Dr. Joseph Cook, "does not insure a sound judgment," but "it requires every man to mean well and to do his best." Dr. Cook, too, was a believer in the Divine Light that "has its temple in the conscience," and apparently he did not think most people clear of suppressing the light. A little survey of the world to-day inclines us to fall in with that conclusion, and probably most of us have reason to feel the truth of it, in greater or less degree, in our own particulars.

Matters of this kind have been so often discoursed upon that it seems rather a commonplace to state them again; yet questions concerning the application of certain fundamental principles are evidently still being raised, and especially now when things so radically contrary to each other are being done in the name of duty. Some persons who are sure that war is wrong, for example, may ask, Can it be actually any one's duty to engage in it? Or is it negatively right (allowable), in that he has not seen it to be wrong? Happily the responsibility of judging each one's case is not upon us, and again so much depends upon what has been the attitude of mind toward the "discoveries" of the Light—whether or not there have been "pricks" that were disregarded. Robert Barclay, however, said that if a people not fully enlightened (Mark the condition) should go to war for what it believed to be a just cause, one might not say that war for such a nation would be wholly unlawful; yet he does not admit that it would be Christian. One may think, too, of a remark of Isaac Penington on the work that had been done by means of the English Army; of Mary Penington's touching account of her soldier-husband, Sir William Springett; and of the testimony of other Friends to the seriousness and faithfulness of many of the Puritan soldiers of that time. Nevertheless, all those Friends, having come to a sight and sense of "a better way,"—yes, and into the life and spirit of that better way—could have no part in a warfare waged with carnal weapons. This was no negative attitude on their part, but a result of obedience to the call and the witness of the Spirit of Truth. To the like experience did they labor to bring others, believing that faithfulness and honest seeking would unfailingly open the way to an enlargement in "light and leading."

On this subject the last writer quoted above comes singularly near the teachings with which we have been so familiar. Regarding reason as something like a chart, he calls conscience a spiritual magnetic needle, which, like that so indispensable in physical navigation, derives its power for true guidance from something "in it but not of it." This is his own phrase; and whether or not it be accepted by everyone as comprehending or stating clearly the whole truth, there is at least in what follows a fine presentation of a great truth—a truth that we cannot gainsay: namely, that "loyalty to the spiritual magnetic needle alone makes navigation safe on the spiritual seas."

M. W.

ISAAC SHARP.

[The death of Isaac Sharp occurred on the ninth ult. The cablegram of the associated press announcing this was included in the number of our paper immediately following. We felt sure The Friend [London] would have an editorial notice of him much more exact and intimate than any we could produce. It is now at hand and we gladly reprint it herewith.]

We had the privilege of friendly acquaintanceship with Isaac Sharp for more than thirty years. He was no ordinary schoolmaster and had he given no other service he would have been most gratefully remembered. He, however, turned to another field and actually made a position, that of Secretary of the Society, which is fraught with great significance to the future of our development and progress. It has seemed to us an important key to a modern, progressive, virile, but real Quakerism. As we saw him he was an ideal secretary, without the assurance that offends or the fear that leads nowhere. In our scattered condition as a Society on this side of the water we can see great hope for unity and co-operation in the appointment of secretaries of the grasp and poise of Isaac Sharp.—EDS.]

Over mainly strength and worth,
At thy desk of toil, or hearth,
Played the lambent light of mirth—
Mirth that lit, but never burned;
All thy blame to pity turned;
Hatred thou hadst never learned.
Every harsh and vexing thing
At thy home-fire lost its sting;
Where thou wast was always spring,
And thy perfect trust in good,
Faith in man and womanhood,
Chance and change and time-withstood.
Keep for us, O friend, where-e'er
'Thou art waiting, all that here
Made thy earthly presence dear;
Something of thy pleasant past
On a ground of wonder cast,
In the stiller waters glassed!

"Beloved by Friends the world over with whom he has come into touch personally and by correspondence," so was described our dear friend, Isaac Sharp, in the report of the Meeting for Sufferings to the Yearly Meeting on his retirement from the Recording Clerkship, after holding that position for twenty-seven years. Little did we imagine on the occasion of the expressions of Farewell in the Yearly Meeting that never again would our friend unite with us in the flesh in the annual gathering. He passes from us literally in harness, for though he had lain down his official duties, he continued to frequent the premises at Devonshire House and to lend the fruits of his ripe experience in furthering many objects related to the work of the Society. Speaking in the Yearly Meeting, he hoped, he said, to occupy a room on the premises for some time as what he might call a voluntary member of the staff, and he hoped in other ways—not to give up work, that was the last thing he wished to do, but that he might still continue to work. Now that work has been relinquished, our friend passing away after a brief illness on the ninth.

Schoolmaster, secretary, friend—in each of these spheres Isaac Sharp carved himself a distinctive niche. Born at Croydon in 1847, his seventy years were roughly divided into three periods—twenty years for home and scholastic training and education, twenty-three for teaching (chiefly as principal), and twenty-seven as Recording Clerk of the Society of Friends. The son of John Sharp, Superintendent of Croydon Friends' School, Isaac Sharp has told us that among the teachers to whom, at Croydon, and Bootham, York, he owed so much were William Robinson, Joseph Radley and Josiah Evans, at Croydon, and John Ford, Fielden Thorp, Thomas Walton, Silvanus Thompson and John Firth Fryer at Bootham; while at the Flounders Institute he came under the strong influence of Isaac Brown. After taking his B. A. at London University whilst teaching at Till Adam Smith's school at Weston-super-Mare he continued in that profession and in a few years became co-principal of the same school. Subsequently he was principal of a school in Darmstadt, and then for ten years principal of the Hitchin school, of which at one time Isaac Brown was the head. The kindness and charm of Isaac Sharp in later life suggest that his many pupils scattered at home and abroad must retain happy memories of their school days.

With the appointment in 1890 as Recording Clerk of London Yearly Meeting came the opportunity which afforded scope for Isaac Sharp's varied gifts. For he was a many-sided man—historian, biographer, antiquarian, litterateur, man of business, and these gifts were placed at the service of the Society. Dr. Benjamin Battin, recently professor at Swarthmore College, Pennsylvania, wrote of him: "The work of this position is in no sense a light or easy task; it is rather one of the most difficult I know. One called to be Recording Clerk needs an intimate and precise knowledge of the principles, testimonies and history of the Society of Friends, not only in Great Britain but elsewhere—needs a sound judgment and a great share of tact and discretion. Isaac Sharp possesses all these necessary qualifications, and has always carried out the duties with unfailing energy and patience. While his inborn spirit of helpfulness makes it a pleasure for me to go to him for assistance and advice, I admired particularly the deep sense of humor which he possesses to a rare extent." There are many English Friends who can endorse that judgment.

The following intimate picture is from the pen of another American Friend, William C. Allen, of San José, Cal., also published in a recent issue of the Friends' Intelligencer: "There, behind a big roll-top desk, piled high with papers and correspondence, is the object of your search. You love him at once. Isaac Sharp greets you with a genial smile. Time has robbed him of much of his grey, curly hair. He looks a typical Englishman. He has a rich, cheery voice. He is an alert man of business. What a generous soul he has! It radiates through his eyes—it is detected in his words of sympathy and cheer. You are confident that you are in the presence of a Friend who knows how to deal with men and who keeps in touch with God. And so you are. When attending Yearly Meeting you discover that Isaac Sharp is the busiest of Friends. During the sessions he sits at a modest desk under the high desk of the Clerk. But it is in the office that the real labor is performed. Here at all seasons of the year he keeps in touch with Friendly activities. Committees seem to come and go and organize at his beck and call. London Yearly Meeting is too democratic an organization to have any one man or woman control it—its work and opinions are too extended and varied for that—but our Friend has often been its efficient spokesman. Visiting Friends find in him a guide, philosopher and friend. One side of his character is to be approached with tender regard for his most sacred feelings. It is in reference to the fact that in his youth he gave himself to his Lord and has ever since found great peace and happiness in the service of the King. We are sure that he knows what holy communion is and that he must often be found at the place of prayer. He enjoys the fruits of the Spirit—love, joy, peace.

So he appeared to his friends, and now that he has gone there remains a sense of the graciousness, sweetness and the light which radiated from a truly lovable character. Always an optimist, as he said in his farewell address at Yearly Meeting, his desire was that such attitude might ever be the mind of Friends—not relying on the traditions of the past, however great, but looking forward. "We do not," he added, "want to stand as in an Alpine sunset, and see the shadows gradually stealing over the mountains, but rather to stand at sunrise seeing the mountain tops lit up one by one until at last the whole of the plain below is flooded too with light. I look upon this house as a power-house from which energy and power have gone out, and will go out, for the service of God to an untold extent in many directions. I hope that we may always be going forward, striving and working, and endeavoring to do all, as the old medieval phrase has it, to 'the greater glory of God, to whom be all the glory and the praise now and evermore.'" And this we may regard as his last, bracing and enheartening message to the whole Society of Friends.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

Iowa Yearly Meeting embraces three rather widely-separated centres, and if the Stavanger community is reckoned apart from West Branch there are four. Perhaps no Yearly Meeting in America is composed of more diverse elements as to nationality: Americans, Norwegians, Danes, English and Scotch are all to be found within its borders and it is not a large body. The Stavanger settlement in Marshall County is almost wholly Norwegian. The American element is largely of Ohio stock; this will doubtless be much more pronounced since the addition of Hickory Grove Quarterly Meeting.

The date set for the meeting to begin was Fourth-day, the seventeenth of Tenth Month; for which event the Friends at Bear Creek had been busy making preparations. The centre of this neighborhood is some three miles north from Earlham, and as the membership had mostly removed from Earlham, the local members conceived the bold plan of moving the meeting-house entire from Earlham to the site selected. This involved traversing a somewhat rough country, especially so in crossing the valley of Bear Creek. Nevertheless it was successfully accomplished in a remarkably short time after the preparations were made, and that without accident to men or building. William Mott, the Friend who had the management of it, certainly proved his efficiency. The house was placed on the foundation prepared for it, the walls of which enclosed an ample dining-hall and kitchen, for the custom prevails for all the attenders of the Yearly Meeting to have their meals in common during Yearly Meeting week, thus relieving the local members of the care incident to preparing meals.

The meeting of Friends round a common table to break bread suggests the early apostolic times when the disciples had all things common; and the times of silence before and after meals gave opportunity to reflect on what each meal should suggest to us, being a symbol of that meat and drink which nourishes the spiritual life; and also reminding us of that breaking of bread when the Saviour told the disciples "This do in remembrance of me."

The Yearly Meeting began by the meeting of Ministers and Elders on Fourth-day morning, at which were present Jesse and Rebecca Mekeel, of New York, and Solomon and Sybil Barker, of North Carolina, with minutes from their respective meetings liberating them for service in Iowa and elsewhere. This was followed by a public meeting for worship. Both meetings were felt to have been favored opportunities.

In the afternoon the Representative meeting held a session at which the situation of the country in connection with the war and the attitude of Friends towards "the draft" was considered. It was and is a constant weight on the minds of Friends. A committee was appointed to revise a testimony issued at a previous meeting against taking part in war and military preparation and reiterating Friends' views on the subject. On Fifth-day morning the regular meeting for business began. After the calling of the representatives, etc., the minutes of the visiting Friends were read; one of the minutes was from Canada, for Jennett Pollard, who was accompanied by Albert and Agnes Pollard. Several dear Friends from Hickory Grove were also in attendance, two from Kansas, one without a minute from North Carolina, and three young men from Ohio, all of whom were cordially welcomed.

At this session the reading of the Epistles from the Yearly Meetings in regular correspondence with Iowa Yearly Meeting was entered upon; also a letter from Fritchley Friends was read, and in Men's Meeting a message from London Yearly Meeting and one from Genesee Yearly Meeting, Canada, both occasioned by the war and in reference to our common testimony in behalf of peace. A committee was appointed to prepare, as way opened, responses to these tokens of love and community of faith, which were felt to be especially valuable in this season of trial. The letters from London and Genesee were also acknowledged.

Sixth-day morning the representatives offered the names of James E. Gordon and Lewis L. Rockwell for men's clerks, and Mary B. Henderson and Anna R. Henderson for women's clerks; which were united with. The state of Society was then considered as reflected in the answers to the Queries. In the afternoon the meeting again assembled, in joint session, to deliberate on the subject of Hickory Grove Quarterly Meeting being attached to Iowa Yearly Meeting. It was introduced by the Clerk reading an extract of a minute from Ohio Yearly Meeting. It was a solemn and tendering occasion; and will doubtless continue fresh in the memory of those who were privileged to partake of the spirit of love and unity which prevailed. Earnest were the desires that were expressed that this union so long hoped for and now accomplished may prove a mutual blessing and that being united, our sphere of usefulness may be enlarged.

Seventh-day was mostly occupied in considering reports and in committee work. Stavanger boarding-school committee made a final report, the school being discontinued.

The meetings on First-day were felt to be favored occasions, the morning meeting especially so. The theme that seemed to be dwelt upon throughout the Yearly Meeting more than any other perhaps was love, different phases of this Divine love were continually being presented to view and found a ready response in many hearts.

The burden that was felt to be resting on the meeting all through occasioned by the war and the trying position of our young men, culminated in a meeting on First-day evening to consider the situation and to encourage those subject to draft to be faithful to the cause of Christ and to be true to their convictions whatever may befall them at the hands of man. It was an occasion not soon to be forgotten.

On Second-day the epistles to the other Yearly Meetings were read and united with and the meeting closed in a joint session, purposing to meet near Paulina next year.

HENRY STANDING.

Is there on record a case of a nation with a well-equipped fighting army, which has not developed a class of professional militarists, men who have stagnated in peace and who lust for war if only to display their prowess? These blood-lusts already exist among us, and against them we must be on our guard: ruin lies in their way. In their cry that such a great nation as ours must maintain its dignity, they will be joined by all those who are now providing munitions in return for blood money and who will not wish to see their new plants lying idle after this war.—DR. WM. W. COMFORT.

"RUSSIA."

Written many years ago by THOMAS BAILEY ALDRICH.

From yonder gilded minaret
Beside the steel blue Neva set
I faintly catch, from time to time,
The sweet aerial midnight chime
"God save the Czar."

Above the ravelins and the moats
Of the white citadel it floats;
And men in dungeons far beneath
Listen, and pray, and gnash their teeth—
"God save the Czar."

In his red palace over there,
Wakeful, he needs must hear the prayer,
How can it drown the broken cries
Wrung from his children's agonies?
"God save the Czar."

"Father" they called him from of old—
Batushka! How his heart is cold.
Wait till a million scourged men
Rise in their awful night, and then
"God save the Czar."

"OPEN thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law." (119th Psalm: 18.)

This prayer of the Psalmist might well be made the prayer of every sincere seeking soul, not that we might be wise in our own conceit, for it is written, "the meek He will guide in judgment and the humble He will teach of His ways." As we abide in this humble, teachable condition we will be satisfied with the food that is suitable to our condition and growth, but if we are not watchful and seek for things beyond our measure to understand, soaring above this humble condition, darkness and confusion may be our portion, for the "natural man receiveth not the things of the spirit of God, neither can he know them because they are spiritually discerned." "The Lion of the tribe of Judah, the Root of David," who only was found worthy "to open the book and to loose the seven seals thereof," and in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, must be our Alpha and Omega, the beginning and end of our faith, it matters not whether we are "Jew or Greek," learned or unlearned. He is rich unto all that call upon Him. It seems to me this is that path seen by the Prophet, that "the vulture's eye hath not seen," and yet it is so plain that the "wayfaring man though a fool, may not err therein," even that way that is called "the way of holiness and the ransomed and redeemed shall walk there." As we come to know of being redeemed from all error, we may be counted worthy to walk in that way cast up for the ransomed and redeemed to walk in and have our eyes opened to see things as they really are. Thus we may know of "Christ dwelling in our hearts by faith, and strengthening us with might by his Spirit in the inner man." By this we shall be enabled to comprehend in our small measure "what is the breadth and length and depth and height and to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge."

Then we might say again with the Psalmist, "I had fainted if I had not believed when I saw the goodness of the Lord in the land of the living." E. E.

PLAINFIELD, Ind.

THOUSANDS of years since a leaf fell on the soft clay and seemed to be lost. But last summer a geologist, in his ramblings, broke off a piece of rock with his hammer, and there lay the image of the leaf, with every line and every vein and all the delicate tracery preserved in the stone through those centuries. So the words we speak and the things we do for Christ to-day may seem to be lost, but in the great final revealing the smallest of them will appear.—J. R. MILLER.

IN AND OUT OF INDIANA.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

(Continued from page 231.)

The missionary report to the Five Years' Meeting brought into prominence the constructive side of world service. "The field and the call" have both put on new aspects in the lurid light of bursting shells. To the mind of the pagan, so called, a world at war is an absolute denial of the professed ideals of Christianity. Religionists may frame such justification as they will of the present war, but these fail to satisfy those outside the fold. Either Jesus Christ was a failure or else Christianity has failed miserably to express Him in terms of international life. So the whole missionary movement must lose its grip, or frankly accept the "heathen" implication that war and Christianity are incompatible. Charles E. Tebbitts urged this situation of crisis with all the force of his devoted energy. The fundamental Quaker position of the universality of God's grace has come to be more and more recognized of late years in missionary enterprises. Now a second step in the world-expression of this idea is possible as human brotherhood is lived, so as to make it clear that it is not limited at all by national barriers. Gilbert Bowles, the "statesman-missionary," whose peace work is the great outstanding feature of this new crusade and propaganda put the opportunity and the call, and by his quiet winning personality, the method of this new adventure before the meeting. In his hands it became a plain case that the Kingdom of Heaven is not to be taken by violence.

The Social Service Committee of the Five Years' Meeting has so far gained little headway in its work. This in part is due to the fact that the field is already abundantly occupied by activities of small groups in an almost endless variety of work. Certain co-ordinating principles can be worked out in time, but the field is already well cleared. Charles M. Woodman gave a moving address on Social Service and City Life. It was refreshing to hear a frank avowal that the city organization is a perfected machine of civilization. It was of course represented as very far from a perfect machine, but its possibilities under the Divine order were shown to be anything but discouraging. Are they not of the very essence of Christian co-operation? Warren Wilson, who has done a notable social service work at Quaker Hill, not far from New York City, somewhat startled his audience with a presentation of the necessity of a material background of progress for an advancing social and Christian work in the country. His vigorous style of speaking became at least a wholesome challenge of some approved lines of service.

The session of Fifth-day evening was in some particulars the high-water mark of the Conference feature, so far as our observations go. It was opened by Gilbert Bowles in a telling call for that united worship in silence which many cherish as a precious fundamental of the "true democracy of Quakerism." An appeal was made by Meade Kelsey for starv-Syria. Rufus M. Jones then gave a most earnest address, of which the plea was for "finding God" in life and in worship, as the only possible solvent of the present world confusion. The test of the address was in its baptizing power. That evening session was concluded in a very precious sense of united worship.

Full momentum in the meeting probably was attained on Sixth-day. It was plainly evident that the program was loaded, so that no moment could be wasted. We note a few of the features. Ex-President Kelley of Earlham made a telling claim for the conservation of young people in State colleges. Wilbur Thomas presented the work of the Bible School Board. There are 67,000 enrolled in these schools, of whom 35,000 are not in membership with Friends. William Sayer showed a knowledge of youthful psychology in his statement, "It boys do not have Sunday minds and Monday minds." Telegrams to the President and Secretary of War as printed in THE FRIEND were adopted. The Young Friends'

Movement, as shown in their report, has had three guiding principles:—a mind for Truth; a heart open for service; a will for sacrifice.

The Friends' Service Committee had clear exposition as to motives and aims from Morris E. Leeds and Vincent Nicholson. Isaac Sharpless spoke briefly of the response of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting to this effort.

On Fifth-day and again on Sixth, announcements were made of the arrangements for meetings on First-day. Pastors of the Five Years' Meeting connection, were to conduct the services in something like fifty places, within a radius of thirty miles with Richmond as a centre. Sixth-day evening Joseph Elkinton announced that the English and Philadelphia Friends would join in a meeting for worship on First-day afternoon in Richmond. This we understand was a favored opportunity, and at the suggestion of Wilbur Thomas, of Boston, the meeting agreed that five years hence this feature should be recognized in the regular First-day arrangements. We did not attend the sessions of Seventh and Second-days, other interests taking us to Indianapolis. As we rode out of Richmond we were gratefully sensible of an atmosphere of friendship in the renewal of old associations, and in the establishment of some that were new. The numerous questions prompted by what we had seen and heard need not be set down here. Many of them are unanswered questions in our own minds. They give force to the thought we have often heard expressed by saying the world of opinion, like the actual world, is round and not flat and that "point of view" has much to do with our conclusions. From Indianapolis we found it easy on First-day to be with the small group of conservative Friends at Plainfield, Indiana, for their regular ten o'clock meeting. Nothing makes a Philadelphia Friend feel more at home in distant parts than to join others on the common platform of seeking in united worship to realize something of the Divine Mind. There were about thirty in the meeting, a dozen at least young Friends. They all seemed to know to what they were gathered, and to have a live meeting without other fixed service than the silent waiting. An hour's social converse in one of the nearby homes till train time, after meeting, made the impression of a winning solidity and weight as characteristic of this group.

The Keystone Express carried us out of Indiana and brought us in the early morning into the mountainous region of Pennsylvania. So often is this portion of the State traveled by night that one forgets its multitudinous surprises of beautiful and, at times, quite sublime scenery. Clothed in autumn tints, gilded with early sunlight, subdued with fading mists, it seemed to us to rival in attractiveness a great deal for which we usually travel much farther. Some one has said we see that which is distant in order to know that which is near. Is this not true of the world of knowledge and judgment as well as of that of sense?

J. H. B.

IT IS TIME TO AWAKE.—Things are passing; our friends are dropping from off us; strength is giving way; our relish for earth is going, and the world no longer wears to our hearts the radiance that once it wore. We have the same sky above us and the same scenes around us; but the freshness that our hearts extracted from everything in boyhood, and the glory that seemed to rest once on earth and life, have faded away forever. Sad and gloomy truths to the man who is going down to the grave with his work undone—not sad to the Christian, but rousing, exciting, invigorating. If it be the eleventh hour, we have no time for folding of the hands; we will work the faster. Through the changefulness of life; through the solemn tolling of the bell of time, which tells us that another, and another, and another are gone before us; through the noiseless rush of a world which is going down with gigantic footsteps into nothingness, let not the Christian slack his hand from work, for he that doth the will of God may defy hell itself to quench his immortality.—F. W. ROBERTSON.

TEMPERANCE.

A department edited by BENJAMIN F. WHITSON, of Moylan, Pa., on behalf of the Friends' Temperance Association of Philadelphia.

Soon rested those who fought; but thou
Who marchest in the longer strife
For truths which men receive not now,
Thy warfare only ends with life.

Yet nerve thy spirit to the proof,
And blanch not at thy chosen lot;
The timid good may stand aloof,
The sage may frown—yet faint thou not.

Yea, though thou lie upon the dust,
And they who helped thee flee in fear,
Die full of hope and manly trust,
Like those who died in battle here.

—W. C. BRYANT.

Two great battles are on, two wars are being waged in the world to-day. Gradually the clash of arms will fade into a background against which will stand forth a war involving the physical, moral and spiritual welfare of every present inhabitant of the globe, and of generations yet unborn. And it depends upon the issues of this greater war whether the world shall be made "safe for democracy."—MARGARET WINTRINGER.

A PROHIBITION MASS MEETING, for the purpose of further creating and directing public sentiment on the question of national prohibition as now before Congress, has been arranged for the Philadelphia district on First-day, Eleventh Month 18th, at 3.45 P. M. As this subject is one of such deep and general interest, it was deemed advisable to secure the largest and most comfortable auditorium in the city—the Metropolitan Opera House, at Broad and Poplar Streets. The meeting is to be addressed by William Jennings Bryan. Tickets may be secured from the offices of the Anti-Saloon League, 1026 Stock Exchange Building, Broad and Walnut Streets. It is hoped that the great auditorium will be filled with people on this occasion. The opposition would hardly venture to measure public sympathy in such a manner, but they will be prompt to comment to their advantage if the attendance on this occasion is slack. The "Great Commoner" is a brave, devout man, and to hear him speak on National Prohibition will be a privilege quite sure of being crowned with inspiration.

WHAT IT MEANS.—As the readers of The Amethyst (the official organ of the Presbyterian Board of Temperance) generally know, the lower House of Congress passed a bill providing for complete prohibition for the period of the war by a vote of 365 to 5 after only seven hours' debate. This went to the Senate on the next legislative day. Here the liquor people held the bill in debate or otherwise for weeks, though the temperance people offered to go to vote immediately without debate. Meanwhile, the public press generally carried headlines to the effect that prohibition was delaying the food bill. This was diametrically opposed to fact, as it was the liquor people and their representatives who caused the delay.

When the bill was pending in the Senate, the President addressed a communication to the Anti-Saloon League, suggesting that the measure be modified so as to permit the continuance of the manufacture of beer and wine. The Anti-Saloon League acceded to this request and agreed that it would do nothing further in behalf of the particular bill.

We regard this as distinctly unfortunate at a time when there was the strongest sentiment in the country for complete war prohibition, when every dictate of patriotism, logic and conservation demanded it, the President checked the onrush of national prohibition and the Anti-Saloon League ceased work for the only measure through which it was possible to secure it. This left other organizations handicapped, because in the face of the liquor traffic, the temperance forces were divided, not unfriendly, but in their support of the only possible method of securing it. Representatives of the Board of Temperance stated frankly in the conference of the national forces that our Church would stand unflinchingly against the waste of food material in the manufacture of beer and wine with its accompanying menace to the health, morals and efficiency of our soldiers, and we have kept our word, to the letter. We believe it is illogical, irrational and an affront to the people of the country to ask them to save ounces and deliberately permit and provide for the waste of millions of tons of food in the production of an unnecessary and harmful commodity.

We believe that the President missed the opportunity of a century in not declaring frankly for complete prohibition during the period of the war. Indeed, it would probably have been unnecessary for him to do or say anything except keep hands off and let Congress take the course which seemed inevitable at the time he interfered. Had he done so, he might have stood in history with Washington and Lincoln. We believe the League also made a mistake in withdrawing its support and ceasing its activities at a most critical time. The officers, no doubt, acted on their best judgment, but we dissent from that judgment.

DO YOU KNOW?—That there are ten million farmers in the United States? That in 1916 these farmers produced thirteen billions worth of wealth? That the liquor interests of the United States consumed enough of this food to feed an army of seven million men for one year? That it took seventy-five thousand farmers with their farms, machinery and farm hands working for six months of the year (the entire seeding and harvesting season for 1916) to produce this food stuff consumed by the liquor manufacturers? That there are employed in the different liquor producing concerns in the United States, converting this food-stuff into poison called beer, wine, whiskey, port, ale, 62,920 men who are needed in the many legitimate industries of the nation?

That the farmers of the Dry States are asking the question as to the reasonableness of the request coming to them from Washington, D. C., that they raise more grain? They are asking, "Why should we work overtime to raise more grain when the President and Congress refuse to stop the worse than waste of the fruits and grains of our farms sufficient to feed seven million men. Why should we, the farmers of Prohibition States, be urged to work overtime to raise grains and fruits to put into intoxicating liquors which we have by our vote driven forever from our border?"—The Amelbist.

IS IT RIGHT OR SENSIBLE?—In order to send sugar to the people of France is it right to ask my children to give up the appetizing flavor of their food, if the brewers are using more than that amount to manufacture the stuff that is not only unnecessary, but that which our Government says it would not be right to give the soldiers because it would demoralize them?—Patriot Phalanx.

A FORBIDDEN BOOK.—The Patriot Phalanx, official organ of the Prohibition Party, is publishing by installments the book called "The Fiddlers," written by Arthur Mee, of England. The British censor has forbidden the sending of this book out of England, and the Canadian censor has gone even further and forbidden its circulation, but prior to its suppression, several large editions were sold. It deals with common inconsistencies on the part of the Government in a manner decidedly irritating to some in authority. A short extract must suffice:—

It does not matter where you look, or when; the evidence of the fiddling is everywhere about you. Take the week before the Prime Minister's grave speech about submarines—ending May 19.

Submarines destroyed 27 British cargoes, mostly over 1600 tons.

Brewers destroyed 27 British food cargoes, totalling 9000 tons. The granaries of Canada were crammed with wheat waiting for British ships, but there were no ships to bring this people's food.

The rum quay at London Docks was crammed with casks of rum to last till 1020, but a ship arrived with 1000 casks more.

A woman was fined £5 for destroying a quarter loaf.

Brewers were fined nothing for destroying millions of loaves.

Poor people waited in queues to buy sugar in London.

Cartloads of sugar were destroyed in London breweries.

NEWS ITEMS.

The following is from a personal letter of Lloyd Balderston, written on steamship China, in mid-ocean, en route to Japan, and is dated Tenth Month 16th:—

"I send greeting from this place 'most half way around the world. We have had a pleasant journey in nearly all respects. Please change the address of our FRIEND to College of Agriculture, Sapporo, Japan.

"They would be interested in this ship's company. We have about forty missionaries and fifteen Y. M. C. A. secretaries who are going to Russia to work among the soldiers on the eastern front. They are a fine lot of young men. The Russian language is taking much of their attention.

"Naturally we have made many pleasant acquaintances. One of the missionaries is Anna P. Philpott, formerly Anna P. James. She used to live near West Chester, Pa., and was a Normal School student ten years ago.

"I was up before this morning to see if there was anything new in the way of stars! We are as far south as Key West and I had hopes of the Southern Cross. I fear we shall not see it, however. It looked strange to see the Dipper dragging its handle up out of the sea!

"We have been keenly interested in the flying fish. Often they fly a hundred yards or more, at speeds exceeding the twelve miles an hour of the ship. I should like to learn something about their life, history, and that of the birds we saw yesterday that must have been eight hundred miles from any land. We have not sighted a sail in our five days."

LETTER FROM HAROLD M. LANE.

DEAR FRIEND:—

Will thee please change our address to "First Detachment, 154th Depot Brigade." We have since last Second-day had a captain, two lieutenants and five guards in charge of us. The daily change which led to occasional minor friction has been eliminated. Our relations with these officers and men are altogether pleasant. We are more certain of uniform rules and treatment. Calisthenics were instituted last week. About half the men refuse to take the exercises, so instead they have extra hiking. General Kuhn was here just before dinner. Among other things he inquired as to our receiving mail, as to our food, our exercise and as to our having visitors. He also said, "You men understand you are not prisoners, but you are being segregated from the soldiers. This will not mean the freedom of the camp by any means, but will make improbable any harsh ruling or treatment on the part of the guards."

We are really quite comfortable and as happy as may be under the circumstances. Glad Wm. B. Harvey is taking up the plan for frequent visitors to see us.

Hastily and sincerely,

HAROLD M. LANE.

PHILADELPHIA QUARTERLY MEETING.—The sessions of Philadelphia Quarter on the 5th and 6th were occasions of interest and of favor. The Meeting of Ministers and Elders confirmed the appointment of four elders, Katharine E. Kirk and G. Eldah Wilcox, of Muncy Monthly Meeting, and Watson W. Dewees and Ellen W. Longstreth, of Haverford.

Alfred Kemp Brown and W. Blair Neatby were at both sessions, much to the satisfaction of Friends. Their minutes were read on Third-day, as was also a minute of introduction for George Augustus Waller, of London. The Quarterly Meeting appointed Elizabeth B. Jones and

J. Henry Scattergood to succeed Benjamin Vail and John B. Garrett as members of the Representative Meeting. As noted three months ago these Friends had resigned.

A precious feeling of sympathy went out from the Meeting to all its members of military age wherever situated and whatever their position. The Clerks were directed to convey this to them by suitable letters.

A very striking communication from W. Blair Neatby, based upon the message of Isaac Pennington to his brother, who had embraced Roman Catholicism—"Thy religion and my religion must be the same, in so far as we have religion; for there is only one religion," gave direction to the thought and feeling of the meeting in a blessed sense of unity.

THE REPRESENTATIVE MEETING.—An adjourned session of the Representative Meeting was held on the 9th. Alfred Kemp Brown and W. Blair Neatby were helpfully in attendance. The Meeting had been preceded by a meeting of the Committee on Exemptions in which the Secretary, Wm. B. Harvey, had gone over in some detail the matters that had come under his notice in the week or more of his incumbency. It was plain to all that the appointment of an executive secretary is justified. The number and character of problems in hand already require much more attention than can be expected of unpaid service.

The first regular business of the Representative Meeting was the reading of the memorial from Philadelphia Monthly Meeting for George J. and Caroline C. Scattergood. More than the usual amount of expression followed in appreciation of these well-beloved Friends and of the value in community of such devotedly consistent lives.

A report of the Committee appointed in the late Spring to assist our young Friends of conscription age was read, and also a brief statement from the two members who had interviewed Secretary Baker and General Crowder. The appointment of Wm. B. Harvey was approved and his modest salary authorized. It was also decided that C. O.'s who may require financial help shall have it provided, and not feel any necessity to draw government pay. The two English Friends had messages of sympathy. It appeared to them that so far our young Friends had received most considerate treatment compared to their British brothers. One of them remarked that it was to be expected that President Wilson would profit by the mistakes in the use of conscription in England. It was also observed that the Northcliffe press so dominated English public opinion that the same and just undercurrent of sentiment represented by a paper like the Nation is suppressed. There is now hope that the Nation will be again allowed to circulate in this country and Friends were advised to read it.

J. Henry Scattergood, upon request, emphasized the openings for reconstruction work and told how they would likely open the way for a greatly enlarged service for Quakerism after the war.

Not often does a session of the Representative Meeting attain a higher level of deep concern and more practical determination.

A MEETING of the Philadelphia group of the Fellowship of Reconciliation was held at Twelfth Street Meeting-house on Fifth-day, Eleventh Month 1, 1917. There were two sessions, one in the afternoon and another in the evening, with an interval between for supper and social intercourse. Invitations had been extended to members asking them to bring their friends, and so cordial was the response that the meeting-house was filled both in the afternoon and evening. In the afternoon Harold Evans gave an interesting and powerful address on the Conscientious Objector. He gave an account of the experiences of conscientious objectors at the camps and also made some illuminating comments on the policy of the government in regard to "C. O.'s" and its results in practice.

In the evening Agnes L. Tierney read a paper entitled, "Thoughts on the Social Order." As her article will appear in a subsequent issue of THE FRIEND, it is not necessary to review it at this time. Brief talks in discussion followed, among them one by Margaret Shearman of Wilmington, in which she urged that members of the Fellowship of Reconciliation should now make some concrete and practical experiments in the application of their principles to the Social Order. Rufus M. Jones closed the events of the day by reviewing a new book by Harry Emerson Fosdick. In curious contradiction of thought, Dr. Fosdick devotes the first half of the book to a defense of militant and military Christianity and the last half to a denunciation of war more eloquent and outspoken than any pacifist has yet uttered. The meeting closed with a few words of prayer and a moment or two of silence.

ABINGTON QUARTERLY MEETING, held at Germantown, occurred on Fifth-day afternoon, Eleventh Month 8th. The presence and service of Alfred Kemp Brown and W. Blair Neatby, ministers and members of London Yearly Meeting, and Augustus G. Waller, also a member of London Yearly Meeting, and Joseph Elkinton, from Philadelphia Quarterly Meeting, were very acceptable. The Meeting was felt to be an unusually favored occasion.

The meeting for business opened in joint session with the reading of minutes from London Yearly Meeting, liberating Alfred Kemp Brown and W. Blair Neatby for extensive religious service in this country. Also a letter of introduction from his Monthly Meeting concerning Augustus G. Waller, and a minute from Philadelphia Monthly Meeting, liberating Joseph Elkinton to accompany W. Blair Neatby in his proposed visits to various meetings.

After reading the Advices, as directed by the Yearly Meeting, a report was read from the Visitation Committee, whose term of appointment expires at this time. Following the recommendation in the report a few Friends were appointed to review the condition of our smaller meetings, to consider what assistance, if any, should be rendered to them and to report their conclusions to our next session. Meanwhile the present Visitation Committee is continued as heretofore. Our attention was feelingly called by Emily Oliver to the conditions which now exist in Syria and Armenia. Being impressed with the gravity of the situation, Friends were encouraged to contribute funds as best they can, to relieve in some measure the suffering of these afflicted peoples. The question of raising funds was referred to the several Monthly Meetings. Routine business was transacted in separate sessions after which the meeting concluded. A social hour was spent over the tea cups and then our English Friends told us of conditions in England with regard to Friends and the interned prisoners, and of the proposed Peace Conference of Friends after the war. The latter was very inspiring.

The office of the Committee on Exemption at 304 Arch Street, Philadelphia, has been active during the past week in sending blank forms to correspondents in the Monthly Meetings, in order to gather accurate data regarding the young men of draft age; the replies have commenced, and an amount of valuable information will soon be available to those who wish to use it.

Isaac Sharpless, Walter W. Haviland and Arthur R. Pennell visited Camp Meade on First-day, fourth inst.; a religious meeting was held with the C. O.'s. More than fifty of the men were in attendance, and from letters received at this office from those visited, the meeting was to edification.

It is tentatively arranged that Orthodox Friends shall visit the Camp on alternate First-days; the eighteenth inst. thus being our next date. In order to carry on this branch of the work satisfactorily, Friends will please consult Wm. B. Harvey regarding dates for visiting the Camp; this applies particularly to those wishing to have religious opportunities with the men.

Howard Branson, Samuel Mason, Jr., and Leslie Grantham have recently gone to Camp Meade, thus increasing the list of C. O.'s.

Camp Dix at Wright-town, N. J., was visited a few days ago by interested Friends; very few of our members are located there, and as yet there have been no religious meetings held among our members to our knowledge.

ELISHA B. STEER AND CHAS. LIVEZEY were appointed by a Committee of the Meeting for Sufferings of Barnesville Yearly Meeting to visit Camp Sherman, at Chillicothe, Ohio, if there seemed to be a service in it. They were there on Seventh and First-days, the 3rd and 4th insts. They found twenty-four conscientious objectors at the Camp. We hope to hear further of their visit.—Eds.

The following in regard to Barnesville School is from a private letter. "We have now an enrollment of about sixty-five pupils, slightly less than a year ago. The times are making some difference to us, it being so easy for our boys to get good jobs these days that it is a temptation for them to stay at home and work rather than to go to school. We are having our own problems to face on the fuel and provision questions, but we are a trustful set and hope to come through eventually all right. Here in the coal state of Ohio, we are practically having a coal famine and some provisions are scarce and hard to get."

CONCLUDING REPORT OF J. HENRY SCATTERGOOD FOR FRIENDS' UNIT TO THE AMERICAN RED CROSS.

[This is somewhat abridged, but contains the main points.]—Eds.

The assignments have been:

To Paris.....	11
Red Cross Friends' Bureau.....	2
Paris Office Friends.....	6
Loaned to Red Cross.....	3
To Ormans Manufacturing Houses.....	21
To Dole.....	11
To Samoens Convalescent Home.....	1
To Sernaise, Agri., Autos., etc.....	16
Bar-le-Duc, Relief.....	1
To Troyes, Relief.....	3
Chalons, Medical and Relief.....	2
Ham, House Erecting.....	12
Golancourt, Farm Centre.....	5
Gruny, Farm Centre and House Repair.....	18

Charles Evans has been appointed by the American Friends' Service Committee to represent it in France, in the Friends' War Victims' Relief Committee and in the American Red Cross Commission. He has now been here three weeks. Through your courtesy and the opportunity of being in the midst of all that has transpired during that time, he is now entirely ready to assume the full duties of the work.

Dr. James A. Babbitt arrived with the largest group of workers and has been engaged, as Field Director, in helping get the American workers installed in their various équipes. It is hoped that the proposed Civil Hospital for the Marne and Meuse can be soon opened so that his surgical and medical skill can be availed of in lines so urgently needed in that kind of work.

We have loaned six men for the erection of three hospital structures at Issoudun, which work was finished in five days.

We are now about to loan six men to Dr. Lucas's Bureau to go to Toul for certain work in the large children's hospital.

We have been very urgently requested for a loan of men by several other Red Cross Bureaus. We hope the arrival of additional workers, which I shall strongly urge on my return to America, will make possible further loans of men for various lines of work.

MEDICAL WORK.—A home for babies under four is being established with money appropriated by the American Red Cross at St. Remy-en-Bouzemont, near Vitry-le-Francois, which is in a château fortunately at our disposal at a low rental. This is a new line of work which will accommodate about thirty babies, heretofore crowded into the Maternity at Chalons, and will fill a very great need.

The improvements in the Chalons Maternity of electric light and hot water equipment are being rapidly pushed to completion, being paid for out of Red Cross appropriations.

The proposed enlargement of the Chalons Maternity, so strongly urged by Dr. Slemons, was considered at an Executive Committee meeting of the Friends' Unit yesterday, and it was decided that we should approve of going forward in this matter if the Red Cross appropriations are made and if the architect of the Department of the Marne will make the arrangements for doing the building, as he has promised to do if supplied with the funds. This addition to this hospital will very greatly add to its capacity and provide for several features heretofore found impossible, but which have been greatly needed.

The proposal to establish a Civil Hospital for surgical and medical work in the Departments of the Marne and Meuse was also favorably considered at the meeting of the Friends' Executive Committee, provided the Red Cross will make the appropriations for the equipment and maintenance for same as set forth in the budget. Dr. Babbitt will be the natural person to head this work and he will undertake to get the necessary staff from America, either directly, or in connection with the Red Cross. We very much hope that this project can be put forward promptly. A search has already been made for a site and a château near Sernaise, if obtainable, will do admirably.

RELIEF.—In the last few weeks there have been very serious air raids at Bar-le-Duc, which brought about the necessity for the removal of many children from that city. As many as 125 of these children have been evacuated to our équipes at Sernaise and Bettancourt, which has brought a great deal of emergency work. Many of these children have now been passed on through French societies to homes elsewhere in France.

The relief work has been very much enlarged through the additional funds provided by the Red Cross, and especial attention is being given to the growth of the work in the Department of the Aube from the Troyes centre.

New developments have also been made in the relief work from the Ham centre, chiefly in the villages where our men workers have been erecting "maisons démontables," lying northeast of Ham. The fact that so many women workers of the Smith College Unit, of the American Fund for French Wounded, Civil Branch, of the Oeuvre Anglais and of the Union des Femmes de France are in this section seemed to make it unnecessary for the Society of Friends to send any more women workers, besides the two already at the Ham centre, into the evacuated region of the Somme and Aisne and the Oise. It is hoped that some co-operation can be worked out with these various women so that we can help in the agricultural and construction work in villages where they are doing the relief and medical work. This co-operation can be developed through the committees which have been organized at Nesle and at Ham.

BUILDING.—On account of the delay in the shipment of the planing mill machinery ordered from America we have not been able as yet to get started making houses at Ormans, but the work of manufacture continues at Dole. We have been advised by cable that the machinery for Ormans is now on a steamer, and we hope that before the first of the year everything will be in readiness for productive work. As previously reported, we look forward to manufacturing from ten to fifteen portable houses per week at the two plants of Dole and Ormans.

Experience has shown that a house with a hangar or shed is very much more in demand than one without such. The present orders for our houses from the Departments of the Aisne and Somme are for two-room houses without these hangars. The prospect now is that further requirements will demand the sheds and often three-room instead of two-room houses, which will, of course, somewhat reduce the number of houses made, as well as add to their cost. A great difficulty has been experienced in securing glass in France, also tiles for the roofs. With regard to the latter, the experience in the Marne and Meuse with the 500 houses built by the Friends has shown the very great desirability of tile roofing and we are making very great efforts to make a contract with a tile maker in the Marne to supply us with the tiles needed for the houses to be erected in the Somme and Aisne.

The erection of these houses has been under way for a few weeks with a small équipe of men housed at Ham and taken to their work by automobile. We have now enlarged the group at Ham so that it now numbers twenty persons and the work of erecting houses will heretofore proceed very much more rapidly than in the past. In all probability it will be found desirable to open new small équipes in the villages where the actual erecting work will be done. These will be temporary in character and perhaps caravans will be used for the men to live in.

A very wide prospect for useful work in the erection of "maisons démontables" seems to open before us. In the particular section where we have been doing this work, i. e., Tugny, Villers-St.-Christophe, Aubigny, Foreste, Douchy, St. Simon and Bray-St.-Christophe the return of the people will necessarily be much less rapid than in the section of the devastated area where the destruction has not been so complete and which lie further back from the present lines of battle. If the broad lines of co-operation with other societies develop on the lines which they have requested and arrangements can be made with the authorities for this, it would seem that with our prospective production of ten to fifteen houses a week and an enlarged number of American workmen we shall be able to do work in a very considerable number of villages in the devastated area. It must be borne in mind that not all of those who return to this area desire to invest their indemnity money in these portable houses. Many people prefer to wait until later developments make possible permanent reconstruction of their homes. The number of "maisons démontables" required for any one village at this stage of the return of those who have been burned out is often not at all large, so that this work should move from village to village with some rapidity. This raises very great difficulties in the matter of transportation, and we strongly urge the Red Cross to back up every requisition that we may be forced to make for transportation facilities, so that this work may not be hampered. Our transportation department will shortly submit a schedule of our requirements for the coming months, and I cannot too strongly urge your helpful support in this matter.

The repairing of houses has been most satisfactorily started at Gruny, where several jobs are under way or finished and some fifteen have already been asked for. This village was not so completely destroyed as many others. It is much more economical to repair the houses than that "maisons démolables" should be erected. Similar work has been assigned to the Friends' Unit to do at Cremery, Rehonvillers and Liancourt and it is expected that Carrepi will also be added to this list. The amount of this kind of work is limitless and dependent only on the number of men available and persons equipped to direct them.

AGRICULTURE.—Since our last report the agricultural work in the Marne and Meuse region has been added to by eight new American workers assigned to it. The threshing work is now under way.

A farm centre at Golancourt has been established with the Red Cross appropriation and already ten horses have been secured. As soon as lumber can be obtained, which is now being ordered from the Genie, work will be started in the erection of numerous rabbit pens. It is our intention to raise large numbers of rabbits and also to breed goats and to make distribution of these animals in many villages as rapidly as possible. A very great deal of repair work of agricultural implements will also be undertaken. There are great numbers of such implements which have been put out of commission by the Germans, but which can easily be repaired. Much of this same kind of work was done in the Marne, and we feel that even more of it opens up before us in the Somme, Aisne and the Oise. Plowing work has already been begun for farmers in the neighborhood of Golancourt.

A new farm centre has also been opened at Grunzy, where the same kind of work will be undertaken as at Golancourt. Six men are there with four horses and we have already agreed to co-operate with the communal group of farmers in the locality in the development of two hundred hectares (500 acres) of land. The Government will supply a tractor to plow this land if we will undertake to harrow it and seed it, which we have agreed to do. The encouragement of these farmers' communal committees is most desirable, and we can utilize as many of our men as are familiar with agriculture, and who speak French, in organizing this work in various communities. The same kind of work has been most admirably done by the American Society for French Wounded, and that Society has asked us to co-operate with them in the future development of agricultural work in their region. We hope this will be possible through the coming of additional men from America.

The method of working our agriculture is to find from the Mayor or other local officials which of the cultivators can be helped by us. We naturally find varying conditions; some of the people have enough money to have already bought horses and to have begun work on their own account. Some have implements and some have not. Some with neither horses nor implements need practically everything done for them to give them a fresh start. Other lands are owned by persons who are prisoners in Germany or mobilized and have none to represent them in the village. In the case of Grunzy we found nine cultivators who had been able to make some sort of start for themselves already, all of whom need some help for special requirements; we found five who were in a practically helpless condition and who need to have their work done for them—these are mostly women; we also found that in Grunzy there were eight persons who were prisoners in Germany or mobilized with no one to represent them. In the case of those whose lands are included in the 500 acres above mentioned arrangements will be made to have them participate in the returns from the land, after making proper allowances to those cultivators who may supply labor in addition to the labor which the Friends' Unit donates.

At Grunzy we are attempting to set up a local carpenter and also a local blacksmith. This can be done by furnishing small equipments of tools. The men are old and in one case wounded, but are anxious to get back again to work, but at present have no facilities for doing so.

LARGER NUMBERS OF WORKERS.—The above program calls for additional Friends' Unit workers and we hope to be able, upon my return to America, to develop plans for sending to France considerably more men workers. These should come over gradually, so that it may be possible to find places for them easily and also not to overload the French authorities with demands for earnings too rapidly. We believe that the French Government is now glad to have additional members of our Unit come to France, and they will be willing to grant the necessary permits under Red Cross auspices for our building and agricultural work in the war zone. The enlarged program of work will be dependent upon the attitude of our own Government, especially in the case of young men who may be drafted, and we hope that this work of the Friends' Unit of the American Red Cross may be named by the President as a form of non-combatant service for conscientious objectors in the United States, at least for such as are members of the Society of Friends.

The maintenance of larger numbers of workers is a problem which will have to be worked out by our American Friends' Service Committee. Up to the present time none of our American Red Cross Friends' Unit members cost the Red Cross anything. The transportation, equipment and maintenance charge for the 139 members already here or on the way will be provided for entirely by contributions raised among Friends in America. If larger numbers are sent out it is quite likely that the Friends will not be able to raise the necessary money to take care of all of the added maintenance expense themselves. Major Murphy recommended that such expenses as the Friends could not finance themselves, arising from the coming of additional men to France, should be borne by the Red Cross. I raise this subject again at this time because it is very likely that the matter will have to be taken up in the United States by the American Friends' Service Committee and the American Red Cross authorities to make the necessary financial arrangements, and we hope that you will feel inclined to recommend whatever proves to be necessary in the direction of Red Cross help to make possible the sending of additional Friends' Unit members to be added to those already here.

WOMEN WORKERS.—From our observation in France we do not think it desirable to send very many women workers from America to France beyond those already here, unless they are especially well-equipped in French and in knowledge of relief work. Too great emphasis cannot be placed on the necessity for good colloquial French, as relief workers without it are very difficult to place and can hardly warrant the cost of their upkeep in France. This does not apply, however, to nurses or those needed for the proper working of institutions.

In submitting this last report to you before my return to America I wish to thank you and all the members of the Red Cross Commission for your many courtesies and most valued support of the Friends' work. I am especially grateful to the members of the Red Cross Commission for having put every facility at our disposal as well as for opening the doors for the most hearty co-operation.

J. HENRY SCATTERGOOD.

EXPERIENCES OF DRAFTED FRIENDS WHO CLAIMED EXEMPTION ON CONSCIENTIOUS GROUNDS.

At this writing a large number of men called for service in the first draft have not yet been ordered to mobilize. The experiences of those who have been ordered to mobilize should be of tremendous interest and profit to those who must soon travel the same path.

THOSE WHO REFUSED TO MOBILIZE.—Some Friends in various parts of the country refused to report when ordered to mobilize. These men decided that, since they could not conscientiously become a part of the army, they could not take the first step that transferred them from their civil status to a military status. Not only have they felt that this was the only course consistent with their consciences and with their affidavits, but that they were within the rights conferred by the exemption clause of the Selective Service Law. Since they had been exempted from all service except that which the President should declare to be non-combatant, they have felt that, until the President made such declaration, they were exempt from any military orders.

All of these men, so far as we have learned, have been arrested and taken to camp. After arriving at camp they have received no different treatment than those who went voluntarily.

From all reports thus far, these men have had less trouble in making their position clear and have had none of the distressing problems facing some of the men as to where to draw the line. Men who have been willing to mobilize have often by a series of gradual steps, been drawn almost unconsciously into positions that conflicted with their consciences.

Some men have paid their own expenses to camp, feeling that in this way they avoided incorporation into the army and at the same time placed themselves at the disposal of the government for service outside the army when the ruling as to non-combatant service is made.

THOSE WHO CONSENTED TO MOBILIZE.—Some Friends who have been exempted from combatant service on conscientious grounds have felt that they should make their stand at the camps. These men should be considered in two classes: First, those who consented to perform certain duties at the first, pending a decision as to non-combatant service; second, those who consented to be drafted from the first to perform any duties.

It should first be noted that those who followed the last course have acted in accordance with the order from the War Department to the commanders of all the camps, which is as follows:

REGULATION OF SECRETARY OF WAR.—GOVERNING TREATMENT OF CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS. (This Regulation was sent to Commanders of the various Cantonnments about the middle of Ninth Month, 1917.)

"The department has under consideration the question of what constitutes 'non-combatant service' in the sense that that phrase is used in section 4 of the selective service act. Until a definition is announced it will not be possible to designate the classes of duty to which the conscientious objector may be detailed. Pending final instructions in the premises the secretary of war directs that this class be segregated but not subjected to any punishment for refusal to perform duty, and that timely reports of the numbers received at your cantonnement be forwarded for his information with such remark and recommendation as will enable the department to consider the general question in all its phases."

In all camps there has been difficulty in securing the enforcement of this order owing to the fact that many petty officers have either known nothing of it, or have not been willing to enforce it.

Those who have consented at first to perform certain duties in the Cooks' and Bakers' School, the Hospital or Supply departments, have had great difficulty later in being released and segregated. For example, at Camp Funston the men were told that any such participation in the life of the camp would not prejudice their rights later to be assigned to service outside the army. They were thus drawn almost unconsciously into a position where they were an active part of the army, and against which their consciences rebelled. Upon attempting to be released from such military service and segregated according to the order of the War Department their past consent to perform service was used against them. They were told that it is only real conscientious objection that is being recognized, and that if they had had any such conscientious objection they would never have performed any service in the first place.

On the other hand, at Camp Meade, for example, most of the conscientious objectors refused from the start to perform any service, relying not only upon the supreme dictates of their consciences, but upon their certificates of exemption and upon the ruling of the War Department. As a result, all conscientious objectors whom we know of at Camp Meade have been segregated and are not being required to perform any duties. They, of course, volunteer their services in taking care of their own needs.

At Camp Jackson, one Friend who consistently refused to perform any service as a part of the army, was furloughed until Twelfth Month, pending a ruling on non-combatant service.

Even at such camps as Meade, where the orders of the War Department as to segregation are being carried out, a tremendous pressure is upon all the men at the start to enter the military system. It is not generally true that the officers attempt any active coercion, although in some camps there has been persecution by petty officers contrary to the orders of the War Department. It is the great silent force of public opinion that is the coercive influence. The position of the conscientious objector is a deeply religious one, based upon his conception of loyalty to the Kingdom of God, and must be maintained in an atmosphere which inevitably tends to deaden spiritual life. He is not breaking with his government in refusing to perform service, since the government has ordered that he shall not be required to serve until non-combatant service is defined. He is, however, breaking with his fellows; he is forced under peculiarly hard circumstances to make the choice continually required of citizens of the Kingdom of God between easy agreement with the crowd and a lonesome walk along the paths of conscience.

LESSONS LEARNED FROM THESE PAST EXPERIENCES.

It is not our purpose (nor has it been at any time) to advise Friends what course of conduct they should follow. Every man must act according to the light of his own conscience—not that of any other. It does seem within our proper function, however, to outline what seem to be the consistent steps and the probable results of various courses.

The important question has arisen both with the government and with Friends as to what the principles of Friends mean as applied to this particular problem. Everyone knows that the Society of Friends is opposed to war; the government has taken it for granted in its law and in its affidavit exemption forms that we are "opposed to war in any form." Just how this rather general principle shall be worked out when applied to the specific question of whether a Friend should serve in any part of the army is not so generally understood. The recent Five Years' Meeting at Richmond, Indiana, took a valuable action in this connection.

This action is, of course, not binding even upon members of the Five Years' Meeting, but is a helpful guide since our position has been established in the past by the whole group and we must now work it out together as a group. In commissioning the American Friends' Service Committee to address a petition to the War Department, the Five Years' Meeting in its minute took the position that the "principles of the Society of Friends require that the non-combatant service for which they are liable under the Selective Service Law be a service that is not a corporate part of the military organization."

This position prevents service even in the hospital or supply departments of the army. The fundamental objection is to the controlling purpose of the military organization. It is axiomatic that the purpose which dominates the whole of anything necessarily dominates every part of that thing. Activities that in civil life are compatible with the Gospel of Good-will are deprived of this character when stamped with the military purpose.

It seems very clear from the experiences of those who have gone before, that the first problem every man should face is just what his position is. If he is resolved not to become a part of the army he should make this decision very definitely before the order to mobilize. Just how he works out this resolve—at home and at camp—is of secondary importance; if he is clear as to his purpose the larger part of the problem has been solved.

Those who hold this resolve should make it known at the earliest possible moment in camp and refuse from the very first to perform any duties. The men who consented to perform any service at the first have found it extremely difficult, and in some cases impossible, to be released from such service later. Not only does a man who performs service jeopardize his own chances of being allowed to serve outside the army (in the Reconstruction Unit, for example), but he jeopardizes our chance of a ruling recognizing the Reconstruction Unit as non-combatant service. The President will almost certainly base his ruling upon the conduct of the majority of conscientious objectors. Only if the great majority of Friends who have claimed exemption on conscientious grounds refuse from the first any service that is a part of the army, will there be a probability that the Reconstruction Unit will be recognized as non-combatant service.

A Friend who cannot serve as a part of the army should insist from the first with all officers that he be segregated in accordance with the ruling of the War Department. He should take his case if necessary to the officer in command of the camp, or if unable to do this, should write us that we may do so. He should treat all the men with whom he has to deal (even those who may attempt by ridicule or other coercion to break down his resolve) with a spirit of kindness and forbearance. Care should be taken not to sign any cards that place him upon the payroll or incorporates him in the army in other ways. Consent to wear the uniform is regarded by the officers as a consent to become a part of the army; therefore, a man whose conscience requires service outside the army and who desires to be segregated pending such service should never put on the uniform. Men at the camps have reported that the army officials will never allow a drafted man to serve in the Reconstruction Unit or in other work outside the army if he consents from the coercion of public opinion at the camps to serve in the army.

All persons who hold Form 174 (exemption from combatant service) should keep this in their possession at all times. If it is given up to any one at any time, it should be secured again.

POSSIBILITY OF A RULING ON NON-COMBATANT SERVICE THAT DOES NOT RECOGNIZE SERVICE OUTSIDE THE ARMY.—Although we expect that the Reconstruction Unit will ultimately be recognized as non-combatant service, it may not be included in the first ruling that is made. Friends should now face this possibility so as not to be taken by surprise when the ruling comes. There will be no time then to deliberate upon the matter since the army officials will act upon the order quickly. We have done all that we feel can be done at present, but as soon as the ruling is made we will take up with the War Department the individual cases of all men who have decided that they cannot serve in the army and who wish to serve under our Committee. VINCENT D. NICHOLSON.

DIED.—At his home in Ellerbe, N. C., Ninth Month 7, 1917, DAVID FAYLOW, JR., in the sixty-fourth year of his age.

—At her home in Moorestown, N. J., Tenth Month 29, 1917, ANNA THOMAS, aged eighty-one years; a member and overseer of Burlington Monthly Meeting, N. J.

—At his home in Morton, Pa., Eleventh Month 3, 1917, JAMES KITE, son of the late John L. and Mary Lord Kite, aged eighty-six years.

FOUNDED 1865.

THE PROVIDENT LIFE & TRUST CO.
OF PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Insures Lives Acts as Executor, Etc.
Accounts Solicited Deposit by Mail
Travelers' Cheques Monthly Statements by Mail

WRITE FOR LEAFLET.

Fourth and Chestnut Streets, Phila.

H. F. BRUNER S. D. HALL

H. F. BRUNER & Co.
COAL

OFFICE AND YARD

16 N. TWENTY-FIRST STREET
PHILADELPHIA

TELEPHONES: {LOCUST 243
RACE 561

Friends Arch St. Centre
304 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Provides comfortable accommodations for guests by the day or week. Meals at moderate prices.

AMELIA D. FEATHERSTONE, Matron.
PHONE—MARKET 1571.

REPORT OF THE TREASURER OF THE AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE FOR WEEK ENDING ELEVENTH MONTH 12, 1917.

Amount reported last week... $215,007.29
Contributions from 19 meetings or associations... 3,402.00
Contributions from 21 individuals... 1,666.25

$220,135.54

CHARLES F. JENKINS,
Treasurer.

Assoc. M. Am. Soc. C. E. BELL 'PHONE—Lombard 3412

EDWIN M. EVANS
CONTRACTOR & BUILDER
My jobbing department is well equipped, prompt and efficient
321 S. LAWRENCE ST. :: PHILA.

WALL PAPERS—All Grades

Custom of Friends Specially Selected

FRANK C. BÜEHL

Successor to S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON
902 SPRING GARDEN ST. - PHILADELPHIA

Store open until 10.30 A. M. Any other time by appointment only
Opposite Spring Garden Station, Phila. & Reading R. R.

ESTABLISHED 1849. BELL 'PHONE.

POCONO MANOR INN

OPEN ALL YEAR

Situated in the beautiful Pocono Mountains in northeastern Pennsylvania is most attractive the year 'round.

Golf, Tennis, Bowling, Driving, Motoring, Swimming and Boating are but few of the recreations found at this popular resort.

J. W. HURLEY, Mgr., Pocono Manor, Pa.
(Pocono Summit Station, D. & L. W. K. R.)

WOOLMAN SCHOOL

A Friends' School for Social and Religious Education. Board of Managers from both branches of Friends. Courses in Old and New Testament, Church History, History and Doctrines of Friends, Missions, First-day School Organization, Social Betterment, International Organization, History of Religion, Comparative Religion, and allied subjects.

Instruction by scholarly experts from the faculties of Haverford and Swarthmore Colleges, and from other educational, social, and religious institutions of Philadelphia and vicinity.

WOOLMAN SCHOOL
SWARTHMORE, PA.

ELBERT RUSSELL, Director.

RESIDENCE: 254 S. 44th St. BELL 'PHONE: Baring 2084X

WILLIAM OAKES

Plumbing and Heating Contractors
ALSO LEAD BURNING

260 SOUTH TENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA

BELL 'PHONE: Filbert 2666.

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE MATERIAL THAT WE SELL

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

GLASLYN-CHATHAM
PARK PLACE
ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

A Family House of Established Reputation.
Open Throughout the Year.

NATHAN L. JONES.

PUBLIC STENOGRAPHER
GEORGE B. COCK, Liberty Building

Established 1896. Experience 39 years! Medical 13

ALFRED C. HAINES
Building Glass and Paints
56 N. Front St., Philadelphia

WANTED IN A HOME WITH A SMALL FAMILY in Media, Pa., a suitable woman companion. Address "P"—Care of "THE FRIEND."

THE HOLMES PRESS

Printers

J. L. Engle, Pres.

1336-40 CHERRY ST. - PHILA.

THE CHEYNEY SITUATION

Friends of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting have as a legacy of the efforts put forth in the 60's in the interest of training colored teachers a unique plant at Cheyney. The Cheyney Training School for Teachers appeals for help to the descendants of those who originated the idea. The School is doing a great work, but it is cramped in many ways by a lack of funds.

An efficient staff of teachers and a student body numbering 100 present an unusual opportunity for the wise expenditure of energy and money.

The Managers can do little more than administer the Trust and most look to Friends and others, who have the means, to supply what is essential for the proper advancement of the School's interest.

Leslie P. Hill, Principal, is always ready to offer timely suggestions to any who have it on their hearts to assist in the laudable work that is carried on at Cheyney.

Because of the conditions which must be met, if the School is to continue its good work, the Board of Managers feel free to request Friends to include Cheyney among the charities to which they contribute, and ask that checks shall be drawn in favor of and mailed to

WILLIAM BIDDLE, Treasurer,
119 S. Fourth Street, Philadelphia.

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use
PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BREAD
made from the entire wheat grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator. Sold by all good grocers in Philadelphia.

Write for particulars to

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.
10th & Susquehanna Aves., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

BALDERSTON'S APPLE-BUTTER

We are now prepared to fill orders for apple-butter at the following rates:
2-Quart Jars—per Case of Six Jars Each $4.50
1-Quart Jars—per Case of Six Jars Each $2.40
by freight or express, I. O. B., Colord.

Smaller orders will be forwarded by Parcel Post at an additional charge to cover costs.

ELWOOD BALDERSTON,
COLORA, Cecil Co., Maryland.

WANTED—A CARETAKER for THE INDIAN boys at Friends' School, TUNUNGAN, N. Y.—Preferably one who can teach manual training. Applications for the position may be made to Wm. B. RIDGERS, Supt., TununGAN, N. Y.
HENRY HALL, Friends' Hospital, Frankford, Phila.
ANNA WALTON, Moravia, Pa.

WANTED—IN A FRIEND'S FAMILY OF TWO adults, a working housekeeper; a Friend preferred. Please reply with references to "A." "THE FRIEND."

FOR RENT IN SMALL ADULT FAMILY—TWO well-furnished rooms on second floor to one or two persons employed during the day. House with porch is pleasantly located near 11th St. and Lehigh Ave.; convenient to trains and trolleys. Address "B"—Office of "THE FRIEND."

W. J. MacWatters

Let Me Help You

In Selecting Your

RUGS AND CARPETS

Domestic -- -- Oriental

ALL WEAVES

The Home of Bundhar Wilton
"DURABLE AS IRON"

HARDWICK & MAGEE CO.

1220 Market Street

HARRY S. LEE

313 WALNUT STREET

PAINTER AND GRAINER

ANTIQUe and OFFICE FURNITURE RESTORED
JOBING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO
ESTIMATES

JOSEPH G. FOGG
FUNERAL DIRECTOR and EMBALMER
S. W. COR. 16TH AND RACE STREETS
Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals
BELL 'PHONE SPRUCE 1648

SEE WALKER & KEPLER

FOR

Good Electrical Work

531 CHESNUT ST. - PHILA.

R. C. Ballinger Ernest R. Yarnall John A. Stratton
TELEPHONES
Bell—Spruce 17-81 - - Keystone—Race 637
R. C. BALLINGER & CO.
CONTRACTORS and BUILDERS
218 N. Thirteenth St. Philadelphia.

Philadelphia's Representative Store

ELKINS, MORRIS & CO.

BANKERS

REPRESENTATIVES

PAUL W. BROWN
JAMES P. MAGILL

LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

RAILROAD AND
PUBLIC UTILITY BONDS

FOR

CONSERVATIVE INVESTMENT.

FULL PARTICULARS ON REQUEST

We recommend the use of
RAG FEATHERWEIGHT

(Antique Finish)

As the paper for high-grade Books and other Publications

RHOADS LEATHER BELTING
AND TANNATE LACE LEATHER

Rhoads double belts are wonderfully uniform in thickness. For truencess and even balance, you will not often find their equal. You can save stops and trouble by using Tannate Lace Leather. It seldom breaks.

J. E. RHOADS & SONS
PHILADELPHIA: 12 N. THIRD ST.
CHICAGO: 322 W. RANDOLPH ST.
NEW YORK: 102 BEEKMAN ST.
BALTIMORE: 37 S. CHARLES ST.
FACTORY AND TANNERY: WILMINGTON, DEL.

THE following timely books, mostly of those recommended by the Social Order Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, are for sale at Friends' Book Store, No. 304 Arch Street, Philadelphia.

- "The Church and the Hour." . . . $1.00
Vida D. Scudder,
- "The Social Problem." . . . 1.25
C. A. Ellwood,
- "The Abolition of Poverty." . . . 75
J. H. Hollander,
- "Christianizing the Social Order." . . . 1.50
Walter Rauschenbusch,
- "The Day of Our Visitation." . . . 50
William Littleboy,
- "A Word of Remembrance and Caution to the Rich." . . . 05
John Woolman,

W. B. WEAVER
UNDERTAKER and EMBALMER
550-552 N. 5TH ST., PHILA., PA.
Special Attention Given to Funerals
In and Out of the City. Also Chapel
Accommodations for Funerals.
BELL 'PHONE ESTABLISHED 1880

GIRARD TRUST CO.
BROAD and CHESTNUT STS.

CAPITAL AND SURPLUS } $10,000,000

Acts as Executor, Trustee, Guardian, Administrator, Assignee and Receiver. Safes to Rent in Burglar-proof Vaults. Interest Allowed on Deposits. :: ::

E. B. MORRIS
PRESIDENT

WILLIAM S. YARNALL
MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

128 SOUTH SIXTEENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 91.

FIFTH-DAY, ELEVENTH MONTH 22, 1917.

No. 21.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price $2.00 a year in Advance.

Publisher, DAVIS H. FORSTHEE.

Editors { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
 { DAVIS H. FORSTHEE,
 { MARY WARD.

Make remittances payable to

THE FRIEND,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

Make a new beginning,

O, thou that makest wars to cease in all the world.

Bind again the kindred of the nations in the alchemy of love.

With some finer essence of forbearance and forgiveness temper our mind.

—An Old Greek Prayer.

EXTRACT FROM GEORGE MATHESON'S REPRESENTATIVE MEN OF THE BIBLE—ABRAHAM.

I thank Thee, O Lord, for my glimpses of the coming day! I thank Thee that there are prophetic moments in which I have sight of what will be! Why should I not have such moments! Hast Thou not given to the swallow the vision of a summer which is yet far away! Hast Thou not given to the bee the visions of many mansions that are to come! And shall my soul have no guide toward its morrow; shall my heart have no prophecy of the undawned day! My Father, Thou hast not left me thus comfortless. To me, as to Abraham, there have come intimations of a larger country and premonitions of a wider brotherhood. As I have strayed below the stars, I have asked myself if these alone have unity. I have asked if there is no law that can so bind human lives. I have said, "Is Thy blessing alone for Esau—for rough material things; hast Thou no word for Jacob—for bond of the spirit!" And as I said it, I knew that it was a voice from Thee, a prophecy from Thee. I bless Thee for that prophecy, O my God! Henceforth the stars say to me, "So shall thy seed be!" Hasten, my Father, this day of Thy Christ! Unite the souls of men as Thou hast united the orbs of Heaven! May the bells of union ring across the snow! Ring out the separation of countries and kindreds! Ring out the pride of race and the jealousy of privilege! Ring out the passion for monopoly and the lust for special power! Ring out the wars that sever the cities of the plain! Ring in the bond of brotherhood, the law of love, the harmony of helpfulness, the chord of compassion, the fulness of fellowship, the music of mercy, the chant of charity, the symphony of now silent souls! I desire to hear it; and when I hear it I shall be glad.—Selected by M. C. Scattergood.

CHRISTIAN SOLDIERS.

The newspaper description of the Young Men's Christian Association work in the cantonments and in the war zone as a "barrage" is at once picturesque and accurate. The barrage is a wall of fire that obscures the dangers of battle, and as it is often managed makes it practically impossible for soldiers to swerve from the prescribed course. It is a drastic method felt to be necessary—found to be necessary, we might say, to hold men to the destructive purposes of war under the present machine-methods of fighting. So the figure of speech holds, in regard to the fire of temptation from which segregated men suffer. The Y. M. C. A. hut, by its varied activities, shuts out the dangers of soldier life, and obscures, if it cannot remove, the temptations. As a matter of fact, it does in good degree remove the temptations by the most approved methods of a rational psychology. It substitutes a right interest and activity for the ill-defined unrest, and over-active feelings of an unnatural situation of life. Unless we have read the reports of the commissions who have studied the subject, we have no conception of the virulence of the "contagion of corruption" that overtakes young men in the soldier life. No one, we take it, can be so blinded by opposition to the "whole evil system of war," as not to be moved with infinite pity by this threatened sacrifice of moral health—this utter loss of spiritual vitality of the boys in uniform. In a sense it is a more appealing danger than that of loss of physical life. Friends have not been lacking in sympathy in this field. They have furnished a number of workers and have been liberal in the contributions of money. The sum of $35,000,000 now asked for, seems large, but we doubt whether any of the mammoth expenditures of these painful times will be fraught with greater future good.

As we write this we are mindful also that the possible good of the Y. M. C. A. in the camps is two-fold in nature. Multitudes of young men will be kept out of moral pit-falls. The comfort of fellowship and of united effort to find God will be liberally dispensed. That is the primary aim. Unconsciously, however, this other aim will be disclosed. Fellowship, brotherliness and spiritual communion as organizing forces will appear in contrast with the necessary aims of destruction of the military system. The issue of this competition has been long delayed. We are sick at heart as we ponder the delay—the failure, we call it. If our "Christian soldiers" now show in the very face of war that they are in possession of a principle that will do what war can not do in organizing power, in preserving moral health, in creating a type of courage superior to any military type, what may we not hope for the outcome!

J. H. B.

No other justification of another double number of THE FRIEND is needed, we trust, than the matter included in its pages. It has seemed unwise to divide an article like that from the pen of Agnes Tierney, and the Cheyney Report is more satisfactory in one issue.—Eds.

THE SEVEN PROPOSITIONS OF THE WAR AND SOCIAL ORDER COMMITTEE OF LONDON YEARLY MEETING.

"1. A right social order will direct itself beyond all material ends, to the growth of personality truly related to God and man.

"2. Brotherhood as taught by Jesus Christ knows no distinction of race or sex, nor of social class.

"3. It is a necessity for the development of man's full personality that he should not be hampered by oppressive conditions nor be crushed by economic pressure.

"4. We shall seek for a way of living that will free us from the bondage of material things and of convention; that will raise no barrier against brotherly comradeship, and will put no oppressive burden of labor upon any by reason of our superfluous demands.

"5. The spiritual forces of justice, kindness and trust call forth the response of willing service in all fields of life, and are mighty when applied to industrial and international relations.

"6. Through co-operation and not through antagonism the best social order will be established. Our disbelief in a system of outward domination applies not only to international affairs, but to the whole problem of industrial control, and to the resort to industrial strife.

"7. Life should be organized on the basis of the privilege and duty of serving. Service cannot be confined to the casual encounters of life, but should be recognized and relied upon as the very motive and method of its chief activities, and opportunities to render such service should be open to all. Corporate as well as individual life needs to be permeated by the spirit of service."

THOUGHTS ON THE SOCIAL ORDER.

AGNES L. TIERNEY.

Whatever may be our individual opinions regarding the causes, inevitability, endurance or foreordained outcome of this, the most awful war of history, on one point we can all agree. The world from its remotest to its nearest boundaries is a very different abiding place from the world we all knew three years ago.

Before that abrupt plunge into chaos a small fraction of the population isolated by its control of material resources, the means of higher education, travel, culture, and of organized religion found life in spite of inevitable personal sorrows and disappointments, full of varied opportunity, interest and pleasure.

Charity and philanthropy busied themselves with the problems of those who lived in the basement of this pleasant superstructure of life, and in the hearts of a few burned day and night a sense of the unrighteousness of a social order whose foundations were laid in monotony, misery and an enforced materialism, unlighted by even the flashes of idealism which the grossest of high livers must at times experience in his search for new and untried sensations.

From the vocabulary at least of this comfortable fraction, the words suffering and sacrifice had been almost expunged. They stood for experiences to be escaped if possible, to be stoically or submissively (according to temperament) accepted if unavoidable. Seldom, indeed, was an appeal for action directed to men's capacity for sacrifice and suffering. The heralds of the newest thought proclaimed suffering unreal and sacrifice archaic.

But in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, all this was changed. War called and we knew the response. Sacrifice and suffering were no longer mere ideas, but body and soul shattering realities. Literature became concerned chiefly with their reaction on men, and even the newspapers in solemn editorials glorified as the supreme good the sacrifice of life itself.

For thousands the whole psychological structure built on an instinctive, inherited and almost unconscious conviction that comfort and leisure were their birthright, toppled and fell. They learned in a cataclysmically transformed world what the body can suffer and the soul endure.

Before such heroic endurance and attainment those of us who have not been called upon for the uttermost sacrifice can only bow in reverence and self-distrust. For what have we to offer a stricken world?—we who cannot believe that just this form of suffering and sacrifice falls within the Divine plan for the redemption of mankind? What sacrifice can we make for liberty and democracy; what reconstruction of thoughts and deeds for the sake of that future wherein men shall not hurt or destroy because the earth shall be full of the knowledge of God?

The first response sounds clear and searching:—

"Still stands thine ancient sacrifice,
An humble and a contrite heart."

Only through this sacrifice can the will of God be made known to us. Contrition for failures in the past—humility for what we may be able to think or do in the future—only these can save us from that mental and spiritual pride which thanks God we are not as other men and holds a pleasant heritage to be a sign of the Almighty's special favor.

For many of us this ancient sacrifice will mean a revolution in point of view. It may mean allying ourselves with much that we have shrunk from in the past. It will surely mean an honest effort to reach conclusions which even though contrary to our life-long habit of thought will be necessary to our moral and spiritual life in the present and future.

The power of right thinking and of ideals is far greater than we can measure. Works without faith are as dead as the reverse, and too much of our activity in the past has been "creaturely"—lacking the power and impetus of that spirit which believes, hopes and endures all things.

"What can we do for the world while we live?" asks Bertrand Russell at the beginning of one of his stimulating chapters, and his reply in part is as follows:—

"So long as we think of the immediate future it seems that what we can do is not much. It is probably impossible for us to bring the war to an end. We cannot destroy the excessive power of the state or of private property. We cannot here and now bring new life into education. In such matters, though we may see the evil, we cannot quickly cure it by any of the ordinary methods of politics. We must recognize that the world is ruled in a wrong spirit and that a change of spirit will not come from one day to the next. Our expectations must not be for to-morrow but for the time when what is thought by a few shall have become the common thought of many. If we have courage and patience we can think the thoughts and feel the hopes by which sooner or later men will be inspired, and weariness and discouragement turned into energy and ardor. For this reason the first thing we have to do is to be clear in our own minds as to the kind of life we think good and the kind of change that we desire in the world. . . .

The power of thought in the long run is greater than any other human power. Those who have the ability to think, and the imagination to think in accordance with men's needs, are likely to achieve the good they aim at sooner or later, though probably not while they are still alive."

Then follows a warning that loneliness in thinking does not mean aloofness from one's fellows. On the contrary, Bertrand Russell believes it possible to achieve no good purpose if the wish for union with others dies, or intellectual detachment leads to contempt.

Let us of the Fellowship therefore continue to think together on certain aspects of the social order in such a way as to give hope that the thoughts and aspirations of to-day may be realized in another age.

The Social Order as we conceive it is composed first of individuals, then of institutions such as the home, the school, the church, organized industry and finally of that aggregation of individuals and institutions called the community.

No institution has been more rent and racked by modern criticism and conditions than the home. The sentimental plattitudes of reactionaries would lead one to think that the ideal home had been the universal rule in the past and that the greater freedom of women had undermined and destroyed a perfected institution.

The absurdity of this view is readily apparent when we think how comparatively few are the homes anywhere with even a proper physical environment. Certain unimaginative cynics have called attention to the kind of homes which thousands of Englishmen have been oratorically incited to defend from invasion. An officer in command of recruits drawn from the dockhands of English ports has vividly described the fire-side altars for which his men are to fight. The trenches as a permanent abode would seem to most of us desirable in comparison.

We all know from experience or have been informed of the kind of homes that exist on the south, east and other sides of our great cities.

Housing experiments on a large scale are the preoccupations of a number of philanthropic English employers. Whether these shall be entered into in this country, or whether effort should be directed to securing a sufficient wage to permit of a choice of residence, is a question for interpreters of democracy to answer.

The Fellowship is convinced of the possibility, the necessity and the permanence of the ideal home if life is to develop aright. For as a writer in the Venturer declares: "The home is a spiritual organism having effect on a wide circle of souls wherever it is set. It is like a tree in a garden—its influence branches out naturally and tells in an organic manner."

How the home is to be organized on democratic lines with servitude for none and freedom of development for all, how it is to combine simplicity and hospitality—for without the guest the home loses a reciprocal influence of the highest value—these are problems worthy the thought of the Fellowship.

The socializing and Christianizing of education is too complicated a subject to be dealt with in a paragraph. As a preparation for the ideals involved I would recommend the reading of the article mentioned in the last number of the Venturer as having appeared in the Nineteenth Century for Eighth Month. It is by the late Chief Inspector of Elementary Schools in England, who I am sure must be at least a spiritual member of the Fellowship.

That our American system of democracy in education tends to level down rather than up is a criticism we constantly hear from educational experts. The whole subject is so closely bound up with home environment that one cannot be separated from the other. The child of the slum and the child of the avenue cannot speak the same language. It is our difficult province to educate the child of the avenue to a sense of his responsibility for the existence of the slum. And this we may be sure will be impossible as long as an excessive accumulation of wealth is regarded by his parents as the ultimate source of power, of social influence, of well-being and even of happiness. And as long also as parents emphasize in their children's minds the sense of social inequality and prejudice by choosing their companions on the basis of the social and material status of their parents. Because of this well-meant discrimination the child's deepest needs are often unsatisfied since he is thereby cut off from companions who might most really minister to him. The sense of another's need is one of the most developing influences that can come into the lives of any of us. And children give and receive in ways that are mostly hidden from the understanding of their elders.

In the work of the school the appeal to competition as an incentive to excellence often arouses in the pupil the anti-social passions of envy, jealousy and vanity. This is a poor preparation for the life of the higher citizenship. The school should be looked upon not as a forcing house for social success or competitive enterprise, but as a germinating plot for the slow growth and ripening of a moral and spiritual nature which shall dedicate itself to the highest interests of humanity.

No social institution is feeling so keenly the effects of the war as is the Christian Church. As has been recently pointed out by a reverent scholar, Gerald Birney Smith, of Chicago University, the Christian message itself as preached by the church has had a great part in leading the world toward a conception of life which makes democracy possible. But the doctrines and practices of the church originated and developed in relation to the politics of imperialism and it has "never consciously faced its task in terms of a democratic civilization." The medieval church was the counterpart of the Holy Roman Empire. The Reformation came when national states each having its king were emerging, and despite a negative protest made by the Anabaptists the church was modelled on similar lines. In the United States a policy of mutual non-interference has prevailed rather than an organization of the church to interpret democracy.

Another weakness which has been emphasized since war has appealed so successfully to the heroic in man is that the appeal of the church in the past has been largely to motives of fear and self-interest—the same instincts at bottom that control men in their struggle for material possessions.

The conditions of membership, too, have been based on intellectual tests rather than on moral and spiritual ideals.

These three indictments, failure to practice the Christian democracy which it preached, failure to appeal to the highest motives as incentives to membership, and failure to place Christian living above assent to creed and dogma have alienated the masses of mankind from all sympathy with an institution which has contributed incalculably to the progress of civilization.

What is to be the future of this institution which so many of us love and cling to? I will not weaken by paraphrase the answer which has been so well expressed by Robert W. Shaw in an article in the Biblical World, called "The War's Challenge to the Church."

"The men who criticize the church are often its best friends and not bitter and irreverent critics. What they desire is that the church may take its rightful place after the war and proclaim a living message with prophetic power. What they fear is that the church may lose her power of proclaiming that message then, because she has not dared face the full meaning of her problems now. They believe that the church will have to be directed and propelled by a mighty passion when the war is over in order to attract the hearts and minds of men. Will she rise to the sublime heights of leadership and with the passion and power of the apostolic and reformation times declare the whole gospel of Christ regardless of governments, powers and men? Christianity is powerful enough to save the nations, but it must be preached in all of its fulness and power. Christianity cannot survive in a world with unsocial and anti-Christian forces at work. One or the other must go and the church must draw to itself those who are willing to be governed by the ethics of Jesus and move on the forces of unrighteousness with the same energy with which the armies have moved against each other. Ecclesiastical procedure, loyalty to traditions and nicety of delimitation will no longer satisfy a world that has passed through a baptism of fire.

But the church also baptized and purified will be able to insist on the reign of God on the earth and a just and Christian social order, and to make the service of the common good the best way of realizing a man's best self."

As we are constantly being told the most stupendous task after the war will be the reconstruction of the industrial system. We can hardly share the optimism of those who believe that the war will have purged society of its evils and that the way will be fully open for a new order based on brotherhood and co-operation. Since greed and self-interest have not been abolished in the warring nations even by the desperate griefs and needs of mankind, it is hardly likely that they will at once relinquish their hold when the war is over. But that there are and will be greater opportunities for change there is little doubt. As has been well said: "He who views the spectacle of the world exclusively from the moral and religious point of view may well wring his hands in despair. He who adds to his moral passion a habit of thinking socially and in economic lines will be awake to the tremendous opportunities offered by a state of things which he deplors."

An editorial in a recent number of the New Republic opens thus: "Like the war itself competition after the war will be a contest of nations. Nations divided against themselves, nations in which employers organize to beat down labor, in which labor is forced to resort to ca'canny and malingering to protect itself against the degradation of sporadic unemployment, will go down before nations in which the unifying ideal of national service survives the conflict of guns. The nations of Europe to-day are concentrating almost as much energy and brains upon the problems of permanent industrial reconstruction as they are upon the prosecution of the war itself. In the field of industrial preparedness for the war after the war they are as far ahead of America as they are in military organization. There is real danger that having entered the war late America may still be in the thick of military preoccupations when peace comes, while her economic rivals, France and England, as well as Germany, will be on the mark and set for a running start for the capture of world markets."

One reads these lines with mingled feelings. If industrial reconstruction is being entered into by each nation only for the purpose of winning commercial supremacy—"the war after the war"—the outlook for international peace is indeed dark. Germany had abolished her slums and solved the problem of unemployment, but her desire to capture world markets and the determination of other nations to prevent her from doing it resulted in the present war. It seems reasonable to believe that only internationalism in industry and commerce can lead to a solution of international problems.

But some, at least, of the reconstruction of industrial thought and practice abroad is being led by unselfish, wide-visions people intent only on the larger good of humanity. The need of such thinkers and workers in our own country is imperative.

A propagandist of social reform has called attention to the appeal issued by the United States Government to young men to join the Navy at a wage of $17 a month and board. Its catalogue of the terrible conditions faced in industrial employment from number "1. Jobs uncertain; strikes; layoffs and sickness" through to number "11. Old age, sickness, little money saved, your job goes to a younger and more active man," tells a story of the intolerable degradation of the workers under the grinding tyranny of industrial power. These are conditions which we know exist in every industrial centre from coast to coast.

A part of the responsibility for these conditions rests upon us, however helpless we may feel before it. We can at least cry out against our helplessness and by sharing with the Founder of Christianity a measure of that travail of soul which he bore for the world, communicate to others our own sense of the need for a regeneration of social and industrial relations.

We have heard much in past conferences of the Fellowship of the desire on the part of individual members to simplify their outward lives. But as we all know, a simplification which means merely the cutting off of superfluities, will not suffice. True simplicity is an attitude of the soul, an honesty in facing the realities of life, a democracy of the spirit which meets the spirit of every human being on the level of belief in his best. It realizes that bondage to convention and mere things is not confined alone to dwellers in luxury. It denies itself but searches its motives for self-denial. It cleanses itself of all desire for power and influence based on material possessions, considers whether wealth itself and the desire for it should not be renounced rather than simply what it can buy. It sincerely desires to abolish social distinctions based on the possession of things, and defines democracy as the belief that our highest possessions are increased by sharing them.

Having attained something of this simplicity of mind and heart what can we do?

We can study the conditions of labor and the causes of poverty and try to acquire a just and impartial view of the wrongs to be righted on both sides of the struggle between labor and capital. Whatever our position in an industry or business, we can question whether our aim be service of the community and the highest interests—not merely the material interests—of employees, employers or fellow-workers, rather than to get all we can for ourselves. We can investigate the sources of any income we may have, and, as far as possible, be certain that we are pressing or defrauding none. We may examine our attitude toward the question of the right and justice of inherited wealth and unearned increments. We may carry out the rules and spirit of the Consumers' League in the purchase of goods. And we may throw our influence and use our surplus, if we have any, on behalf of measures for the fundamental readjustment of society rather than content ourselves with an easy charity which bestows a portion of its goods to feed the poor, but is indifferent to the sources of poverty and wretchedness.

And, finally, it is incumbent upon us as members of a group which makes a high profession, to cultivate in its fullness that love towards others through which the love of God is made manifest to men. The ancient Hebrew conception of a just and righteous Judge who visited wrath upon the transgressor and must needs be interceded with for mercy, was displaced in the last century by a conception which expressed itself—to quote Dr. McGiffert—"in soft and sentimental assertions of the Divine love which often seemed to deprive God of moral character altogether and to make him a mere indulgent father interested solely in the comfort and pleasure of his children and not at all in their characters or achievements." This enervating idea is now being replaced by the conception of the love of God as "the will to promote the spirit of love among men." This thought changes our whole relation to God and man. For only as we translate the sense of God's love and care for us as individuals into terms of sympathy and helpfulness can we look for a manifestation of that love in our own hearts.

LARVÆ.

"Beauty for ashes."—Isaiah lxi: 3.

My little maiden of four years old—
No myth, but a genuine child is she—
With her bronze-brown eyes and her curls of gold,
Came quite in disgust one day to me.

Rubbing her shoulder with rosy palm,
As the loathsome touch seemed yet to thrill her,
She cried, "Oh, mother, I found on my arm
A horrible, crawling caterpillar!"

And with mischievous smile she could scarcely smother,
Yet a glance in its daring half-awed and shy,
She added, "While they were about it, mother,
I wish they'd just finished the butterfly!"

They were words to the thought of the soul that turns
From the coarser form of a partial growth,
Reproaching the Infinite Patience that years
With an unknown glory to crown them both.

Ah, look thou largely, with lenient eyes,
On whatso beside thee may creep and cling,
For the possible beauty that underlies
The passing phase of the meanest thing!

What if God's great angels whose waiting love
Beholdeth our pitiful life below,
From the holy height of their homes above
Couldn't bear with the worm till the wings should grow?

From "Words of Cheer."

"They who rush headlong into glowing light must not expect to see, save as they can comprehend that which is seen."

YOUNGER FRIENDS.

THREE CALLS IN THE NIGHT.—A young girl sat in Northfield, Massachusetts. In her hand was a message which contained sufficient cause for the troubled expression on her face.

The message summoned her to come to India to see her mother, who was ill on the mission field. Ida Scudder did not want to go to India. She thought almost resentfully of the many members of her family who had been led to give their lives to India.

Her noble grandfather, Dr. John Scudder, might have been the most prominent of New York's physicians if he had not read "The Call of Six Hundred Millions" as he wanted to see a patient in New York City. That call from out of the darkness and superstition and suffering laid hold of his heart and drew him out to India to give his life in self-spending ministrations. His life and work had blazed the way with a trail of light through India's darkness, and never, since it set the light ashing, had there been a day when there was not a Scudder in India to keep his torch burning.

One by one they had come back to America to be educated—his children and his grandchildren. One by one the call of God and of India's awful need had drawn them back. Seven of his children and fifteen of his grandchildren had already gone back to India. Ida Scudder had been born there. Her father and mother were there now pouring out their lives in service.

"It is enough," said Ida Scudder, as she sat in Northfield with the summons in her hand. She would go, eagerly, gladly to be with her mother while she was sick, but, when her mother was well, she would no longer bury herself in India. She would hasten back to America to live her life as other girls were living theirs.

So Ida Scudder took passage for India to see her sick mother—only to see her sick mother. She assured herself and her friends over and over again that there was no danger of her staying in India, the India that had already claimed more than its share of Scudders.

One night she sat in her father's house in India. As the dusk of the twilight was deepening into the darkness of the night a knock sounded at the door. The girl answered its summons. A man stood before her. He was a high-caste Mohammedan, tall, slender, white-robed. He bowed low and spoke.

"My young wife is ill—ill to the death. Our doctors can do nothing for her. Will the gracious lady come to attend her?" Ida Scudder knew naught of medicine.

"My father is a medical man," she answered eagerly. "He will come to see your wife."

"The Mohammedan drew himself up proudly. "He has ever looked upon the face of my wife. We are highborn. I should rather a thousand times that she should die than that a man should look upon her face."

Silently he turned and went out into the darkness.

Ida Scudder sat down and thought. She was in India now, in India with this pitiful, unpitied childwife, who might be dying even as she sat and thought of her. How long she sat she knew not. She was startled by a second knock. Possibly the man had been softened by the sight of the agony of his little wife, and had come for her father. Eagerly she opened the door. It was not the same man who stood there. Possibly it was his messenger.

"My wife," began this man, as had the other, "my wife is very sick. She is giving me much trouble. It is a pity that a wife should give her husband so much trouble. After all my pains, she may die unless the men sahib comes and heals her."

The girl looked at him hopefully. Surely he could not be as prejudiced as the other one.

"I am not a doctor," she explained. "My father is a medical man. He will—"

The man interrupted her with a proud uplifting of his turbaned head. "I am a high-caste man," he said. "No man dare look upon the face of my wife."

Even as he spoke he turned and disappeared in the darkness. Ida Scudder's thoughts went with him back to the girl. Perhaps she was only a little girl. So many of them were. Perhaps she was dying even now because no man could help her, and there was no woman to help. Something clutched at the heart of the American girl over there in India and choked her throat as she sat helpless and unhelping. It was terrible that two calls should come in such rapid succession on the same night. As she shuddered at the thought and the misery of it all, a third knock sounded. A third man came before her. His voice was almost eager.

"My wife is ill, very ill," he said. "They told me I could find help here—a wonderful foreign doctor who had done remarkable things." At last there was a call for her father!

"Oh, yes, I will send my father," she answered gladly. The man involuntarily straightened himself. "Not a man! No man shall look upon the face of my wife. You must come."

In vain did the girl plead that her father would come. Sadly and alone the man departed, as had the two other men before him. Ida Scudder sat down again. Were all the suffering childwives in India calling to her that night? Was one of those endless processions she had read about in missionary magazines actually going to march by her door with unending maddening continuance?

The night passed, and day dawned. Ida Scudder walked out into the street. As she passed a gateway she heard wailing and loud lamentation. It chilled her heart. She knew that the life of one of the childwives had passed with the coming of the day.

She went on. At another house the beating of the musical instruments, the shrieks, and the moans told her that a second little wife was dead.

She would have turned back, sick at heart, but a relentless hand drew her on until she stood before the rude bedecked with flowers, which was to carry away the poor little body of the third wife whom the skilled touch of a physician might have healed.

Unspoken accusations sounded in her ears: "If thou hadst been here, these might not have died."

That fall, among the names of those who entered the Woman's Medical College in Philadelphia, there appeared the name of Ida S. Scudder. She heard the call of the women and children of India; the call of her grandfather's love and of his life; the call of her father's and her mother's sacrifice.

As she has followed the call into India, Dr. Ida Scudder has brought blessing and health and life to thousands of India's girls and women. She passes on to the girls and women of America those knocks that are summoning aid in the night. The night is dark in India, and we have light. The call comes not from three only, but from the three hundred and fifteen millions of India's people.—From Forward.

LETTERS FROM ARTHUR COOPER.

ORNANS, DOUBS, FRANCE, TENTH MONTH 1, 1917.

MY DEAR PARENTS:—

I can hardly tell you how delighted I was this morning to receive my first news from home since I left four weeks ago to-morrow. This is very quick time for a letter, three weeks is about the average. We thoroughly enjoyed our stay of ten days in Paris, in which we saw most of the sights of which the city is filled and now we are here at Ormans, living in an abandoned absinthe distillery in really fine style, and preparing two mills in which to make knock-down houses.

In Paris I saw so many Haverford and Westtown acquaintances that it was hard to realize that we were in a foreign country. We think Paris is one of the greatest cities on earth. On the twenty-fifth, eleven of us started for here. It was an all-day trip, but a most pleasant one, for the country is bright and most beautiful and sunny, so that it is hard to imagine any one wanting to destroy its beauty. We were given lunches at the station and they surely were good, and although it was one of the meatless days in Paris we had cold chicken, cold boiled ham, bread, cheese, a bottle of lemon soda and a cake of chocolate: it certainly tasted fine. We arrived here at Ormans about nine o'clock in the evening and were greeted by the English, who were already here. The next day we were given until ten o'clock to go around the town or up on the high bluffs that surround us—I chose one of the nearer of the high bluffs—the view was superb! The little town nestles down at the foot of the steep rocks and the silvery thread of the River Lone winds down through it, and all around in the distance are high cliffs and sky. It is truly inspiring. At ten o'clock we came back to earth and were set to work scrubbing the floors, walls, etc., of the absinthe distillery, which is quite a good stone building of four stories, all of which are rather dirty, having been closed up since the war began in 1914. In the evening Garrigues and I stood on one of the bridges over the river and watched the moonlight on the water. The quaint old houses and streets and the old mill wheels were certainly most picturesque. The next day or so we were sweeping out and cleaning up the two factory buildings, which are very fine, too.

In the evening we played hide and seek with the French boys and girls: it was quite good fun and good exercise, too.

On Seventh-day, the 20th, an Englishman named Smith and I got permission to leave right after breakfast (we only went until noon on Seventh-day), and we packed our knapsacks and started a hike to the source of the Lone, about eighteen kilometers (eleven miles) away. The country is most beautiful—high cliffs and rich green fields of the valley and the fine stone road, sparkling clear waters of the river, all combine to make an almost perfect picture, which is really finished off by the picturesque little villages scattered along the river every few kilos. We passed through Vuillafans and Lods and stopped at the Hotel des Voyageurs in the village of Monthier for lunch. In the afternoon, we went on farther and visited the Grottes of Beaumarche, which are quite large caverns, perhaps 50 metres in length, with a roof fifty feet high to start with and gradually shrinking to a hole no larger than a barrel. They were most interesting and, fortunately, I had brought my flashlight, so we could penetrate well into them. From here we went to the source of the Potet, a small stream. Here we were lost for about an hour, wandering up and down the Lone. We finally got to the source and it is a very pretty spot, too. The stream comes out of a small grotto or cave and we went back into it perhaps one hundred feet.

From here we went to the source of the Lone, which also comes from a big cave. We returned to Monthier for supper, and stayed at the hotel over night, getting very good accommodations indeed for so small a place.

On First-day we breakfasted and then climbed Haut Pierre (880 metres, or about 2900 feet), and the highest point around. If the day had not been hazy we could have seen Mt. Blanc and other high peaks, which are 100 or more miles away. However, the view was really wonderful and certainly repaid us our rather steep climb. By the way, this is a great wine country and they have vineyards on all the mountain sides—in fact, I saw an old man and woman cutting hay at least 2500 feet above the sea and on a field at an angle of at least 45 or 50 degrees. The people here have to work hard, but food does not seem to be scarce and many things are cheaper than at home, for one example, here at Ormans, hair-cut 30 centimes (6 cents) and shave 20 centimes (4 cents). How the barber lives I do not know. After coming down from the mountain we had dinner at the hotel and then came back to Ormans.

We arise at 6.45 in the morning, work until seven then breakfast, coffee, bread and butter and honey—much better than it sounds. Work until noon, lunch, rather more elaborate, work again and tea at four with dinner at 6.30. Evenings free. By the way, our time here is five hours ahead of you. At 7 A. M., your time, we will be eating lunch. We only get one mail a day—one train out A. M. and back

P. M. I simply love this little village and enjoy my work immensely. The people are kindly and rather childlike.

ORNANS, Doubs, France, Tenth Month 1, 1917.

MY DEAR PARENTS:—

We are living here at Ormans very comfortably. We have running water and electric lights and heat by stoves and fire-places. We also have public bath-houses. The head of our Ormans équipe is Wm. Duguid, who with his wife, nee Mary Elkinton, is managing affairs for us. They are both very nice people indeed. We will probably be here for several months, perhaps six or eight. We enjoy our work and as the English language is inadequate to describe the beauties of the country, we are all more than satisfied to stay here. Our new uniforms arrived the other day from Paris. They are of gray cloth—a coat, breeches, puttees and cap, like the Tommies wear.

On Seventh-days we all go to the public bath-house for a bath. There are practically no houses equipped with baths outside of the cities in France, and even in the cities the majority of the people go to the public baths, which are very nice, but not always handy.

ORNANS, Doubs, France, Tenth Month 14, 1917.

MY DEAR PARENTS:—

We are all enjoying good health here and seem likely to do so. The rainy season seems to have set in now. Up until a week ago we had scarcely had a wet day since we left New York, but for the last week it has rained every day, not hard, but in showers, and we are beginning to have some mud, of which the war stories told about all last year. As it is getting rather chilly now, we spend our evenings reading or playing games before a roaring fire in the fire-place, and are quite comfortable. We are all enjoying the life immensely and I for one would not miss it for a great deal.

FROM A SOLDIER'S STANDPOINT.—The following extracts were taken from letters written by a Northern University man, now a lieutenant, after the "great push" on the Somme:

"I am not very good at expressing what I think in writing, but it seems to me that I can't possibly view the war from the outside. It will take months and years before the personal and physical side of war cease to have an overwhelming influence over all my ideas with respect to it. Nothing, I think, can exceed the horror of one valley which we captured early on in this Somme push, full of dead, putrefying, which were daily continually added to by the ceaseless barrage through which all who went along the valley must pass. The dead were in many cases horribly lacerated and the awful stench is too terrible for words. I thought several times of Bernhardi's ideas on the uplifting influence of war, and again about Asquith's 'ringing challenge' that we shall not lay down the sword till the might of Germany is finally crushed and broken. It is impossible to forget scenes like these. It becomes all the more terrible when one considers that it may all be futile, all the sacrifices vain, thousands of homes and hearts desolated in both England and Germany, and nothing in exchange.

... I often think you people are right about this war. To my mind it is an example of the world gone mad. Moreover, both sides know and realize this and would give their last sou to see the whole business ended. Would to God it had never begun. There seems at present no way out of the hell we and the Bosches have constructed for each other.

... I'm very sorry that the authorities have gone to the extent of putting really conscientious objectors in prison. A man with courage enough to be a conscientious objector to the bitter end is the sort of man we want always—a man with some grip on his ideals."—From Friends' Fellowship Papers.

PURITY and simplicity are the two wings with which man soars above the earth and all temporary nature. Simplicity is in the intention, purity in the affection; simplicity turns to God; purity unites with and enjoys Him.—THOMAS A. KEMPIS.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE BOARD OF MANAGERS OF THE CHEYNEY TRAINING SCHOOL FOR TEACHERS, 1916-1917.

Approved by the Corporation at a Meeting held Tenth Month 20, 1917.

THE SCHOOL IN GENERAL.

The Cheyney Training School for Teachers during 1916-1917 continued its service with a high standard of attendance and work. One hundred and fifteen students were enrolled for the whole year, and a class of twenty-two graduated in Sixth Month. In the judgment of the teachers, these graduates were the equals in scholarship and in practical training of those who have gone forth from Cheyney in former years. The demands for their service are as numerous as ever.

We believe our students show an increasing understanding of the special needs of their own people, and a willingness to accept hard positions that yield small money returns for the sake of the service they can render their race.

The new year opened with an enrollment of twenty-one young men and eighty-three young women. The average age is nineteen. The younger students in the Preparatory Department appear to have a better school training than is usual, and there is among them a large amount of good teacher-training material.

SCHOOL SPIRIT.

The Senior Class, which sets the standard in school matters, last year gave two evidences of school spirit and loyalty that deserve mention. Because of the high cost of conducting the institution in war times, the class voluntarily suggested that the expense incident to a formal commencement be saved, and that they receive their diplomas before the School without the usual program, which means so much to a graduating class.

Later the class at its last meeting voted to establish a scholarship valued at $100 a year, for five years, to be awarded to that student in full normal standing who, by reason of scholarship, practical ability, character and promise seems, in the judgment of the faculty, to deserve it. The class pledged itself to have the first $100 in hand by First Month 1, 1918. These actions on the part of the class stimulated the School and encouraged the Managers. It is this type of thoughtful economy and self-support that promises much for the future of the race.

During the year the whole school has been much interested in agricultural work, and has participated in many kinds of labor on the farm and in the gardens, not only because of the great national need in time of war, but because the production and conservation of food must give increasing concern to the Negro race in its struggle for existence and progress. The girls, as well as the boys, not only helped in the harvesting of crops, but in preparing the land and planting and tending gardens. All went to the tasks in the spirit both of patriotic and racial duty. This work will be extended during the present school year.

EXTENSION WORK.

Fifteen students were engaged in extension work away from Cheyney, all of whom were Seniors but one. Seven were in charge of the night classes in West Chester; six in charge of those at Media; one conducted mid-week classes in Cooking at the Moylan Home and School Centre; and one was engaged in the immediate neighborhood. The work has now been conducted at West Chester for some years, and continues with an encouraging average attendance and a good measure of success. There are classes in Domestic Art, Domestic Science, Manual Training, Singing, English and Physical Training.

Similar classes have been organized with equal success in Media, where a committee of white and colored people has been organized to supervise the work. The winter and spring courses were brought to a close in each centre by public exercises in the public school buildings of each town. The exhibition of the practical work done, demonstration of processes, and appropriate addresses by school officials and prominent citizens, seemed to be enjoyed and appreciated by all who attended the closing exercises.

The Managers note that the purpose of this community work has been the improvement of the citizenship status of the Negro part of the community. All of this work was carried on as part of the training of the students who were entrusted with it.

Four other students taught classes made up of children from the immediate neighborhood in Sewing, Cooking, Manual Training and Hygiene. This year more attention will be given to gardening work for the same class. One of the students was a faithful missionary the year round in many colored communities, and helped in the country churches with music and entertainments, and in bringing the people to feel that Cheyney wishes to be serviceable to them.

Two other students taught regularly in the "Sunday School" of the nearest colored church in Thornbury Township, and our Seniors and Juniors kept alive and strengthened the Home and School League in the same church, which was organized by the Seniors four years ago, to form a closer bond between the colored people of the community and the School. The Seniors have helped many other churches and organizations engaged in uplift work by singing Negro melodies, and in addition gave concerts in West Chester, Media, Camden, Philadelphia and Thornton.

SUMMER SCHOOL.

For two years the summer school had to be given up on account of lack of funds. In the summer of 1917, a session was held largely through the special contribution of one generous friend. The Managers hope it will not have to be discontinued again, since they regard it as one of the most important services Cheyney can render to Negro education.

One hundred and twelve teachers were in session from Seventh Month 5th to Eighth Month 2nd. As in earlier years the courses were organized to give the maximum of practical help to teachers in Domestic Science, Domestic Art, Gardening, etc., and at the same time to inspire them to higher ideals of service, and to give them through the English Department, and other academic branches, a broader cultural background and outlook. Many of them came at great personal sacrifice, and it would be hard to find a more earnest and hard-working group of men and women. The classes began at 8.30 in the morning and lasted until 5 P. M. There were also evening lectures and entertainments throughout the month. The session closed with an exhibition. A group of the Managers counted it a privilege to meet with the summer school one evening.

In appreciation of the help received during the month, the teachers made up a small but valued purse as a fund to purchase library reference books.

Those who understand the poor preparation of the majority of Negro teachers, know that the summer schools offer the only means large numbers of them have for improvement. The Cheyney summer standard has always been high, and few of our needs are more pressing than money with which to insure the continuance of this part of our service.

THE SHELTER.

During the year the Shelter has again proved its value as a training school for our Seniors and second-year students, and has also continued the good that comes to the happy children there by reason of its fortunate environment and the contact with the students and teachers of the Training School.

There seems to be an entirely new spirit pervading the general life of the Shelter children as compared with the institution when it was located in Philadelphia. Each cottage has vied with the other in cheerful activity. In the model school, under the instruction of the head teacher, and the special teachers from the Training School, the Seniors have been trying to insure for the children first of all, sound fundamental training in the three R's before going on with important experiments in method, which may be undertaken this year in a moderate degree. The classes appear to get on well in their school work when compared with the pupils of corresponding ages in the public schools, and two of the best Shelter girls were sufficiently advanced at the end of the year to warrant the Shelter Managers in sending them to the Christiansburg Institute at Cambria, Virginia.

The frequent access which the Shelter has to Cheyney meetings, services and entertainments helps in the development of the girls. The gain to Cheyney is equally marked. Many of our graduates are called to positions that require a knowledge of little children, and an experience in teaching and caring for them. The work done by our Seniors in the school-room, and by the second year girls as helpers in Wheatley and Douglas cottages, in the preparation of meals, and learning the essentials of home economy, are important features of their professional training. Much stress will be laid during the coming year on gardening.

FACULTY CHANGES.

At the end of 1916-1917, Cheyney lost the services of Olive G. Nelson, who for six years had been head of the Domestic Art Department. She was married to Dr. Layton, of Harrisburg, where she now lives. The Managers record the excellence of her work during her years of service, and appreciate the fine dignity and gentleness of her personality.

May Serena Brown, who formerly acted as Dean, takes up the important department thus vacated, and gives over the matronship to Sadie D. Harrison, who was office assistant to Cheyney some years ago. In the interval of her absence she has been engaged in probation and social work at Fort Wayne, Ind., and was Matron for one year at the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Normal, Alabama.

Harry J. Mack, head of the Manual Training Department, volunteered to enter the Reserve Officers' Training Camp in Des Moines. The Managers have granted him leave of absence during the period of his army services. Meanwhile the department is conducted by H. A. Johnson, who was assistant in that work last year.

P. J. Rayford, instructor in Agriculture, was married in Sixth Month to Narka Lee, the School Secretary. Both continue in the employ of the School. The Domestic Science Department seems fortunate in having secured the services of Ella May Lederle, a graduate of Drexel Institute of high standing in the class of 1917.

The new stewardess for the Boarding Department is Florence Franklin, who has had valuable experience in operating the cafeteria of the Y. M. C. A. in Cambridge, Mass., and as stewardess of Trinity Church, Boston.

STUDENT WORK.

All of the housekeeping and practical work at Cheyney, indoors and out, is done by our students, and is considered a very important part of the training. The young women do all the sweeping, scrubbing and cleaning wherever women live in the grounds, and the young men similarly take care of their own buildings. In addition to this, all the work of the kitchen excepting, of course, the major part of the directive work, is in the hands of students, who are taught to look upon the kitchen not as a drudge department, but as a very important educational feature of their instruction.

The laundry is held in the same view. Not only does each girl do her own washing and ironing, but on Seventh-days all the plain laundry work of the School is done by the students, helped by the simple laundry machinery, with which it is hoped all the students can gradually be familiarized.

The care of the lawns, shrubbery, flowers, walks and drives is another part of the practical work of the students. During the past year the principal part of the work of the farm, including the plowing, planting, harvesting, care of horses, cows, pigs and chickens has been carried by the boys.

BEARING OF GOVERNMENT REPORT ON NEGRO EDUCATION AT CHEYNEY.

The Department of the Interior of the United States, through the Bureau of Education, has just issued a report in two volumes covering more than 1200 pages on Negro education in the United States. Several years have been spent in this compilation which has been conducted by experts of the Bureau of Education. The Bureau undertook to visit and appraise every school of any standing for colored people in the United States. The survey is not only up to date, but may be regarded as exhaustive and authoritative. It has been widely disseminated and will be referred to by all persons interested in Negro education, since it shows the status of each individual institution, points out its success and defects, and suggests improvements that each should immediately undertake.

Friends of Cheyney will be encouraged and inspired to find that "the whole report serves as a background for a proper appreciation of the work of the teacher, and most of all the work of teachers in elementary schools." Quotation from volume 1, page 73.

The Negroes in the United States have over two million children, whose thirty thousand teachers mould the future of the race. It appears that probably seventy per cent. of these teachers have not themselves advanced in education beyond the eight elementary school grades. From all sides comes the demand for trained teachers who have knowledge and character. Every year there is a demand for six thousand new teachers. All the schools offering any teacher training whatever show a total annual output of only twenty-five hundred. There are very few institutions in the country for the thorough training of Negro teachers, and almost none that combine the special advantages of Cheyney in correlating academic and industrial normal training. Furthermore, there is a tendency even in the most liberal institutions of the North to discourage entrance of the very small number of young Negroes who are ambitious for the best training.

There is not a thorough-going teachers' training school for Negroes in the United States that takes standing with such an institution as Teachers' College, Columbia University, or many leading normal schools. There is, however, at Cheyney the nucleus for such an institution, and the Managers believe that with adequate financial backing and wise direction an educational experiment station and training school of national importance could be organized at Cheyney.

The Government report, so far as concerns Cheyney, may be summed up as follows:

Cheyney is described as a school with well-planned courses in teacher-training, household arts and manual training. Attention is called to its small attendance, because of limited dormitory facilities. "The special courses in the Normal Department are well planned, and provide practice in the subjects selected. The courses include civics, teaching methods, gymnastics and singing. A course in Agriculture is being developed, but as yet it is largely class-room study with some laboratory work. The summer school has attracted teachers from many Southern States. Effort has been made to carry on neighborhood work."

Among the recommendations, the School is "encouraged in its present plan to make larger provisions for teacher-training and to further develop its courses in household arts, manual training and gardening." This is in line with the policy pursued for a number of years.

It is further recommended "that the theory and practice of gardening be made an important part of the regular course." Before the publication of the report plans had been made for this extension.

Third, it is recommended "that the policy of using the principal of endowment funds for current expenses be abandoned." This recommendation refers to the action taken by the Board a year or more ago to wipe out an accumulated deficit by disposing of a number of securities from funds that had not been given for any specific purpose. It has been the strong effort of the management to live within our income, since this action was taken, and we may consider ourselves fortunate that in a year of great financial stress and of increased costs, the institution shows a deficit of only $1000. This is a very good showing, we believe, and much better than the great majority of institutions of education in the United States can report.

Reverting to the summary chapter of the Report, the friends of Cheyney may be reassured to find that we are definitely in line with the most progressive thought on Negro education. For instance, the report states that there is everywhere an emphatic demand for teacher-training classes. This is the fundamental work Cheyney has set out to do. Industrial and agricultural courses are emphasized as of first importance. Here, too, Cheyney is striving to meet the need.

Schools are urged to take up special lines of work rather than to be too general in aims and courses. Cheyney has chosen the definite field of teacher training. Sanitation and Elementary Science, History and Civics are strongly urged as part of teacher training. These are included in the Cheyney course.

The theory and practice of gardening is particularly urged, since seventy-three per cent. of the Negro population is rural. Both in the regular course of the Cheyney Training School for Teachers, and in its work in connection with the Shelter, gardening is now being strongly emphasized.

The need of teachers capable of giving instruction in simple manual training courses, including woodwork, domestic science and domestic art is emphasized strongly. Cheyney, from its inception, has been foremost in these departments of teacher-training.

The report states that "no part of the School program is more important than the neighborhood work. This includes not only the efforts in the immediate neighborhood, but in other communities to which the institution can extend its influence. Through these activities the School not only enlarges its field, but also gains a knowledge of actual conditions which enables it to adapt its curriculum to the needs of the pupils." The paragraph in the present annual report on Extension Work is Cheyney's answer to this requirement.

Summer schools are mentioned as the best and chief means of helping the under-trained Negro teacher. Cheyney is doing her bit in this direction also.

The conclusion of the Managers, therefore, is that we can report to our friends that Cheyney is definitely in line with the findings of the fullest and most authoritative report ever issued on Negro education. We appeal to our friends to help us make our work more effective, and extend its influence more widely. This we feel we can do, just as rapidly as funds are provided to continue and develop our work.

STANLEY R. YARNALL,
Secretary of the Board of Managers.

OUR PRESENT-DAY TASKS.

ELBERT RUSSELL.

READ AT THE FIVE YEARS' MEETING.

Our present tasks are numerous and difficult enough to test our patriotism, our faith, our courage and our Christian self-sacrifice.

Our first duty is to keep our consciences enlightened and free, and our hands clear from the shedding of blood. We must maintain our right to serve God as He directs us at all costs, and as much as in us lies, help our fellow conscientious objectors in their struggle for a like liberty and mitigate the penalties of those who have been drafted and suffer for conscience' sake. We must do our best to preserve the right of free speech and co-operate at whatever cost in all Christian ways with our fellow-citizens to make the world safe for Christianity, to make sure that, while the world is at war ostensibly for freedom and democracy, the most precious liberties be not lost or stolen away.

But these are only the negative phases of our duty. More difficult and more important, because positive and altruistic, are the other tasks. We must not stand aloof from the world's sorrow; we must help repair the wastes of war both while the struggle rages and after it closes. We must bear a double burden of the constructive work in our own country. Charity and reform work are already suffering lack of money and workers and are sure to suffer more next year. Educational appropriations will be cut short as the war taxes begin to be felt. Foreign missions will find support more difficult. To these causes we must give redoubled strength and means. We must keep up the task of making ready for peace. We must help keep alive the spirit of peace and keep our eyes open for opportunities for peace and keep the warring world from forgetting the professed ends for which it is fighting, for "Wars, undertaken professedly as a means, tend continually to become an end in themselves."

These are, however, concrete and particular phases of what are really our special and fundamental tasks. Before these things can come to full fruition two things must be brought about. First, the world must come to a larger and more effective faith in spiritual force, especially in international affairs. The threat of brute force tends always to create a distrust of spiritual forces. This is the most dangerous form of infidelity that confronts us to-day. In the face of ruthless use of submarines, "Big Berthas," poison gas and liquid fire, the world is tempted to doubt the possible efficacy of truth, good-will, justice, conscience, kindness and love. And this brutalizing unbelief in the omnipotence of truth and love, in international relations, eats like a gangrene into all relations of life. We find the prominent advocate of a big stick in international affairs finally proclaiming his scorn of the man who resorts to the court when his wife is insulted. The I. W. W. wants to follow the brutal methods of nations in the struggle between capital and labor. Whites and Negroes in East St. Louis and Chester undertake to solve problems of race and industrial relations by arson and murder. Mobs of "best citizens" violate the constitutional right of I. W. W. leaders and pacifists in the name of democracy and liberty by resort to violence.

In large domains of our life we have slowly built up confidence in the efficacy of spiritual powers to hold evil in check and bind society together. Citizens have ceased to carry arms, vigilance committees have disbanded, frontier army posts have been abandoned and prison discipline has lost its brutality as law supplants the gun, as the organized will of the majority takes the place of dragoons or Cossacks, as legal justice crowds out the mob and education and religion direct and discipline the ideas and passions of men. We have learned that true religion can exist and grow without the support of the "secular arm," can maintain the faith without recourse to prison, rack and fagot. But to-day we are reverting to primitive methods in international affairs. We are told that Germans and Bulgars are less capable of fine ideals, less susceptible to justice and kindness than other men and even ministers of Christ assert that incarnate truth and crucified love are incompetent to win and transform and civilize the nations of the world. It is vain for the churches to call Jesus, Lord and God in the creeds we recite if we throw away his weapons as useless and act as if he were a fool for asking us to try them.

Our task is to try to rebuild faith in these spiritual forces as the basis of international relations, to emphasize the power of ideas and ideals and hold the shining examples of their efficacy before the eyes that are dazzled by the flash of howitzers or blinded by smoke and tears of battle.

We must build and sustain their faith by the story of how the saintly Woolman's gentle protest against slavery, started the avalanche of conscience which swept it from the Society of Friends. We must show them how the compulsory temperance instruction in the public schools, the agitation of seemingly unimportant Prohibitionists and the scientists' reports of statistics and experiments about the use of alcohol have availed to send the liquor traffic toppling to its doom. But these are cases within our own nation. What is wanted is proof that such forces are effective with other nations.

Morrison went out to convert China in the days when men thought the Chinaman as inaccessible to human influences as we are tempted to think the German is. He attacked the hoary, unchangeable civilization of the Middle Kingdom with his printing press, Chinese dictionary and Bible translated into Chinese. How the unbelieving mocked when after forty years Morrison died leaving one convert! But what England's guns and the Kaiser's mailed fist could not do has been done by Morrison's press and Bible reinforced by Missionary school and hospital, by new ideas following in the wake of trader and merchant, by scholars returning imbued with zeal for Western learning. The world that mocked at Morrison is yet gaping in astonishment at the transformation of China.

And then Russia: "the bear that walked like a man." The Czar relied on his Cossacks, his secret police, his myriads of recruits, his fortresses and dungeons. He thought with scorn to lay hands on the gentle Tolstoi, whose revolutionary gospel called for no weapon but a pen. But Tolstoi's pen proved mightier than Cossack's sword. The government might arrest editors, close universities and exile agitators, but surreptitious sheets were passed from workman to workman, from peasant to peasant, from soldier to soldier and stole away the heart of Russia. The Cossack's sword was turned against his master and Russia is a republic. The Czar's downfall is a warning to us of the fate of "valiant dust that builds on dust and guarding calls not God to guard." By Penn's success with the Indians, by Cuba's trust in us, by China's friendship we must testify afresh to the world that not by armament nor by any army but by God's Spirit it is to be changed and redeemed.

In the second place, we must work to make the Kingdom of God universal and supreme in the earth. Toward this we have already taken great steps. Time was when the family claimed supreme control over the individual. The patriarch stood as priest between the individual and God. Jesus had still to say, "Whosoever loveth father and mother more than me is not worthy of me," but with the growing needs of life, both among the ancient Semites and on the American frontier the man who would be a good father or husband or brother had to become a good citizen in order to protect sons and daughters going out from the home to school or to distant cities, from saloons and brothel, from sweatshop and unsanitary factory, from dangers of travel and poisonous food, from incompetent teachers and doctors. Modern parents have to invoke the aid of the state and give their higher loyalty to it. There are still in the Kentucky mountains those who regard as a traitor the man who puts loyalty to the state above the claim of the family, but we regard their exclusive loyalty to the family as short-sighted and ignorant.

At the outbreak of the Civil War, Robert E. Lee and his compatriots in Virginia believed their supreme loyalty was to Virginia even against the national government, but he and his companions soon learned that their state alone was inadequate to protect its own institutions. After the war the Southern leaders returned to their allegiance to the greater Union all the more readily because they realized that only the nation was great enough to care for the interests of the people of any state. All of us to-day are better citizens of our native, or adopted states because we are loyal citizens of the United States. Likewise to-day nations have become inadequate to the need of modern life. Travel, science, commercial industry, population, sovereignty itself, have outgrown national limits. Our citizens abroad are discommoded, the revenues of the government cut off, trade stopped, factories shut down, industries in foreign countries destroyed because of revolution in Mexico or China and war in Europe. No one nation of itself can adequately care for its own interest to-day, any more than any one family or state can do so. Our government recognizes that the truest loyalty of its soldiers abroad is to serve under the Allied generals. So we recognize that he is the best citizen of America to-day who works for and stands ready to give his loyalty to a Federation of the World. Such alone is able adequately to care for our world-wide interests. But even so there is a higher claim on our loyalty. Even a court and parliament, though backed by the combined fleets and armies of the world cannot serve our deepest needs nor command our supreme loyalty unless it itself obeys the will of God and rests upon His Spiritual force. In spite of the constitutional guarantee that life and property shall not be taken without due process of law, we have in our own country lynchings and race riots with killings and burnings. External organization and brute force are of themselves inadequate to protect our most precious possessions from the lust and hate, the envy and greed of men. Only the Spirit of God can protect us from these things by removing from the hearts of men, when the truth and cross of Christ have won, the spirit of war and wrong. It is not disloyalty to our government, national or international, when we refuse to obey men rather than God. Men may fear for the security of the nation and its interests if we were all Christian non-resistants. Love has been sufficient to preserve the family, though we no longer force unwilling women into the marriage bond. The church still lives, though we no longer torture men into saying its creed. And I know of nothing that would make life and property and person safer in America than to have all the population true Quakers; I know of nothing that would so make secure our national liberties and international rights as to have all the Allied nations peopled by Dunkards of the highest type and the Central powers by Mennonites. Our tasks are fundamentally, as I see them, to do our best toward organizing the world-wide neighborhood, that the forces made in life have created into a republic of God, by the Spirit of Christ as it works through us in truth, justice and love. The goal is yet afar off, but nearer than when we first saw it; and though the vision tarry let us work and wait for it.—From The American Friend.

SUGGESTIONS FROM THE INTERNATIONAL GROUP AT WOODBROOKE.

The International Group at Woodbrooke is made up of men and women drawn from various spheres of social activity into a spirit of unity. That unity is based upon the belief that International problems can never be solved by the method of War. We feel, now that the call is being made for all to render service of some kind to the nation, that we must give account of the work we are doing for the sake of humanity. And the fact that some of us have been in prison for refusing to render the specific service demanded of us by the Government; and the imminent prospect of imprisonment for others of us who will refuse, make it all the more necessary that we should let others know for what we stand, and what we are doing at this critical period of the world's history.

We find no satisfaction in a merely negative attitude; nor are we rebels because we love rebellion. In common with all men we desire peace and harmony; and this is what has driven us together to endeavor by sincere thinking and devoted study to find a solution to the problems which vex mankind. And the fact that we are a minority, and at variance with the majority of our nation, has given to each of us an intensity of purpose which was lacking in pre-war days.

We recognize with sorrow that organized Religion has failed in its mission; that International Socialism has fallen short of its possibilities; and that the efforts of sincere and honest workers of all parties, though we cannot think them fruitless, have not achieved all that men wished and prayed for. And at Woodbrooke we are endeavoring to find out what are the disintegrating forces so powerfully working to hinder the harmony of the world, and to project in detail the conditions of a Peace which shall be at once permanent and living.

We are convinced that the world is governed in a spirit which is alien to progress and good-will; that men's minds are filled with wrong ideals, and that the majority of people act like machines rather than as thinking, reasoning beings. We believe that only by a complete surrender of all idea of domination and coercion, and the adoption in their place of reason, persuasion, sympathy, and love, can evil be overcome in the world and good established.

For even as we have seen many things which make for unrighteousness and death, so we have also seen many things that may make for Righteousness and Life.

We do most profoundly believe that there is something which is responsive to good in every man and woman born into the world. That each one is born to know a life that is not merely the absence of death, but a positive thing that means action, progress, development. And it is because we believe that all men and women are intended to know that life that we regard all human beings as of infinite value. And further, we feel that without such life each person is unable to make to the world's welfare that contribution which we believe he or she has to make.

We cannot accept any conception of life which regards any race or class of people as inferior beings, who by their inherent mental or moral deficiencies are doomed to servitude and degradation. Rather do we embrace and hold fast the more glorious belief that the whole human race is able, if given the opportunity, to respond to and desire good, and to travel beyond its present state to something higher and nobler. Hence we believe that a mental and moral appeal to their natural capacity for good, and opportunities for receiving and responding to that appeal, will win men and women to righteousness where the methods of coercion and violence must inevitably fail.

It is this belief in the value and sacredness of human life that we want all men to share. We feel now that what is needed of us from our country is not so much that we shall plant potatoes or grow wheat with which to fill the bodies of men, important as that may be, as that we shall share with them our ideas and inspirations. For we believe that if individually and nationally we seek first the Kingdom of God and His Righteousness, all these other things will be added to us.

At present men and women are made subservient to the wealth they produce; they are the slaves of machinery and of each other. What is needed is that they shall be masters of their own lives, with opportunity to develop all that is in them. And we see no other way of bringing about this desired end than by co-operation, and common control in every sphere of life; in Education, Industry, Politics and Religion. For only when men have a common interest in things can they have a common aim; and until they have as a common aim the development of man in his highest and best condition, progress will be impossible.

And we feel that what applies to individuals within a nation applies to all the nations that go to make up humanity. Hence we repudiate the idea that true national prosperity can only be obtained at the expense of our neighbors. Nay more, we emphatically deny that any real prosperity can be so obtained, believing rather that the true interest of nations do not clash, and that systems of trade and commerce should be based upon co-operation instead of competition.

We advocate the immediate abolition of armies and navies as the first step to peace and good-will. Nothing less than this will satisfy our Christianity. It is the only step that will assure backward races and small nations that our professions of concern for them are sincere. Moreover, it is the only step that can save millions of men from the degrading influences of militarism, give them opportunity to live natural lives, and free the whole world from the fear and cruelty of war.

Our ideal is universal; it embraces all mankind; and we cannot pass by on the other side whoever it may be lying wounded in the ditch. We count ourselves honored by the calling which draws us with irresistible force to the work of raising all men and women with ourselves to a higher state. And with Whitman we say to everyone—"Comrade, I give you my hand! I give you my love more precious than money;

I give you myself before preaching or law. Will you give me yourself? Will you come travel with me? Shall we stick by each other as long as we live?" For we feel that the world was made for the spirit of man; that it is his heritage from God, and a school for his development; and we wish that mankind shall march along its roads to the full and perfect life.

This is our vision; to this we have dedicated our lives; and to the end of realizing it with all men we are trying to live up to the highest we know.

We are seeking to show others this vision, that they too may have light upon the path they tread, and may join us in our march. And all the while we are constantly endeavoring to understand life more and more, so that our work may be effective. We are not outside the world; we know that no new and better social or International structures can be brought down out of heaven, or be in any other way forced upon men from outside. We believe they will grow up inside, out of the efforts of all those who sincerely and honestly labor for their erection. We are at one with all who are so toiling and planning, and we know that ere long, as the result of their endeavors while the old is tottering to the ground in ruins, the new building will rise slowly from their midst.—From Friends' Fellowship Papers.

For "THE FRIEND."

A FIRST-DAY AFTERNOON WITH THE CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS AT CAMP MEADE.

WALTER H. HAVILAND.

On First-day afternoon, the 4th inst., several Friends met without much previous consultation with our young men at Camp Meade. I went all the way by rail, leaving Broad Street Station at 10.30 A. M. and changing to the electric car at Odenton, some fifteen or twenty miles beyond Baltimore. Getting off at Admiral Station, I inquired the way to "B 24," the barracks of the 154th Detachment, Depot Brigade, the second floor of which is the present home of all the conscientious objectors now at Camp Meade, seventy-one in number that day. After walking a mile or so over roads in different stages of building and grading, and past buildings for all sorts of camp uses, none, however, over two stories in height and all unpainted, I found "B 24" about two o'clock.

Arthur Thorp and Harold Lane had seen me and came down the stairs as I approached the door. Their greeting was very cordial, and I saw at once that they were allowed quite a degree of liberty. In fact, they are free to move about in the immediate vicinity of their barracks at will, though all the time under guard and for the most part expected to stay pretty closely in the barracks, except for their daily or semi-daily "hikes" across country, by means of which they get their exercise.

The room occupied by the seventy-one men is perhaps one hundred by fifty feet. It is provided with cots and not much, if any other furniture, except some rough tables between the beds, on which the boys may write. There are two large heaters, one of which was in operation. Three times a day they are taken to another building for meals, which, though of course plain, are substantial and sufficient. Each fellow takes his own "mess kit," and after eating is expected to wash his own dishes.

The only member of our Yearly Meeting, except the two mentioned, then at the camp was Howard Branson, who had only arrived a day or two before, though Joshua L. Baily, Jr., and Wray B. Hoffman attend Haverford and Germantown Meetings respectively. It did not take long to find this entire group, together with several young men connected with "the other branch." By far the largest group of conscientious objectors is furnished by the Church of the Brethren, or Dunkards, of whom there are about twenty. Next in number come the Mennonites, Friends coming in third and Jewish Socialists fourth. The balance is made up of one or two members of several very small sects. It is strange that not one of the larger and well-known Christian denominations furnishes a single conscientious objector.

A half hour or so after my arrival, five Friends who had come in an automobile joined us—George Thorp and son Albin, from Media, Joseph Trimble, of Chester, and Arthur Pennell, of Middletown.

There was a desire to have a Friends' meeting, so cots were pulled together for seats at one side of the room, and word was passed around inviting all who wished to join us. Though a visiting Mennonite brother had just been holding a service for his people and a Dunkard minister from Baltimore expected to conduct a service for his after supper, practically all the young men, with some visitors, joined in our meeting, some sitting on the cots and some standing in a half circle around. A few words of explanation of "Friends' way" were given, with an invitation to all to join in the service of the meeting as they felt drawn. One young man, a visitor, and two of our Friends had vocal service. Most, if not all, of those present seemed to enter into the spirit of the occasion, and it was a time of helpful Christian fellowship.

Just after our meeting broke—it lasted about an hour—Isaac Sharpless arrived with Albert L. Baily and family by automobile from Baltimore. Dr. O. Edward Janney, with some other friends from Baltimore, also came in. It was a regular reception! Since there was a desire to hear some words of counsel from Isaac Sharpless and he felt willing to address the young men, a large part of the company gathered together again in a corner of the room to listen to his earnest words. These were followed by a time of reverent silence, broken by words of prayer.

The visitors withdrew gradually, with a sense that these young men, who had chosen to put the dictates of a different type of conscience above the claims to which others yield, have chosen a good part which cannot be taken from them.

"C. O.'S" IN CAMP SHERMAN.

FRIENDS' BOARDING SCHOOL,

BARNESVILLE, OHIO, Tenth Month 20, 1917.

EDWARD W. EVANS:—

Dear Friend—I thought perhaps thee and others would be interested to hear about a visit Charles Livezey and I paid to the Conscientious Objectors at Camp Sherman Seventh and First-days last. We are members of the Meeting for Sufferings of Ohio Yearly Meeting (smaller body) that have the matter somewhat under our care and I also by reason of connection with the Fellowship had an added interest in looking up these people.

We found that it was indeed true that the heart of Ohio is now centered at the camp, and mothers and fathers, brothers and sisters and friends from all over the State were flocking in, overcrowding the trains and traction lines. There seems very little, if any, objection to visitors here; in fact, they seemed to welcome us and were very obliging and almost anxious to help us find those we wanted to see, going out of their way sometimes to do so.

There are only four Friends' boys there at the present time that belong to our Yearly Meeting; there are a few there from the larger body at Wilmington, Ohio. These last have practically all donned the uniform and are doing work around the Base Hospital, either in the kitchens or as nurses and orderlies. Our four boys there are also doing something of the same kind but have refused to don the uniform, except one. These four at present have made up their minds that they have gone as far as they can and are about ready to make a stand against doing anything. They feel they have gone too far already.

There is a very interesting company of Mennonites of several branches, Amish, etc. There are about sixty in all here. Twenty-three of these started in by doing work around the Hospital, but soon found they were getting in farther than they wished to go and at last they stopped off doing anything at all. At first they were hustled off to the guard-house and kept for twenty-four to forty-eight hours and then finally were returned to the Base Hospital and put in separate barracks there and are being left alone. My understanding is that their church is paying their expenses and they are not beholden to the Government for anything.

They were the happiest lot of young men we saw around the big camp. They felt they had done what their consciences told them to do and had won out.

As one of them expressed it to me—we do not want to get off too easy and do not expect to escape hardship and suffering. If our young friends all around us are willing to face death in the trenches we ought to be willing to face death for the cause we stand for. We are happy here because we have done what we could to stand for our cause and our Saviour. These are not his exact words, but are the substance of them as I recollect them.

These young men are being carefully looked after by their friends and relatives and by their church officers. We met, while there, Bishop Fry of their church, who has a son there and was also looking after their interests. These Mennonites claim they were well treated while in the guard-house, the only thing that worried them there being the fact that they were associated with some genuine criminals for a time. They claimed they were well fed, and not on bread and water as the newspapers reported. I met and conversed with others that had not as yet been taken to the barracks, but were still doing some work around the Hospital, these are likely to take a definite stand soon and those who are already in the separate barracks say they expect to have twenty more in there with them by sometime this week. Twenty others of these belong to a section of the church that seem willing to bear arms and have given up the fight. Most of these Mennonites are from Fulton County, of this State.

A group of Mennonites told of three of their young men who had donned the uniform. One of this group overheard the officers making fun of these three young men for giving in to their demands. They feel the officers have respect for the consistent C. O.'s.

I regret since coming home that we did not look up more of the C. O.'s in the Base Hospital who were giving in partially by wearing uniforms and doing Hospital Service. But our time was short and the camp is large and maybe another visit will give me more time for that service.

If I can be of any service I should like to do my bit, so let me know if there are any at Camp Sherman that need especial looking after.

Our observation is that those who take the absolute stand and refuse to do anything are coming out better and are happier and more content than those who have given in a little.

Very sincerely,
J. WETHERILL HUTTON.

Charles Livezey has furnished another account of which the following is a part:—

BARNESVILLE, O., Eleventh Month 10, 1917.

Realizing that Friends generally are definitely interested in the cause of the C. O.'s in the various camps, I thought a few observations on the subject as connected with Camp Sherman, after two visits there, might be of interest.

Our Committee of the Meeting for Sufferings became anxious about three weeks ago whether the C. O.'s were receiving their just deserts, as we apprehended them, as outlined by the War Department in its instructions to the various camps. We consequently had an interview two weeks ago with General Glenn, Chief Commander of the camp, who received us courteously and assured us that, whenever a party holding Form No. 174 had come to his notice, he had immediately and without question transferred him to the Base Hospital. He stated that he thought the work there to be one of healing and such a humanitarian service that no one could conscientiously object to it. When questioned upon the particular point he said he interpreted such service as "Segregation," in accordance with the ruling of the War Department. He was informed that some could not conscientiously perform any such work as it is a part of the military system. They feel that Secretary Baker had intended to safeguard such scruples for the present by "Segregation." The question was raised how such might proceed in his camp to secure these concessions. He informed us that if such parties would state their case in writing and place it with their commandant, that he would forward it to Washington when it came to his office. From about this time twenty-two Mennonites and others who had refused to perform much of any service were placed in an unoccupied ward of the Hospital and given fair treatment. These have increased until on Eleventh Month 7th they numbered thirty-two.

The Friends in the camp are: Lawrence L. Barker, Salem, O.; Orville J. Borton, Quaker City, O.; Alfred E. Kennard, Jr., Barnesville, O.

Six of the old order Amish Mennonites refused from the first to perform any service and sixteen others, after performing various duties in the Hospital for a week or two (with a definite statement to the officials that they were performing such service not as a military duty, but to pay for board and lodging), finally "made a stand" and were taken to the guard-house for a brief time. They were properly fed, but endured some minor punishments, as cold shower bath, for refusal to work. Since then others who have joined the company of C. O.'s have not gone through the guard-house and consequently have undergone but little if any punishment other than to hear some abusive language from some inferior officers. The C. O.'s were informed about two weeks since not to go to meals without a guard and during the two or three days this rule was in force they missed three or four meals. They were then for two or three days put on half rations, but when we were there on the 3rd inst. they were restored to full rations. They are now permitted to move about without any guard and also to take their "hikes" alone (i. e., without guard), and as far as they desire to go, westward from the camp, providing they are back to roll call and to regular meal hours. These young fellows are jealously guarding these concessions and privileges and the confidence that Major Huber, of the Hospital, is placing in them. They are for the most part an exceptional group of intelligent, enthusiastic exemplars of the principles of peace, ready, if needs be, to dedicate their lives for the cause so dear to themselves, rather than compromise or sacrifice the peaceable nature of the Spirit of Christ on the altar of national expediency. They grasp as ultimate truth the thought that beyond "making the world safe for Democracy" we must strive to make the Democracies of the future safe for Christianity.

They spend much of their time in Bible study, in reading, and in religious meetings, encouraging each other in embracing the present as an opportunity in the Divine Hand for them by self-sacrifice and suffering to become the channels through which the true love to all mankind may flow. May they not find us wanting in strengthening them as far as in us lies in a closer walk with God, that our Churches may come out of this fiery ordeal refined, and the membership rededicated to His service, who was never foiled in battle or beaten in the field. I wish also to record an acknowledgment of the courtesy extended to us at various times by the officers at camp.

CHARLES LIVEZEY.

A "C. O.'S" DEFENSE.

J. HOWARD BRANSON.

[The following letter printed in the Evening Ledger, is a very clear statement. Joseph Rhoads suggests it be reprinted in THE FRIEND.]

Beyond a shadow of a doubt Germany is the worst international brigand the world has ever seen. To-day she stands justly condemned by all civilized nations; the world is almost united in its effort to defeat her by means of war. If there was ever a just war, if there was ever a war prompted by high idealism and unselfish purpose this is such a war.

Nevertheless, we have in our midst a group of men and women who absolutely refuse to aid in the prosecution of this war. It is incumbent upon this group to show cause why its members should not be regarded as a menace as serious to the nation as Germany herself. I am one of that group, and I ask you to permit me to explain why I am a pacifist and conscientious objector in wartime and why I cannot aid in this war.

I am not ignorant of the crimes Germany has committed. I neither deny them nor see any legitimate reason for doubting the reports circulated concerning them. To attempt to defend them is absurd. I have the greatest admiration for the men who conscientiously feel that the only way to restrain Germany is to wage war upon her. When I see these men who have joined the army, men who are willing to make the supreme sacrifice that an ideal of world peace, freedom and democracy may be realized, I cannot but admire them. Yet I cannot join them because I feel that the method they have adopted can never bring about the result they seek. In fact, I think that war must indefinitely postpone the realization of world democracy rather than usher it in. Such a world order must rest upon mutual understanding and good-will. War does not create either understanding or good-will. The problem is how can these forces be brought to bear upon the present situation.

For years the German people have been taught that the other European nations threatened their very existence, and the people doubtless believe this. Strange as it seems to us, the German people think they are fighting a defensive war. Strange as it seems to them, we think we are fighting a defensive war. In this war both peoples see a justification for their belief.

Our problem then is simply this—to convince the German people that we do not wish them ill and to convince ourselves that the German people are not fighting for the pure love of carnage. This can be done only by creating some basis for mutual understanding. There is, I think, only one way by which such an understanding can be created, and that is by doing something that will convince the German people of our unselfish motives. The German people will judge of our motives by our actions, not by our words. They will judge us exactly as we judge them. To wage war upon them will not convince them that we desire for them equal opportunity for national development. We must adopt a method that will advertise the motives which animate us, and point to the ends we see.

I do not now and never have advocated an active obstructionist propaganda. That is a method which I must condemn as much as I do war itself. It creates neither understanding nor sympathy between the contending factions. Nevertheless, when I am told that now the question must be fought out, I cannot but believe that eventually the problem must be thought out, and until then it will not be solved. Serious international problems cannot be properly considered in time of war. Does war aid in dispassionate thinking on international problems?

I believe that we can never hope for a solution of international problems except by negotiation after some bonds of sympathy have been found or created. These negotiations must result in the establishment of some degree of voluntary co-operation among the nations. The very nature of war makes it ineffective in the establishment of voluntary co-

POWER AND LOVE.—"If the sap of a root of a tree be a sap capable of producing various kinds of fruit, then a branch bearing only one kind of fruit is not a full witness of what is contained in the root. Even so we, if there be power in Christ our root, then the mere manifestation of love, in His members without power, is not a full witness of Him."—Selected.

operation. This sort of co-operation is a matter of will, and war is ineffective when used to coerce the will. It may gain an apparent, but not a real, victory. We must win Germany to our ideals, not force her to adopt the forms in which we clothe them while rejecting the spirit which gives them life.

I am told that this is impractical. I deny it. The test of practicality is practice. In fact, every ideal is made practical by practicing it. Until an effort has been made to put an ideal into practice, and that effort has failed, there is no justification in the charge that the ideal is unpractical. All progress is made in the face of the self-styled practical man. For my part, I feel that there is nothing so impractical as war, simply because it does not result in voluntary co-operation between contending parties.

Feeling as I do, I cannot aid in the prosecution of any war, regardless of the motives assigned as justification for it. I must remain a pacifist in wartime, because I feel that in pacifism alone a true solution of this problem is to be found.

Could I with clear conscience aid in a policy which I feel must delay the realization of our bright ideals?

LANSOWNE.

FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE.

INFORMATION.—The following men and women arrived in France the early part of this month:—

Ernest Charles Binford, Haviland, Kansas; Walter Gregory Bowerman, Charleston, West Virginia; Walter Carroll Brinton, Frankford, Phila., Pa.; E. Morris Burdsall, Port Chester, New York; Leland Kellum Carter, Indianapolis, Indiana; Daniel Arthur Compton, Plainfield, New Jersey; Errol T. Elliott, Haviland, Kansas; William Yarnall Hare, West Chester, Penna.; Richard J. M. Hobbs, Greensboro, North Carolina; Frederick T. Hollowell, New York City; Israel E. Hough, Ambler, Penna.; Folger B. Howell, Springfield, Ohio; Given C. Johnson, Le Grand, Iowa; John Langdon Jones, Roxborough, Phila., Pa.; Harold S. Laity, Chappaqua, New York; Harold David Marshall, Whittier, California; Charles W. Moon, Wichita, Kansas; Seymour H. Olmsted, Buffalo, New York; Edward Abbott Sibley, Germantown, Phila., Pa.; Walter E. Smith, Eureka, New York; William Berry Southworth, Brookline, Mass.; J. Coleman Travis, Poughkeepsie, New York; Alfred Cresson Vail, Chester, Penna.; Luther E. Warren, Wilmington, Ohio; Walter E. Wildman, Selma, Ohio; A. Gertrude Jacob, Queens, New York; Marjorie Daw Johnson, Madison, Wisconsin; Margaret Scattergood, Phila., Pa.

It is interesting to note that twelve States are represented by the above twenty-eight persons.

ADDRESS FOR MEN AND WOMEN IN FRANCE.—The offices of our Committee in Paris are 53 Rue de Rivoli. Mail can be sent at foreign rates to the above address or to:—

F. W. V. R. C.,

A. P. O., S. 5

B. E. F.,

France.

These magic symbols merely mean Friends' War Victims' Relief Committee, Army Post Office, Section 5, British Expeditionary Forces. English Friends have been served by the British Army Post Office and the same service is accorded our men who have joined with English Friends. Mail so addressed is sent to 53 Rue de Rivoli and redistributed.

We have made arrangements with the U. S. Post Office Department whereby letters and packages up to seven pounds can be sent at domestic rates if addressed as follows:—

Friends' Unit of the Red Cross,

American Expeditionary Forces,

France.

Mail so addressed will also be sent to 53 Rue de Rivoli and redistributed. Christmas mail should be plainly marked "Christmas package."

"The life that has not known and accepted sorrow, is strangely crude and untaught."

LETTER OF PHILADELPHIA QUARTERLY MEETING TO ITS MEMBERS OF MILITARY AGE.

NOTE.—An individual letter has been sent to those intended so far as the lists are complete. It will be a kindness to report any known omissions. The portion of the letter addressed to C. O.'s was omitted in the case of enlisted men.—CLERKS.

PHILADELPHIA QUARTERLY MEETING, 304 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Eleventh Month 10, 1917.

DEAR FRIEND:—

Philadelphia Quarterly Meeting, held Eleventh Month 6th, was united in overflowing sympathy with the young men of its membership of military age whatever their position and situation may be.

A visiting English Friend gave the meeting a highly spiritual message, based upon the statement of Isaac Pennington to his brother, who had joined the Roman Catholics, to this purport: "Thy religion and my religion must be the same in so far as we have religion; for there is only one religion."

This common basis of unity bound the meeting together as one family, and carried it out in assured brotherliness to all, with the prayer that God will be with them.

A further message to all conscientious objectors in our membership was conveyed in the following words from a letter of Wilfred Littleboy's, read to the meeting by Alfred Kemp Brown of London.

FROM A LETTER OF WILFRED LITTLEBOY TO ALFRED KEMP BROWN AND W. BLAIR NEATBY.

GUARD ROOM, Red Barracks, Ninth Month 23, 1917.

"If you have any opportunity of giving a message, particularly to young Friends as the result of one's experience during the past three years, it seems to me to be summed up in Isaiah's advice of old. 'In quietness and in confidence shall be your strength.' I would say, do not allow yourselves to be hurried in fixing your line of conduct, keep on seeking guidance, even though it seem like inaction, till the way is made quite clear. It will be made unmistakably clear, and with it will come an assured sense of God's presence and guidance like that which has been my own experience during the last nine months in prison."

By direction and on behalf of the Meeting,

J. HENRY BARTLETT,

LYDIA C. SHARPLESS,

Clerks.

NEW ZEALAND FRIENDS.

FROM REPORTS OF THE GENERAL MEETING IN THE "AUSTRALIAN FRIEND."

The discussion which followed the reading of the reports was felt to be most hopeful for the future of the Society in New Zealand. The state of the Society is the state of the individual souls which comprise it. Quakerism depends upon the faithfulness of the individual. We need to be faithful, but never to forget in our anxiety that we cannot be so unless we are linked up with the power of the risen Christ, as the Apostle Paul said, "I can do all things through Christ, which strengtheneth me." It is in prayer that the strength is to be found, not prayer which is a begging or a beseeching, but prayer which is a conscious touch with God.

FRIENDS AND MILITARY SERVICE.

The discussion on the Military Service Act began with a letter read from the National Peace Council of New Zealand. A deputation was also introduced from the Seventh-day Adventists Church, and their spokesman, Pastor Myers, laid before Friends a proposal to set on foot a petition to Parliament asking for consideration to be given to all conscientious objectors. Pastor Myers mentioned that although not generally known, the Seventh-day Adventists opposed all war, and that his denomination were agreeable that he should give the whole of his time to the furtherance of this proposal. The request of this deputation was discussed at a later sitting, and granted. The mind of the meeting was then mainly directed towards the subject of alternative service, not so much in a general way, but specially in regard to the Government's offer of non-combatant service on State farms under civic control, conditional upon the signing of an undertaking binding the signatory to "any form of non-combatant service as may from time to time be prescribed by the Commandant of the forces." It was pointed out that the signing of such a document definitely places the person concerned in a position of subordination to military law, although possibly under civil administration. Also that even should the clause be amended, substituting a civil officer for the Commandant of the forces, the reservist would, although exempt from military service, be transferred back to the N. Z. Reserve to do non-combatant work. The weight of the Meeting was clearly against signing the required undertaking. Some Friends felt that a differently-worded declaration, omitting all reference to military authority, and definitely making the obligations of the exempted person purely civil, would meet the case. Others, and possibly the larger number of Friends, felt their inability to render any service under an Act framed for the express purpose of raising military forces. A spirit of willingness and desire to help the country at this time of need was manifested on all sides, and suggestions were put forward that Friends should signify to the Government what kind of service could be given compatible with their principles. Individual guidance and vision were felt to be the chief factors in such an action, and the difficulty of stating what service Friends as a body could render was apparent. Many Friends, and among them those who have been in military detention, felt that the best service that can be rendered is that of a clear stand for absolute freedom of conscience for all. Others felt just as earnestly that they could, even under the Military Service Act, render such non-combatant work as would not conflict with their conviction, and would aid the State.

The possibility of a National Service Act being placed on the Statute Book was mentioned, and it was thought that Friends might find an opportunity for service then, provided that they are assured that any service thus rendered is not war service, and will not assist in the military prosecution of the war.

Finally, a minute was drafted stating the position of Friends in regard to alternative service, and explaining why the existing regulations failed to meet their case.

Percy Wright and Thomas Bentley spoke feelingly of their experiences, and counted it a privilege to be amongst those who are bearing witness to the Truth as held by Friends. Percy Wright, during his long detention at Trentham, had come into contact with many other religious and conscientious objectors, and he spoke of the encouragement and strength which came to each by such contact, particularly referring to the power which the grace of God gave to those who made that the basis of their actions, as compared with the purely political or economic objectors.

FRIENDS IN AMERICA.

AUGUSTUS GEORGE WALLER.

The Society of Friends in America has suffered more than we have in England by divisions. I have been interested when going among Friends in England to notice the great variety of temperament. There is often a lack of appreciation among us which sometimes amounts to disapproval.

Because our Society is primitive we have the forms of all the developments of historic Christianity. Our primitive way of thought gives us scope to express our various inclinations: Conservative, Radical, Mystical, Dogmatic or Rationalist, etc. We must tolerate one another and live so deep that we reach unity in diversity. When spiritual life is at a low ebb then we split up.

The more complex civilization becomes the more important is it to arrive at simple fundamental conceptions; for the more confusing are the multiform manifestations of truth then, and the contrary diseases or sins of civilization become rife.

The war is a judgment on our civilization and Friends are being brought into deep experience. I believe they will emerge triumphant and unified.

The Society of Friends is originally and essentially mystical. A mystic is a person of vision: one who has a message to the world. He is clear-sighted and sees beyond semblances to the reality underlying the universe. He is a rationalist, but, nevertheless, is eminently devout. Very probably he is symbolic in his language.

Friends now may be divided into three groups, both in England and America. These groups are according to temperament. If there is a new experience of Divine favor then these three types are brought together; are baptized afresh by the Holy Ghost and partake of the mystical communion of the saints.

The three present types of Friends are:—(1) Conservative; (2) Rationalist; (3) Dogmatic. In America they are divided on these issues into:—(1) Conservative; (2) Liberal; and (3) Pastoral. In each of these groups there are again the three tendencies. If, at a crisis like this present war, the spirit depart from Friends, these three historic groups may again split into two or three parts. This further splitting up has been observed sometimes among the Wilburite bodies.

In England we have kept together, at times in cliques of like-minded individuals, but there has always been a social intercourse in our Quarterly and Yearly Meetings. In America, where the cliques have entirely separated, it seems to an English Friend a misfortune. The separations have made the differences something to brag about.

There is neither orthodox nor unorthodox in the kingdom of Heaven (see John iv). We should only preach the pure Gospel that we are really given by our Heavenly Father.

I do not want to infer that there were no vital questions at stake which led to the separations, but they were due to lack of understanding and hence the un-Christian wrangles at the time. If Friends of either side had been truly Christian these scenes would not have occurred.

The proposition is:—How to be zealous and equable at once? How to avoid latitudinarianism on the one hand and rancour on the other? I apply this to the present time, where we are at sixes and sevens over the war question. I believe we are solving it in the ideal manner, due to the real Christian spirit of concern among us.

It seems then that we are born with one of three dispositions. The reader may thus understand that my bias is towards the Conservative. So if I am partial please excuse it. It is not possible to be impartial, which is a euphemism for colorlessness. But it is possible to be just, and I hope I may be.

It has been my fortune to travel at leisure across the States from West to East. I had the privilege of being welcomed by the College Park Friends at San José, Cal., the day after I landed. Later on I was overwhelmed with hospitality by the Iowa Conservative Friends and at Barnesville Yearly Meeting of Ohio. I felt in close sympathy with these Conservative Friends. Their young people are well concerned, although there is a bit of friction, perhaps, between the generations. This may happen among any set of strong-minded people.

It was through the Liberal Friends of Pasadena that I attended a very enjoyable little Yearly Meeting in Illinois.

Baltimore Friends are very like English Friends, and their city also forcibly reminded me of Bloomsbury in London. They urged me to attend the Five Years' Meeting of Pastoral Friends.

An English Friend is taken aback by their "parliamentary" conducting of business. I came prepared for this, and in a more understanding spirit, as I had been in America for some time. There is a remarkable drawing together of Philadelphia Orthodox and the Five Years' Meeting. Also several Hicksites had a concern to be present.

It was interesting to hear the comments of the Philadelphians. They were impressed with the looking outwards to help others, which is characteristic of the more evangelical type of Friends who compose the Five Years' Meeting. The Philadelphians said they themselves were too much looking after their own affairs and not enough after the welfare of others. To me it is good to see the Philadelphians in this frame of mind, because I am struck by their philanthropy, even if it is true (which I doubt) that they only look after themselves.

An Indiana Friend at a little country meeting told me they had tried salvation by preaching and singing, etc., but it did not come. Then they had tried salvation by good works, but this did not succeed, and now they were understanding that it is the Spirit which quickeneth. This is real Quaker or Christian experience. This typifies what is going on among Five Years' Meeting Friends. There is a hunger among them.

Religion is a natural thing. As the normal individual grows, the drawings of religion manifest themselves. It is abnormal environment which clouds his perception. I think country people are more religious on the whole than city folk, because they lead a more normal life.

Development is a tender growth which must at first go on gently and in private. Each one of us is a complex being. There are many traits in us. All these traits are portrayed in other people around us. These are meant for our edification. There are also other qualities for which we have no faculty. We cannot appreciate these and it is false to pretend we do. We may wish to be in the fashion, but our desire is wrong. We are all more or less narrow minded. A narrow-minded person can be a true holy character if he does not pretend. Do what you do as perfectly as possible. Posing and insincerity are never right.

This is the problem before our Religious Society and before the world. Never copy without really understanding. Every action should come out spontaneously. Uniformity is false because we are not made alike. There are endless combinations and yet we are one deep down in the springs of Life.

If the drawing together of the various branches of the Society of Friends means a shallow, slovenly, make-believe unity, this would be wrong. I concurred with the sentiment of a Wilburite Friend when he said we must dig deep to understand right and wrong. Each branch of Friends must develop its own peculiar genius. If they feel deficient and hungry for something possessed of another branch, then come together.

There is a hunger for better things among all Friends. This is Divine discontent. But we must not betray ourselves by jettisoning our own talents to get those of other bodies. We can have all the good of others as well as our own! Friends are all nearly past the iconoclastic stage (the stage of asceticism as an antidote to over-elaboration).

We have also got beyond the effects of the Protestant Reformation. The Society of Friends was the last word of that movement. They witnessed to "that Spirit which leads into all truth." A new world and a new order are coming. This same Spirit will be at work.

Are we the children of the Light or shall we give up the ghost? Agnosticism has often a necessary place in individual experience. It is preparatory to a full measure of Christian truth.

Our Society is now in a sort of agnostic stage, and I believe it is about to pass through this to the glorious realization of its mission.

NOTE.—By Agnosticism is meant any questioning or want of clarity on any subject, be it theological or political. Especially is this the case about war. Agnostic implies open-mindedness.

"God gives us always strength enough, and sense enough for everything He wants us to do."

SOME MATERIAL INTERESTS AT WESTTOWN.

CHARLES W. PALMER.

Knowing that Westtown's friends everywhere are interested in all that goes on at the School, an effort has been made in the columns of THE FRIEND to keep its readers informed on current educational and social events at the School. There are, however, other matters which contribute very largely to the successful working of the School. It is the purpose of the present article to present the material side of the management in its more significant phases, including the Orchard Department, the Forestry Department and the Farm as well as the business management of the School proper.

In securing the material which follows, I have depended upon information given me by the managers of their respective departments and upon my own personal observation. I wish here to express my appreciation of the co-operation of the managers and to assume full responsibility for any wrong impressions that may result from what I have written.

The season has been a good one for the Orchard Department. The young peach orchards have produced nearly 5000 baskets of fruit (to be exact 4841 baskets). James F. Walker has succeeded in finding a ready market for the fruit. Some of it, of course, has been used at the School for immediate and for future consumption; some was shipped by trolley, freight or by auto to Philadelphia, Chester and Wilmington; and there was a good demand in West Chester. In order to effect an economy in containers and charges, and at the same time to market the fruit in better condition, an effort was made to avoid as far as possible shipments by trolley freight. The auto truck belonging to the Farm Department was brought into service for hauls to Philadelphia and Chester, and James Walker was fortunate in finding an auto truck that wanted "back-loads" on its frequent trips between West Chester and Wilmington. Not only were the peaches marketed in these ways, but the trucks afforded transportation for much of the other fruit and vegetables raised.

While most of the cultivated land in charge of the Orchard Department has been devoted to field corn, two acres were in sweet corn that found a ready market. Over three hundred baskets of tomatoes and two hundred and fifty baskets of string beans were likewise raised, and sold at fair prices.

One of the most notable achievements of the Orchard Department was in the successful spraying for the apple-maggot. For a number of years the apple crop has been seriously damaged by this pest. The small maggots or worms tunnel through the pulp, making it more or less porous. The tunnels later turn tough and brown and render the apples almost useless. Certain kinds, notably the Smokehouse, are more vigorously attacked than others. Last year only forty-three bushels of Smokehouse out of a large yield were marketable and then only at a low price. This year, acting on the advice of the Cornell Experiment Station, the trees were sprayed with a sweetened poison spray, which killed the parent flies and thus prevented egg laying. So successful was the work that one hundred and forty-one bushels of Smokehouse apples have been sold or stored, and the fruit is of a superior grade.

In all thirteen hundred bushels of apples have been harvested, some sold and some stored for winter use at the School. These, of course, have all come from the Boys' and Girls' Orchards, since the Walnut Hill trees are too young to bear, and this takes no account of the large number that have been used by the boys and girls and employees on the place. While it is not the purpose of the present article to deal much in finances, the prediction is made that the Orchard Department will make a good showing for the fiscal year.

Albert H. Forsyth reports that the Farm and Dairy Department has likewise had a good season. The tuberculin test of the dairy herd continues each time to eliminate some animals, mostly among the young stock. This has strengthened the growing conviction that the Dry Barn, where the young cattle are housed, has been the source of infection. To eliminate this, new open pens are being built around this barn and if need be, the whole interior is to be remodeled. In the same line is the erection of concrete pig pens in the old south barn. The raising of pigs is proving profitable. Sales have netted over $650.00 and about one hundred head are still on the place.

Milk sales have averaged in net receipts about $900.00 a month. Much of the milk produced is used at the School, but we continue to ship certified milk to dealers in Philadelphia.

The Farm operations proper have shown good yields. Beside the fourteen acres of corn yet to husk, six hundred and forty tons of ensilage have been harvested. The wheat yield of seven hundred bushels brought a good price. The one hundred and fifty tons of hay that have been stored, include seventy of alfalfa. The alfalfa field is in its third year, and has at this writing as fine and healthy an appearance as it ever did. If efforts to eliminate the tuberculosis from the Westtown herd of cattle prove successful, there seems no good reason why the whole operation should not show substantial gains each year. It may be of interest to know that losses from this cause will not be so great as for two years past since the State has resumed payment to farmers for cattle condemned. That the cattle are of superior grade is shown by the fact that Westtown Ayrshires nearly always carry away the blue ribbons when they are shown at the Chester County Fair.

For the Forestry Department, Joshua A. Cope reports that most of the energy has been devoted to caring for the blight-killed chestnut trees. About $1,500.00 worth of telegraph poles were sold from the North Woods last winter, and it is now planned to install a saw-mill this winter in the North Woods to work up more of this blight-killed chestnut into ties and lumber. Much of the small dogwood and ironwood has been removed from the Arboretum to give more room for the development of the more valuable young trees. The expense of this work has been largely covered by the sale of about 3000 bean poles.

In all these departments production has been the primary aim as always. With the Business Manager at the School the problem has been a more difficult one. Sources of income change but little from year to year, or if they do it is a gradual change. But when the amount of supplies consumed by the School remains practically the same, while prices soar rapidly, as they have in the past year, a deficit is rendered almost inevitable. Dean Stanton saw this early, and early made what provision he could to reduce the deficit. He could see but one way to do this; to produce more food in the truck patches and to provide for storing a large amount of this for the winter's use.

Increased acreage was provided in a strip of land at the east end of the long field south of the buildings. On these four acres were planted the vegetables which have usually been grown north of the Girls' Orchard. The plot of ground north of the Girls' Orchard thus vacated, was planted in potatoes and sweet corn. The plot north and west of the Boys' Orchard was devoted to vegetables as usual, and the School Garden plot down the Lane was used as a seed bed for celery, tomatoes and cabbages and for growing radishes, lettuce and beets. Still another plot of ground used for sweet corn is the small field to the west of the North Woods, between the road and the race. This ground under cultivation for the School's vegetable supply comprises about eight acres in all. The crops raised were approximately as follows—14,000 ears sweet corn, 900 baskets tomatoes, 125 baskets peas, 200 baskets lima beans, 55 bushels onions, 50 bushels beets, 25 bushels parsnips, 20 bushels carrots, 350 bushels potatoes, 7000 stalks celery, 2000 heads cabbage, 20 bushels grapes, 40 crates strawberries, radishes, summer squash, lettuce, egg plants and spinach in abundance. This fine showing was made possible only by the hearty co-operation of the workmen. The gardener is particularly efficient and deserves much credit for his part of the work.

Of course, the cabbage, celery and the root crops are being cared for in the usual way, for current and future use. The more perishable things have been canned or evaporated. This, it seems to me, is the most notable contribution made toward the solution of the problem of feeding the School. When, in the Spring, we saw hundreds of cartons of half-gallon glass jars being carried into the basement of the School, some of us wondered what was to be done with them. We later found out.

A steam pressure canner of ninety gallons capacity was installed in the laundry, and here a large portion of the following list was canned. Some of the fruits were cooked in the kitchen in open kettles. The list follows:—1,000 gallons tomatoes, 420 gallons peaches and peach jam, 40 gallons apple butter, 55 gallons strawberries, 65 gallons plums, 62 gallons pickles, 100 gallons string beans, 40 gallons grape jam, 33 gallons miscellaneous, 150 glasses jelly.

Evaporating was done in an evaporator, designed by Dean and Joseph Stanton and erected by the School's carpenters in the Engine-room.

A long box was made with a horizontal partition running almost the entire length. Within each of the divisions thus made were three rows of cleats to support the drying racks. At the north end were openings at top and bottom. Below the lower opening was placed a large round steam radiator, which supplied the heat. This heated air passed the length of the lower gallery, through the opening in the partition, and then through the length of the upper gallery. Circulation was made more rapid by the erection, above the upper opening in the evaporator, of a box containing a strong electric fan. The trays were wooden frames covered with galvanized woven wire, and gave a total evaporating surface of 420 square feet. This evaporator was operated by Joseph Stanton. The housekeeper, the matron and all of their assistants prepared the vegetables and fruits for canning and evaporating, and did the bulk of the other work involved in canning. Indeed, the success of Dean Stanton's efforts here, as in the raising of the produce, depended very largely upon the loyal support and the long hours of hard work by all the employees of the School.

The evaporated produce, besides small amounts of string beans, cabbage and eggplant, includes 525 pounds corn, 150 pounds green peas, 250 pounds green lima beans, 100 pounds peaches, or about 1100 pounds in the aggregate.

It would be a mistake to conclude that this will supply the School's provisions for the year. But it is safe to say that it will reach more than half way. This fact is the more significant when one realizes that the added production and the canning and evaporating has involved extra labor expense to total less than $200.00.

The work of all the departments of the School's material side as here presented will, I believe, impress our readers with a sense that it is being done efficiently and with loyalty to the interests of Westtown. It has so impressed me, and I am glad to share it with you.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

ELLA NEWLIN.

[Although we printed an account of Iowa Yearly Meeting last week there is enough that is fresh in this account to justify such repetition as it involves.—E.N.]

TO THE FRIEND:—

Each time THE FRIEND has been received since Iowa Yearly Meeting closed, its pages have been scanned to see if some one had not kindly written an account of it for the interested readers. It was a time long to be remembered by many and hearts were raised in gratitude to the Father of all sure mercies for the unmerited blessings which were bestowed upon us. The little group of Friends located at this place came to the united conclusion before Yearly Meeting last year to ask that it might adjourn to Bear Creek. It was hoped that the meeting might influence for good the community as well as our own membership.

It was necessary to make much preparation for the entertainment of Friends. This has been the central thought and effort of the community. As the time drew near for the annual assembly service was offered from unexpected sources and those whose help was solicited entered into the work with much interest.

The time may come, we cannot now determine, when it will seem expedient to permanently locate the Yearly Meeting in one place, but it is evident that the influence is widened by holding it in different localities. The children and the old people and those outside our membership who would not otherwise attend appreciate having the meeting in their home community.

The weather was favorable for the most part, although a little cold for the season. The roads were good in the immediate neighborhood, but some experienced difficulty who came from a distance in cars.

The meeting convened on the seventeenth of Tenth Month, rather smaller than usual, but increased each day until the end of the week. Meals were served for all in the basement of the meeting-house. No dainties, but an abundance of good, wholesome food, was supplied such as this plentiful land produces. The usual business of the meeting was transacted throughout in harmony and love, the young people taking an active part. We felt a strengthening of the bond of sympathy and love binding together the older and the younger Friends at this period of their trial. At the request of some of the young men a special meeting was held for those who are most likely to have to face the military situation personally before long. We were strengthened in the belief that many of them are more than merely birthright members, and a hope was inspired that when the test comes they will be able to stand for what they believe is right. Some of the boys felt that to take any service in lieu of the military as a satisfactory way to meet the demands of the Government would not be right for them, but if such work was a called-for duty they had better see to it beforehand.

At a session set apart for the purpose, a minute was read from Ohio Yearly Meeting, informing us that the report of the Committee appointed to consider the situation of Hickory Grove Quarterly Meeting in Iowa had been fully united with, and although painful to them to sever the ties, that meeting believed it would be right that they be attached to Iowa. The solemnity which spread over the meeting, and the deep silence, more forcible than words, lasted for a time, then without a jar the Quarterly Meeting was received as it is in a body with its subordinate meetings and appointments. No plan or outline was made for the future, believing that if we all strive to keep under the same spirit that had surely brought this about, strength will be given for each occasion.

The enemy will not fail to lay snares, nor will the Unslumbering Shepherd forget. If monster self is laid low and the Wisdom which is from above that is first pure, then peaceable, gentle and easy to be entreated, is allowed to rule, we shall dwell safely together. The language was revived, "It is the Lord's doings and it is marvellous in our eyes."

A Committee was appointed to attend Hickory Grove Quarterly Meeting, bearing a copy of the minute.

Jesse and Rebecca Meekel, of New York, and Solomon and Sybil Barker of North Carolina, with minutes, also some from Canada and other places were in acceptable attendance. The letters received from other Yearly Meetings were exceptionally edifying and comforting at this time. The feeling at the time of parting was that it had been good for us all to be here.

No cheating nor bargaining will ever get a single thing out of nature's "establishment" at half price. Do we want to be strong? We must work. To be hungry? We must starve. To be happy? We must be kind. To be wise? We must look and think.—RUSKIN.

FIRST IMPRESSIONS OF JAPAN.

ESTHER B. EHOADS.

Early in the morning of the day we arrived in Yokohama, Alice Gifford and I looked out of our state-room and saw far off on the horizon a strip of green land, with Fuji Yama rising majestically into sunlit clouds. In a few hours she was partially covered with clouds and I have not seen her since.

By twelve o'clock we were nearing the pier. Around us were square sailed fishing boats and here and there smaller boats, with curious oars resembling rudders which the men pulled with a strange motion. The pier was crowded with a mixture of Oriental and Occidental costumes; big paper parasols next to dainty silk ones from America, kimonooed women next to men in European costume. Soon we were on the dock amidst a jumble of porters, sailors, new arrivals and their friends. The jabber of the people and the variety of costumes seemed strange.

My first jirnikisha ride was a most interesting experience. It gives one a peculiar feeling to be pulled by a man, but the vehicle rides very smoothly over the streets. The man runs often for blocks together. These men are short, sturdy-looking fellows with bare bow-legs and hats resembling small black umbrellas. The men pull everything here. Some of the older men pulling carts of various kinds have very sad, hard faces, they seem to lack interest in life. The few horses that are seen are very sorry-looking indeed. They are so unkempt. Oxen are used a little, but not often in the city.

When we left the train and began to walk through little alleys and side streets in Tokio, I was impressed with the crowded conditions. Many of the families live in two rooms opening right on to an alley. In many cases the rooms are no bigger than eight by ten feet. These little alleys represent the slums of Tokio, no city sewer system, streets running in every imaginable direction, and yet this is the third largest city in the world!

After the whirl of this seemingly unorganized city, where things are about half size, it was a relief to get to the mission compound, which seems very quiet and peaceful. We pass the meeting-house as we first enter, and next the tennis court and just beyond, on higher ground, are the Bowles's house, the school building, the teachers' house and the girls' dormitory. The buildings are well placed with a fine view of the bay in front and in clear weather a glimpse of Fuji from the back of the compound. As one looks out over the city with so many little houses and trees, it is hard to believe that it is so large and so crowded.

Alice Lewis came out to meet us and I felt at home immediately. The school is a very homelike place, with all the Christian teachers working hard all the time to bring Christ's joy into the lives of the girls. The girls, too, are very lovely, all of them. They are kind and helpful and have done a great deal to make me feel at home. There are twenty-six girls in the dormitory and I am getting to know them, but the eighty-four day pupils are still well mixed in my mind. They come bowing in every morning a little before eight.

Meeting here is both strange and natural. The language is entirely new, but the spirit of worship and the joy in the voices and faces of the people attending is very real. The evening meetings are well attended, considering the number of members. Sometimes some one is asked to speak and I had the privilege of telling what American Friends are doing in regard to the war. The young men were much interested in the Haverford Unit. They have yet many things to decide in regard to military service.

One of the most striking things about the Christians here is their extreme earnestness in longing to bring others to Christ. They are working hard, everyone of them, both to learn and to teach. Their Christian joy and hope is very real. One cannot doubt it when one sees them and comes to know them. It is indeed a great privilege to be able to work with them.

CONCORD QUARTERLY MEETING VISITATION REPORT.

At Concord Quarterly Meeting, held at Media, Eleventh Month 13, 1917, the following interesting report was received and the recommendations in it approved and acted upon.

Your Committee has held ten meetings, mostly on First-day afternoon, once each month. All of the Particular Meetings in the Quarter have been visited by members of the Committee. One visit each has been paid to the meetings of Friends at State College, Pa., and Syracuse, N. Y. Sub-committees have been under appointment also for the study of city, suburban and country conditions; to attempt to gather Friendly literature, to provide speakers, and to suggest topics which might be of service to Subordinate Meetings. A communication has been addressed to all Monthly and Preparative Meetings informing them that this Committee is prepared to assist them in these particulars. A Sub-committee, appointed in First Month, assisted in the holding of six meetings of young Friends in West Chester for the study of Quakerism and one public meeting on First-day afternoon, addressed by Thomas E. Jones in regard to the Friends' situation under the draft. From twenty to twenty-five members attended each regular meeting, also one non-member. There was much interest shown and all wanted the meetings continued another year.

In Fourth Month our sub-committee on city conditions was authorized to secure the services of a Friend to investigate and to report upon conditions in the neighborhood of our meeting-house at Chester. Calls were made which brought forth information in regard to about thirty families. These neighbors seemed appreciative of Friends and glad to attend, at any time, special meetings, both religious and instructive, held at our meeting-house. Suggestions for further work in the neighborhood, especially in regard to a Children's Bible Class, have been made to Chester Preparative Meeting.

Our Committee meetings in Eleventh, Twelfth, First, Second and Third Months, were largely devoted to discussions of the message and mission of the Society of Friends, and these discussions can be summarized best in connection with the meeting of the Committee Third Month 18th at Westtown in conference with the faculty of Westtown School.

About forty persons were present for two hours in the library on First-day afternoon. Three members of the faculty and two members of the Committee gave prepared addresses covering the subjects: "What Should be the Chief Purpose of the Society of Friends?" "How Can the Subordinate Meetings of our Society Better Promote that Purpose?"

These expressions were clear and able and we were favored to close in a solemn feeling of supplication. The grasp of the subjects displayed and the spiritual covering with which we were favored, gave us great encouragement to believe that some of our Heavenly Father's work in our generation will be accomplished. "Vital Communion with God through Jesus Christ was felt to be the foundation experience for the work of the Society of Friends." "There is one, even Christ Jesus, who can speak to thy condition."

Our Meetings for Worship are the most important instrument in the work of our Society. In them our neighbors should always be able to find helpful communion. We need earnestly to realize that our theory of worship and ministry places the responsibility for the life of the meeting upon every member. Frequent conferences by all concerned members of the meeting are likely to be of much help in increasing this sense of responsibility.

Literature also is essential for the use of our local meetings. Christian truth remains unchanged, but it needs restatement in the vocabulary of each generation. A Sub-committee was appointed early to make some effort to collect and prepare for the use of our subordinate meetings the best literature available, with authority, if found necessary, to undertake new compilation. Two conferences on this subject have been held with members of the Book Committee of the Representative Meeting and we hope gradually to be able to furnish some material along this line.

We recommend to subordinate meetings the careful consideration of the greater use of newspaper space, regular pamphlet distribution and more effective signs on our meeting-houses. We have found, in some neighborhoods, persons living within a few blocks of our meeting-houses who were ignorant of their locations. For our own members, an annual directory of the meeting, including officers, committees, membership list and financial statement will be found useful. The issuance of a periodical letter or bulletin has proved helpful in some meetings. Where personal visiting is difficult, the maintenance of correspondence, especially with distant members, is heartily recommended. We believe that the appointment of a small committee in each Monthly or Preparative Meeting to correlate the work of the meeting and to keep members informed of business coming up for attention, will be helpful.

The amount of work we have been able to do thus far has been small, but we have become deeply interested in the subject of our appointment. During the past year the Quarterly Meeting has had several committees whose appointments have seemed to overlap. We believe that this work of the Quarterly Meeting can be done best by one committee, and we recommend that a nominating committee be appointed to consider a plan of this kind and to report three months hence. If satisfactory, we would suggest that the nominating committee fill temporarily the one or two vacancies on our committee due to resignations and that we be continued until they report.

We are convinced that the Society of Friends is needed as a constructive religious force in the field which is naturally covered by this Quarterly Meeting. The world is hungry for spiritual realities and as the heirs of a Society, whose especial purpose is spiritual service, we should be devoted to the work of ministering to this hunger. We hope that during the coming year

Conferences with our local meetings as to their problems may be held;

The visiting of our meetings for worship throughout the Quarter continued;

West Chester young Friends further assisted with their studies of Quakerism;

Some literature collected and compiled;

Speakers and topics on vital subjects provided for Subordinate meetings;

The meetings at State College and Syracuse visited again.

A concern is on our minds also, if possible, to promote among our members a fuller understanding of the requirements of "Free Gospel Ministry."

If approved, we would suggest that this report be printed and circulated through the subordinate meetings.

On behalf of the Committee,

(Signed) JOSEPH RHOADS,
ROBERT H. MARIS,
RACHEL A. CARTER,
MARGARET J. SCOTT.

NEWS ITEMS.

FRIENDS' INSTITUTE is now provided with periodicals of the Menonites and Dunkards. Friends will be interested to see in these publications how valiantly these good people are standing for peace.

THE READERS of THE FRIEND will doubtless be interested to hear that Alice D. Forsyth will be the stenographer at the Friends' Institute, beginning Eleventh Month 19th. After that time the Institute will be glad of any clerical service which she can render its members and friends.

EDWARD C. WOOD.

ARCH STREET MEETING on the 11th was somewhat surprised to have five soldiers in uniform as part of the congregation. It was apparent from their solid demeanor that they entered into the spirit of the occasion. Two messages from the gallery seemed specially suited to the opportunity without a suspicion of being in any way prompted by the unusual circumstances of the presence of soldiers. When told after meeting that their uniforms spoke of sacrifice in a moving way, even to those who did not believe at all in the methods of warfare, they responded most kindly and said it had been good for them to be at the meeting.

SEMI-ANNUAL MEETING, COLLEGE PARK FRIENDS.—The Fifty-seventh Semi-Annual Meeting of College Park Association of Friends was held Tenth Month 10, 1917, at the meeting-house, San José, California.

The Meeting for Worship at 10.30 A. M. was followed by a short business session. Luncheon, which was in reality a veritable love feast, was served at the meeting-house and business resumed at 1.30 P. M. After routine business, the program for the afternoon was followed, namely:

1. Scripture Selections Recited in Concert.
2. An Address by Mary Field Parton, "I Come Not to Bring Peace, but a Sword."
3. Address, "Christianity and Chaos," by Arch Perrin.
4. "Christian Ideals, Quakerism and the Social Unrest," by Edward A. Wright.

The Meeting for Worship was a season of great spiritual uplift, and was vocally participated in by visiting and local Friends. The exercises of the afternoon revealed some of the sad social and economic conditions of the present time, and the need that Christians identify themselves with efforts to correct abuses so frequently associated therewith. Friends and others gathered in the spirit of mutual love. Some had come many miles to attend this meeting, and represented all branches of the Society.

The attendance was fifty per cent. larger than usual, and the little meeting-house was about taxed to its capacity. Opposition to the Christian tenets held by Friends generally tends to an increase of numbers provided Friends are faithful to their principles.

WM. C. ALLEN.

GILBERT AND MINNIE P. BOWLES who have been connected with the Friends' Girls' School in Tok o, Japan, for sixteen and twenty-four years respectively, are in this country on furlough and are visiting in and around Philadelphia for a few weeks. As Gilbert Bowles has been doing valuable work for Peace Societies in Japan and has traveled widely in the Orient in the interest of Peace it is hoped that as many Friends as can do so may avail themselves of the opportunity of hearing him. A few of the engagements made for G. and M. P. Bowles in various centres are as follows:—

Eleventh Month 23, Coatesville Meeting-house, S. P. M.

26, Germantown Tea Meeting, S. P. M.

Twelfth Month 1-3, Westtown School.

7, Moorestown, S. P. M.

13, Lansdowne Branch, S. P. M.

Other dates are yet to be arranged. Any one wishing to make engagements with these friends should address Julia C. Collins, Haverford College, Haverford, Pa.

Much damage was done to the buildings on the Compound of the Friends' Mission during the typhoon which recently swept over Japan. We are glad to report that no lives were lost and none injured. It will cost over two hundred dollars to repair the buildings inside and out, and to renew the lighting and other incidentals.

A. P. R. U. SEWERS TAKE NOTICE.—Please make the Magyar shirts considerably longer than the measurements given on the pattern; make sleeves shorter and narrower, especially for the women and the children. These may be faced at the bottom with the colored material that faces neck and sleeves.

All reports that come from Europe and all sample garments sent call for good, strong material. At this season of the year heavy muslin and at least part wool material should be used.

Little cotton and flannel jackets are needed for the babies, as in pattern No. 1. The gown of that pattern should be made three inches longer than the pattern. Petticoat with bodice is needed to go with each skirt in this outfit.

Make smaller shirts for boys. They often put on suspenders at the age of four years. The dark overall, or long-sleeved apron, is worn by boys as old as fifteen years.

Remember to vary the sizes of the garments made, making some larger and some smaller than each pattern. It is well to tack pieces of material to each garment and to put thread or a handkerchief in each pocket.

Peasant women rarely wear a head-covering, hence large knit caps are not needed.

Many children are finding pleasure and profit in making afghans for cradle, cot or bed, by knitting many-colored remnants of yarn into squares or strips, then crocheting them together with black and making a narrow border of the same color.

Eight boxes are ready for shipment this week; some of them go directly to our new headquarters in Paris. Those containing articles for Russia will continue to go to the distributing room in London.

Fifteenth and Cherry Streets, Philadelphia. MARY H. WHITSON.

THE JAPANESE TYPHOON.

[The following from a private letter of Edith Sharpless to her family has been solicited for our paper.—Eds.]

"The most exciting thing in the week I have left until now. It was a dreadful typhoon that struck Japan one week ago—First-day night and Second-day morning. We have not talked about much else since. In Mito, the wind began to get bad about two o'clock in the morning. Suyuki San and I got up and shut up the house tight and then went back to bed and listened the rest of the night. The wind that struck our house sounded like cannon balls, and the rain was just slapped against the walls, so that it came in at every pore. The house rocked back and forth and I wondered if it would go down, being two stories, and supposedly badly built. But it didn't, which is one to the carpenter's credit, for plenty of houses did. When we got up in the morning we found everything soaked. The stairs were like a river, and a muddy one at that. One of the wooden shutters had been blown out of its grooves and clear to the other side of the lot and our front door was wide open. The fence was entirely down and its pieces blowing around the neighborhood, and my trees mostly broken or uprooted, and the garden the flattest thing I have ever seen. But all this was a small matter compared with what happened to some people—people who had to get out of their houses in the midst of it and run for their lives. Onme San's family left their house in the middle of the night. It did not actually come down, but was so damaged that they could not live in it for a week. It is a curious thing to see houses down in a heap, especially if they have heavy thatched roofs on top. It is curious to me, with all the houses that came down, that not more persons were hurt. There were 115 persons killed in Ibaraki Province. Tok o was worst hit, and 150,000 people are being fed and sheltered by the city government now. The floods that came in the wake of the storm were almost as destructive as the storm itself. We went down to the river that afternoon and found the people all moving out of their houses. The water was in some of the houses already, and people were going around in boats taking out all the furnishings. It was still rising then, and they did not know how far it would come. Fortunately after the storm was spent, the clouds melted away and we had one of those glorious blue days that come only two or three times a year, so all could dry their possessions.

The Binford were down in the tent at the seashore at the time, and of course it went down, so they went to Kameyama San's house and the roof began to leak torrents a few minutes after they got there. But they are still alive, although I do not understand why. It doesn't seem to have stopped the flow of their energy. They have been in Tokio all this week."

The following is taken from a report of the Peace Committee and shows how money is being used.

EXPENSES.

Training Camp at Haverford—
Food and Service.....	$1,989.05
Teachers, Books, etc.....	328.23
Materials for Work—Lumber, Gasoline, Auto Parts, Sundries of all Kinds.....	2,500.91
	$ 4,818.19
Clothes, Equipment, etc., for French Workers.....	6,347.51
Travelling Expenses of French Workers in U. S.....	1,140.01
Travelling Expenses of French Workers in France.....	15,003.59
Food sent to France for Four Months' Supply.....	7,384.23
Sundries, including Typhoid Inoculations and Pay- ments in France not yet Accounted for.....	3,768.70
	$39,059.23

English Friends' Work—Four Monthly Cash Contributions, for Distribution as Designated by Donors to Various Activities.....	$20,000.00
800 Blankets Bought here and sent to France for Distribution by Friends' Mission.....	3,925.00
Towards Cost of Six Women to Russia (travel, equipment and support).....	6,387.50
Towards Cost of our Workers in France (including travel, equipment, etc., of first seventy sent).....	14,240.82
	<hr/>
	$44,553.11
	<hr/>
	$83,612.64
Clothing Work at Home.....	8890.25
Office Expenses—
Secretaries and Stenographers.....	1,586.20
Telephone, Telegraph, Cable.....	331.47
Printing, Posters, etc.....	1,211.22
Traveling.....	397.69
Sundries and Petty Cash not yet Accounted for.....	535.83
	<hr/>
	4,062.46
	<hr/>
	$87,675.10
Eight Letters of Credit, Guaranteed, Amounting to.....	11,000.00
	<hr/>
	$98,675.10

While it is naturally uncertain just what the future expenses will be, it can be roughly stated that we shall have to make the following approximate payments during the balance of our fiscal year to Sixth Month 30th, 1918:

ESTIMATED FUTURE EXPENSES UP TO SIXTH MONTH 30, 1918.

Payments to English Friends—Cash Contributions $5,000 per month; on Support of our Workers in France and the extension of the Work due to them, $7,500 per month, totalling for Eight Months.....	$100,000.00
Russian Workers, Travel, Equipment and Support.....	22,000.00
Additional Blankets and Condensed Milk for Distribution in France by Friends' Mission.....	2,500.00
Food Supplies for Workers in France.....	25,000.00
Additional Clothing and Equipment for Workers.....	5,000.00
Reserve for Return Traveling Expenses of Workers and for Closing up Work.....	25,000.00
Clothing Work at Home.....	10,000.00
Office Expenses.....	10,000.00
Contingencies.....	10,000.00
	<hr/>
	$209,500.00
To which add already appropriated about.....	90,500.00
	<hr/>
TOTAL.....	$300,000.00

The above estimate is based on doing for the Friends' Mission work in France and other emergency service carried on by English Friends in England and elsewhere, only what we have done in the past plus the actual cost of the work of our own American Friends. Unquestionably we should do much more than this. We have had unmistakable intimations from English Friends that the tremendous financial strain and drain of the last three years is beginning to tell on them and that unless we largely increase our support at once, the splendid work, now so well under way, will have to be curtailed. This, of course, is unthinkable, at least for the present; and we must guard against the feeling that we can now sit back with a comfortable thought that we have done all we ought.

ALFRED G. SCATTERGOOD, Chairman,
ANNE GARRETT WALTON, Secretary.

FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE.

HERE is a vivid picture from Florence Barrow, an English Friend, of the daily life of a group of Russian refugees.

ANGLSKAJA MISSION, Buzuluk, Mogoboro.

All the children now have gardens—vegetables in one patch, and near the house they are first sowing flowers. It is quite a sight to see thirty of them at work, all so happy and busy. I was helping the little ones last evening, and they edged all their patches with stones and raked it all over ready for seeds to-morrow.

Gregory Welsh has charge of the garden and the boys who work there, and has everything in such good order. There are good tomato plants, lettuces, etc., coming on in the frames. Yesterday I was overwhelmed with thinnings from the great turnip bed, about six large buckets full. I set the children on to clean them and pick them over, and we and the refugees had them for supper. I am often reminded of our large adult school party at Libford for here, too. I must spend a good deal of time in the pantry giving out stores, etc. Wilfred Little has been doing the buying and it is not easy—a whole bullock or sheep must be bought at once and hung or salted. The refugees' meals consist of black bread at each meal and meat, and at breakfast and supper a sort of thick porridge of millet or buckwheat, and middle day soup of peas or beans and potatoes and a little meat. It is really hard work cutting the large loaves of black (rye) bread, and I soon had a blister, but now each week I get quicker at it. The soup and carsher (this sort of porridge) is served in large buckets, and we ladle it out into the bowls. A certain number of children are appointed each week to serve the various tables, but for the second helping the women and children come up themselves. To-day we had boiled salt fish and potatoes boiled in their skins, and they did enjoy their dinner, but it is rather an untidy meal when all the skins go on the table, and they eat the fish with their fingers! As housekeeper, I am always being fettered to see butter someone has brought for sale, a fresh fish from the lake in the forest or eggs, etc. Store-rooms have to be locked, and I have so many keys I am sure when I come home I shall never want to use a key again! It is a large household to provide for, seventy refugees, about ten patients in the hospital, and at the moment, thirteen of ourselves. Happily eggs are plentiful, and we have good butter and bread. To-day the doctor had a present of most delicious honey in the comb, and sometimes he will have as many as forty eggs given in one day by different patients.

The clothes sent from England are a great boon. We are busy now getting all the children fitted out with summer clothes, altering some print dresses, etc. Material here is so dear and poor, it seems best to alter what we have and make three little frocks out of two large ones, or something of that kind. Some, of course, fit perfectly and are just the right size. I wish the makers could see the joy they give to the wearers.

AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE.

LETTERS EXCHANGED BETWEEN AMERICAN AND ENGLISH COMMITTEES WITH REFERENCE TO THE MERGER OF THE WORK.

The first letter was sent by the American Committee to London and Paris. The second and third letters are replies from the War Victims' Relief Committee and the Executive Committee in France.

MINUTE OF AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE, HELD EIGHTH MONTH 24, 1917.

The Committee authorized the sending of the following letter to the War Victims' Relief Committee of the Society of Friends in London and the Mission de la Société des Amis in Paris:

DEAR FRIENDS:—

We feel deeply indebted to you for your invaluable assistance in making possible our work in France. The cordial co-operation extended by your workers in France to our commission, J. Henry Scattergood and Morris E. Leeds, has been greatly appreciated by them and by us. Your very generous offer to merge the work of English and American Friends in France was accepted by us with great enthusiasm for the opportunities which it seemed to open.

We are deeply conscious of the fact that we are entering, with comparative ease, paths which you have broken open through three years of limitless patience and perseverance in the face of continuous difficulty. Our commissioners report that your work in France is generally regarded as the most excellent which is being carried on there, and that it has influenced the plans of the American Red Cross Commission more than any other. For our workers to profit by your experience, prestige, and knowledge of the field, will be of inestimable advantage both to us and also the American Red Cross of which our workers are the first representatives in this field of work.

We sincerely hope that the merger of work will bring to you the enlarged opportunities which we all anticipate. Our workers are younger than yours, with much less experience, and perhaps without the same depth of consecration to the tasks, since we have not been through the refining fire of three years of our country at war. They have entered the work, however, with a very real consecration to the ideals of Friends, with a boundless enthusiasm, and a sincere desire to co-operate with you in every way that will make for the highest degree of service.

The prospect of the members of the Society of Friends of two countries joining together in a great constructive service for the stricken people of a third country seems to have a significance with wider scope in time and place than the work we will do in France. Just as all branches of Friends in America are being drawn together in a closer bond than has ever existed before, so we are anticipating a more efficient fellowship between English and American Friends. For us, our present work is but the outward expression of a very fundamental conception of the meaning of Christian discipleship in international affairs. It is our profound hope that together we may find through our present work a larger influence in showing the way toward higher ideals of international brotherhood and good-will.

For the Committee,
VINCENT D. NICHOLSON,
Executive Secretary.

WAR VICTIMS' RELIEF COMMITTEE OF THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

THE AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE,
20 South Twelfth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.:

Dear Friends:—We thank you very cordially for the letter sent by your meeting of the twenty-fourth of Eighth Month. We heartily reciprocate the feelings of joy which you so kindly express at the fact of our co-operation, and feel that we stand together at the threshold of work the ultimate importance of which we cannot measure.

We are delighted to be able to put at your disposal the experience of these three years of work—of its difficulties and encouragements. We hope very much you will be spared some of the troubles we have had to contend with and we know you will find joy in the service as we have done. You may be assured that your coming to our aid in this generous way is a very great cheer to us and will infuse fresh life and vigor into our enterprise. We are very thankful that at your coming way has opened for considerable developments which did not seem possible at an earlier stage and which enable us to incorporate at once so large a body of your workers.

We wish particularly to emphasize our sense of gratitude to your delegates, J. H. Scattergood and Morris E. Leeds, whose visit has made possible the close co-operation which has been arranged. They have entered so whole-heartedly into our work and made themselves so thoroughly masters of its detail, that they have been of the greatest service in uniting more closely all Friends in the American Continent with Friends in the British Isles and elsewhere. We were delighted to welcome your delegates here and to confirm with them the proposals made in France by our Field Committee, and we hope that it may be possible for them to return to Europe at some later date, although we fully realize the great advantage of your having with you just now people so closely in touch with the circumstances of our work as they are. We much regret that, owing to your workers sailing direct to France, we shall not have personal knowledge of them which we should so much value, but already some of our members have met the first contingent in France and we hope by such visits to lessen this drawback.

We earnestly hope that our fellowship may be productive of much blessing to the sad lives of those who have suffered so cruelly in this war, and may be followed by close co-operation between the branches of our Society—not only in this work, but in many others, and may be typical of the happier world we all so eagerly long to see.

Yours sincerely,

A. RUTH FRY,
Hon. Secretary.

(For the General Committee.)

MISSION ANGLO-AMERICAINE DE LA SOCIÉTÉ DES AMIS.

Minute of the Executive Committee of the Friends' War Victims' Relief Expedition in France, held Tenth Month 18, 1917:—

"A minute of greeting from the Friends' Service Committee in America has been read; Francis Birrell and the Secretary are asked to prepare a message of warm greeting in reply."

TO THE AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE:—

Dear Friends: Your letter of appreciation has been a great source of encouragement to us in our work, as has been the warm spirit of energy and sympathetic understanding shown by J. Henry Scattergood and Morris E. Leeds.

It is with the greatest pleasure that we have taken the opportunity of merging our work with yours. If with three years of experience behind us we can be of assistance to you, you can be of equal assistance to us with your energy and fresh point of view. We can see how this has already been so, and how it will be still more so in the future.

We hope that this fusion of efforts in such truly Quaker service will be a means of linking Quakers from all the ends of the world still more closely together. American, British, Australian and Canadian Friends are working out here side by side in the service of humanity, a circumstance that must afford an almost unique spectacle of spiritual unity.

Of the larger significance of which you speak, we can add nothing to what you say. But we, too, are sure that the common work of American and British Friends for the assistance of the stricken of a third country will help to obliterate the memory of our past misunderstandings and so point the way to a real brotherhood of nations, far transcending mere temporary alliances for the satisfaction of national ambitions.

For the Committee,
WILFRED SHEWELL, Secretary.
FRANCIS F. L. BIRRELL.

AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE.

NEW DRAFT REGULATIONS.

In connection with the new classification of men for service under the Selective Service Law a questionnaire will shortly be sent out by the Local Boards to all men of draft age who have not been already summoned and accepted for service. The questionnaire contains a series of questions of which Series IX reads as follows:

SERIES IX. RELIGIOUS CONVICTION AGAINST WAR.

Instructions.—Every registrant must answer the first question. If he answers "no," he need not answer the other questions, or sign his name. If he answers "yes," he must answer all the questions and sign his name.

Q. 1. Are you a member of a religious sect or organization whose creed forbids you to participate in war in any form? If so, state the name of the sect and the location of its governing body or head.

A. 1.
If your answer is "no," do not answer any other questions and do not sign your name.

Q. 2. State the date and place of organization of your local church.

A. 2.

Q. 3. State number of adherents of such sect in the United States.

A. 3.

Q. 4. When did said sect adopt opposition to war as a part of its creed?

A. 4.

Q. 5. When, where, and how did you become a member of such sect?

A. 5.

Q. 6. Give the name and location of the particular local congregation of which you are a member.

A. 6.

(Signature of registrant)

The Society of Friends not having any creed, it is proper that the words "or principles," which appear in the Selective Service Law, be added after the word "creed" in the first and fourth questions, and it is recommended that this change be made by all Friends.

The following suggestions as to answering some of these questions are made:

Question 1. (Second Part)—Friends should merely state they are members of the "Society of Friends (Quakers)" and give the name and place of meeting of their Yearly Meetings.

Question 2.—Friends should give the date and organization of their Monthly Meetings.

Question 3.—Friends should answer "approximately 120,000 (all Yearly Meetings)."

Question 4.—"Year 1660." F. ALGERNON EVANS,

Assistant Secretary.

DIED.—Ninth Month 24, 1917, at the home of her son-in-law, Archibald Henderson, near Paulina, O'Brien County, Iowa, RACHEL MELTVEDT, aged eighty-four years and six months; a member of Paulina Monthly Meeting of Friends, Iowa.

Friends Arch St. Centre

304 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Provides comfortable accommodations for guests by the day or week. Meals at moderate prices.

AMELIA D. FEATHERSTONE, Matron.

PHONE—MARKET 1571.

W. J. MacWatters

Let Me
Help You

In Selecting Your

RUGS AND CARPETS

Domestic -- -- Oriental

ALL WEAVES

The Home of Bundrah Wilton

"DURABLE AS IRON"

HARDWICK & GAGEE CO.

1220 Market Street

REPORT OF THE TREASURER OF THE AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE FOR WEEK ENDING ELEVENTH MONTH 19, 1917.

Amount reported last week. $220,135.54
Amount received from 33 meetings 5,077.20
Amount received from 10 individuals 138.95

$225,351.69

CHARLES F. JENKINS,
Treasurer.

RESIDENCE: 254 S. 44th St. BELL PHONE: Baring 2084X

WILLIAM OAKES

Plumbing and Heating Contractor

ALSO LEAD BURNING

260 SOUTH TENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA

BELL PHONE: Filbert 2666.

ASSOC. M. AM. SOC. C. E. BELL PHONE—Lombard 3412

EDWIN M. EVANS

CONTRACTOR & BUILDER

My jobbing department is well equipped,
prompt and efficient

321 S. LAWRENCE ST. PHILA.

WALL PAPERS—All Grades

Custom of Friends Specially Solicited

FRANK C. BUEHL

Successor to S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON
902 SPRING GARDEN ST. PHILADELPHIA
Store open until 10.30 A. M. Any other time by appointment only Opposite Spring Garden Station, Phila., and Reading R.R.
ESTABLISHED 1849. BELL PHONE

Your child needs a

SHETLAND PONY

to ride, drive, and grow up with.

HARTZELL BROTHERS, SEERING, OHIO.

ESTABLISHED 1853.

Hajoca

Pedestal Lavatory

Simple and beautiful in design. Its plain, smooth surfaces are easy to keep clean. Equipped with the Hajoca Waste, which prevents backing up of residue from previous ablutions.

Come see our model bathrooms. Our showrooms are within easy reach of City Hall. Hajoca Book, free.

HAINES, JONES
& CADBURY CO.
1130-1144 Ridge
Ave.

(at 12th and Spring Garden Streets)

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE MATERIAL THAT WE SELL

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY

MANUFACTURERS

PHILADELPHIA

GLASLYN-CHATHAM

PARK PLACE

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

A Family House of Established Reputation.
Open Throughout the Year.

NATHAN L. JONES.

PUBLIC STENOGRAPHER

GEORGE B. COCK, Liberty Building

Established 1896. Experience 39 years; Medical 13

ALFRED C. HAINES

Building Glass and Paints

56 N. Front St., Philadelphia

M. GATCHEL

126 N. 21st St., PHILA.

MILLINERY, PLAIN AND FANCY

"Phone, Spruce 3632

WANTED IN A HOME WITH A SMALL FAMILY in Media, Pa., a suitable woman companion. Address "P"—Care of "THE FRIEND."

THE HOLMES PRESS

Printers

J. L. Engle, Pres.

1336-40 CHERRY ST. PHILA.

THE CHEYNEY SITUATION

Friends of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting have as a legacy of the efforts put forth in the 60's in the interest of training colored teachers a unique plant at Cheyney. The Cheyney Training School for Teachers appeals for help to the descendants of those who originated the idea. The School is doing a great work, but it is cramped in many ways by a lack of funds.

An efficient staff of teachers and a student body numbering 100 present an unusual opportunity for the wise expenditure of energy and money.

The Managers can do little more than administer the Trust and must look to Friends and others, who have the means, to supply what is essential for the proper advancement of the School's interest.

Leslie P. Hill, Principal, is always ready to offer timely suggestions to any who have it on their hearts to assist in the laudable work that is carried on at Cheyney.

Because of the conditions which must be met, if the School is to continue its good work, the Board of Managers feel free to request Friends to include Cheyney among the charities to which they contribute, and ask that checks shall be drawn in favor of and mailed to

WILLIAM BIDDLE, Treasurer,
119 S. Fourth Street, Philadelphia.

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BREAD

made from the entire wheat grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator. Sold by all good grocers in Philadelphia.

Write for particulars to

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.

10th & Susquehanna Aves., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

BALDERSTON'S APPLE-BUTTER

We are now prepared to fill orders for apple-butter at the following rates:

2-Quart Jars—per Case of Six Jars Each $4.30
1-Quart Jars—per Case of Six Jars Each $2.40

by freight or express, i. o. b., Colons.
Smaller orders will be forwarded by Parcel Post at an additional charge to cover cost of packing.

ELWOOD BALDERSTON,
COLORA, Cecil Co., Maryland.

WANTED—A CARETAKER FOR THE INDIAN boys at Friends' School, Tusnessan, N. Y.—Preferably one who can teach musical training. Applications for the position may be made to

Wm. B. HOWARD, Supt., Tusnessan, N. Y.
HENRY HALL, Friends' Hospital, Frankford, Phila.
ANNA WALTON, Moylan Pa.

FOR RENT IN SMALL ADULT FAMILY—TWO well-furnished rooms on second floor to one or two persons employed during the day. House with porch is pleasantly located on 12th and Lehigh Aves.; convenient to trains and trolleys.

Address "B"—Office of "THE FRIEND"

FOR RENT—FURNISHED, MEDIUM SIZED COMFORTABLE home in Moorestown, N. J. Small family desired. Servant now employed can remain.

WRITE P. O. BOX No. 124, MOORESTOWN, N. J.

POCONO MANOR INN

OPEN ALL YEAR

Situated in the beautiful Pocono Mountains in northeastern Pennsylvania is most attractive the year 'round.

Golf, Tennis, Bowling, Driving, Motoring, Swimming and Boating are but few of the recreations found at this popular resort.

J. W. HURLEY, Mgr., Pocono Manor, Pa.
(Pocono Summit Station, D., L. & W. R. R.)

WOOLMAN SCHOOL

A Friends' School for Social and Religious Education Board of Managers from both branches of Friends. Courses in Old and New Testament, Church History, History and Doctrines of Friends, Missions, First-day School Organization, Social Betterment, International Organization, History of Religion, Comparative Religion, and allied subjects. :: :: ::

Instruction by scholarly experts from the the faculties of Haverford and Swarthmore Colleges, and from other educational, social, and religious institutions of Philadelphia and vicinity.

WOOLMAN SCHOOL

SWARTHMORE, PA.

ELBERT RUSSELL, Director.

HARRY S. LEE

313 WALNUT STREET

PAINTER AND GRAINER

ANTIQUe and OFFICE FURNITURE RESTORED
JOBING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO
ESTIMATES

R. C. Ballinger Ernest R. Yarnall John A. Stratton
TELEPHONES
Bell—Spruce 17-81 — Keystone—Race 637

R. C. BALLINGER & CO.
CONTRACTORS and BUILDERS

218 N. Thirteenth St. Philadelphia.

Philadelphia's
Representative Store

ELKINS, MORRIS & CO.

BANKERS

REPRESENTATIVES

PAUL W. BROWN
JAMES P. MAGILL

LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

RAILROAD AND PUBLIC UTILITY BONDS

FOR

CONSERVATIVE INVESTMENT.

FULL PARTICULARS ON REQUEST

JOSEPH G. FOGG
FUNERAL DIRECTOR and EMBALMER
S. W. COR. 16TH AND RACE STREETS
Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals
BELL 'PHONE SPRUCE 1848

SEE WALKER & KEPLER

FOR

Good Electrical Work

531 CHESNUT ST. -1- PHILA.

WILLIAM S. YARNALL

MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

128 SOUTH SIXTEENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA

GIRARD TRUST CO.

BROAD and CHESTNUT STS.

CAPITAL AND SURPLUS } $10,000,000

Acts as Executor, Trustee, Guardian, Administrator, Assignee and Receiver. Safes to Rent in Burglar-proof Vaults. Interest Allowed on Deposits. :: ::

E. B. MORRIS
PRESIDENT

Premier Duplicating Co.

Mimeographing, Multigraphing, Printing, Type-writing, Addressing, Mailing, etc.

630 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia

English Friends' Periodicals:

- Friends' Quarterly Examiner . . . $1.66
- The Friend (London) (weekly) . . . 3.25
- Journal of Friends' Historical Society (quarterly) . . . 1.25
- Friends' Fellowship Paper (6 issues) . . . 1.00
- The Venturer (Monthly) . . . 1.00

Subscriptions for 1918 should be sent now to

GRACE W. BLAIR,
109 W. State St., Media, Pa.

SELL WASTE PAPER

Anyone can operate our Common Sense
Waste Paper Baler

Each bale worth from 30c to 50c.
REDUCE FIRE RISK.
Guaranteed for one year.

$16

Sylvester S. Garrett & Co.

Wrapping, Toilet,
Building, Book
Paper

Paper Bags and Twine
259 South Third Street

THE following timely books, mostly of those recommended by the Social Order Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, are for sale at Friends' Book Store, No. 304 Arch Street, Philadelphia.

- "The Church and the Hour,"
Vida D. Scudder, . . . $1.00
- "The Social Problem,"
C. A. Ellwood, . . . 1.25
- "The Abolition of Poverty,"
J. H. Hollander, . . . 75
- "Christianizing the Social Order,"
Walter Rauschenbusch, . . . 1.50
- "The Day of Our Visitation,"
William Littleboy, . . . 50
- "A Word of Remembrance and Caution to the Rich,"
John Woolman, . . . 05

W. B. WEAVER
UNDERTAKER and EMBALMER

550-552 N. 5TH ST., PHILA., PA.

Special Attention Given to Funerals
In and Out of the City. Also Chapel
Accommodations for Funerals.

BELL 'PHONE ESTABLISHED 1880

HARVEY T. WEBER

TAILOR

207-208 HALE BLDG., 1326 CHESTNUT ST.

The custom of Friends specially solicited.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 91.

FIFTH-DAY, ELEVENTH MONTH 29, 1917.

No. 22.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price $2.00 a year in Advance.

Publisher, DAVIS H. FORSYTHE.

Editors { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
 DAVIS H. FORSYTHE,
 MARY WARD.

Make remittances payable to

THE FRIEND,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

Selected by William C. Allen.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee, that it may be displayed, because of the truth."—Psalm IX. 4.

"THE POWER OF SPLENDID MOMENTS"

The words which I have put at the head of this little paper are not my own, I came across them in my course of reading, and somehow they have been haunting me with their mystery and suggestiveness. We are easily regarded by onlookers as being much on a common plane. But to ourselves, we know better, we are conscious of having had rare moments—whatever has been our average level—moments when we, as it were, saw the face of God—moments of time, yet charged with eternal meaning.

I believe we all have had such moments, and they decide our destiny; moments when the soul, imprisoned in the humiliating feeling of an hereditary bias, through some chink or other, catches the benignant smile of its eternal Lover and leaps into liberty and joy.

Is this what the poet Browning intended to teach as he wrote?:

"I crossed a moor with a name of its own,
And a certain use in the world no doubt;
Yet a hand's breadth of it shines alone
'Mid the blank miles 'round about:

"For there I picked up on the heather,
And there I put inside my breast
A moulted feather, an eagle feather!
Well, I forget the rest."

A man plods his way across a bleak moor, mile upon mile of tramp over the wind-swept heather, when suddenly something drops at his feet out of the blue above him, a moulted eagle feather! and he puts it inside his breast. He has had a glimpse of a vaster, fairer and more real world than the world of sinning and sorrowing, of struggle and pain; and something within him is stirred Godwards; for the soul knows instinctively with whom it has to do in such moments of visitation, and needs no introduction to its Origin other than the Eternal Christ Himself, the Word, the true Light which lighteth every man coming into the world. And he is glad to forget all the rest.

We know that the word "conversion" has become a much abused term in certain camps, and much has gathered around it that we feel is out of the harmony and dignity of the Truth. And yet there is such a thing—one grand moment when somehow we feel a Divine hand reaching down to our misery and despair and loneliness, and we can and dare grasp that hand, and find ourselves lifted out of the miry clay of our heredity; and we know then, as never before, that there is indeed a living God, and that He is the true Father of our spirits. And then will creation put on a new smell, according to George Fox, and the very trees clap their hands, according to Isaiah. When the will becomes God's dominion and the affections His sanctuary, the sea will make way and Jordan be driven back, mountains skip like lambs and little hills like rams, according to the psalmist.

And though the universe is governed by law from top to bottom, as modern science never ceases to remind us, not only the material world, but the moral and spiritual also; and though God's world is ever law-abiding; and though no one can escape the law of consequences, that as we sow we reap, here or hereafter; yet it still remains that there is a living God, and that His blessed Spirit and sweet power and love are ever pressing upon us, and that out of His resources which our deepest need can never exhaust, He is constantly interrupting and turning the fatal drift, as the tides of the ocean will overcome the wind and compel the billows to flow their way.

But whatever be the power of these splendid moments when the light which burns its way into the conscience would create an internal revulsion against the evil which has fettered the soul by its hypnotic spell and reveal the way of deliverance, yet our personal attitude in these great moments is of vital consequence. Life may be either made or marred then. We are never quite the same again.

These rare moments will come when not expected—they come even to a spirit in prison, like King Saul of old, to whom David ministered refreshment on his harp, beguiling him of the gloom that had settled on his mind. So does the tender, wooing, healing love of God seek to win its way into the hearts of diseased, tempted and sin-haunted men. This has been revealed once for all on the stage of history in the Incarnation. The life of Christ, His death and resurrection, are the revelation of the life of God. For God is always combatting the evil that causes our unhappiness, always sharing our sorrows and entering into partnership with our afflictions, and in His love all—sin, suffering, death—are swallowed up in victory. The thirty years of sacrificial hiddenness in Nazareth, the three years of sacrificial service in Galilee, the three hours of sacrificial agony in the darkness of Calvary, were no interlude in the life Divine, but the revelation of His eternal unselfishness and love.

1917. G. C. COOPER

In the same way the vision that comes to the soul unawares in those favored moments is but like the flash-light suddenly revealing what has been there all along, even

"The vision splendid
By which we are attended."

And blessed beyond all words are those who, asserting their spiritual birthright in spite of the enticing mess of pottage, are not disobedient to the heavenly call and claims. They shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God.

MAX J. REICH.

FRIENDS UNDER DETENTION.

MODERN AND ANCIENT CHEER.

And lastly, of all the sufferings of the present time, this suffering appears to me to be the most full of purpose and of power. Christian thinkers of all ages have linked the hope of the salvation of humanity with the Cross of Christ and the power of redemptive love and suffering. In the experience of these men we get another illustration of their meaning. In the days to come this suffering will be for the healing of the nations. In the great work of prison reform, and the humanizing of our criminal code, in the struggle against militarism, in the rebuilding of international relationships, these men will be equipped in a way that no others will be equipped, and their work will have a special and unique power of its own. And, meantime, in these long days of waiting, let us thank God that all the martyrs and heroes do not belong to ancient history or legends of romance. They are here amongst us to give faith in the present and hope for the future. To me, spiritual ideals have been much more real since I have seen people who actually and manifestly value them above all the other possibilities that this life offers, especially to the young.

EDITH J. WILSON.

MANCHESTER, 1917.

There is an old minute of 1675 preserved among Quaker official documents which says of the prisoners of that time:—"Friends who suffer are advised not to let out their minds into too much expectation of outward relief. . . . but that they patiently and principally depend upon the Lord and His power to plead their cause." And George Fox, toward the end of his life, testified, "there was never any persecution that came but we saw it was for good, and we looked upon it to be good as from God, and there was never any prison or suffering, that I was in, but still it was for the bringing of multitudes more out of prison."—The Friend (London).

NORTH CAROLINA YEARLY MEETING.

The Yearly Meeting of Friends assembled at Cedar Grove in the town of Woodland, North Carolina, Eleventh Month 3rd, 1917.

Meeting of Ministers, Elders and Overseers convened on the second at two-thirty. About fifty were present. Quite a number of these were dear Friends from other Yearly Meetings. We always extend an invitation to visiting Friends to attend these meetings whether they are members at their home meeting or not, for they feel it to be a great privilege to attend a Select Meeting. These meetings are often our most favored seasons. This proved to be the case this time. The silence which spread over the meeting was very precious and there seemed to be but little place for words. Anderson M. Barker was appointed Clerk in place of our dear friend, Julianna Peck Harvey, who had been removed by death since our last meeting. The loss of our dear friend was very keenly felt at this time. She had served the various meetings as Clerk, from the Preparative to the Yearly Meeting. After attending such business as claimed the attention of the meeting, it solemnly adjourned to meet Third-day of the next week at two-thirty p. m.

The Yearly Meeting at large convened on Seventh-day at eleven o'clock for Divine Worship in joint session. After a time of silent waiting on the Lord for His felt presence, several brief testimonies were very feelingly handed forth by some of the Lord's anointed messengers. The meeting then entered into the business with closed shutters. After the clerk read the opening minute the names of the representatives were called. All but two responded to their names.

The Clerk informed the meeting there was an Epistle to the table from a body of Friends not in correspondence with us, also a private letter from a dear Friend of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting and a document from the English Friends. A Committee was appointed to examine these papers and report to a future sitting what their judgement was in regard to reading them. We have a good number of Friends with us from other Yearly Meetings, three of whom are recorded ministers, namely: Nathan Pinson, of California, who is now a member of Iowa Yearly Meeting, Samuel Hussey, of Fallsington General meeting and Francis Guindon, of New England Yearly Meeting. The latter was accompanied by his wife, Susanna, Jesse Tucker was also present from the same Yearly Meeting. Others present from a distance were: William Steer and wife and Lindley Steer and wife from Ohio Yearly Meeting, John and Mary Sharpless, Margaret and Emily Maule, Elizabeth L. and Helen L. Evans, Emily L. Jones, Abigail L. Evans, Rachel G. Hall, Thomas W. Fisher, T. C. Hogue, Jehu Outland and daughter, from Philadelphia Yearly Meeting. Also William Raiford, wife and others, members of Baltimore Yearly Meeting.

These dear Friends were warmly received by Friends here and were encouraged to perform any service which was required by the Master at their hands. Epistles were read at this time from New England, Western, Iowa and Kansas Yearly Meetings. A joint committee was appointed to prepare Epistles for the various Yearly Meetings from which we received Epistles and were directed to produce them at a future sitting. The Representatives were requested to confer together and bring forward to next meeting the name of a suitable person for Clerk and one for Assistant, two members for messengers to Women's Meeting, two for caretakers, and a suitable Friend for Treasurer. The meeting then adjourned to meet Second-day morning at ten o'clock.

There were two favored meetings held First-day, one at ten o'clock in the morning and the other at two-thirty in the afternoon. The house was filled at both meetings, and the Gospel flowed freely from a number of the Lord's anointed servants. Truth seemed to reign over all. There were persons present who came twenty miles to be at a real Friends' meeting, having never attended one before. They expressed themselves as being favorably impressed with the meeting.

Second-day at ten o'clock, A. M.

The meeting convened near the time adjourned to. Harvey Newlin, on behalf of the Representatives, reported that they were united in proposing the name of Walter J. Brown for Clerk and Solomon E. Barker for Assistant. J. Gurney Parker and Charles T. Outland messengers to Women's Meeting, Joseph P. Brown and William E. Brown Caretakers, and Alfred J. Outland for Treasurer. The Representatives in the Women's Meeting proposed the name of Margaret E. Parker for Clerk and Anna E. Copeland for Assistant. All these were united with.

The Committee appointed Seventh-day to examine the various letters addressed to this meeting reported they were united in having them read. One of these documents was from the Hicksite Yearly Meeting in Canada. After it was read, the Clerk was directed to inform them of this fact. The letter from our friend Walter E. Moore was encouraging and strengthening to us. The meeting was united in having this letter go down in full in our minutes. His visit to us a year ago is still fresh in our memory. The document from the Friends in England relative to the extreme suffering in Europe, was referred to the Yearly Meeting's Peace Committee for further consideration.

A concern arose in this meeting to send a short letter to the President in regard to the military draft to which a number of our young Friends are subject. It was believed that a brief statement from our Yearly Meeting, showing how we stand in regard to the matter, could do no harm. The concern was united with and a Committee was appointed to produce a short letter at a future sitting. A short document was later produced which was satisfactory to the meeting, and the Clerk was directed to sign it and forward it to our Congressman from this district, who should be asked to hand it to the President.

It might be interesting to some of our Friends to know that one of our young Friends who was drafted and taken to Camp Jackson, S. C., refused to put on a uniform or do anything which tended toward military service. He was given a furlough for thirty days and arrived home in time to attend most of the Yearly Meeting.

Epistles from Ohio and Canada were read at this time. The one from Fritchley General Meeting, England, failed to reach us.

The Queries and answers were now read. Much good advice was given by ministers and others. Especially were we encouraged to read the Scriptures more in our families. We were also entreated and encouraged to be more faithful in attendance of our mid-week meetings. The advices were also read. A number of Friends from a distance said that they had never listened to better advices than those of our Yearly Meeting. The meeting then adjourned until 10 o'clock Third-day, A. M.

Third-day morning meeting opened in separate sessions. Very interesting reports were read from the Committees on Education, on Books and Tracts and from the Yearly Meeting's Visiting Committee. They gave most encouraging reports of service done during the year. A Nominating Committee was appointed to bring forward names to constitute a Visiting Committee for the ensuing year and were directed to report to a future sitting. The Committee on Books and Tracts reported that they had received about 11,000 tracts and 150 Friends' Calendars. A number of Friends' books have also been received and distributed.

A memorial of our deceased Friend, Cyrus W. Harvey, was read at this time in joint session. The reading of this excellent and well-prepared memorial brought a deep and solemn feeling over the meeting. Many hearts were touched and tendered. It was united with by the meeting and was referred back to the Representative Body for printing and distribution.

Then adjourned to meet Fifth-day, at 10 o'clock A. M. The meeting of ministers, elders and overseers met Third-day afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. This meeting was larger than the one held the previous Sixth-day. The queries and answers were read, also the advices. Some excellent counsel was given forth by the Lord's servants. This was one of the most favored meetings held during the whole Yearly Meeting. An esteemed minister who had come 3000 miles to attend our annual meeting, said that it was worth the whole trip to be present at this one meeting. Surely the Lord's presence was felt to pervade the meeting.

There was a large public meeting held on Fourth-day. This proved to be a favored occasion. "As the mountains are round about Jerusalem so the Lord is round about His people." On Fourth-day evening the young Friends held their regular meeting at Olney High School building. A valuable paper was read by Mattie C. Purvis entitled: "How Friends Differ from Other Religious Denominations." Also a paper by Mary J. Peele, "The Early History of Friends in North Carolina." Besides these there were two good readings by Iva Winslow and Ruth E. Brown. After the regular program was rendered a number of the visiting Friends had some very encouraging and interesting service for the meeting. They expressed themselves as being very glad that we had such a meeting and hoped that it might be kept up.

Fifth-day morning, meeting convened in separate sessions. The time, for the most part, was taken up with reading the epistles to other Yearly Meetings. Committees on books and tracts reported names of Friends for these duties. Also the Nominating Committee which was appointed to bring forward names for the Yearly Meeting's Visiting Committee brought forward names which were very satisfactory to the meeting. As has heretofore been our practice, we closed our meeting in joint session. As on other occasions, this was a time when the Lord's spirit was manifestly felt to be very near. It seemed to flow from vessel to vessel and many hearts were tendered, some even to tears. After both Clerks had read the concluding minutes, no one present seemed to move and a number of living testimonies came from anointed servants, some of these being in the body of the meeting. A number of the Friends had to leave in time to take the boat at Norfolk, Va., Fifth-day evening, and so four young men very willingly took them to Ahsokie, twenty miles away, by automobiles, where they would be able to make the desired connections. We were reminded of what our dear friend, Walter L. Moore, so feelingly wrote in this connection in THE FRIEND a year ago.

The attendance at the Yearly Meeting was larger than usual, notwithstanding the fact that farmers were extremely busy getting in their crops. Most of our members left their work and were present at nearly every session, even though the weather was ideal and their time would have been worth a great deal on their farms. I doubt if there was one who attended our meeting this year who could not say that "it has been good for me to be here." A living concern is felt by many that Friends may be loyal to the principles and testimonies which our predecessors so faithfully upheld before the world.

GEORGE, N. C.

BENJAMIN P. BROWN.

FIRST ANNUAL REPORT OF THE TRUSTEES OF THE TEACHERS' RETIREMENT FUND OF PHILADELPHIA YEARLY MEETING OF FRIENDS.

TO THE COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION:—

In accordance with the understanding at the time of their appointment, the Trustees of the Teachers' Retirement Fund of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends submit their first Annual Report, as follows:

At a Special Meeting of the Committee on Education, held Ninth Month 29, 1916, Thomas K. Brown, Charles Evans, Jane S. Jones, M. Albert Linton and Alfred G. Scattergood were appointed Trustees of the Teachers' Retirement Fund, to serve for one year. They organized by appointing Charles Evans Clerk and M. Albert Linton Treasurer. It was determined that the fiscal year should extend from Ninth Month 1st, of one year, to Eighth Month 31st, of the next year.

On Eighth Month 31, 1917, there had been paid or pledged to the Fund the sum of $101,121.50. Of this amount, $93,991.50 had been paid in cash, of which $5,650 is subject to 4 per cent. interest payments for life. On Eighth Month 31, 1917, our investments consisted of $80,000 par value of eleven different railroad bonds, costing $87,068.75, yielding at book value the average interest rate of 4.800 per cent. Appended is a duly audited statement of receipts and payments made up to Eighth Month 31, 1917.

A plan for providing retirement allowances for teachers in schools under the care of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, or of any of its Subordinate Meetings, based on the tentative drafts of which report has from time to time been made, was duly formulated, and has now been published. It has been submitted to the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, from which we have received a virtual endorsement of its fundamental features. It should be stated that the plan has been worked out upon an actuarial basis and there should, therefore, at any future time, be no question as to its solvency. The plan, in its various aspects, has been prepared with the advice and help of legal counsel.

While our fiscal year closed on Eighth Month 31st, it may not be inappropriate to report at this time our progress since then. On Ninth Month 28th, the Committee on Education appointed as successors to the Trustees appointed in 1916 for one year, the following:

M. Albert Linton, to serve for a term of five years; Alfred G. Scattergood, four years; Jane S. Jones, three years; Thomas K. Brown, two years; Walter W. Haviland, one year; the latter in place of Charles Evans, who had left to take up the work of the American Friends' Reconstruction Unit in France. Alfred G. Scattergood has been appointed Clerk and M. Albert Linton Treasurer, to serve for the ensuing year, or until their successors are appointed.

It will be remembered that the calculations of the Trustees had shown that a fund of $125,000 was necessary in order to permit participation of teachers to the extent proposed. Since only about $100,000 has been raised and not quite all of that paid in, it has been necessary to reduce the amounts of permissible participation by the teachers under age fifty, as well as the retiring allowances to be paid to teachers fifty years old or over.

To each of the teachers constituting the latter class, it had been the expectation of the Trustees to pay a maximum of $300 a year in quarterly installments, as fully set forth in the plan. However, as the Fund attained to only 80 per cent. of the amount contemplated, it was decided to limit the amounts to be paid to this class of teachers to 80 per cent. of the contemplated maximum. In this group there are 15 women and 8 men, of whom 7 women and 6 men have retired from teaching. To those who have retired and who have reached the age of 60 years, we have already begun the payment of retiring allowances ranging from $180 to $240 a year, dependent upon the length of their service. To each of the others, as he or she retires and reaches 60 years of age, we expect to pay the appropriate retiring allowance. In order to provide for these payments $30,000 of the principal of the Fund has been set aside, this sum being about the amount required according to actuarial calculations and will probably be completely used, both principal and interest, in providing the retiring allowances.

To the teachers who are now teaching and who are less than 50 years of age, it was decided to permit participation at this time to the extent of 75 per cent. of the maximum amount contemplated in the printed plan, that is to say, instead of a maximum retiring allowance of $600 upon retirement at age 60, those teachers who participate to the maximum extent allowed will receive an allowance of $450. The payment of these allowances, it will be remembered, is based upon the building up, either by endowment insurance policies or by savings fund deposits of a certain principal sum, the maximum amount having been set at $8000. This has now been reduced, as stated above, by 25 per cent., to $6000. In deciding that 75 per cent. of the maximum was the proper basis upon which to commence operations, the Trustees realize that they are assuming a risk in that the income may be slightly insufficient for the demands upon it, should all the teachers in our schools become participants.

To this date ten teachers have participated or signified their intention of participating in the Insurance Plan, to the extent of $54,000, requiring an annual payment on their part of approximately $1,300, and on the part of the schools in which they teach, the payment of $050, and the same on the part of the Trustees of the Retirement Fund.

To this date twenty-seven teachers have participated or signified their intention of participating in the Savings Fund Plan, to the extent of $147,000, requiring an annual payment on their part of approximately $2000 and on the part of the schools in which they teach the payment of $1000, and the same on the part of the Trustees of the Retirement Fund. As about three-fourths of the teachers applied for participation to the full extent indicated in the printed pamphlet, the above amounts would have been larger but for the limitation to 75 per cent. of the contemplated maximum.

It should be stated that a number of the younger teachers in our schools, particularly in what might be termed the "outlying schools," have not participated, due, no doubt somewhat to a lack of understanding of the provisions of the plan, and somewhat to an uncertainty as to how long they expect to teach. We would call the attention of such teachers to the fact that should they withdraw from teaching in Friends' schools, the plan provides that they shall receive, at least, the amount of their own deposits and the interest earned thereby. Every year by which participation in the plan is postponed will increase the cost of such participation on account of increasing age. Wherever a teacher can spare the money it would seem highly advantageous to begin participation at the earliest opportunity.

The Trustees take this opportunity of expressing appreciation to all who by their contributions have made it possible to put this plan in operation, at the same time they much regret the necessity of having to curtail somewhat the very moderate financial benefits conferred upon the teachers. It is the hope of the Trustees that Friends generally will bear in mind that we have not yet accomplished what we set out to accomplish, and that additional funds will be welcome at any time. The Retirement Fund should continually grow, not only because at present it can furnish far too small a retiring allowance to the teachers, but because the number of our teachers will grow and educational standards will rise, thus making greater, rather than less, demands of this sort upon the community.

Copies of the plan and information relating thereto may be obtained from M. Albert Linton, Treasurer, 409 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

On behalf and by direction of the Trustees,

A. G. SCATTERGOOD,
Clerk.

PHILADELPHIA, Eleventh Month 13, 1917.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT.

RECEIPTS.

Contributions from 197 persons, including $5,650, subject to interest payments for life	$93,091.50
Interest on invested funds and deposits, plus $78.41, net increase in book value Eighth Month 31, 1917, and less $913.47, accrued interest paid on securities purchased during year	1,811.19
	$94,902.69

PAYMENTS.

Payments on contributions subject to interest	$ 100.00
Provident Life and Trust Co., for collection of income	33.38
Stationery, printing and postage	58.84
Investments at book value, per schedule	87,147.16
Cash on hand:
Principal	$5,944.34
Income	1,618.97
	7,563.31
	$94,902.69

MEMORANDUM.

Interest accrued but not due Eighth Month 31, 1917:
Investments	$949.32
Deposits	18.50
	$ 967.82
Less interest on contributions, accrued but not due Eighth Month 31, 1917	36.00
Net interest Accrued Eighth Month 31, 1917	$ 931.82

"In such a world so thorny, and where none
Finds happiness unlighted, or if found
Without some thistly sorrow at its side,
It seems the part of wisdom, and no sin
Against the law of love, to measure lots
With less distinguished than ourselves, that thus
We may with patience, bear our moderate ills
And sympathize with others, suffering more."

—COWPER

BEAUTY.

I sought for beauty at the dusk,
And at beginning of the day,
In valleys and on lonely heights,
Yet could not find the way.

I followed over distant seas
The lure that drew my heart,
Seeking to find the sacred flame,
In ancient shrines of art.

The glory that young Phœbus traed,
The dreams Catullus hymned,
Live on, if I could only know,
In wonderment undimmed.

My spirit quickened with the thought,
And lo, the shining goal!
For who is thrilled by loveliness
Beats beauty in his soul.

—CECILIA ELLERBY, in The Transcript.

LETTER FROM HERBERT NICHOLSON.

30 KOUN CHO, Mita, Shiba, Tokio, Japan, Tenth Month 5, 1917.

DEAR FRIENDS:—

The other evening I sat in my old room overlooking the bay and enjoyed the beautiful full moon. It was a perfect night with just a few clouds to make it interesting when the old moon went in back of one and soon emerged smiling as ever. The bay was smooth as glass giving a perfect reflection and all was peace. The lights were out so I had nothing to do but enjoy the scene and go early to bed. Like every one else in Tokio I was ready for sleep, for it was not quite so peaceful about one o'clock that morning. In fact, about that time I was in the same room trying to tighten up the windows and keep the water out. A terrible storm was raging, hitting our buildings full blast, clear from the open bay. I went the rounds shutting loose shutters and windows. When on the first floor next the servants' quarters I heard a noise in there and suddenly remembered the pistol the cook had. Fearing he might take me for a thief I ran upstairs to bed so fast that I lost my slipper! Like the other millions of people in Tokio and vicinity there was no sleep for a couple of hours.

The tiles began to dance off the roof, rain-spouts and tin chimneys went clattering down, glass was smashing, trees snapping, fences falling and the whole house shaking so that there was no sleep for the weary. Finally, there was a lull and it seemed that the worst had passed; but no,—crash, bang, rattle—it was back again from exactly the opposite direction, hitting my windows head on, so that in spite of all being tightly shut a drizzle came over me. My bed fairly rocked and I almost felt sea-sick. I went the rounds again and looked out into the night. Most of the city lights seemed to be out and an occasional flash showed where a wire had broken and was sparking at the loose ends. Way off on the horizon was a large fire. Finally, there was another lull and I went sound asleep.

I was wakened at 6 A. M. by hearing Alice Lewis and Hirakawa San talking under my window. I looked out, and it was a perfectly clear day—but O, what havoc. Practically all the fences were down and all the roofs were somewhat damaged. The telephone was out of commission and the street cars were not yet running, so I was dispatched on my bike to hunt up the carpenter for first aid. I never saw such ruin as on that ride across the city and I soon concluded that we came off very easy. The frame-work of a three-story building opposite us had fallen clear across the street, taking telephone poles and wires with it. Most of the fences were down so that you got a good view for once into peoples' gardens. Trees all along the roads were over on the street and I had to get off and walk in a number of places because of the rubbish blocking the way. But the poor people over in Tsukiji, where I was going for the carpenter, were hardest hit. Their roofs were gone, houses entirely drenched inside with rain and flood, and fire burnt out a hundred families in one place. One policeman of whom I asked the way was soaked up to his chest. He said the water was that deep in the road by his box. The houses were wet well above the first floor mats and the streets were full of boats and debris of all kinds left by the water. I felt criminal to be taking men from this region which was in such bad condition, but the head man said he would send some one right over. On my way back I saw the first street cars, packed with people and with workmen hanging on the steps to clear the track when they came to a fallen tree or roof of a house.

At lunch we had a chance to talk over experiences, and I found the girls in the dormitory had a very bad night and were afraid the building would fall. The tiles had come off the teachers' residence so badly that they were busy catching and mopping up water. Little Michan was full of it and asked me whether we had storms like that in America. She thought it had probably gone over there to take our regards!

Our paper was only one sheet the following day and it did not have much news except for Tokio, as communication with the outside world was cut off. Telegraph wires were down, railroad bridges and tunnels washed out, and speculators grabbed stores of food so that prices went soaring. Our carpenter ran away the second day, as he could get four times his regular wage at another place. Finally, the tin man got here and with double pay managed to patch up places that might leak in the roofs, as it was impossible to get the tile man. We were without lights for three nights and the telephone left its voice be heard for the first time this morning. So things are straightening out gradually and the paper this morning was full size for the first time and had much news of damage outside Tokio. The Binfords also came down to Tokō and told us all about their exciting time on the sea coast. It seems that Ibaraki Ken, where they were, was one of the hardest hit places. They had just finished tent meetings, with the last one the night of the storm, and were sleeping in the tent. They soon cleared out of there into a neighboring house and got most of the things out before it fell, breaking both poles, but otherwise doing no damage. Then the house they were in lost half of its roof and they got soaked through. The thatch houses in the country were blown to pieces, and they saw a number of houses floating down a flooded river. Their own house and that of Edith Sharpless in Mito were not seriously damaged.

The loss will mount to millions of yen, perhaps a thousand lives, and I don't know how many millions of hours' sleep. The loss of life in Tokō alone is now reported as 470, with 40 still missing. They say it is the worst storm in fifty years, and I am sure I should not like to see one half as bad again.

It's raining to-day for the first time after the storm, and we are fortunate in having our roofs fixed so they will not leak badly. We are certainly sorry for all the people without homes or who have not been able to re-roof their houses. As usual, we seem to be classed above most people, and have gotten out of this particular difficulty very easily, compared with others. That first moonlight night I asked Ishizuka San and his family to come up on the hill to see the reflection of the moon in the bay. As we stood looking out over the peaceful scene he said, "My, how fortunate we are! Let's have a little prayer and thank God for all His blessings to us." So we stood in the light of the moon and praised God for His goodness and prayed for those who had severely suffered from the raging storm.

O, the depth and beauty of the peace that comes after the storm! May we all keep our faces turned towards Him so that we may live in peace through whatever storms may rage. And then the storms of this life will be soon ended and all will be peace, perfect peace, with us. When we compare this storm, severe though it was, with the frightful catastrophe that is going on in Europe, it was a mere nothing. Yet, the peace that came after was a good sample of the peace that will come after the war. May it soon come. But, in the mean time, we can live patiently day by day, with His help, lives that have banished the "root and cause of war."

"Let me to my brothers
Turn a face serene,
Sharing thus with others
Peace, thy gift unseen."

With all good wishes to those who may read this, as ever,

HERBERT.

AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE.

LETTERS FROM RUSSIA.

The following letters from Emilie Bradbury to her mother are the first letters received from our workers after they reached the field. The fact that these letters are written a month after the party reached Buzuluk indicates that many letters have been lost.

DEAR MOTHER:—

STILMOFTEA, Ninth Month 23.

Yesterday we put two women with typhoid in a cart and brought them down here to the hospital—so I'm writing from Subimovka centre. This afternoon I go back on our own cart which goes up from here every First-day. Bogdanovka, the centre where Esther White is, is really the end of the line, but that is such a small place that our cart doesn't go there every week but starts on First-days from here for Buzuluk.

I wish you could have seen us starting out. I was working in the morning, paying off the women and giving out work to the German women who make the coats, trousers, shirts, etc. We, or rather Esther White, had to go all over the village hunting for a cart—as their horses are in use now in the fields they're hard to find—and we asked the cartier to please come at one o'clock. Although we paid them six roubles, it's a great favor for them to take us, and we have to ask them most politely. He came then, with a great cart, something like a hay wagon, with wicker basketwork around the sides, filled with straw. We drove around and picked up the women—one of them was pretty bad, but both able to walk to the cart fortunately—and we laid them out, in the middle, and we sat around the edges. Poor things, you can imagine how they felt, for they say with typhoid one aches in every bone, and the wagons around here have no springs, and the roads are just like our country lanes. When we got to the hospital one of the doctors carried them in on his back, and I guess to-day the poor things are more comfortable. At home we would think that driving two typhoids in an open cart for twenty-five miles would be the end of them, but here nothing seems to kill them. It's nice, too, to get down here to see the other Americans—especially as Esther came up from Bogdanovka. She, the Englishwoman whose centre I have, and a lady named Lindsay, who has the Bogdanovka centre, are going off for a couple of days on a buying expedition. We have quite a hard time to buy enough linen, cotton for embroidery, lining for the coats, etc. All the places right near here have been bought out and so we have to go to the more distant villages. We had quite a tragedy the other day for there were so many things for the weekly cart from Buzuluk that they had to get an extra one—and they foolishly took a cartier about whom they knew nothing, and he sold all the things in one of the villages. It's especially maddening for that cart had some American mail they thought!

The Russians have a great many prazniks, or holidays, on which they do no work, so we have about one day a week, when the work-room is closed. Last Fourth-day we walked over to a little Russian village a couple of miles away. The Little Russians are so much neater than our natives, and each little house has a nice garden near and sometimes some kind of a fence. Just now all the houses have been made ready for winter, and they look so nice all freshly "mawzed"—nothing but mud plastered on the outside—but it's quite nice done and looks so much fresher and cleaner. We stopped in one place to buy tomatoes and the woman insisted upon our sitting down to eat watermelon.

I put on my letters "via Vladivostok," for we hear that things at Petrograd are very mixed and I'm hoping that letters will go quicker that way than by way of England. But I don't know. We get so little news, being so far from everything, but I certainly do hope that you aren't alarmed by any of the tales. We are not near any of the centres of trouble, but are well looked after by the authorities. So don't worry.

EMILIE BRADBURY.

NINTH MONTH 30.

DEAR MOTHER:—

I have been here just a little over a month—a month and two days to be exact—and I certainly am enjoying it. The people are mighty stupid—but really very nice and quite appreciative, too. The nurses here are rather discouraged, for their work is all among the natives and they take anything you do for them as a matter of course—but I work almost all together among the refugees and they're so much better. They are much more clever and more intelligent—and really seem to appreciate what we try to do.

Just now the refugees are in quite a hole—for the natives won't sell them potatoes or flour for they want them to go to another district, and by refusing to sell them anything they think they'll force them to move. The volost here have made the people fix the price of potatoes at a rouble a pood—36 pounds—and now no one has any potatoes to sell. Naturally, as that is low price as things go, they won't sell them! The refugees have all left Subimogka and Prerbajek, Esther White's centre, as the government sent them to a better supplied district—but we're just waiting here to see what these refugees will do. We don't want to advise them either to go or to stay—for then we would feel more or less responsible, and if the government thought we would take care of them they wouldn't do anything—so we're just waiting. We have a committee meeting next week, my first,—and then we'll know more of what Anna Haines and Esther White are going to do next. If they go to the new district it will be interesting to start out fresh—but I don't know whether the committee thinks they know enough to do that. So I guess we will all just have to wait.

I have been laying in the winter's supply of vegetables, etc., for here—imagine paying these prices at home—a pood of carrots for three roubles (36 pounds for less than 81), pood of beets for 3 R,—potatoes 1 R, a pood—50 cabbages for R. 7.50, 10 eggs for 80 kopecks (I guess that's about 10 cents). I'm putting eggs away in salt—I hope they'll keep! The people will sell us supplies when they won't sell it to any one else—yesterday a whole leg of sheep for R. 3.40—so you see we won't be likely to starve!

The other day I rode over to the Little Russian village near here to buy some wool. The man was eating his dinner and insisted upon my coming in and eating, too. So all the family ran and opened an inner room, nice and clean, with flowers and pictures and served me with things like doughnuts, unsweetened, some cucumbers and tomatoes which had been in brine and a plate of butter which I was supposed to eat with a spoon. They take a bite of bread then a spoonful of butter, which I suppose is the same as our way in the end. It was all very nice—except that the woman insisted upon wiping the knife, spoon, etc., on the family towel.

WERE JESUS Christ to come to earth to-day in bodily form as He did nineteen hundred years ago, while He would probably adapt His methods of operation to the changed conditions of this age, He would preach the same truth and uphold the same ideals as are set forth in the Sermon on the Mount.

"THAT fertility which springs up from the bitter roots of self has nothing but vacuity in the account of God."

YOUNGER FRIENDS.

THE LIGHTHOUSE GIRL.—A little girl lived in a lonely lighthouse in the ocean, about two miles off the English coast of Northumberland. The lighthouse was on an island, which was one of a group called the "Farne Isles." There were seventeen in all in the group, though some of them could not be seen except at low tide.

Across the water from the island, on the English shore, stood the ancient castle of Bamborough, on the very spot where many years ago stood the strong fortress built by the Roman Emperor Agricola, when the Romans were the rulers of England.

Grace Darling was the little girl's name, and a beautiful name for the beautiful character which adorned it. She was born on the 24th of Eleventh Month, 1815, in the village of Bamborough, the glory of which was the old castle. But most of her life was spent on the island, where her father was the lighthouse-keeper for many years. The island was called Longstone.

A lonely life it must have been for a child, on that rocky island, with nothing but water—water—water on every side, and only an occasional white sail in the distance to show that a ship, with its living freight or useful merchandise was passing by. A lonely island indeed, with no sound but the wash of the waves—gentle when the weather was mild, but with a loud angry roaring when the tempest was high—and the cries of the wild fowl that made the sea and those rocky islets their home.

Little Grace Darling could not have been lonely all the time, however, though no doubt she would have loved to go to school with other children of her age and to play the games in which all little ones delight. Her father had a very large family—nine children in all. Grace was the seventh child, and the two younger ones were twin brothers; so there were other little Darlings for playfellows and companions. Besides there is always plenty to do when the family is large, and we may be sure that there was a task and a duty for each to perform in making the home comfortable and pleasant for all. And where one has learned to love to do one's task well, there is little danger of discontent. What we know of Grace Darling convinces us that she was free from feelings of this sort.

What a treat it must have been for the children to cross in their boat to the mainland for supplies, with their father, or older brothers and sisters! There were no stores on the island, as everyone can readily understand. Then they could get a closer view of the wonderful old castle, which probably they had often been told was built by a Saxon king in the year 550. That it would make it exactly 1265 years older than little Grace. The castle was one of the few objects that could be clearly seen from the island, and it is very likely that the children often spoke about it, one to the other. How beautiful everything must have looked to them—the trees and shrubs, green grass and flowers, and the bright faces of the children! How sweet to them the chattering voices of the boys and girls, and all the busy sounds of village life, in place of the harsh cries of gulls and seamaws, and the never-ending splash and roaring of the waves! A strong, fine young woman Grace grew to be, whose life fitted her for just this time of decision and of trial. Calm and fearless she was, and could handle a boat almost as well as her father or her big brothers. And well it was for those in the big steamer, Farfshire, wrecked among the Farne Islands, that she was as strong as she was brave.

"Oh, father! father!" we can hear her cry, as her young eyes watch the great steamer, lying on the jagged rocks in the distance, washed by the pounding waves, "we must save them! We cannot let them perish!"

"Alas! my daughter," the old man replies, "what can we do—an old man and a young girl? I am not the man I was once. And you—it is madness. If one of your brothers were only here!"

"We must save them! I am strong. We cannot let them die!"

The brave girl's pleading overrules the old man's objections. He launches the boat, and the two brave souls put forth on the dashing waves to save their suffering fellow-men or perish in the attempt.

Only Grace Darling and her father will ever know how difficult was their task; breasting the boisterous winds and waves, how hard it was to get near the wrecked vessel, the danger of being dashed to pieces against its sides, or against the jagged rocks. But they did accomplish it, they did save those nine precious lives—all that was left of a crew of sixty-three—from a watery grave, and carried them safely to Longstone.

This is why that little girl who grew up in the lonely lighthouse is a heroine forevermore. No wonder all England rang with her praises at the time, and showered gifts upon her while she lived. No wonder that after her death, Tenth Month 20, 1842, after one year of illness, that a beautiful monument was erected to her memory at Bamborough, and the lighthouse on Longstone has been visited by many of the wealthy and the great, who desired to look upon the place where lived the noble, the heroic, the honored Grace Darling.

In that island home she had the companionship of sun and sky, of wind and wave, and her own pure girlish imaginings. God and Heaven, and Duty, must have been very real to her, and gave her the courage and love of others which made her what she was. All honor to the little lighthouse girl, who sleeps 'neath her beautiful monument in the old village of Bamborough.—ANNE H. WOODRUFF, in American Agriculturist.

A TIMELY CAUTION FOR CHRISTIANS.

America has been emotionally aroused because of the war. But there are some things to which we must give most "earnest heed" in order to avoid very undesirable results in our personal and business relations after the war is over. We take pleasure in commending our careful consideration the following counsel given by Dr. Charles E. Jefferson in a recent issue of The Christian Work, on "The Christian in War Time."

He says, "We must now practice more assiduously than ever, the fundamental virtues of our faith, mercy, brotherliness and kindness toward the stranger within our gates. . . . A second thing all Christians can do, is to take heed to our ways that we sin not with our tongue.

"These are exciting times, and it is easy to say things which had best be left unsaid. We must be patient with one another. A thousand vexing tangled questions will come up for discussion, and all of us cannot possibly think alike. The only sensible thing for us to do is to do our own thinking, and let everybody do his, without our pouncing on him because he does not happen to agree with us.

"Blessed is the man who gets through this war without needlessly wounding acquaintances and friends by the cruel strokes of an unruly tongue.

"There will be enough wreckage at the end of the war without our adding to it a mass of ruined friendships. Let us do our utmost to maintain a cordial fellowship with our fellow Christians whose opinions are farthest from our own, and by extraordinary self-control, refrain from saying things of which we shall be ashamed when the world is calm again. The world is torn by many demons, and we cannot afford to increase the fever and distraction by our impatient temper or our bitter tongue."—Selected by Ira S. Frame.

DRIVEN INTO SOLITUDE.—Every man who has a Christian ideal of life finds, as it grows into his experience, that he is driven in upon his own soul more and more imperatively. Secret resources become more and more necessary to him. Conceptions of Truth grow up within him, which the soul must develop alone.

Men who are not cynics often live, by force of nature, apart from their equals. They do their life's work better alone than they could with human help. Such men must meet Christ in the "solitary places." They have no adequate resources elsewhere.—AUSTIN PHELPS.

PRESIDENT WILSON ON CO-OPERATION.

HENRY W. CADBURY.

To judge from the newspaper reports, the address of President Wilson at Buffalo before the American Federation of Labor was not the speech of a pacifist. In fact, he said some very harsh things about pacifists. But every liberally-minded and loyal American and even every pacifist must approve the wholesome program he offered for the relations between capital and labor. Its spirit is the spirit of co-operation, of mutual trust, of peace by negotiation, not violence.

But the speech also makes clear in just what the "stupidity" of the pacifists consists. It is not that their ends differ from the President's, but their means to those ends. Or, it is rather, that they believe in applying the same means to international affairs that he would apply to industry. Referring to certain sinister organizations and the method of meeting their efforts the President said:

"There are some organizations in this country whose object is anarchy and the destruction of law, but I would not meet their efforts by making myself a partner in destroying the law. I despise and hate their purposes as much as any man, but I respect the ancient processes of justice, and I would be too proud not to see them done justice, however wrong they are. And so I want to utter my earnest protest against any manifestation of the spirit of lawlessness anywhere or in any cause. . . . A man who takes the law into his hands is not the right man to keep in any form of our development of law and institutions."

That is exactly the attitude of pacifists toward war. Not that they approve or condone the enemy, but that they would not join him in the lawlessness of war, would not take his punishment into their own hands, but would respect the ancient processes of justice, however wrong he is. They would deal with Germany as the President appears to advise dealing with I. W. W. agitators and anarchists and they protest against any manifestations of the spirit of lawlessness anywhere or in any cause.

And the pacifists agree with the President in his method of settlement. "A settlement," he said, "is always hard to avoid when the parties can be brought face to face. I can differ from a man much more radically when he is not in the room than when he is in the room, because then the awkward thing is that he can come back at me and answer what I say. It is always dangerous for a man to have the floor entirely to himself. And therefore we must insist in every instance that the parties come into each other's presence and there discuss the issues between them, and not separately in places which have no communication with each other. . . . We are all of the same clay and spirit, and we can get together if we desire to get together. Therefore, my counsel to you is this: Let us show ourselves Americans by showing that we do not want to go off in separate camps or groups by ourselves, but that we want to keep with all other classes and all other groups in a common enterprise which is to release the spirits of the world from bondage. I would be willing to set that up as a final test of an American. That is the meaning of democracy."

Again this is just the attitude of the pacifists. They "insist that in every instance the parties be brought into each other's presence and there discuss the issues between them," whether the parties be industrial or political. If that were done, a settlement would be hard to avoid. And they heartily accept as the final test of an American the desire not to go off in separate camps, but to keep with all other groups. That for them is the meaning of democracy, the kind of democracy that will be safe for the world as well as for America. They believe that all, even Germans, are fundamentally of the same clay and spirit, and that we can get together if we desire to get together.

In objection to this position of the pacifists it is often said that while their ideals are most desirable and may be possible after the war, they are not possible now, because in international relations we have not the proper machinery and instrumentalities for carrying out their ideals of law, co-operation and adjustment of differences. It is unfortunately true that the necessary instrumentalities are not yet organized, as the pacifist himself realizes. Nevertheless he recognizes that the chief obstacle to co-operation is not the lack of the machinery of co-operation, but an unwillingness to co-operate manifested in various gradations. Where there's a will there's a way. And so he does not wait for the close of the war or some more distant millennium when a league of nations shall have been perfected, much though he hopes for that time; but now when the need is urgent he would have the belligerent nations take common counsel, devising to meet the unprecedented demand whatever new and unprecedented methods may be necessary. He would not even wait until Germany's internal government is made over to our liking. And here, too, the President has expressed the pacifist position clearly, for in industry as in international politics there is the same need for both the desire and the machinery for co-operation without waiting until either labor or capital is reformed from within. After complaining of various "gradations of the manifestations of the unwillingness to co-operate," he said, "the fundamental lesson of the whole situation is that we must not only take common counsel, but that we must yield to and obey common counsel. Not all of the instrumentalities for this are at hand. . . . I am hopeful that some such instrumentalities may be devised; but whether they are or not, we must use those that we have, and upon every occasion where it is necessary to have such an instrumentality, originate it upon that occasion if necessary."

The President said, "I want peace, but I know how to get it, and the pacifists do not." But he and the pacifists would not be so far apart if he should take the logical step of applying internationally his own intranational principles. May his words prove the omen of a speedy settlement of the war along the lines that he has indicated—a willingness to co-operate, the devising of adequate instrumentalities of co-operation, a meeting of the parties face to face, and the substitution, not in the future but now, of the ancient processes of justice for the mob-spirit of lawlessness. Along any other course lies anarchy, both international and industrial. For the longer the war continues, the more grave will be the danger that capital and labor will take the logical step in the reverse direction, and, following his example, rather than his precept, apply to domestic disputes the violent and lawless methods of foreign war.

HAVERFORD, PA., Eleventh Month 21, 1917.

NEWS ITEMS.

RUFUS KING, with minute for service from his Monthly Meeting, is visiting meetings in and near Philadelphia.

It is announced that Richard Mott Gummere has been appointed to succeed Richard Mott Jones as Headmaster of Penn Charter School. He will not enter upon his duties till the next school year.

The Freshman Class at Haverford College numbers this year sixty-six, against fifty-eight last year. Of this year's class Westtown contributes considerably more than any other school, her number being nine. Moses Brown School at Providence sends four, two schools close to the college send six and four respectively. There are nine schools which contribute two each and there are twenty-three which are represented by one, and one prepared by private tutor. There is no representative from a North Carolina School, and none from the West and Middle West, except one from Westport, Missouri.

CONCORD QUARTERLY MEETING.—Concord Quarterly Meeting held its regular session on the 13th inst., at Media. Among the varied religious concerns which found expression, two seemed to be uppermost in the minds of those who spoke. One of these was for the "conscientious objectors" in the training camps. It was felt that these members were enduring pressure and temptation in an unusual degree, and that in every way possible they should be made to realize that they are the objects of the sympathy and earnest solicitude of their friends and meetings at home. The other thought was that in spite of all the horror and distress of the present hour, this might be and should be, a time of rejoicing. "Be of good cheer," "Rejoice not that the devils are subject unto you, but rather rejoice that your names are written in heaven;" these were two of the quotations used. It was also pointed out that the greatest rejoicing should be ours when we find that we can "bless them that curse us, and pray for them that persecute us."

Our beloved English Friends, William Blair Neahy, Alfred Kemp Brown and Augustus George Walker, met with us and had acceptable service in the ministry.

In the business session, the chief item was the report of a committee to assist subordinate meetings. This report was printed in last week's issue. The Committee was felt to be rendering valuable service. It was continued with enlarged powers.

JOHN D. CARTER,
Clerk.

CALN QUARTERLY MEETING.—This gathering at Coatesville on the 16th inst. was very satisfying. The vocal exercises bore evidence of a renewed anointing, as Friends from different sections of our Society contributed their experience and interpretation of the Divine will and counsel. A tender note of companionship and communion came from the Pacific Coast, while another Friend made an earnest appeal to consider the way in which our Master equips His followers—even as He loved and was sent to gather those whose hearts are responsive. Our English Friends, Alfred Kemp Brown and Wm. Blair Neahy, were very helpful in bringing home our part in co-operating with their effort to maintain our peace testimony in its pristine purity and power. The reality of our oneness in Christ was sensibly felt by all present.

In joint session Anne Garrett Walton gave a detailed account of the reconstruction work as carried on in France and Russia under the auspices of English and American Friends, which added real interest in the Service Committee's efforts. As our members become vitally in earnest to support this work, recognized by all of the nations as the most practical expression of international good-will, our light will rise out of obscurity and our interpretation of the Gospel of universal love be more widely appreciated.

The remembrance of our experiences this day remain as a benediction—abundantly compensating for the effort to meet with the Friends of this Quarterly Meeting.

J. E.

The concluding report of J. Henry Scattergood, recently printed in THE FRIEND, had appreciative notice in The Ledger and in the Evening Ledger. We now have in hand a copy of the New York Evening Post for Eleventh Month 17th, in which nearly a column is devoted to the same report under suitable captions. Edmund Stirling, of the Ledger, and Royal J. Davis, of the Post, are contributing to this helpful publicity of Friends' Reconstruction Work. Their consideration is gratefully appreciated.

SEBASTIAN KRESGE's campaign for national prohibition on the platform of "good business" was reviewed in our paper some months ago by some correspondence submitted by Morris E. Leeds. From the same source we have notice of a Washington "round-up" planned for Twelfth Month 12th and 13th. Here is a paragraph from the stirring letter of invitation:

"This Washington 'round-up' is going to be a big help. Already I have promises to be there from every State but one. Every State will be there. Please do your bit to insure a mammoth success. If you yourself cannot come, send superintendent, foreman, some employee, or your pastor, priest, rector or rabbi. All creeds will be represented. Best of all come yourself. If not, send a hand! A Flesh and Blood Petition!"

On the evening of the 18th inst., members of Haverford Meeting assembled to hear reports from some of those who attended the recent Five Years' Meeting.

Frances Barrett summarized the answers she had received from some western Friends as to their relation to the Five Years' Meeting and to Philadelphia Friends. Rightly or wrongly, the latter are credited with an exalted opinion of themselves; and the most salient point brought out was the probability that each section might profit from the experiences of the other. The almost total cessation of the interchange of visits by ministers of the Gospel was an evidence, and probably a cause of a feeling of estrangement.

Isaac Sharpless spoke briefly of the Five Years' Meeting in its methods of work and the force and power of the gathering. He intimated plainly that the position of so-called delegates was anomalous, since they had little opportunity to express their individual views, and the assembly was in small degree deliberative.

Rufus M. Jones referred to the origin of the Five Years' Meeting. He thought it had served a useful purpose at a critical period in the history of the Society in the west, and promised greater things for the future. No one claims perfection for its work, but it has served as a rallying point and an antidote to certain disintegrating influences.

The following in regard to Bootham School was reported at Tenth Month Quarterly Meeting of Yorkshire Friends in Sheffield:

A widening sense of responsibility amongst the boys is being developed and experiments in self-government are being made. Potatoes are grown, and have produced an average of twelve tons per acre. A gardening course is in existence under the direction of Leeds University. The boys help local farmers with haymaking during the summer term and in the holidays fifty-four boys took part in harvesting and fruit-picking. The amount of time spent in this way averaged more than two weeks each. At Bootham, too, it has been found necessary to increase the fees by 12½ per cent. There is a keen desire to increase also the number of scholarships, especially for the sons of those engaged in public service. Owing to the depletion of the staff the services of two "lady masters" have been requisitioned. Social service is undertaken by boys as well as girls. This finds expression in teaching in a boys' club, and in a summer camp for poor boys.—The Friend (London).

REPLY OF WORKERS IN FRANCE TO CABLE FROM THE FIVE YEARS' MEETING.

The Five Years' Meeting sent the following cable to Friends in France: "Joy, sympathy, love, prayers. Five Years' Meeting. Preflow, Clerk."

The following answer has just been received by letter, owing to the fact that a cable could not have been received before the adjournment of the Five Years' Meeting:

"English and American Friends in France reciprocate greeting. Shewell—Evans."

WANTED—EXPERIENCED JOINER FOR OUR HOUSE—BUILDING FACTORY AT ORNANS, FRANCE.

We are in great immediate need of an experienced worker in wood for a position of considerable responsibility at our factory for making portable houses at Ornans, France. Any Friend, or person interested in the work of Friends, who has these qualifications should earnestly consider whether this is not a call of duty.

We are engaged with the Friends of another country in a great work of sacrificial service for the stricken people of a third country. We should place at the disposal of this work the maximum of our resources, both of money and of personal service. Many Friends have given up work of great importance here for the work in France. First, Morris Leeds and Henry Scattergood; then Charles Evans, Dr. Babbitt and Ralston Thomas. No less than the service of the latter two is the sacrifice of Haverford College and Moses Brown School in letting them go. The men on the Unit have given the same ready answer to the call of this greatest opportunity for service Friends of our generation have had.

May we not have many applications from men above military age of technical ability, both in wood-working and mechanics. The present complications with reference to the Selective Service Law impose a greater measure of responsibility for this work upon men over thirty than seemed the case at first. We must select seventy men within the very near future, and persons desiring to apply should do so at the earliest possible date.

FAMILIES OF WORKERS IN FRANCE REQUESTED TO SEND LETTERS OF INTEREST TO THE SERVICE COMMITTEE.

To efficiently represent on this side of the Atlantic our work in France, we need the kind of vivid impressions which the letters of our workers alone can give. Those of us who are responsible for the work here are anxious to overcome so far as possible the handicap of our great distance from the field. Families of our workers can render us an invaluable assistance by loaning us letters that contain accounts of particular interest. We shall make an early return of the letters in every case.

We need them not only for our own information but for use in our public statements, both through bulletins and through Friends' papers. We desire each week to furnish the several Friends' papers with the best possible material. We thus request Friends to send such letters to our office. We can have duplicate copies made for all the papers, and in this way put at the disposal of each paper more and better material than would otherwise be possible.

SPECIAL RATE FOR CLOTHING SENT BY EXPRESS TO OUR STORE-ROOM.

All clothing or other goods for relief purposes sent to our store-room by express may be sent at two-thirds the regular rate. Whether the shipment is sent "Prepaid" or "Collect," this so-called "charitable rate" should be claimed and the agent should be instructed to mark "charitable shipment" on the way-bill. This marking should also appear on the package.

If local agents do not know of this rate their attention should be called to the following rules of the several companies covering the matter:

Adams and Southern Express—Item 4, Official Gazette, Page 1, Issued Third Month 1, 1917.

American Express—Traffic Rules and Instructions, Issued Seventh Month 1, 1915; Page 3, Section 13.

VINCENT D. NICHOLSON,
Executive Secretary.

The annual meeting of the Friends' Institute was held on the afternoon of Third-day, the 20th, at No. 20 S. Twelfth Street, Philadelphia. After a social occasion and the transaction of the usual business, a brief address was delivered by Henry T. Brown on "Sensitizing Our Social Conscience." In his remarks the speaker emphasized the fact that as we go through life we perceive only those things to which our minds are sensitized. There may be in each one of us a moral blindness to conditions at our very doors. We may be deeply conscious of the evils of intemperance and of war, but insensible to the wrongs of child labor and social injustice. We are just daily beginning to realize that the real seeds of war germinate in our social order.

In the past Friends have taken an advanced stand on the abolition of human slavery, on the liquor question, on the establishment of international peace and good-will, on the need for true simplicity of life and on other great moral issues.

For some reason, however, as a Society we have failed as clearly to perceive and as whole-heartedly to oppose the evils of the present social order. We need a fresh vision of the Gospel of Jesus Christ as practically applied to our modern conditions of life.

When our eyes are opened, and our hearts are burning with an overwhelming sense of the sin and suffering and social injustice that have existed about us for so many years unheeded, then will we become qualified as never before to pray, "Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven," and that for which we fervently pray will be that for which we will earnestly work.

THE work of the office of the Exemption Committee of the Representative Meeting increases in volume and we trust in importance, as the weeks pass.

It has seemed necessary for the Secretary to visit Camp Dix twice within a recent week in the interests of our membership, once in company with Joseph Rhoads, and the second time with George VANX, Jr., who, through acquaintance with one of the superior officers, was instrumental in bringing about valuable introductions, which are likely to be needed soon again. We were promised that the one conscientious objector located there (there have been additions in the last few days) who is a member of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, would be placed in more congenial surroundings in a very few days, which, we learn, has since been put in effect.

Considerable has been printed in THE FRIEND regarding Camp Meade; we will only state at this time that on First-day, 18th inst., the entertainment was visited by Alfred Kemp Brown, W. Blair Neatby, Joseph Elkinton, Joseph Rhoads, Wm. B. Harvey and others. Our young men looked well, seemed cheerful, and as assigned to their lot as can be expected; it is a real exercise in faith; they realize that in their stand as C. O.'s they are upholding vital testimonies which the Society of Friends have borne since its foundation. About 3.30 P. M. Friends and other visitors and visited, collected on the second floor of the C. O. Barracks, and a religious meeting was held, we trust, to the honor of Truth. The officers have been courteous to our young men, and we felt it right to express to one of them appreciation for civility shown.

Some of our members in other camps are receiving our sympathy and attention.

A lieutenant recently asked the C. O.'s at the camp if they would accept as non-combatant service, reconstruction work in France; we were informed that all of our members in the camp expressed their willingness to engage in that work.

The new Selective Service regulations issued by the Government (Form 999) provide for a searching questionnaire; it has been thought wise to mail the following letter to the men of draft age, members of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, in the hope that no one will suffer for lack of information concerning their interests.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Eleventh Month 26, 1917.

IMPORTANT CHANGES IN THE MILITARY DRAFT.

To All Men of Draft Age, Members of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting:—

DEAR FRIENDS.—In anticipation of the New Selective Service regulations of the Federal Government, requiring our members to answer (among others) the question (Series IX) "State date and place of organization of your local church?" We append herewith dates of the establishment of the Monthly Meetings of the Yearly Meeting as nearly as readily attainable data permits.

We would impress upon our young men the importance of acquainting themselves concerning the questionnaire contained in the new service regulations, Form 999.

We would remind you of the importance of filling out and returning the questionnaire to your Local Board within six days of the time of notice, and to note carefully the provisions for claims for exemption from military service.

We feel that each young man of the Yearly Meeting who is directly concerned in this matter should carefully investigate this subject for himself; in cases, however, where assistance is needed, we will cheerfully render it when requested, either in person or by correspondence.

We would particularly urge that when you are called for examination, or in case you are ordered to camp, you would kindly advise the correspondents of your respective communities who have agreed to keep this office posted concerning the status of drafted men in said districts; in case you have not been informed as to name of the person please send such information direct to the undersigned promptly.

Sincerely your friend,

WM. B. HARVEY,
Executive Secretary.

MEETING DATES.

Philadelphia Monthly Meeting was established in 1684, Philadelphia Western District, 1814; Muncy, 1796; Haverford, 1684; Abington, 1683; Frankford, 1682; Gwynedd, 1714; Germantown, 1683; Chester (Penn.), 1682; Goshen, 1721; Concord, 1684; Wilmington, 1750; Birmingham, 1815; Lansdowne, 1830; Bradford, 1737; Uxehlan, 1763; Kennett, 1686; New Garden, 1718; London Grove, 1792; Burlington, 1678; Chesterfield, 1684; Upper Springfield, 1783; Falls, 1683; Haddonfield, 1695; Chester (N. J.), 1803; Evesham, 1760; Upper Evesham, 1793; Woodbury, 1785; Salem, 1676.

DIED.—At her home in Christiansa, Pa., Tenth Month 22, 1917, ELIZABETH E. MOORE, wife of William B. Moore, in her seventy-fifth year; a member of Sadsbury Preparative and Bradford Monthly Meeting.

—, Tenth Month 26, 1917, at the home of his brother-in-law, Charles H. Standing, near Earllham, Ia., HENRY A. HENDERSON, son of Joseph and the late Anna P. Henderson, aged twenty years, nine months and nineteen days; a member of Paulina Monthly Meeting of Friends, Iowa.

—, at Mimms, Ontario, Canada, on Tenth Month 27, 1917, SYRA SIMONSEN, wife of Jacob S. Simonsen, in the seventieth year of her age; a member of Pickering Monthly Meeting of Friends, Canada.

—, On the ninth of Tenth Month, 1917, RUTH ELLEN STUART, wife of David N. Stuart, in the sixty-eighth year of her age; a member of Cane Creek Monthly Meeting of Friends, N. C.

WM. H. PILE'S SONS, PRINTERS,
NO. 422 WALNUT STREET, PHILA., PA.

FOUNDED 1865.

THE PROVIDENT LIFE AND TRUST COMPANY

OF PHILADELPHIA

Insurance is Protection—Insurance is Saving—Insurance Establishes an Estate.
How can a man begin better than by taking a practical Provident policy?

Fourth and Chestnut Streets

H. F. BRUNER S. D. HALL

H. F. BRUNER & Co.
COAL

OFFICE AND YARD

16 N. TWENTY-FIRST STREET
PHILADELPHIA

TELEPHONES: LOCHRY 243
RACE 661

W. B. WEAVER
UNDEKTAKER and EMBALMER

550-552 N. 5TH ST., PHILA., PA.

Special Attention Given to Funerals
In and Out of the City. Also Chapel
Accommodations for Funerals.

BELL 'PHONE : ESTABLISHED 1880

HARRY S. LEE

313 WALNUT STREET

PAINTER AND GRAINER

ANTIQUÉ and OFFICE FURNITURE RESTORED
JOBING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO
ESTIMATES

RESIDENCE: 254 S. 44th St. BELL 'PHONE: Baring 2084X

WILLIAM OAKES

Plumbing and Heating Contractor

ALSO LEAD BURNING

260 Tenth Street

PHILADELPHIA

BELL 'PHONE: Filbert 2666.

WALL PAPERS—All Grades

Custom of Friends Specially Selected

FRANK C. BUEHL

Successor to S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON

902 SPRING GARDEN ST. - PHILADELPHIA

Store open until 10.30 A. M. Any other time by appointment only.

Opposite Spring Garden Station, & Reading R.R.

ESTABLISHED 1859. BELL 'PHONE

Your child needs a

SHETLAND PONY

to ride, drive, and grow up with.

HARTZELL BROTHERS, SEBRING, OHIO.

ESTABLISHED 1888.

WINTER SPORTS

AT

Pocono Manor Winter Inn

POCONO MANOR, PA.

Make reservations early for week-end parties.

J. W. HURLEY, Manager
(Pocono Summit Station, D. L. & W. R. R.)

WOOLMAN SCHOOL

A Friends' School for Social and Religious Education Board of Managers from both branches of Friends. Courses in Old and New Testament, Church History, History and Doctrines of Friends, Missions, First-day School Organization, Social Betterment, International Organization, History of Religion, Comparative Religion, and allied subjects.

Instruction by scholarly experts from the faculties of Haverford and Swarthmore Colleges, and from other educational, social, and religious institutions of Philadelphia and vicinity.

WOOLMAN SCHOOL

SWARTHMORE, PA.

ELBERT RUSSELL, Director.

THE OSCEOLA

ORLANDO, FLA.

Opens First Month First, 1918

JOSHUA W. HURLEY, Manager

Friends' Meeting at Hotel.

Premier Duplicating Co.

Mimeographing, Multigraphing, Printing, Typewriting, Addressing, Mailing, etc.

630 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

GLASLYN-CHATHAM

PARK PLACE

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

A Family House of Established Reputation.

Open Throughout the Year.

NATHAN L. JONES.

PUBLIC STENOGRAPHER

GEORGE B. COCK, Liberty Building

Established 1896. Experience 39 years! Medical 13

ALFRED C. HAINES

Building Glass and Paints

56 N. Front St., Philadelphia

THE HOLMES PRESS

Printers

J. L. Engle, Pres.

1336-40 CHERRY ST. PHILA.

W. J. MacWatters

Let Me
Help You

In Selecting Your

RUGS AND CARPETS

Domestic -- -- Oriental

ALL WEAVES

The Home of Bundrah Wilton

"DURABLE AS IRON"

HARDWICK & MAGEE CO.

1220 Market Street

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE MATERIAL THAT WE SELL

CONSULT

YARNAL PAINT COMPANY

MANUFACTURERS

PHILADELPHIA

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use
PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BREAD

made from the entire wheat grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator. Sold by all good grocers in Philadelphia.

Write for particulars to

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.

10th & Susquehanna Ave., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

BALDERSTON'S APPLE-BUTTER

We are now prepared to fill orders for apple-butter at the following rates:

2-Quart Jars—per Case of Six Jars Each $4.50

1-Quart Jars—per Case of Six Jars Each $2.40

by freight or express, I. o. b., Colara.

Smaller orders will be forwarded by Parcel Post at an additional charge to cover costs.

ELWOOD BALDERSTON,

COLORA, Cecil Co., Maryland.

FOR RENT IN SMALL ADULT FAMILY—TWO F well-furnished rooms on second floor to one or two persons employed during the day. House with porch is pleasantly located near 11th St. and Lehigh Ave.; convenient to trains and trolleys.
Address "B"—Office of "THE FRIEND"

FOR RENT—FURNISHED, MEDIUM SIZED COM- fortable home in Moorestown, N. J. Small family desired. Servant now employed can remain.
WRITE P. O. Box No. 124, MOORESTOWN, N. J.

WANTED IN A HOME WITH A SMALL FAMILY in Media, Pa., a suitable woman companion.
Address "P"—Care of "THE FRIEND."

Flexible Flyer

The famous Steering Sled with non-skid runners.

Outlasts 3 ordinary sleds
Nine sizes, 3 to 8 1/2 feet long. Sold by hardware and department stores.

FREE OFFER:
Send for cardboard model showing how Flexible Flyers steer.

Unless it bears this trademark it ain't a Flexible Flyer.

S. L. Allen & Co. Box A 713 Philadelphia

THE following timely books, mostly of those recommended by the Social Order Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, are for sale at Friends' Book Store, No. 304 Arch Street, Philadelphia.

- "The Church and the Hour." $1.00
Vida D. Scudder.
- "The Social Problem." 1.25
C. A. Ellwood.
- "The Abolition of Poverty." 75
J. H. Hollander.
- "Christianizing the Social Order." 1.50
Walter Rauschenbusch.
- "The Day of Our Visitation." 50
William Littleboy.
- "A Word of Remembrance and Caution to the Rich." 65
John Woolman.

Assoc. M. Am. Soc. C. E. Bell 'Phone—Lomhard 3412

EDWIN M. EVANS CONTRACTOR & BUILDER

My jobbing department is well equipped, prompt and efficient

321 S. LAWRENCE ST. PHILA.

R. C. Ballinger Ernest R. Yarnall John A. Stratton
TELEPHONES
Bell—Spruce 17-81 — Keystone—Race 637
R. C. BALLINGER & CO.
CONTRACTORS and BUILDERS
218 N. Thirteenth St. Philadelphia.

Philadelphia's
Representative Store

ELKINS, MORRIS & CO.
BANKERS
REPRESENTATIVES
PAUL W. BROWN
JAMES P. MAGILL
LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

RAILROAD AND
PUBLIC UTILITY BONDS
FOR
CONSERVATIVE INVESTMENT.
FULL PARTICULARS ON REQUEST.

We recommend the use of RAG FEATHERWEIGHT

(Antique Finish)
As the paper for high-grade Books and other Publications

RHODES LEATHER BELTING

AND TANNATE
LACE
LEATHER

Strong & Even
Just off the Press

Rhodes double belts are wonderfully uniform in thickness. For tannate and even balance, you will not often find their equal. You can save steps and trouble by using Tannate Lace Leather. It seldom breaks.

J. E. RHODES & SONS
PHILADELPHIA: 12 N. THIRD ST.
CHICAGO: 322 W. RANDOLPH ST.
FACTORY AND TANNERY: WILMINGTON, DEL.

NEW YORK: 102 BEEKMAN ST.
BALTIMORE: 37 S. CHARLES ST.

SEE WALKER & KEPLER
FOR
Good Electrical Work
531 CHESNUT ST. PHILA.

JOSEPH G. FOGG
FUNERAL DIRECTOR and EMBALMER
S. W. COR. 16TH and RACE STREETS
Special Attention given to Friends' Funerals
BELL 'PHONE SPRUCE 1648

English Friends' Periodicals:
Friends' Quarterly Examiner $1.66
The Friend (London) (weekly) 3.25
Journal of Friends' Historical Society
(quarterly) 1.25
Friends' Fellowship Paper (6 issues) 1.00
The Venturer (Monthly) 1.00
Subscriptions for 1918 should be sent now to
GRACE W. BLAIR,
109 W. State St., Media, Pa.

GIRARD TRUST CO.

BROAD and CHESTNUT STS.

CAPITAL AND SURPLUS } $10,000,000

Acts as Executor, Trustee, Guardian, Administrator, Assignee and Receiver. Safes to Rent in Burglar-proof Vaults. Interest Allowed on Deposits. :: ::

E. B. MORRIS
PRESIDENT

WILLIAM S. YARNALL
MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN
128 SOUTH SIXTEENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 91.

FIFTH-DAY, TWELFTH MONTH 6, 1917.

No. 23.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price $2.00 a year in Advance.

Publisher, DAVIS H. FORSTHIE.

Editors { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
 { DAVIS H. FORSTHIE,
 { MARY WARD.

Make remittances payable to

THE FRIEND,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

PRAYER FOR FORGIVENESS AND A LARGER VISION.

Almighty God, in this dark hour when there is bitter strife between nations and confusion and struggle even among brothers, grant, we pray, that a new vision may break upon the world—for without a vision we perish.

Never before has the world suffered as it is suffering now; never before has the world stood in greater need of power to see clearly Thy Will and to hear Thy voice stirring its wild alarm.

From unworthy ambitions, greed and self-complacency no nation has been free, and from these evil seeds we are now reaping a harvest of suffering and death.

Forgive us all, we humbly beseech Thee.—Forgive us when we have dwelt at ease and in luxury while many have been homeless and famished; forgive us when we have been harsh and bitter in our judgments, instead of sympathetic and helpful; forgive us when we have thought that evil could be overcome with evil and have forgotten that Thou art pleased only with those who do justly and love mercy and walk humbly with Thee their God.

Let all nations learn afresh the lessons Thy Son taught in the fields of Galilee and on the cross of Calvary, for through Him only will healing come and this stricken world find peace again.

HENRY H. COLLINS, JR.

DELEGATED POWERS.

A minister of the denomination known as Disciples of Christ recently took pleasure in pointing out to us the distinctive ideas that since 1831 have brought together more than a million "communicants" in this country under this name. As is implied in the name, the movement, like that of Quakerism, has attempted to realize what William Penn described in the expression, "Primitive Christianity revived." The effort of the Disciples, to use their own phrase, has been no less than that of a "restoration of apostolic method." Their fundamental is in the simple declaration, "Jesus is Christ." To them "sects are not branches of the Church of Christ," but "the body of Christ is one of which Christ alone is the head." These declarations disclose a close relationship with Friends. The points of divergence are, however, quite distinct. We need not deal with these for the moment, as they have no bearing upon the point of Christian practice we wish to discuss. "The restoration of apostolic method" attempted by the Disciples has given them a specific character full of significance to all Christians, and notably of moment at a time when efforts at unity are so much to the fore. Our kind informant represented this point of specific difference in organization as altogether an effort to escape from the assumptions of authority of bishop or ecumenical council by making the individual congregation the final court of appeal in matters of principle and practice. The theory, of course, is that the mind of Truth—of the real Head of the Church—should be sought by the congregation with a full measure of faith that it will be revealed. Such an arrangement amongst these good people, we were interested to hear, by no means precludes the effort for larger vision by an extension of the circle of fellowship. They have, annually, national conferences in which the large things of the religious world are considered from the most enlightened points of view they can command. Any decisions reached in these conferences are available for use by the separate congregations, but they are not binding upon them. Their representatives have exercised no delegated powers. They may come back to their homes from the conferences enlightened, but their degree of enlightenment alone measures their authority with the home body. It still relies upon its own discovery of the mind of Truth for its guide.

In the face of many movements toward concentration of authority in the religious world the past twenty-five years, of the multiplication of councils, and of small executive boards, it is interesting indeed to note this development. The general tendency, one observes, is toward concentration, but a counter-tendency toward a spiritual democracy has been impressive enough to attract a million thoughtful people in a comparatively short time.

When one stops to think along these lines, it quickly becomes apparent that it is the effort for efficiency that leads small groups in religious association as well as large groups in political association toward centralized power. The startling lesson of the day and of the hour is the fact that real democracy is not efficient without an apparent surrender of what seems to be fundamental in it, at least not efficient enough to meet the requirements of a military organization. If a democracy has an efficient army, this instrument in its management can not by any method yet discovered be actually democratic. To pursue the implications of these facts would carry us far afield in political discussion. The great historian Freeman, in his classic lectures, "The Democratic City," and "The Aristocratic City," has disclosed the deep philosophy that exists in the relationships of these apparently divergent ideas. The political bearings of the subject of delegated powers is merely the most patent illustration of how far reaching is this principle which has given birth to the denomination we have mentioned. The maintenance of this principle may even be fundamental to the life and real progress of our own Society of Friends. To some it seems inconceivable that any but a democratic basis could make that life possible. In any Friends' meeting, however large or however small, the surrender of the body at large to the dominating thought or act of one or even of a few, has finally been recorded either in declension, or in a fundamentally changed basis of organization. That the instinct of Quakerism for two hundred years has been against the centralization generally expressed in delegated authority is shown by the declining rather than the increasing function of so-called representatives. Save to respond to their names, to nominate Clerks at times, and to give information upon some specific questions in regard to their own meeting, what other recognized function do they have? All must be well aware that this ultra-democratic plan has been responsible at times—is still surely responsible for much and great inefficiency. The question of moment for us is whether any greater degree of spiritual efficiency is possible than under this system of pure democracy, when it is rightly applied. This right application in religious matters means a right recognition of the Headship of Christ and of the priesthood of believers. Had religious bodies, Friends and others, been more faithful to this basis they might now more successfully point to a like necessity in the political world, viz: to the necessity of faithfulness to the precept of loving our neighbor as ourselves. The same weakness of human nature that makes us swerve from the stern requirements of the spiritual standard, is the root also of the failure, so far, in the world's history, in actual democracy. We proclaim our belief, however, in the unrealized possibilities in both the spiritual and political fields. The old way in spiritual matters of surrender and sacrifice, of living faith in the great Head and in His power and readiness to equip all, has its counterpart in realizing that in the community and in the state our call is to service under the golden rule and not to self-seeking.

It is comfortable and easy,—we may believe it is sometimes most efficient, to delegate power to others. If it is power that will atrophy in us if it is not exercised, we may make a weak meeting or a weak government by choosing the easy way. Others may do our work for us, in the church or in the state. We shall suffer—the work usually will suffer, if we permit that.

J. H. B.

WESTERN QUARTERLY MEETING.

The Western Quarterly Meeting convened at West Grove on Eleventh Month 23rd. Weather conditions favored, and the attendance was fully up to the average. We were favored with a goodly number of visiting friends, among them, John B. Garrett, Max I. Reich, Gilbert and Minnie P. Bowles.

A precious period of silent waiting was experienced in the early part of the meeting, after which acceptable communications, almost all of them from our visitors, followed. It was suggested in the first message to which we listened, that many in the congregation longed for a deeper and more earnest spiritual life; words of encouragement were voiced, particularly for those whose conduct had not been in accord with the Master's will.

Peter's denial of his Lord, his sincere sorrow and increased zeal in good works, was cited, also the doubting of Thomas, with his ability soon to say, "My Lord and my God," were enlarged upon to our encouragement. Jesus Christ, the Way, the Truth and the Life, the one means of access to the Father, was brought forcibly to our remembrance; old doctrine, yet ever new.

It requires more time for the Potter to temper and prepare the clay than it does, after placing it on the wheel, to mould it into the desired shape; so with the Christian wayfarer, it requires more time to prepare him for the Master's service than to actually participate in the work of the Lord.

There was a unity of concern on the part of those who took part in the vocal exercises of the meeting.

The reading of the Advices in the business meeting on the men's side of the house was the occasion for lively testimony concerning the importance of regularly attending meetings for worship as well as those for Discipline.

Near the close of the session a suggestion was made which received the support of the gathering, that a message of sympathy and interest for our young members in reconstruction and other service beyond seas should be sent to them; the Friend who opened the concern was requested to assist the Clerk in preparing a suitable letter and forwarding the same.

H.

MAKE ME A CAPTIVE, LORD.

Make me a captive, Lord,
And then I shall be free;
Force me to render up my sword,
And I shall conquer be.
I sink in life's alarms
When by myself I stand;
Imprison me within Thy arms,
And strong shall be my hand.

My heart is weak and poor
Until it master find:
It has no spring of action sure—
It varies with the wind:
It cannot freely move
Till Thou hast wrought its chain;
Enslave it with Thy matchless love,
And deathless it shall reign.

My power is faint and low
Till I have learned to serve,
It wants the needed fire to glow,
It wants the breeze to nerve;
It cannot drive the world
Until itself be driven,
Its flag can only be unfurled
When Thou shalt breathe from heaven.

My will is not my own
Till Thou hast made it Thine;
If it would reach a monarch's throne
It must its crown resign:
It only stands unbent
Amid the chafing strife,
When on Thy bosom it has leant,
And found in Thee its life.

—GEORGE MATHESON

"SELF-CONQUEST is indeed a life's work, and we must not be disheartened if very often we feel as though we had made but little way—nay, as if we were slipping back again. It is only by degrees that we can advance, by patiently, and it may be wearily, attaining the habit of mind which makes self-renunciation become our way of life."

FROM CAMP DIX.

153RD DEP. BRIGADE, CO. 14, Bat. 4th, Camp Dix.

Well, here we are! Got here about 10.30 yesterday morning, and finally got up to headquarters about 12.30 and had dinner. It was good and went to the spot. Just before dinner I had a chance to speak to the captain and told him my position. After dinner and vaccination and inoculation were over we went for our kits. The captain spoke to me there, asking me why I was opposed to service. I told him the story. He, of course, couldn't see it. Said I'd either obey his orders or else be subject to court martial, and subsequent six years in prison. I showed him Secretary's Baker's ruling, but he seemed inclined to disregard it. He said he didn't know how I was going to make out, as those that wouldn't work shouldn't eat. He said other things to try to scare me, but I "batted not an eye." I told him I was afraid I would have to be a trouble to him, as I must refuse to wear a uniform or do any military service. Some other officers standing around insinuated I was a coward, and that because we "C. O.'s" all put up the same objections "it looked bad." Finally he ordered me escorted to orderly room in above barracks, and here I am in a 12 by 12 room with another C. O., a devout young fellow, not a Friend. We are "segregated." We can't even go out of the room without an escort. Last night we were escorted to supper after the others were all through. We got half portion, for, as we overheard, that was more than we deserved. Having no light we retired early. Of course, we momentarily expect something to happen, but suspense—why, I am an expert by this time when it comes to suspense! It would be much easier to go with the crowd. How I would enjoy the zip of the training and like its physical beauties. I don't know who would rather stay pent up in a 12 by 12 room than get out and exercise! But I'll stay here for some time before I'll be a part of the military machine. But give me a chance to do civilian work and see how long I'd stay here. Whatever may befall us we know is for the best. Think of us taking things philosophically, trusting for the best, and looking for that brighter day when we can again breathe the air of freedom and perform a useful duty for humanity. Thank thee for thy interest. Just had a nice visit from an officer who happened by. He seemed sympathetic and pleasing to talk to.

Very sincerely,

WENDELL OLIVER.

TENTH MONTH 22, 1917.

WAR VICTIMS' RELIEF COMMITTEE OF THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

22 NEW STREET SQUARE, LONDON E. C. 4,
Tenth Month 31, 1917.

WM. T. ELKINTON:—

Dear Friend.—Many thanks for thy letter of the eleventh of Tenth Month, and thy kindly expressions regarding the work we have in hand. I know that it is a heavy strain, but the strain is very much a mental one, for it is so difficult to keep one's courage with the war dragging on and when one feels it is all so terrible. Almost every day one hears more awful things; I do not know what hurts the most, the terrible sufferings and slaughter or the dreadful effect on the morals of the people. One is made almost sick by reports that the men bring back as to conditions and we have to realize that these things will happen in war time. At any rate it makes one feel that to work for a different method of settling disputes must be our endeavor without ceasing.

I am glad to find that total disarmament is talked of as a practicable policy; to us it seems the only practicable policy, but when statesmen are ready to mention the word there is some hope that we may get forward and come to something in time. I hope very quick time, for one dare not think of the awfulness ever occurring again.

It is interesting to us to know how you are realizing the pressure of the Government to bring all to bear on the prosecution of the war. It is a pressure that is increased degree by degree and so it is not easy to stem the tide. After all, for those who believe in war they should rejoice thereat, for they ought to believe that it is the best thing they can do to accept it and help it by such acceptance. All the same it is the gradual increasing of such pressure that makes people realize in another way what war means. We were only saying this morning that perhaps we needed to be "stabbed right awake," as Stevenson expresses it, and if we do awake then, maybe the cost has not been too much. But when one remembers that if only the peoples would hearken such need not have been the case, it makes one realize what our Lord must have felt like when He grieved over Jerusalem and longed that He had been able to gather her as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings. If only we could have learned the lesson without all this, but "we would not," at least that seems to be it. And a huge world agony has been the result.

These thoughts will come to one, but we know that in time there will be a different feeling and that the world will learn the lesson; to know that we are working on the right side is cheer in the midst of all the pain.

It is interesting us very much to hear of the way your members have settled into the work in France and also with what zest they have helped in Russia. It is so good to feel the unity therein and we feel that it is an earnest of better days, better for us as a Society and for the world as a whole. God grant that it may prove a real advance for His Kingdom and that we may see the way clearly as the work continues.

I do hope that many of you will be able to come over to the Pan Conference of Friends after the war. We shall very much want to know you all after so much co-operation and correspondence. We feel a very real sense of comradeship indeed, and it has been very good to see the few that have been able to come here.

Thine sincerely,
(Signed) ETHEL M. ASHBY.

LETTERS FROM FRANCE.

I have just got started on my way to the town I am to be stationed in, ———.

We left Paris at eight o'clock, first class if you please, passage being paid by the Red Cross at half rates, and traveled by rail to the end of the line with some very attractive French officers—one of whom, a colonel at least by his gold and silver braid, pointed out all points of interest. Old barbed wire and trenches, where the Germans were last winter before they retreat, battery shelters, ruined churches and factories—for in the district traversed by the train the Germans seem to have contented themselves with blowing up factories and crossroads. The soldiers get thicker as you leave Paris behind, and except a few American medical men, almost every man on the train was in French uniform.

When we went to interview the lieutenant in charge of civilians, etc., we were astonished to hear that our road was closed for four hours for the King of Italy to travel on it and that he was going to pay the town a visit.

There was nothing for us but to wait—so we waited on the Place by the Hotel de Ville, a beautiful old building not very large or elaborate, and soldiers gradually marched in, filling up the space and squeezing us back against the walls. After waiting and sweating in the crowd the President and the King arrived in autos and decorated some score of soldiers for bravery, etc. The crowd, mostly soldiers, was very good-natured and interesting to watch and joke with.

After the King drove off, C., of course, suggested tea and we went back near the station to a tea-shop kept by a couple of French women, whose husbands are mobilized on the railroad and who have lost everything they had in another town, which has suffered very severely from the Germans.

We then left, just catching a glimpse of a wonderful cathedral of very early architecture. To-morrow or next day we shall get on to our permanent station.

I can't say enough of the beauty of the country between here and Paris, and although we are well within the old German lines we have found good roads and no sense of desolation as yet. We have passed many houses whose roofs or walls are broken by shells, some few entirely gutted and a large number of fruit trees, as well as shade trees, that have been wantonly cut down, but somehow or other the desolation seems hidden. The people are fairly gay and one can not imagine from their demeanor what they have been or are suffering. We drove into the new farm centre on our way here and found it located in a century-old farm-house, into whose court-yard we drove through a gate and whose lichen-covered brick and tile made up at least to the chance visitor for its evident ignorance of sanitation.

It was once a very populous farm, with long stables and barns and so picturesque I hated to leave.

The Australians have sent a quantity of dead-grey dresses for girls, all one color and so monotonous. Don't let Philadelphia people do that. Unfortunately, all the girls of this age, say from twelve to sixteen, have been carried away by the Germans and there is no present use for the clothing.

I am filled with admiration at the way in which the French have fixed up their roads and railroads and at the cultivated look of the country, despite the trenches and stretches of barbed wire one runs across every little while. Of course, this town is filled with the hum of aeroplanes. Last night some of us heard the guns, but not I, I went to sleep too quickly.

Yesterday afternoon I borrowed a bicycle and rode about 10-12 kilometres out toward the line and rode through two or three totally destroyed villages. Soldiers were quartered there and lived in temporary barracks, caves, etc., but there was nothing left of the houses but tumbled bricks and cellars.

In the distance was a battery firing away into a perfectly peaceful landscape and if the farmers hadn't been clad in uniform it would have been more like a Fourth of July celebration than the real thing. I was in search of a village where the English are setting up some of their huts and with the assistance of many very gracious and kind soldiers who showed me their maps and spent lots of time inquiring among their fellows about the village and were very careful that I went right. It is wonderful how kind all the French soldiers are; many of them know lots about Les Quakers and if you explain to an officer that you are a Quaker he will answer, "Oh parfaitement je comprends." The military here have been very kind to the English and have helped them all they can. Since breakfast we have been out in the street watching shrapnel bursting in the air in innocent looking puff balls of white smoke, presumably around a German aeroplane, which, however, remained invisible to us.

Since writing my last I have moved on and am now well back from the lines where we hear almost no guns and although we have French aeroplanes going past every day we are not in any likelihood of German bombing expeditions. We are settling down and trying to get a new centre started for repairing houses in this and nearby villages, which have not suffered as have many others.

There are at present four Englishmen and two Americans here. We are living in a rather fine farm-house, with what must have been a very fine and lovely garden before the Germans came and carried off the family with them.

While the Germans were here, say from the battle of the Marne until last spring, some of their officers lived here and under the house they constructed a bomb shelter, with entrances in the front and back yards. Our home has only ground floor and attic and is one room deep extending all across the man's lot which is about 80 or 100 feet. Yesterday and to-day S. and I have been putting in new glass where we can afford it, two panes in each window in the dining-room, and covering the rest of the window with oiled cloth which lets through a good deal of light.

Practically every fruit tree in the neighborhood has been wantonly cut down and every factory has been thoroughly gutted, even a little mill on the Somme at the village I stayed at last was blown to pieces and a large sugar factory near here has been rendered as useless as could be done. This afternoon Ernest Brown came over in a motor truck and I went out about five miles with him to get sand for our brick work. We ran through barbed wire and trenches that seem to stretch over the country in all directions without any plan whatever; the country side was very desolate, it had mostly grown up in weeds and although much ground has been ploughed up and planted by the French soldiers nothing of that sort has been done here.

